Their Lordships entirely agree with this statement of the law, and, applying the test indicated, their Lordships can find no reason for holding that the decrees or judgments executed against the Respondents were either reversed or superseded by the judgment of this Board of the 18th June 1914. By that judgment their Lordships did not propose to deal with anything but the actual subject-matter of the cases before them. In fact, the only point decided was that the High Court, under the circumstances, had no power to reverse the decisions of the Subordinate Courts. The facts in the case of Shama Purshad Roy Chowdury v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdury (2), were, in their Lordships' opinion, entirely different. In that case the Judicial Committee, in applying the test already quoted, viz., "whether the decree or judgment under which the money was originally recovered had been reversed or superseded," were of opinion that it was plainly intended by the order in Council in that case that all the rights and liabilities of the parties should be dealt with under it, and that it would be in contravention of the order to permit the decrees obtained pending the appeal on which it was made to interfere with this purpose. It was also pointed out that the plaint in which the original decree was recovered, described the interest recovered by the decrees under appeal as part of the same cause of suit, holding, therefore, that such decrees were mere subordinate and dependent decrees, which could no longer be held to have remained in force when the decree on which they were dependent had been reversed. It is no doubt true, as stated in the judgment of the High Court, that in the case of Jogesh Chunder Dutt v. Kali Churn Dutt (3) the decision in Shama Purshad Roy Chowdury v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdury (2) was extended by a majority to apply to a case like the present, where it was sought to recover the difference between the enhanced rent recovered and the fixed rent which the tenant was bound to pay. But for the reasons already stated their Lordships cannot agree with the interpretation of the case of Shama Purshad Roy Chowdury v. Hurro Purshad Roy Chowdury (2) applied by the majority of the Court, and prefer the reasoning and conclusions set forth in the judgment of

SRI RAJA BOMMADEVARA NAGANNA NAIDU v. RAVI VENKATAPPAYYA.

Garth, C. J., which were concurred in by Jackson, J.

Their Lordships are therefore of opinion that in the tenants' (Respondents') actions for the recovery of the excess of rent the appeal should be allowed and the actions should be dismissed. In the suits by the Appellan[illegible] the rent of a F[illegible] subsequent to the decision of the Privy Council their Lordships see no necessity for referring the case back to the Court of the Honorary Suits Deputy Collector of Bezwada as has been ordered by the High Court. That Court, by decrees of the 3rd December 1915, found that a suitable rate is Rs. 6 per acre and the Appellants have not before the Board questioned the amount of such decrees. Their Lordships therefore think these decrees should be affirmed.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals should be allowed but without costs, either in the Courts before whom the suits were litigated or before this Board.

Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), sec. 34—Application for appointment of administrator pendente lite pending appeal.

On the 29th June 1921 the executors applied for probate of the alleged Will. On the 20th July 1921 the objectors prayed for the appointment of an administrator pendente lite which was granted on the 25th July 1921. On the 25th May 1923 judgment was pronounced in favour of the Will and on the 28th May an order was made for the issue of the probate and probate was actually issued on the day following. On that day application was made to the District Judge by the unsuccessful caveators to stay proceedings in order to enable them to file an appeal in the High Court and to bring a stay order. The District Judge held that possession having been already delivered by the administrator pendente lite to the executors nothing could be done by him. The appeal was lodged in the High Court on the 29th May and two days later the Rule to show cause why an administrator pendente lite should not be continued pending the appeal was issued and the Opposite Party contended that as possession had been obtained by them from the administrator pendente lite, no further action should be taken:

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Rule for the appointment of an administrator pendente lite under sec. 34 of the Probate and Administration Act during the pendency of an appeal lodged in this Court against the decree for grant of probate in respect of the estate of one Hari Charan Mukherji who died on the 25th February 1921.

On the 29th June 1921, the executors applied for probate of the alleged Will. On the 20th July 1921, the objectors prayed for the appointment of an administrator pendente lite and five days later their application was granted, as the District Judge recorded the opinion that the grounds urged for the appointment of an administrator pendente lite were very strong. On the 27th July 1921, upon the joint application of all the parties concerned, Babu Bibhuti Bhuson Banerjee was appointed administrator pendente lite on a fixed remuneration of Rs. 60 a month. The application for probate was strenuously contested; but ultimately judgment was pronounced on the 25th May 1923 in favour of the Will. On the 28th May 1923, an order was made for the issue of probate and probate was actually issued on the day following. On that day, an application was made to the District Judge by the unsuccessful caveators in order that proceedings might be stayed so as to enable them to lodge an appeal in this Court and obtain an order for stay. The District Judge stated, however, that possession had already been delivered by the administrator pendente lite to the executors. The appeal was lodged in this Court on the 29th May 1923 and two days later the Rule now under consideration was issued. In answer to the Rule, the executors have contended that as possession has been obtained by them from the administrator pendente lite, no further action should be taken by this Court.

We are of opinion that the circumstance that the executors have managed to obtain possession from the administrator pendente lite with what has been described as unusual speed should not affect the decision of the question, whether the estate in litigation should or should not be secured during the pendency of the appeal in this Court. We may add that the parties are not agreed as to whether the entire estate has been delivered by the administrator pendente lite to the executors; and there seems good ground for the assertion made by the Appellants that the executors managed to obtain possession from the administrator pendente lite even before the probate had been actually issued; these matters, however, are not material for our present purpose. The judgment of this Court in Hukum Chand Boid v. Kamalananda Singh (1), which was applied in Sati Nath v. Ratanmani (2) makes it abundantly clear that the Court of Appeal will not allow itself to be paralysed by a successful endeavour on the part of a litigant to obtain possession in view of an apprehended appeal to be followed by a stay order.

We have carefully considered the circumstances of this litigation which are set out in the order made by the District Judge, when he held that there were grounds for the appointment of an administrator pendente lite. We have taken into account the nature and value of the estate. We cannot overlook the fact that the executors have not furnished security for the due discharge of their duties. We cannot ignore the fact that the executors are bound to administer the estate in terms of the Will which is the source of their authority. We feel no doubt whatever that in the interest of the party who might in the end turn out to be entitled to the estate, it is essential that the estate should be secured during the pendency of the appeal already lodged in this Court. It is well-known that it was not the practice of the prerogative Court to grant administration pendente ... unless by consent, or on proof that grant was necessary for the preservation of the property. Soon after the establishment of the Court of Probate, however, Sir J. P. Wilde in a considered judgment in the case of Bellow v. Bellow (3) observed as follows: "The Rule of the Court of Chancery appears to be, that wherever there is a bonâ fide suit pending, the Court will appoint a Receiver quite irrespective of the condition of the estate, or of the person who has the actual possession of it, on the ground that while the suit is pending, there is no one legally entitled to receive or to hold the assets, or to give discharges. I wish to give notice that I shall in future assimilate the practice of this Court to that of the Court of Chancery, and that I shall grant administration pendente lite, wherever the Court of Chancery would appoint a Receiver." In the Probate Division, however, the appointment of an administrator pendente lite does not follow as a matter of course whenever litigation is pending. The applicant is required to show some necessity for the grant, for example, that it is necessary for the preservation of the estate, for receiving rents, payments of interest or the dividends on shares as they become due, and that no fit and proper person is in a position to discharge these offices; Horrell v. Witts (4). The Court has power to appoint an administrator pendente lite in contested testamentary and administration suits, on the application of a person who is not a party to such suit. Accordingly, in an administration suit which was likely to be protracted, the Court appointed an administrator pendente lite at the instance of a creditor who was not a party to the suit: Tichborne v. Tichborne (5). These principles were applied by this Court in the case of Brindaban Chandra Saha v. Sureswar Shaha Pramanik (6). We are of opinion that notwithstanding the judgment of the Court below in favour of the propounder of the Will, the reasons which induced the District Judge to appoint an administrator pendente lite are still operative. In fact, from one point of view the necessity has been accentuated by reason of the fact that the executors propose to carry out the provisions of the Will notwithstanding the pendency of the appeal. It is well-settled in England that the duties of an administrator and Receiver pendente lite commence from the order of appointment, and, if the decree in the action is appealed from, do not cease until the appeal has been disposed of. In the absence of any appeal the functions of an administrator pendente lite terminate with a decree pronounced in favour of a Will and do not continue until the executors obtain probate. The case is not altered if there are no executors: [illegible] (7) and [illegible] v. Bird (8). A similar principle has been applied in the case of an injunction where during the pendency of an appeal, the ad interim injunction granted by the trial Court is continued; Polini v. Gray (9). We are not unmindful that, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee in Hukumchand v. Pirthi Chand Lal (10), the operation of a decree is not suspended or interrupted by the presentation of an appeal. But we feel no doubt that, in the case before us, if nothing had happened immediately on the delivery of judgment by the District Judge, this Court would have without hesitation continued the administrator pendente lite during the pendency of the appeal, and as we have said the fact that the executors were able to take out probate and to obtain delivery from the administrator pendente lite before the objectors could come up to this Court to lodge their appeal and to obtain an order for stay, does not really affect the decision of the question.

We direct accordingly that this Rule be made absolute and that the gentleman who was appointed administrator pendente lite by the District Judge (Babu Bibhuti Bhuson Banerjee) be re-appointed administrator pendente lite on the remuneration fixed by the Court below. He will administer the estate subject to the direction of this Court. Liberty is reserved to both parties to apply for further orders. The costs of this Rule will be costs in the appeal. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs. The executors will forthwith place the administrator pendente lite in possession of the estate.

EMPEROR, Appellant,

PURNA CHANDRA GHOSE, Respondent.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 499, 9th Exception Defamatory imputation made for public good, how far protected in the absence of proof of due care and attention—Evidence of information produced at the trial, if may establish care and attention without proof that it was within the knowledge of the accused before the defamatory statement was published—Considerations of public good, if arise where good faith is not established—Court pronouncing on medical questions without trained assistance or expert evidence, propriety of.

Accused published a pamphlet containing certain statements that the complainant, a doctor, in furtherance of a conspiracy drugged the Bhowal Raj Kumar rendering him unconscious and causing him to be led to cremation, and the complainant prosecuted accused for defamation. The defence pleaded bonâ fide belief of the truth of the statement. The Magistrate found as a result of considering the prescription given for the treatment of the Kumar, largely in the light of passages in certain medical books, that the treatment was not for biliary colic and that the Kumar's symptoms were of arsenical poisoning. He therefore found that a prudent and reasonable man would draw the conclusion that the medicine administered to the Kumar by the complainant doctor caused his collapse and the conduct of the complainant suggested conspiracy to a prudent mind:

Held—That for a Magistrate untrained in medicine to attempt, largely without trained assistance, to ascertain what certain medicines were prescribed for and what should be prescribed for biliary colic by reference to medical books was entirely unsound and the conclusion was valueless. Again the assumption that the amount of arsenic contained in the prescriptions would produce arsenical poisoning, collapse and unconsciousness was a conclusion impossible to support without expert evidence.

That the fact that certain evidence was produced at the trial could not be prayed in aid to establish due care and attention imputed to the accused unless there was evidence to show that some of the information was in his possession at the time the statement was published.

That the accused was not protected by the 9th Exception to sec. 499, I. P. C. as the publication was not made in good faith having regard to the flimsy materials upon which it was based and to the absence of any evidence that the accused made any enquiries before publication or had at his disposal or within his knowledge at that time any of the evidence produced at the trial.

That if good faith was not established it was not strictly necessary to consider if the public good was involved.

This was an appeal by the Government against an order passed by the Deputy Magistrate of Dacca (B. M. Ghose, Esq.), on the 31st May 1923, acquitting the accused of an offence under sec. 500, I. P. C. The complainant also obtained a Rule against the said order.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

Purna Chandra Ghose was, on the complaint of one Ashutosh Das Gupta, charged with an offence under sec. 500 of the Indian Penal Code. He was tried by a Deputy Magistrate of Dacca who acquitted him on the 31st May 1923. The Government have preferred this appeal against his acquittal and a rule has also been issued against the acquittal at the instance of the complainant. For the proper understanding of the matters which arise from this appeal it is necessary to state a few facts.

In the year 1908 three brothers were the owners of the Bhowal Estate at Jaidebpur. In the year 1908, the 2nd brother Kumar Ramendra Narain Rai, fell ill and came to Calcutta for treatment. He was accompanied by the complainant, who is a qualified medical practitioner, and who went as his family physician. He was treated in Calcutta by Dr. Sarbadhikari who advised him to take a change and accordingly in April 1909 the Kumar went to Darjeeling accompanied by the complainant, by his wife and her brother, by a Secretary and by some menial servants.

On the 6th May, it is said, that the Kumar was attacked by biliary colic, a disease from which it is said that he had suffered before and for which he had been treated by Colonel Pardey Lukis.

On the 6th May the disease is said to have become acute and Colonel Calvert, I. M. S., and Rai Shahib Nibaran Chandra Sen, the then Assistant Surgeon in charge of the Darjeeling Hospital, who is now dead, were called in and saw the Kumar on the 7th and 8th May and treated him. The Kumar is said to have died on the 8th May 1909 at midnight. On the 9th May 1909 his body was taken to the cremation ground. The widow and her party left Darjeeling for Jaidebpur on the 10th May and the shrad ceremony was performed at Jaidebpur.

In the year 1921, a sanyasi appeared in the Dacca District and some persons stated that he was the Kumar who, they said, had never died and there is no doubt that the sanyasi had a certain number of adherents who believed him to be the Kumar. The story put forward in support of this belief shortly is that some medicine was administered to the Kumar as a result of which he became unconscious, that those about him thinking he was dead took him to the cremation ground in his unconscious state. That at the cremation ground a storm of rain and hail came on which prevented the cremation being carried out and those with the body fled. That in their absence a sanyasi appeared and took away the unconscious Kumar, who was eventually revived by the sanyasi. That those who had brought the Kumar to the cremation ground on their return after the storm had abated found that the Kumar had disappeared and therefore set fire to the empty funeral pyre and after it was consumed returned to Darjeeling concealing the disappearance of the body of the Kumar. Further it has been suggested as a variant of the story that after it was found that the Kumar had disappeared a dead body was obtained and that this was burned as the purported corpse of the Kumar.

In the month of July 1921 Purna Chandra Ghose, who is a resident of Jaidebpur, published from the Jagat Art Press of Dacca, a Bengali pamphlet called "Heart's beloved Raja in the guise of a Fakir." Some 1000 copies of the pamphlet were issued and the pamphlet was sold in Jaidebpur, Dacca and elsewhere. This pamphlet contains the passages which are complained of—which are to be found at lines 3, 4, 9--16, 21 and 22 of p. 5 of the pamphlet. As translated the passages are as follows :—Line 3 and 4 "Ashu Doctor greatly enjoyed the confidence of the Kumar. In his looks and talk he was a gentleman. In his act he was like Ea (meanness)."

EMPEROR v. PURNA CHANDRA GHOSE.

Lines 9—16.

"Then went the Khanshamas, Jamini, Akhila, Durwan Sarip Khan and several others. Having planned a scheme they all went with the second Kumar to the Hills. Some sort of medicine Ashu Doctor administered, by taking which the second Kumar became senseless. A great friend of the Kumar was Ashu Babu and so the Kumar took the medicine without suspicion and became unconscious."

Lines 21 and 22 :—

"They were all overjoyed to see the Kumar senseless and hurriedly took him away for cremation"

The defence put forward was that the accused believed the truth of the statements contained in the pamphlet and published it bonâ fide. The pamphlet at its commencement contains a statement of the point of view from which the accused wrote it. The passage has been translated to us by the Head Interpreter of this Court as follows :—

"I begin to write by remembering Sri Hari, I shall write all that I hear from people's mouth. I shall go on writing the faults and virtues without judging. I shall declare and publish not knowing the truths or falsehoods," and the Head Interpreter in reply to the accused's counsel stated that "without judging" meant without the accused passing his own personal judgment and that "not knowing the truths or falsehoods" meant "without having personal knowledge if what was stated was true or false." The learned Magistrate propounded the following issues for determination :—

(1) Whether or not the words contained in the lines 4, 5, 9—16, 21 and 22 at p. 5 of the pamphlet was defamatory?

(2) Whether or not the accused published Ex. 1?

(3) Whether or not the accused made the imputations conveyed in the lines in question intending to have or knowing or having reasons to believe that they would harm the reputation of the complainant?

(4) Whether or not the said imputations were true and made for the public good?

(5) Whether or not the said imputations were made in good faith and for the protection of the public good?

As regards the first issue the Magistrate has found that some of the words complained of are defamatory, and on the second issue he finds that the accused published the pamphlet which was marked at the trial as Ex. 1, and on the 3rd issue he found that the imputations were calculated to lower the complainant in the estimation of the public and thereby cause harm to his reputation. It is true that he reserves for consideration the question whether they were malicious but as he states in his judgment he decides issues 1, 2 and 3 in favour of the prosecution. He also decides the 4th issue against the accused holding that his plea of justification under Exception 1 to sec. 499, I. P. C., failed.

As regards the 5th issue he finds that the accused bonâ fide believed the imputations to be true, that a prudent man ought to believe them as true, that the accused took due care and attention and that the imputations were made for the public good. He therefore finds the accused's plea of justification under Exception 9 to sec. 499, I. P. C., established and acquits him.

EMPEROR v. PURNA CHANDRA GHOSE.

I gather from the judgment that the learned Magistrate arrived at this conclusion because he did not believe that the Kumar suffered from biliary colic at Darjeeling or died therefrom. He does not accept the complainant's evidence on this point and expunges from the evidence Colonel Calvert's certificate of the cause of death and also the certificate of the Deputy Commissioner. Moreover as a result of considering the prescriptions given for the treatment of the Kumar, largely in the light of passages in certain medical books, he comes to the conclusion that none of the prescriptions were for biliary colic and after considering the Kumar's symptoms he diognises these as symptoms of arsenical poisoning resulting from some medicine which, he concludes from the evidence, was prescribed and given to the Kumar by the complainant and he thinks that a prudent and reasonable man would draw the conclusion that this caused the Kumar's collapse.

He thinks moreover for reasons stated in the judgment that the conduct of the complainant reasonably suggests conspiracy to a prudent mind. The learned Magistrate apparently was satisfied that the accused acted with due care and attention before publishing the imputations because he examined at the trial 22 witnesses, many of them of position, and because he produced at the trial copies of prescriptions and hospital entries. He was also satisfied that he acted for the public good for reasons which he has stated.

With great respect to the learned Magistrate, who devoted much care and attention to his task, I cannot imagine any more unsatisfactory course than the one which he has adopted with regard to the prescriptions. For a mind untrained in medicine to attempt, largely without trained assistance, to ascertain what certain medicines were prescribed for and what should be prescribed for biliary colic by reference to medical books is to my mind entirely unsound and I think the conclusions are valueless. Again to assume that the amount of arsenic contained in the prescription, which he concludes the complainant prescribed and administered, would produce arsenical poison and collapse and unconsciousness is a conclusion impossible to support without expert evidence. Again the fact that certain evidence was produced at the trial cannot be prayed in aid to establish the care and attention imputed to the accused by the Magistrate before publishing Ex. 1 unless there is evidence to show that some of the informations was in his possession at the time Ex. I was published and of this there is no evidence whatsoever in the present case. Indeed this is negatived by the passage at the commencement of Ex. 1 already referred to where the accused says that he does not know whether the statements he is making in the pamphlet are true or false. It seems to us that the whole of the reasoning upon which the Magistrate has decided issue No. 5 in favour of the accused is fallacious. The grounds upon which the reasoning is based are entirely unsound and the conclusions drawn therefrom must accordingly fail. So far as the conclusion of the Magistrate on the first four issues are concerned we accept them and they are the only conclusions, we think, at which it is possible to arrive but having regard to his finding on issue No. 5, and the fact that we cannot accept the conclusion on which it is based it is necessary for us to examine for ourselves the evidence upon the record to ascertain if the accused's plea of justification is well-founded.

EMPEROR v. PURNA CHANDRA GHOSE.

The defence witnesses divide themselves into certain categories :—

(1) Those who purport to recognise the Sannyasi as the Kumar.

(2) The medical evidence.

(3) Those who speak to the occurrence in May 1909.

Under the 1st head come D. W. 1, D. W. 2, D. W. 3, D. W. 5, D. W. 6, D. W. 8, D. W. 11, D. W. 12, D. W. 18. But their evidence really amounts only to an expression of their own belief and is of no real assistance to the accused upon whom the burden lies of proving the substantial truth of his assertions.

Under the 2nd head comes D. W. 7 who deals with the prescriptions. He practises as a doctor at Jaidebpur and is related to the accused by marriage and stated that the prescriptions were not for biliary colic.

Under the 3rd head come D. W. 4, who only speaks of rumours, D. W. 9, a cook who went to Darjeeling in 1909 and spoke to the Kumar shouting that he felt a burning sensation and asking what medicine had been administered and to statements made to him by Sarip Khan about the disappearance of the dead body from the cremation ground and to a dead body tied up being brought the next day and being cremated, D. W. 10 who speaks of rumours, D. W. 13 who speaks of rumours and what he heard from D. W. 15, D. W. 14 who speaks of rumours and asserts that he was present at the cremation of a body from Stepaside, which I suppose he suggests was not that of the Kumar, D. W. 15, a Station Master, who speaks to seeing the Kumar 12 days after the cremation in the dress of a Sanyasi, D. W. 16 who speaks to the disappearance of the body from the cremation ground, D. W. 19 whose evidence is clearly valueless on the face of it

Now we do not conceive it to be any part of our duty on this reference to arrive at a finding as to the truth or falsity of the claim put forward by or on behalf of the Sanyasi to be the Kumar. He was not called and the issue does not directly arise. All that we have to do is, rejecting as we do the Magistrate's reasoning upon which his finding on the 5th issue is based, to ascertain if the accused's plea of justification is supported by the evidence and if he brings himself within any of the Exceptions to sec. 499, I. P. C.

Now, the accused has to establish that if it was true that the complainant conspired against the Kumar and that he administered medicine which rendered him unconscious. Having read the evidence we find that there is no evidence of any conspiracy by the accused against the Kumar and no satisfactory evidence whatsoever that he administered to him medicines which rendered him unconscious. Two doctors of experience were in attendance on the Kumar and it is extremely unlikely that they would not have detected anything wrong or that their suspicions would not have been roused if there had been any improper treatment of the Kumar. This being so, the accused is not protected by the 1st Exception to sec. 499, I. P. C. as his imputations are not true. No question therefore of the publication being for the public good arises. Nor do we think that the accused is protected by the 9th Exception to the section as the publication was clearly not made in good faith having regard to the flimsy materials upon which it was based and to the absence of any evidence that the accused made any enquiries before publication or had at his disposal or within his knowledge at that time any of the evidence which is now upon the record. If good faith is not established it is not strictly necessary to consider if the public good was involved. But if it were, it is difficult to see how the publication in the present case could have been for the good of the inhabitants of Jaidebpur.

Now, there is no doubt that a Court hesitates to interfere when an accused has been acquitted and that it does not do so unless there has been a miscarriage of justice and we have considered the cases on this point to which we were referred by the Counsel for the accused, but I am unable to say that this is not a case in which we should interfere. I think we should do so, and I think not only that there is no justification for the statements complained of but that there is no evidence worth the name to support them. We accordingly allow the appeal and we also make the Rule absolute. We do not think that it is necessary in the present case to order a retrial. All the evidence has been placed before us and we find the accused guilty of the offence with which he was charged and sentence him to undergo simple imprisonment for one month and to pay a fine of Rs. 1,000 or, in default, to suffer simple imprisonment for a further period of one month. The fine, if recovered, is to be paid to the complainant.

BASERUDDI SHEIKH, Appellant,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR, Respondent.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 297 - Misdirection, omission to charge the jury with regard to the rights of private defence of property of the accused, apart from private defence of person, if amounts to—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 103, right of private defence of property.

In a charge under sec. 304, I. P. C., the defence was that the deceased man came to the house at night with the intention of robbery and the accused on awaking found him coming from inside the house and inflicted wounds on him which proved fatal. The Judge in charging the jury expounded the law with regard to the right of private defence of the body, but neglected to direct the jury with regard to the right of private defence of property:

Held—That the Judge should have charged the jury that if they accepted the story for the defence they would have to consider whether there was a reasonable belief in the mind of the accused that the thief was likely to have with him articles which he had taken from inside the hut and he should have further charged the jury that if they accepted this story with regard to the probability that the thief had with him articles taken from inside the hut they should consider whether the accused in the exercise of his rights of private defence of property under sec. 103, I. P. C. used more force than was reasonably necessary for preventing the thief from getting away with the stolen property.

This was an appeal preferred against a conviction and sentence under sec. 304, BASERUDDI SHEIKH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

I. P. C., passed by K. N. Chowdhury, Esq., Additional Sessions Judge of Khulna, on the 10th August 1923 in agreement with the verdict of the jury.

The facts are briefly these :—The Appellant Baseruddi Sheikh while sleeping in the verandah on a certain night awoke and found a man coming from inside the hut and inflicted wounds upon the man which proved fatal. Baseruddi was thereupon put upon his trial on a charge under sec. 304, I. P. C. The story put forward for the defence was that the deceased broke into the house at night with criminal intent to commit theft and the accused on seeing him coming out of the hut inflicted the wounds. The Judge agreeing with the jury convicted him under sec. 304, I. P. C. and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 7 years. Against this conviction and sentence the present appeal was preferred.

Babu Prafulla Kamal Das Gupta for the Appellant.

Mr. Khundkar for the Crown.

The accused in this case has been convicted under the provisions of sec. 304 of the Indian Penal Code and he has been sentenced to undergo rigorous imprisonment for a period of seven years. One point only is made with regard to the charge and it is this. It is said that the learned Judge neglected to charge the jury with regard to the rights of the accused under the provisions of sec. 103 of the Indian Penal Code. Now we have read the charge and although the Judge has directed the jury with regard to the right of private defence of the body under sec. 102, we cannot find that there was any direction to the jury with regard to the right of the accused under sec. 103 if the jury accepted the defence put forward on behalf of the accused, namely, that he awoke and found the dead man coming from inside the hut. If the deceased man came to the house with the intention of robbery and if he came from inside the hut as was the story put forward for the defence, the learned Judge should have charged the jury that if they accepted this story for the defence they would have to consider whether there was a reasonable belief or apprehension in the mind of the accused that the thief had with him or was likely to have with him the articles which he had taken from inside the hut and he should have further charged the jury that if they accepted this story on behalf of the accused with regard to the probability that the thief had with him articles taken from inside the hut they should consider whether the accused in the exercise of his rights of defence of property under sec. 103 used more force than was reasonably necessary for preventing the thief from getting away with the stolen property.

Under these circumstances, as this point was not put to the jury at all in the course of the charge, we think that the conviction and sentence must be set aside and we direct the accused to be retried. If at the retrial the accused is convicted the Judge should ascertain the views of the jury upon the matters to which I have referred.

TARAPADA BISWAS and anr., Accused, Petitioners,
v.
KALIPADA GHOSH, Complainant, Opposite Party.

Commitment to Sessions relying on Civil Court judgment, propriety of Inquiring Deputy Magistrate, if may disbelieve witnesses and refuse to commit to Sessions

A Deputy Magistrate inquiring into certain charges triable by the Court of Sessions disbelieved the witnesses, some of whom were cross-examined before him, and dismissed the complaint. The District Magistrate relying inter alia on two civil judgments reversed the Deputy Magistrate's decision and committed the accused for trial to the Sessions:

Held—That the District Magistrate had no right to rely on the judgments of the Civil Courts which clearly influenced his decision.

That the Deputy Magistrate had more opportunity than ordinarily arises for arriving at an opinion with regard to the credibility of the witnesses, some of whom were cross-examined before him. It was open to a Deputy Magistrate to form his opinion with regard to the credibility of the witnesses called before him, though it was not his duty to closely criticise the evidence. If a prima facie case was made out he should clearly have left it to the jury at the Sessions to form their own view as to the credibility of the evidence. But if after hearing the evidence he was satisfied that it was not trustworthy and that a conviction would not result, he was entitled to record his finding that the witnesses could not be believed and that a conviction would not result.

RASH BEHARI LAL v. EMPEROR (1), KALYAN SINGH v. EMPEROR (2) and other cases referred to.

This was a Rule granted on the 27th November 1923 against the orders of the District Magistrate of Nadia (H. G. Blomfield, Esq.), dated the 10th and 19th November 1923, directing commitment of the Petitioners to the Court of Sessions for trial under secs. 465, 467 and 471, I. P. C., who were discharged by the Deputy Magistrate of Krishnagar (S. N. Dutt, Esq.), on the 12th October 1923, under sec. 209, Cr. P. C.

The facts were briefly as follows :—The Petitioners were prosecuted for forgery of certain kabuliyats. Some of the witnesses were cross-examined before the inquiring Magistrate, who disbelieved the evidence and discharged the accused. The District Magistrate, however, relying on the judgments of two Civil Courts which suspected the genuineness of the kabuliyats reversed the Deputy Magistrate's decision and committed the Petitioners for trial before the Court of Sessions. Against the said order of the District Magistrate the present Rule was obtained.

This Rule is directed against two orders of a District Magistrate, dated the 10th of November 1923 and 19th of November 1923, whereby he committed the four Petitioners before us for trial to the Sessions in respect of charges of having forged certain kabuliyats. In making his order the District Magistrate reversed the decision of the Deputy Magistrate, who had dismissed the complaint disbelieving the evidence of the witnesses who were cited before him and holding that no motive for the forgery of the kabuliyats by the accused either of their own accord or at the instance of their master had been established. The learned District Magistrate in reversing the Deputy Magistrate's order states that he does so on relying on the judgments of two Civil Courts, which suspected the genuineness of these kabuliyats and also on the ground that there was ample evidence of motive for forgery of the kabuliyats. The reasons given by the District Magistrate are clearly wrong. He had no right, we think, to rely on the judgments of the Civil Courts which clearly influenced his decision and as to the ground of motive it seems to us that this is not established. Nafar Chandra Pal Chowdhury, the master of the four accused, had a claim for mesne profits against his co-sharers but the kabuliyats related to a period subsequent to the period for which mesne profits were claimed and it seems to us that the kabuliyats could not have assisted the master of the accused in making his claim for mesne profits. We accordingly think that the District Magistrate was wrong in finding, as he has done, that there was ample motive for the forgery.

The only question that remains is whether it was open to the Deputy Magistrate, as he has done, to disbelieve the evidence of the witnesses. who were called before him in support of the complaint against the accused. If it is the duty of the Deputy Magistrate merely to record the evidence and leave it to the jury at the Sessions to decide as to the credibility of the evidence then clearly the Deputy Magistrate was wrong in expressing an opinion, as he has done, with regard to the credibility of the witnesses who were before him. Some of the witnesses were cross-examined at the time the accused showed cause and consequently the Deputy Magistrate had more opportunity than ordinarily arises for arriving at an opinion with regard to their credibility. It seems to us, however, having regard to the authorities that have been cited, namely, the case in Rash Behari Lal v. Emperor (1) and the other authorities cited from other High Courts, namely, Kalyan Singh v. Emperor (2) and In re Parvati (3) and the case from Madras, In re Ponniah Thirumali Vandaya Thevar (4), that it is open to a Deputy Magistrate to form his opinion with regard to the credibility of the witnesses called before him. In so saying we do not suggest that it is his duty to closely criticise their evidence. If a primâ facie case is made out he should clearly leave it to the jury at the Sessions to form their own view as to the credibility of the evidence. But if after hearing the evidence he is satisfied that it is not trustworthy and that a conviction will not result, we think that he is entitled to do as the Deputy Magistrate has done in this case, namely, to record his finding that the witnesses who spoke in support of the charge cannot be believed and that a conviction will not result. Under the circumstances, we do not think that the District Magistrate was justified in reversing the order of the Deputy Magistrate and we accordingly make the Rule absolute.

The accused will be discharged from their bail bonds.

PRIVY COUNCIL

[APPEAL FROM BENGAL.]

VISCOUNT HALDANE.
LORD DUNEDIN.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
1923,
Heard, 20, March.
Judgment, 13, April.

NABA KUMAR DAS and ors., Appellants,
v.
RUDRA NARAYAN JANA and anr., Respondents.

Sundarbans, reclamation lease of land in—Condition of forfeiture and re-entry, if lessee failed to re-claim one-eighth of the area in five years—Right reserved by lessor to enter and make measurement to see if condition fulfilled—Forfeiture clause, if may be enforced, without taking measurement.

A lease of jungle lands in the Sunderbans for a term of 40 years provided inter alia that one-eighth of the entire area leased was to be cleared and to be in a fit state for cultivation at the end of the fifth year, and that at any time after the expiration of the fifth year the Sunderbans Commissioner or other officer appointed by the Government or any person authorised by him might enter on the land and cause it to be measured for the purpose of ascertaining whether the condition had been fulfilled, and it further provided that on failure to comply with the above clearing conditions, the lessees should be liable at the discretion of the Government to the forfeiture of all rights in land under the lease or to an annual penalty; and that the Government, if the lease was determined, was to have the right of immediate re-entry:

Held—That the representative of the Government who on inspection reported that the clearing conditions had not been fulfilled, was under no obligation to measure the land for the purpose of satisfying himself on the point. There was a right to enter and make measurement but no duty.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court in Bengal, dated the 16th August 1918, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge (3rd Court) of the 24-Parganas, dated the 16th August 1916.

The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the Appellants for a declaration that a forfeiture by the Government of a lease and agreement was invalid, and that they were entitled to the possession of the land in dispute.

In 1901, five persons, the parties to the present suit, or their predecessors took settlement from Government of 10,000 bighas of land known as Lot No. 1 Monsadwip in Saugor Island in the Sunderbans. The land was under jungle. The 3rd clause of the lease stipulated that one-eighth of the area should be "cleared and in a fit state for cultivation at the end of the 5th year reckoning from the 13th April 1901" and the 4th clause made all the rights of the lessees liable to forfeiture "on failure to comply with the above clearing conditions."

On the day on which the lease was executed an agreement was executed by the lessees, in which they undertook to construct certain protective works: and a clause in the lease stipulated for the fulfilment of that agreement and for forfeiture in default.

At the expiration of the 5 years Government on the report of the Sunderbans Commissioner, Mr. Sunder, declared resumption on the ground that the clearing conditions had not been complied with, and on the 27th July 1909 they granted a new settlement to the Respondent Rudra Narayan Jana.

The question for determination by the Board was whether or not the clearing conditions had been complied with.

The material evidence and the arguments of Counsel are set out in the judgment of their Lordships.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and H. N. Sen for the Appellants.

NABA KUMAR DAS v. RUDRA NARAYAN JANA.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and T. B. W. Ramsay for the Respondents.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—In this litigation the High Court at Fort William, as the Court of Appeal, reversed a judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Third Court, 24-Parganahs. The Appellants had brought a suit in the latter Court for a declaration that a forfeiture by the Government of a certain lease and agreement was invalid and that they, as Plaintiffs, were entitled to possession of the land, the subject of the lease. The learned Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the Plaintiffs, but the High Court allowed an appeal from his decision and dismissed the suit. The present appeal is brought by the Plaintiffs, and it seeks to have the decision of the learned Judge of first instance restored. The only question now relevant for determination is whether the resumption by the Government in 1906 of Crown land in the Sunderbans, originally leased on the 7th December 1900, and a subsequent pottah by the Government dated the 27th July 1909, in favour of the Respondent, Rudra Narayan Jana, were validly made.

The only material facts are not numerous. A lot called Monsadwip in Saugor Island, Sunderbans, was put up to auction by the Government for settlement, and the highest bidder was one Golak Chandra Das. At his request, the Government on the 7th December 1900, granted a lease in favour of Golak Chandra Das himself, Narayan Prashad Ballav, Prasanna Kumar Maiti, Narendra Nath Bhuiya and Kubir Charan Patra. By partition deed the shares of the first three were declared to be of four annas each, and the shares of the last two of two annas each. These lessees, or their representatives, were the original Plaintiffs and the Appellants here. In August 1903, the first Respondent, Rudra Narayan Jana, purchased from the successors in title of Golak Chandra Das, who had died, a 2 annas share of the four annas share to which the latter was entitled.

The lease of the 7th December 1900, gave an occupancy right for forty years from April 1901 of jungle land. Under the third clause of this lease one-eighth of the entire area leased was to be cleared and to be in a fit state for cultivation at the end of the fifth year, and at any time after the expiration of the fifth year the Sunderbans Commissioner or other officer appointed by the Government or any person authorised by him might enter on the land and cause it to be measured for the purpose of ascertaining whether this condition had been fulfilled. The fourth clause provided that on failure to comply with the above clearing condition, the lessees should be liable at the discretion of the Government to the forfeiture of all rights in land under the lease or to an annual penalty. The Government, if the lease was determined, was to have the right of immediate re-entry. There was also a provision for the construction by the lessees of "protective works" with a right in the Government to put an end to the lease in case these were not constructed within a time prescribed. In the view which their Lordships take of the case it is not necessary to consider this provision.

By an agreement of the same date with the lease, the 7th December 1900, the lessees covenanted that they would undergo the penalties set forth in "the clauses of the lease," provided that the Sunderbans Commissioner or other officer should give to them or their legal representatives fifteen days' notice within which to show cause why the penalties should not be enforced. No question now arises on this covenant or proviso.

On the 12th April 1906, Mr. Sunder, who as Settlement Officer had taken over the duties of the Commissioner in the Sunderbans, an office which had been abolished, visited the property leased. He had previously made various intimations of visits which were not carried out and he had, on the occasion on which he actually inspected, arrived three days before the time he had intimated. These circumstances, however, do not affect the question of his right. He appears to have gone to the property and to have looked at it with the aid of his binoculars both when he landed and subsequently from a boat. The property was stated by the trial Judge to be "a vast tract of forest and swamp, comprised in the area of 7,532 miles, known as the Sunderbans," consisting of "a tangled region of estuaries, rivers and watercourses, enclosing a vast number of islands of various shapes and sizes." The property leased was included in Chuck Monsadwip which is in Saugor Island, one of those islands. The Sunderbans is by nature a swampy jungle covered with trees. The soil is alluvial soil, formed by deposit from the Ganges, at whose mouth it is. The Government had, for a long time past, been taking steps to reclaim it, and to convert the jungle from being the mere home of wild beasts into rice tracts. For this purpose it was necessary not only to cut down the trees but to take out their stumps, and improvement leases were being granted on terms, such as those in the lease in question, which should secure that this was done. It is, therefore, plain that the obligations in the lease to clear and to put into a fit state for cultivation, extended to the extraction of these stumps as well as to the cutting down of the timber.

Mr. Sunder appears first to have landed on the lot of the Respondent Rudra Narayan Jana. He subsequently got into a boat in order to have a view of other portions of the property, alighting on at least one spot. He was engaged for, at all events, two hours in looking at the property leased, which extended to about 3,000 acres. He did not take measurements. The learned Subordinate Judge speaks as though he was bound to do this, but it is clear that there was no obligation to do so imposed by the lease. There was a right, if the representative of the Government thought proper, to enter and make measurements, but no duty. What the Settlement Officer had to determine, as a matter of fact, was simply whether one-eighth of the entire area leased had been cleared and put into a state fit for cultivation within the stipulated time.

On the 23rd April, Mr. Sunder reported to the Collector of the 24-Parganahs at Alipur that he had inspected and had found only Rudra Narayan Jana and a few raiyats who held under him on the property. He stated that the clearing conditions had not been fulfilled, and that only a small portion had been cleared by Rudra, who had obtained some paddy from it. He also said that the "protective works" had not been commenced. As to this, however, for reasons connected with the absence of a designation by the Government of the site for them, no question has been raised on the argument in the appeal. He recommended in his report that the lease should be determined and the estate brought under direct management by the Government.

It was contended for the Appellants that the substance of this evidence was displaced by certain documents put in at the trial by the Government. These documents were in the nature of a rent-roll proceeding on measurements stated to have been made about the beginning of the year 1909. The rent-roll itself was prepared on the 11th January in that year. It was relied on by the Subordinate Judge as showing that the land must have been made fit for cultivation by 1906. The Appellants offered evidence that there had been measurements made for the Government in 1907, but both Courts rejected the testimony of the witnesses as false. In the Court of Appeal it was pointed out that the entries in the rent-roll are ambiguous as to whether more than 942 bighas were stated to have been fit for cultivation on the 6th April 1906. If there was no more than this amount made fit by them, the eighth part of the whole amounting to 1,250 bighas, could not have been made fit within the time stipulated. The rent-roll was prepared by a clerk, Mahesh Chandra Dutta, from material which appeared to have been furnished to him by other clerks. There is no reliable evidence as to the entries having been the work of anyone who had sufficient first-hand knowledge.

The Court of Appeal, moreover, points out that there was ambiguity in the entries as to the dates at which the tenants were treated as actually being in possession of land that had been rendered fit for cultivation.

But however this may stand, there is another objection which their Lordships think fatal to the entries in the rent-roll being relied on as evidence which could outweigh the direct testimony of the witnesses who say that the stipulated eighth part had not been adequately cleared by April 1906. Mr. Sunder went into the witness box and stated that he had seen the property and, as the result, had advised that, as he had found that the clearing stipulated for had not been performed, the Government should resume the property leased, as was actually done. Nothing was put to him in his cross-examination about the rent-roll or the entries in it. If, as was suggested at the Bar, this was because the documents were tendered by the Government, a Defendant at the trial, as part of its case, only after Sunder had been in the box, an application might have been made to recall him for further cross-examination. There is, however, no suggestion that there was any such application. Sunder was not even cross-examined on the alleged perfunctory character of his inspection. The learned Subordinate Judge relied largely on the circumstance that he did not measure." But he was not bound to measure. His evidence was that he could see and saw that the proper quantity of land had not been cleared. If this statement was challenged it should have been challenged by cross-examination directed to the impracticability of forming a judgment by mere inspection, even with the aid of glasses, as to the proportion of area cleared.

After the forfeiture had been declared and an interval had elapsed, a fresh lease was granted to the Respondent Rudra on the 27th July 1909, who, it was admitted, could not be said to have been in a fiduciary position. In consequence of this lease to him he was joined as a Defendant in the suit along with the Secretary of State.

The trial Judge found that the Defendants had failed to prove that the clearing conditions of the lease had been broken, and on this ground gave judgment against them. The Court of Appeal held that the learned trial Judge had laid undue stress on jungle cutting alone. The stumps had to be extracted also before the land could be fit for cultivation. It was largely on the ground that this was proved not to have been done that they reversed the decision.

For reasons which they have already sufficiently indicated their Lordships concur in the view taken in the High Court at Fort William on the appeal from the trial Judge, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, rr. 66, 90—Execution sale, application to set aside—Revenue assessed in estate to be sold not specified in sale proclamation, if a material irregularity—Damage in consequence to be proved

Where a revenue-paying estate is being put up for sale in execution of a decree, omission to specify in the sale proclamation a statement as to the revenue assessed upon the estate, as required by Or. 21, r. 66 of the Civil Procedure Code, is a ground which would enable the judgment-debtor to base an application for setting aside the sale under r. 90 of Or. 21 of the Code if the other conditions provided by the Code are complied with.

The applicant cannot succeed without proving that he has suffered material damage in consequence of the irregularity.

This was an appeal from an order of the Appellate Court of Deputy Commissioner of Wardha, Central Provinces, refusing to set aside the sale of certain Malguzari villages by Collector, dated 27th September 1918.

The principal points for determination were (1) whether there was any irregularity in the sale of the said Malguzari villages, (2) if so, whether the Appellants had proved to the satisfaction of the Court that they had sustained any substantial injury by reason of such irregularity, and (3) whether leave to appeal to His Majesty was granted by the proper Court.

Rai Bahadur Seth Narsingdas Prayagdas Mohta having obtained a decree for Rs. 6,896-8-0 against Baliram Sing and Ramkishan Sing in the Court of the Additional District Judge of Wardha, attached eight annas Malguzari share of Mouza Mangaon and sixteen annas Malguzari share in Mouza Shedgaon. The said decree was sent to the Collector on 6th April 1918, for execution and the sale of the said shares in the said Malguzari villages. Steps were taken by the Sub-divisional Officer from time to time to save the property if possible, but the said judgment-debtors invariably absented themselves although served with notices. At last it was found impossible to save the property and the said Sub-divisional Officer made his final report in form F to the Commissioner recommending the sale of the said property on 3rd July 1918. The sale was sanctioned by the Commissioner on 6th July 1918. Proclamation of sale was issued on 16th July 1918, affixed on the Court-house on 20th July 1918, and affixed on a conspicuous place of the property and announcement made by beat of drum on 22nd July 1918. In the schedule of the property Mouza Shedgaon (with which alone the Respondent No. 2 is concerned) was described "(2) sixteen annas Malguzari share of Mouza Shedgaon, No. 352 Tahsil Higanghat." On 20th August 1918, about a month after the said proclamation was affixed on the Court-house the Appellant Baliram Sing presented a petition for the cancellation of the said proclamation and the issue of a fresh one on the ground of some defect in the same, thereby stopping the sale ordered. Order thereon was reserved and the said Malguzari villages were sold by auction on 23rd August 1918. There were many bids for the sixteen annas Malguzari share of Mouza Shedgaon and it was knocked down to Mathuradas, Respondent No. 2, for Rs. 10,000. In conformity with the order of the Court, dated 20th August 1919, the matter again came before the Court on the return of the sale papers on 27th August. The Appellants were again absent. The Court regarded the irregularity as immaterial and fixed 24th September 1918, for confirmation of the sale.

On 23rd September 1918, the Appellants presented their memorandum of appeal to the Court of Deputy Commissioner and Counsel was heard on their behalf. On 24th September 1918, in support of their said appeal, they did not attempt to prove that as the result of the alleged irregularity the property had fetched an inadequate price.

On 27th September 1918, the Deputy Commissioner Mr. A. McDonald passed his order dismissing the appeal. He held that "the property was described in the proclamation as in the C. form, viz., as a whole Malguzari village and an eight-annas share in another village. This is in my opinion a sufficiently accurate description." On the point that the proclamation was affixed on the Court-house before it was affixed on the property he thought the irregularity was not material, in any case, not one which was likely to have any effect on the bidding in the auction.

The Appellants then applied to the Financial Commissioner of Central Provinces and Berar for revision of the said order of the Deputy Commissioner, dated 27th September 1918. The said application was rejected on 4th November 1918.

The Appellants thereupon obtained leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the Court of the Deputy Commissioner on 22nd April 1919.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and I. A. C. Skinner for the Appellants.—The sale of the Appellants' villages in execution was bad because the sale proclamation did not satisfy the requirements of Or. 21, r. 66 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The proclamation omits the acreage of the plots and does not state the revenue.

The proclamation being invalid the sale is invalid.

The Appellants' application for setting aside the proclamation was made prior to the sale but was heard after the sale had taken place. On this application it was impossible to prove damage because the damage was not suffered until the sale took place. No opportunity was given of proving damage later.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. A. Majid for the Respondents.—The appeal does not lie to the Privy Council. There are concurrent findings of fact by the lower Courts and no substantial question of law.

The sale took place in a revenue Court where everyone would be conversant with the revenue of the properties for sale. The omission of the quantity of the revenue was not therefore material.

It lay upon the Appellants to establish that they had suffered damage and they have adduced no evidence to prove this.

Mr. L. DeGruyther, K. C., in reply.

This Board has held that the omission of the revenue is a material omission.

Olpherts v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (1).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Their Lordships see no need to reserve further consideration of this case. The question that it raises is a question which is more of procedure than of law, and arises under the execution, by way of sale, of a decree made by the Subordinate Judge of Wardha at a date which is not exactly defined, but which was clearly before the 6th April 1918. On this latter date that decree was sent down to the Deputy Commissioner of the District for execution, and on the 16th July 1918, the sale under that decree was proclaimed.

It is alleged by the Appellants, who were the judgment-debtors under the decree, that that proclamation was imperfect, and the first Appellant, on the 20th August 1918, made an application to the proper Court for the purpose of having the proclamation amended and the sale adjourned. The ground upon which he based that application was that, first, the revenue had not been properly defined in the proclamation, and, further, that there was no adequate description of the property that was about to be sold.

The rules which govern the sale in that District are the same as those established by the Code of Civil Procedure. Under Or. 21, r. 66 of that Code it is plain that the proclamation should contain the statement as to the revenue assessed upon the estate, and this Board, in a case, Olpherts v. Mahabir Pershad Singh (1), have held that that is a material matter, and that its omission is the omission of a matter which would enable the judgment-debtor to base an application for setting aside the sale if he could comply with the other condition that the Code provides.

The sale had been fixed for the 23rd August 1918, and consequently this application was only three days before the sale was to take place. The Sub-divisional Officer, before whom the matter was heard, did not think that it was desirable that the sale should be postponed; for this purpose it would have been necessary to have had a further month's advertisement, and accordingly he adjourned the application until after the sale had taken place. The sale did duly take place on the 23rd August, and on the 27th August the application was heard. What took place upon that hearing is a matter of some dispute but it is clear that the present Appellants did not appear. Of course, it is plain that if the hearing were regarded as merely the hearing of an adjourned application to postpone the sale, the fact that the sale had already taken place would have itself defeated the application; it would then have become too late. But it appears to have been regarded in a more liberal sense, and the learned Judge before whom it came regarded it as an application under r. 90 of Or. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which entitles a person who has been injured by an imperfect proclamation to apply to the Court to set it aside on the ground of material irregularity, provided that he proves to the satisfaction of the Court that the material irregularity has caused him substantial injury.

It is not easy to see exactly what occurred on the hearing because we have no shorthand note of the judgment, and the only reference to it is contained in a summary of the proceedings in the order sheet. That recites the fact of the sale, and refers to the omission of the land revenue as one of the grounds upon which the application for amendment of the proclamation had originally been based, and contains the statement: "I believe the irregularity is immaterial, and such shrewd purchasers as" the two purchasers of the property "would not bid till they knew the land revenue. I, therefore, again reject the objection." If by that was meant that the omission of the land revenue was immaterial for the purposes of r. 90 (supra), which entitles the person injured to apply on the ground of a material irregularity, the learned Judge was wrong. If, on the other hand, he meant by it that it was immaterial because, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, there was nothing to lead him to believe that there had been any damage whatever suffered, his observation would be less open to question.

From that judgment an appeal was brought before the Deputy Commissioner himself, one of the grounds of it being that the irregularities complained of had resulted in an inadequate price being realised. It is by no means plain to their Lordships that on that hearing the Appellants did, in fact, insist upon the omission of the land revenue as one of the grounds of complaint. If introduced at all in the notice of appeal it was only introduced by implication, where it was said that the lower Court had admitted that the proclamation was defective. The specific grounds on which it is alleged that the imperative provisions of law relating to proclamations were not followed do not include this matter, but at any rate it was very definitely asserted that the irregularities had resulted in an inadequate price.

Upon the hearing of that appeal, the Appellants appear to have made no application whatever to be permitted to call evidence to prove that they had, in fact, suffered material damage by what had taken place. They did not ask that the matter should be sent back for hearing upon that head by the Sub-divisional Officer, nor, indeed, that the Deputy Commissioner himself should hear evidence upon it. It appears to have been argued on the facts as they stood, and the result was that the Deputy Commissioner decided that the omission was one which was not likely to have had any effect on the bidding in the auction.

In these circumstances, remembering that it lay upon the Appellants to establish before the Court that they had suffered damage before they could start their application for setting aside the sale; that they never did bring forward any evidence whatever upon the point, and they never appear to have asked for liberty to do it, it appears to the Board too late now to come and say that had they had such an opportunity they might have been able to satisfy the Court that they had suffered such damage and that the opportunity should be afforded them now.

For these reasons their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should fail and should be dismissed with costs accordingly.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 57 OF 1923.

SANDERSON, C. J.
RICHARDSON, J.
1924,

ROMESH CH. BASU
v.
JADAB CH. MITRA

Solicitor and client - Solicitor paying fees to counsel under express verbal authority of the client —Fees not allowed on taxation as between solicitor and client—Solicitor, if entitled to claim such fees—Rules and Orders of Calcutta High Court, Original Side, Chap. XXXVI, rr. 9, 14 and 32—Procedure to be followed by solicitor in such cases—Marking Counsel's brief with fees not actually agreed to, for purposes of taxation, condemned.

The Respondents instituted this suit to recover a sum of Rs. 4,082 from the Appellant, a solicitor of the Calcutta High Court, who had acted for the Respondents in another suit and had been paid various sums of money for the purpose of prosecuting that suit. The Appellant admitted liability for a sum of Rs. 1,724-2-3 which he put into Court. At the trial the dispute was about a sum of Rs. 1,700. It was proved that the said sum had been paid by him to Counsel engaged in the other suit under instructions from the Respondents, although the same was in excess of the scale of fees laid down in r. 32, Chap. XXXVI of the Rules and Orders of the High Court, Original Side, and the payment was made out of money provided by the Plaintiffs for the express purpose of paying the specially arranged Counsel's fees. The amount had been disallowed by the Taxing Officer:

Held by the Court of Appeal (reversing the decision of the lower Court)—That in view of the special circumstances of the case, the Appellant's bill of costs should be remitted to the Taxing Officer of the Court with a direction that he should allow as between attorney and client the sum of Rs. 1,700 in respect of the fees paid by the Appellant to Counsel.

S. M. DUTT v. D. M. ROY (1) referred to.

When an attorney proposes or is asked by his client to mark on the brief or to pay fees to Counsel which cannot be allowed on taxation by the Taxing Officer, he should in every case before marking or paying such fees make it clear to his client that such fees will not be allowed on taxation and he should obtain a letter signed by his client authorising or ratifying the payment of such fees. When such fees are disallowed by the Taxing Officer, it would not be unreasonable for the Judge in the exercise of his discretion to call for the production of the letter and the acknowledgment and if satisfied allow the fees.

The actual fees which it has been arranged to pay to Counsel must be marked on Counsel's brief and no manipulation thereof can be permitted for the purpose of taxation or otherwise.

This was an appeal preferred against the judgment of Mr. Justice Page, dated the 29th January 1923, passed in the exercise of Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case are fully reported in Jadab Ch. Mitter v. Romesh Chandra Bose (2).

Mr. N. Sarkar, Mr. B. K. Ghosh and Mr. S. N. Bose for the Appellant.

Mr. H. D. Bose and Mr. S. N. Banerjee (Jr.) for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Defendant from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Page.

The Defendant had acted as attorney for the Plaintiffs in a suit in the High Court in which the present Plaintiffs were Defendants. The present Plaintiffs succeeded in the suit and in the appeal which was filed by the Plaintiffs in that suit.

(2) 27 C. W. N. 587 (1923).

ROMESH CH. BASU v. JADAB CH. MITRA.

This suit was brought by the Plaintiffs to recover two sums of Rs. 245-10-3 and Rs. 3,837-1-0. The first of these sums was alleged to be the balance due to the Plaintiffs from the Defendant, in respect of payments made by the Plaintiffs to the Defendant on account of costs after deducting the amount allowed on taxation.

The second amount was part of a sum of Rs. 4,237-1-0, the taxed costs of the previous suit as between party and party, which was paid by the Plaintiffs in the previous suit to the Defendant under an order of the Court as a condition for a stay of execution pending the determination of the appeal.

In respect of this amount it was alleged that the Defendant had paid the Plaintiffs a sum of Rs. 400, leaving a balance of Rs. 3,837-1-0 due to the Plaintiffs.

The Defendant paid into Court the sum of Rs. 1,724-2-3 which he alleged was all that was due to the Plaintiffs.

The Defendant's defence was as follows :—

"2. That for the proper conduct of the said suit and appeal this Defendant engaged various Counsel to represent his said clients therein and he agreed to pay them certain fees under the express authority of his said clients and after duly informing them that the whole of such fees could not be allowed upon taxation but this Defendant owing to his close relationship with the said clients did not take any written authority from them for the payment of the said fees to Counsel.

3. That thereafter this Defendant paid various fees to Counsel under such verbal authority of his said clients as aforesaid and included the same in his bills of costs as will appear from such bills when produced but the Taxing Officer of this Honourable Court disallowed a portion of the said fees so paid on the ground of absence of written authority from the said clients in that behalf.

4. That this Defendant at the request and under the instructions of his said client also expended on their behalf in the said suit and appeal various other sums of money and did certain work for them in respect of a mortgage and reconveyance which was reasonably worth Rs. 290-14-0 but the Defendant did not include the said sums so expended and the costs of the said work so done in his said bills of costs, as under the taxation rules of this Honourable Court it is not the practice to do so.

6. That after giving credit to the Plaintiffs for the various sums received from them as shown in the said annexure B to the plaint there became due to this Defendant a sum of Rs. 2,512-14-9 in respect of the balance of account with the Plaintiffs.

8. That the said appeal was dismissed with costs on the 17th of July 1918 and this Defendant submits that thereupon the said fund of Rs. 4,237-1-0 in his hands became subject to a lien in his favour in respect of the balance of Rs. 2,512-14-9 then due to him by the Plaintiffs.

9. That this Defendant retained the said sum of Rs. 2,512-14-9 so due to him as aforesaid out of the said fund of Rs. 4,237-1-0 leaving a balance of Rs. 1,724-2-3 in his hands payable to the Plaintiffs."

The question at the trial, however, was limited to a sum of Rs. 1,700 or 100 gold mohurs in respect of fees paid by the Defendant to Counsel, which were disallowed on taxation as between attorney and client.

ROMESH CH. BASU v. JADAB CH. MITRA.

This sum was made up of fees paid to Counsel in respect of the suit to the extent of 72 gold mohurs or Rs. 1,224 and fees in respect of the appeal to the extent of 28 gold mohurs or Rs. 476.

There is no doubt, in my opinion, that the special fees, which were paid to Counsel, were arranged by the Defendant with the Counsel on the express instructions of the Plaintiffs; that the Plaintiffs were informed by the Defendant that they would not be allowed on taxation, that inspite of such information the Plaintiff instructed the Defendant to pay the fees to Counsel.

Further, I am satisfied that with the possible exception of a small sum of about Rs. 200 the fees were paid by the Defendant out of money provided by the Plaintiffs for the express purpose of the payment of the fees to Counsel. On the evidence it is possible that the above-mentioned sum of about Rs. 200 was paid out of money provided by the Plaintiffs for that purpose and it is such a small sum that it may be taken for the purpose of this case that the whole of the Rs. 1,700 which is in dispute, was paid out of money provided by the Plaintiffs for the purpose of paying the specially arranged counsel's fees.

There is no doubt that the Defendant paid the specially arranged counsel's fees and in many instances from day to day as the fees became due.

Under these circumstances it is difficult to understand how the Plaintiffs can bring themselves to claim the sum of Rs. 1,700 from the Defendant, especially having regard to the fact that it is not disputed the Defendant served them well as their attorney and that they were successful in the litigation in which they were involved.

The question, however, is whether the Plaintiffs having paid the sum in question to the Defendant for the express purpose of his paying the specially arranged Counsel's fees with full knowledge that they would not be allowed on taxation, and the Defendant having used the money for that purpose and having paid the counsel's fees, the Plaintiffs are entitled to recover the balance of such fees, which was not allowed on taxation between attorney and client.

It was contended on behalf of the Defendant that under the above-mentioned circumstances the Plaintiffs had no cause of action in respect of the Rs. 1,700; on the other hand, it was contended that as the fees constituting the sum of Rs. 1,700 had been disallowed on taxation as between attorney and client, the Defendant was liable to repay the sum to the Plaintiffs.

I do not consider it necessary to refer to the rules in Chap. 36 in detail.

I desire however to draw attention to Chap. 36, r. 14 which provides that in all cases of taxation as between party and party, the bill shall be lodged for taxation as between party and party and also as between attorney and client.

The result is that whenever a bill is carried on for the purpose of taxation as between party and party, there must be not only a taxation as between party and party but also a taxation as between attorney and client.

The scheme of the rules seems to be that the taxation, so provided for, should be final and conclusive subject to an application or reference to the Court or a Judge not only as between the parties to the litigation but also as between the attorney and client.

If therefore the attorney or client is dissatisfied with the taxation, he should adopt the procedure which is laid down by the rules and make an application to the Judge. This procedure would apply whether the application is for a review of the taxation in respect of certain items, or for an order under r. 32 of Chap. 36 for an allowance of fees to Counsel higher or other than the fees set out in the table embodied in that rule.

That course was not adopted in this case by the attorney.

It may be surmised not unreasonably that the Defendant may have considered that it would not be necessary for him to do so, in view of the fact that he had funds of the Plaintiffs in his hands, that he had paid the specially arranged fees to Counsel on the express instructions of his clients, who are relations of his, and who had full knowledge that the fees would not be allowed on taxation, and he might not unreasonably anticipate that his clients under such circumstances would not claim the money representing such fees from him.

It may however be that the attorney did not appreciate fully the effect of the rules relating to counsel fees, and the result of their being disallowed on taxation even though he had paid them on the express instructions of his clients.

Whatever the reason may be, it is clear that the Defendant did not adopt the proper procedure and the question arises whether he is entitled to any relief in respect of this matter.

The Defendant alleged that in this case he was entitled to make the necessary application to the Court even after the suit had been brought. The circumstances of this case appear to be so special, and the claim of the Plaintiffs is so entirely devoid of merits, that in my judgment, in order that justice should be done between the parties and that the taxation rules should be complied with, the Court should exercise the jurisdiction vested in it by Chap. 36, r. 32, even though a considerable time has elapsed and the attorney did not follow the prescribed procedure.

In my judgment, therefore, the Defendant's bill should be remitted to the Taxing Officer with a direction that the Taxing Officer shall allow as between attorney and client the sum of Rs. 1,700 in respect of the fees paid by the Defendant to Counsel, which are represented by that sum.

The Defendant will then be entitled to debit the Plaintiffs with that sum in his account with them.

The result of that will be that the Plaintiffs will not be entitled to recover in this suit any more than the Defendant has paid into Court.

In my opinion the order and decree of the learned Judge therefore should be varied and an order drawn in accordance with the direction of this Court and a decree should be made in favour of the Plaintiffs for Rs. 1,724 instead of the sum of Rs. 3,421. The order for payment to the Plaintiffs of the money in Court will stand.

On the one hand the Plaintiffs have no merits; on the other hand the Defendant did not adopt the course which he should have done; and, in my judgment each party must pay his or their own costs of the suit and the appeal.

I desire to make it clear that what I am about to say is not to be taken as infringing in any way upon the decision in S. M. Dutt v. D. M. Roy (1) as to the jurisdiction and discretion of the Court or a Judge being unfettered.

I think however it is desirable to emphasise with a view to the future that when an attorney proposes or is asked by his client to mark on the brief or to pay fees to Counsel, which cannot be allowed on taxation by the Taxing Officer, he should in every case before marking or paying such fees make it clear to his client that such fees will not be allowed on taxation and he should obtain a letter signed by his client authorising or ratifying the payment of such fees: and if and when such fees are disallowed on taxation, the attorney must adopt the procedure laid down by the rules. Although the jurisdiction and discretion of the Court or a Judge may be unfettered, it would not be unreasonable for the Court or a Judge to require the production of a letter containing the consent in writing of the client to the payment of such fees, and including an acknowledgment that he has been informed that the fees would not be allowed on taxation. Unless such a course is followed in the future the attorney will run a grave risk of the payments made by him in respect of such a special fee being disallowed and becoming irrecoverable by him against his client.

(1) I. L. R. 49 Cal. 618; s. c. 26 C. W. N. 870 (1921).

Before parting with this case it is necessary to refer to a part of the evidence, to which our attention has been drawn: it has no bearing upon the decision of the appeal, but it raises a matter of importance.

It appears that the Plaintiffs instructed the attorney, the Defendant, to retain two leading Counsel for the suit. One of the Counsel wanted a fee of 30 gold mohurs per day and the other asked a fee of 15 gold mohurs per day.

It was eventually arranged that the first learned Counsel should receive a fee of 20 gold mohurs per day and the second should receive 12 gold mohurs per day for the trial of the suit. These fees were paid by the attorney to the learned Counsel less a small deduction agreed to by the learned Counsel. When, however, the brief of the first learned Counsel was produced for taxation as between party and party, it was marked 30 gold mohurs cons: 5 gms., and 17 gms. for the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 6th and 7th days and 16 gms. for the 8th day.

The second learned Counsel's brief was marked 20 gms. and 3 for consultation and 10 gms. for each of the following days, viz., the 2nd to the 8th.

The learned Counsel signed for their fees. It is to be noted that the fees appearing on the briefs were not in accordance with the fees which had been arranged with the learned Counsel and which the Counsel received.

The fees of 30 gold mohurs and 20 gold mohurs for the first day were not in accordance with the arrangement nor were the refreshers.

It is evident therefore that the fees appearing on the briefs were not those arranged and actually paid to the learned Counsel, but that the fees were marked in the manner appearing on the briefs for the purpose of taxation as between party and party and with the object for getting these fees allowed in taxation and recovering them from the Opposite Party.

I do not mean to suggest that the learned Counsel signed for any fees which they had not received; because they did receive the total appearing on the briefs. The figures on the briefs work out at rather more than 19 gold mohurs per day and 11 gold mohurs per day in the case of the two learned Counsel respectively. The learned Counsel, however, did not receive them in the form and manner appearing on the briefs. It was stated by learned Counsel in Court that this was a common practice, adopted for the purpose of getting the fees allowed in a party and party taxation against the unsuccessful party.

I desire to make it clear that such a practice cannot be recognised by the Court for a moment.

In our judgment such a practice is reprehensible, and not in accordance with the traditions of the profession and we wish it to be clearly understood that it must not be repeated in the future. If it is, and if it comes to the knowledge of the Court, it may be that the Court will take a serious view of the matter.

I should have thought that what I am about to say was so well-known in the profession that no necessity would arise for referring to it.

The actual fees, which it has been arranged to pay to Counsel, must be marked on the Counsel's brief, and no manipulation thereof can be permitted for the purpose of taxation or otherwise.

Learned Counsel should sign for the fees which have been arranged and paid, and in actual form in which they were arranged and paid, and no departure therefrom can be entertained either for the purpose of taxation or otherwise.

RICHARDSON, J.—I accept with considerable hesitation the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice. An attorney is an officer of the Court and I am disposed to regard it as an improper proceeding on his part to contest in a Court of law, whether as a Plaintiff or as a Defendant, the amount of a bill of costs which has been taxed by the Court's Deputy, the Taxing Officer, subject to the supervision and the orders of the Court.

In the present case, however, the circumstances are exceptional and as to the merits of the dispute there can be no question. That being so, and as I understand that the case is not to be treated as a prece-

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2365 OF 1921.

RANKIN, J. MUKERJI, J. 1924, Heard, 15, January. Judgment, 22, January.	RAMESH CHANDRA MITRA, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. DAIBA CHARAN DAS and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Merely entering into an arrangement with the transferee to hold under him a portion of the holding, the sale whereof is binding on the tenant under the law—a portion of the holding having been sold in execution of a money decree and the rest in execution of a mortgage decree—does not amount to a repudiation of the tenancy.

Mere execution of a kabuliyat by the raiyat in favour of the transferee does not amount to a repudiation of the tenancy.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th November 1921 against the decree of B. K. Basu, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Jessore, dated the 24th of August 1921, reversing the decree of Babu Nirmal Chandra Mittra, Munsif, 1st Court at Narail, dated the 15th of September 1920.

The facts material to this report are as follows :—

This appeal arose out of a suit brought by the Plaintiff, as landlord, to eject the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding.

Raj Mohan and Sonatan held the suit lands as occupancy raiyats under the Plaintiff. In execution of a money decree as well as a mortgage decree obtained against them the entire holding was sold and purchased by Defendant No. 1 Daiba Charan Das. Sonatan then took a sub-lease of a portion of the lands under the transferee, the Defendant No. 1, and continued to remain in possession of some culturable plots and homestead forming part of the lands of the tenancy. Raj Mohan and Sonatan no longer paid rent to the Plaintiff. Plaintiff did not recognise the auction-purchase of the Defendant No. 1 and brought this suit against him for khas possession of the holding. The defence, inter alia, was that there had been no abandonment of the holding by the original tenants Raj Mohan and Sonatan, and that he was the transferee of a portion of the holding. The raiyats Raj Mohan and Sonatan were not made parties to the suit.

Defendant No. 2 claimed to hold the lands by virtue of a settlement obtained from one of the tenants, Sonatan. Pro formâ Defendant No. 3 was a co-sharer of the Plaintiff, and it was found that by virtue of a partition between them Plaintiff became the sole landlord of the suit lands.

The Munsif of Narail who tried the suit gave a decree to the Plaintiff for khas possession of the holding by ejecting the transferee, the Defendant No. 1.

The following portions of his judgment will be found material :—

"The next question is whether the Plaintiff can sue to eject the Defendant No. 1. The Defendant No. 1 is the auction-purchaser of the entire jama and it has not been denied that the tenant's interest in that jama is non-transferable. The kabuliyat (Ex. I) which the tenants executed shows that their interest is non-transferable and upon the Defendant's own showing there has been an abandonment of the jama by the tenants. The tenants no longer pay rent to the Plaintiff and Sonatan now claims to hold the homestead and some plots of land within the jama under the Defendant No. 1 and not under the Plaintiff. The Defendant No. 1 also says that Sonatan is his tenant in respect of the homestead and three plots of land within the jama and there is absolutely no evidence that the tenants still regard the Plaintiff as their landlord. It is thus clear that there has been an abandonment of the tenancy, and my finding is strengthened by the allegation made by the Defendant in the concluding portion of para. 12 of his written statement where he says that he himself possesses the land of the jama partly in khas and partly through tenants

The next question is whether the Defendant's auction-purchase has been recognised by the Plaintiff. The Defendant has adduced no evidence on this point and I therefore find that he is liable to be ejected.

In the above view of the case it is immaterial whether the tenants are still in possession of their homestead within the jama as the Defendant No. 1 says or has left it as the Plaintiff says. In so far as the Plaintiff is concerned there has been an abandonment of the tenancy because the tenants now hold the homestead under the transferee. . . . . The Defendant's contention is that the tenants should have been made parties to this suit but the case of Sheikh Chand Pramanik v. Ramani (16) does not support his contention.

The Plaintiff is entitled to a decree for khas possession as against the Defendant No. 1. The Defendant No. 2 has not appeared to contest the suit but no evidence has been given by the Plaintiff to show that he is liable to be ejected. The suit as against him shall be dismissed.

It is accordingly ordered that the suit be decreed against the Defendant No. 1 and dismissed against the Defendant No. 2, that Plaintiff's title to the lands in suit be declared as against the Defendant No. 1, that the Defendant No. 1 be ejected from the said lands and the Plaintiff do get khas possession thereof."

On appeal by the Defendant No. 1, the District Judge of Jessore reversed the decision of the Munsif and dismissed the suit. The following portion of his judgment will be found material to this report :—

"The learned Munsif has held (1) that the Defendant purchased the entire holding from the previous occupancy raiyats Raj Mohan Mandal and Sonatan Mandal, (2) that the auction-purchase has not been recognised by the Plaintiff landlord, (3) that the original tenants are still in possession of their homestead and several of the culturable plots under the transferee. On these findings which seem to be perfectly correct and unchallengable, the learned Munsif has decreed the Plaintiff's suit, apparently on the strength of Dayamayi's case (1) and the earlier case of Shaikh Chand Pramanik v. Ramani (16). But it appears that later rulings have decided that in case the tenant goes on possessing the holding or a portion of it under the transferee, the sale operates not as a sale of the entire holding but only of a portion and in such cases the landlord can only recover on proof of relinquishment or repudiation [Nabo Kissore v. Dhananjoy (7) and Siperunnessa v. Ramdeb (5)]. In the present case there was no allegation of relinquishment or repudiation. The plaint spoke of abandonment, but it is amply clear that there has been no abandonment, and it is not denied here that one of the original tenants Sonatan is in possession of the homestead and some of the culturable lands. In the circumstances, Plaintiff's suit should have been dismissed. Appeal allowed with costs throughout. Plaintiff's suit will stand dismissed."

Against this decision of the District Judge, Plaintiff preferred this second appeal.

Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur (with him Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen) for the Appellant.—Upon the facts found and admitted I submit that the tenants have abandoned the holding and repudiated the tenancy and the Plaintiff is entitled to get khas possession of the holding by ejecting both the tenants and the transferee. In this case the suit is for ejectment only of the transferee, and the tenants not being parties the question of ejectment against them does not arise. A suit for ejectment only against the transferee without making the transferrors parties is maintainable. See Sheikh Chand Pramanik v. Ramani (16). The tenants after the sale of their entire holding in execution have taken a sub-lease of a portion from the transferee, they no longer pay rent to their landlord, the Plaintiff, but are paying rent to the transferee. They have attorned to the transferee, and the result is that they must be considered to have repudiated the tenancy under the Plaintiff. No doubt it has been found that the tenants are still in possession of some portion of the lands, but this they possess not as tenants under the Plaintiff but as sub-lessees of the transferee. They have therefore abandoned their original raiyati right under their landlord, the Plaintiff. Sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is not exhaustive, and abandonment can be established apart from the provisions of that section. The fact that the sale of the holding took place in execution does not make any difference. The real question is whether the relationship of landlord and tenant still subsists between the Plaintiff and the original tenants. My submission is that the original tenants are no longer the tenants of the Plaintiff, firstly, they have repudiated their tenancy under the Plaintiff, and secondly, they have abandoned the holding. The facts found and admitted, I submit, do amount in law to abandonment and repudiation.

On a transfer of a non-transferable occupancy holding when the raiyat takes a sub-lease under the transferee, in some cases it has been held that the landlord is entitled to eject both the transferror and the transferee, whereas in other cases it has been held that the landlord is not entitled to get khas possession by ejecting the original tenant but is entitled to eject the transferee. The decisions, however, are all uniform in this respect that the landlord in such cases is entitled to get a declaration that the transferee has not got any title in the land as against the landlord.

Refers to the following cases :—Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan (1), Chandra Benode v. Sheikh Ala Bux (17), Rajani Kanta v. Ekkari (8), Dinanath v. Krishna Bijoy (2), Madar Mandal v. Mohima Chandra (3), Kali Nath v. Upendra Nath (12), Kalim Sheikh v. Mocham Mondal (9) and Kali Churn Ghose v. Armom Bibi (18).

I submit that the cases of Nabo Kissore v. Dhananjoy (7) and Siperunnessa v. Ramdeb (5) relied on by the lower Appellate Court are distinguishable.

Babu Trailakya Nath Ghosh for the Respondents.—I submit that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct, and the appeal is concluded by the findings of fact.

Plaintiff is not entitled to eject the transferee unless it is proved that the original tenants have abandoned the holding or repudiated the tenancy. The tenants are still residing on the land and cultivating a portion of it. No doubt they are upon a portion of the lands as a sub-lessee under the transferee but this fact does not establish that they have actually abandoned in law or fact their holding under the Plaintiff. The elements to constitute abandonment under sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act have not been proved. Execution of the kabuliyat by the raiyat in favour of the transferee and payment of rent to him had not the effect of a repudiation of the tenancy under the Plaintiff. The tenancy between the Plaintiff and the original raiyats still subsists, though they have taken a sub-lease under the transferee in respect of a portion of their leasehold lands under the Plaintiff. The sale in the present case was in effect of a portion of the holding.

I rely upon the cases in Nabo Kissore v. Dhananjoy (7) Siperunnessa v. Ramdeb (5).

Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur, in reply.—On the 22nd January 1924 when judgment was delivered, the learned vakil for the Appellant pointed out to their Lordships the case of Monmatha Kumar v. Josada Lal (6) and contended that the Plaintiff was at least entitled to get a declaration in this suit that the transferee had got no right in the lands as against the Plaintiff.

RANKIN, J.—In this case the landlord sues the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy jote for khas possession of the holding. It appears that two tenants Raj Mohan and Sonatan held the suit lands as occupancy raiyats under the Plaintiff. In execution of a money decree obtained against the tenants as well as of a mortgage decree obtained against them, the holding was sold to the Defendant No. 1 and thereupon the tenants took a tenancy under the transferee remaining upon their homestead portion which was part of the land of the tenancy and also remaining as cultivators of a certain number of plots being part of the tenancy. In these circumstances, there has been a difference of opinion between the Courts below. The learned Munsif, following Dayamayi's case (1) has held that, as the tenants no longer pay rent to the Plaintiff and as they now claim to hold the homestead and some plots of land within the jama under the transferee and not under the Plaintiff and as there is no independent evidence that the tenants still regard the Plaintiff as their landlord, it is clear that there has been an abandonment of the tenancy within the meaning of Dayamayi's case (1). He proceeded in theory entirely upon abandonment and, as a matter of fact, in the first Court, little or nothing appears to have been said either about repudiation or relinquishment. The learned District Judge of Jessore has taken another view. He has treated the case as a question solely of abandonment. He has pointed out that the plaint spoke of abandonment and that there is no allegation of relinquishment or repudiation. He has found that, upon Dayamayi's case (1) and certain subsequent decisions, there is no abandonment and he has accordingly as against the transferee dismissed the suit.

There was another Defendant against whom the suit was also dismissed. In my opinion that circumstance helps neither party and I do not propose to refer to it again.

This is a typical case and one constantly coming before the Court. The conditions under which we have to decide it are, I think, these:—We are bound by Dayamayi's case (1) but the decisions previous to Dayamayi's case (1) are not now necessarily binding upon us. This circumstance is of the less importance that the relevant decisions prior to Dayamayi's case (1) are in almost no single circumstance consistent or well settled. So far as regards the subsequent cases purporting to interpret Dayamayi's case (1) we are, I think, bound either to follow those decisions or to refer the matter to a Full Bench. But above and beyond these cases to which I have just very generally referred, we have to remember that there stand the express provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In dealing with this case, I propose to go first to the decision of Dayamayi's case (1) and to examine the state of the authorities applicable to such a case as the present.

In the second paragraph in the reported judgment of Dayamayi's case (1), to be found at page 223, the proposition laid down by the Full Bench is in these terms:—"Where the transfer is a sale of the whole holding, the landlord in the absence of his consent, is ordinarily entitled to enter on the holding; but where the transfer is of a part only of the holding, or not by way of sale, the landlord, though he has not consented, is not ordinarily entitled to recover possession of the holding, unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, or (b) a relinquishment of the holding, or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy." It will be observed that, in both branches of that proposition, occurs the word "ordinarily" and that word by itself shows that the circumstances mentioned in each branch are being regarded as evidence of, or, as importing reference to, some higher, more precise or more ultimate test. One asks oneself in the present case whether the circumstance that the tenants are still upon their homestead lands and are still cultivating part of the holding is a consideration which takes the case out of the qualification intended by the word "ordinarily." I am quite clear that such a case as this is not an ordinary case for the purpose of the proposition. In the second part of the proposition, it would appear that the ultimate test is abandonment (under sec. 87), relinquishment or repudiation of the tenancy. But it does seem to me possible that the meaning of the first part of the proposition is that, on proof that a tenant has transferred the whole of his holding out and out, the Court may conclude that there is an abandonment not necessarily within the meaning of sec. 87 or a repudiation of the tenancy that would not necessarily be allowed as by itself a sufficient reason for eviction under sec. 25 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I say that that is a possible interpretation of the language of the first branch. It has to be remembered that, whether they were right or not there were a considerable number of decisions to the effect that sec 87 is not exhaustive. Whether the Court meant to keep that open is not clear. In like manner as regards repudiation, the law, as I understand it, is that a mere denial of the landlord's title or of the relationship of landlord and tenant is not, by itself, a ground of eviction having regard to the express terms of such sections as secs. 10 and 25; but that, if in a previous suit a tenant successfully denied his landlord's title, then on the principle of estoppel by record an eviction may take place. This question whether in interpreting the word "ordinarily" in the first part of the proposition, we are to have sole regard to sec. 87 and to the provisions of the law as regards eviction which I have already expressed is, to my mind, the main difficulty in these cases. In the present case, however, I am of opinion that, on the evidence and on the findings, there is no justification for our holding that there is, in any legal sense of the word, an abandonment or, in any legal sense of the word, a repudiation. In this matter, one has, first of all, to remember that sec. 87 speaks of the tenant abandoning his residence without making provision for the payment of rent and ceasing to cultivate the holding by himself or another person. In the present case the tenant has not changed his residence and has not altogether ceased to cultivate the holding. There is no proof of refusal to pay rent. It seems to me that on these facts, any mere inference to be drawn from the fact of the sale in execution cannot amount to abandonment or repudiation in any sense of those expressions justifiable under the law. It has to be observed that in this case the sale was forced upon the tenants. Assuming that there was a mortgage decree as well as a money decree, still there can be no doubt that the money decree alone would have necessitated the sale. That being so, the tenants are in this position that they cannot question the title of the transferee. The landlord may elect to do so or may elect not to do so. One has to look to what the tenants in these circumstances have done. Not knowing whether the landlord will or will not assent, they have made terms with their transferee which provide that they shall have still a residence on the suit lands and shall still have the right to cultivate some of the lands. It seems to me that the tenants have done as much as they reasonably could in these circumstances to escape conduct amounting to abandonment or amounting to repudiation.

RAMESH CHANDRA MITRA v. DAIBA CHARAN DAS.

I do not propose here to discuss the question whether there is any real justification for the proposition that there may be abandonment apart from the terms of sec. 87. Having regard to the provisions as regards eviction and to the express terms of sec. 87, it is manifest that there is considerable difficulty in maintaining the doctrine of abandonment outside the Bengal Tenancy Act. The only common law on the subject known to me would be the general principle that, for breach of a condition of a tenancy as distinct from a mere covenant the landlord may re-enter. So far as contractual conditions are concerned, they are covered by the express language of such sections as sec. 25. So far as I know, ejectment for breach of an implied condition has always been limited to cases either of estoppel by record or of cases where the tenant has made an attempt to assert a title paramount to the landlord in himself or in some other person.

It was contended by Mr. Sen that, although as between landlord and tenant there might be no right to evict, as between the landlord and the transferee whom he has not recognised and who has no right as against him, a decree for ejectment would be quite admissible. For that proposition there is undoubtedly some authority prior to Dayamayi's case (1), in particular in the cases of Dinanath Roy v. Krishna Bijoy Saha (2) and Madar Mandal v. Mohima Chandra Mazumdar (3). Since Dayamayi's case (1) I do not regard these decisions as binding, and in my opinion, that proposition is absolutely indefensible on any principle. It is perfectly true that the transferee can claim no right as against the landlord; but unless the landlord has a right to present possession, he cannot possibly maintain ejectment against any body whether he be the tenant's transferee, the tenant's invitee or licensee or tenant's uncle, cousin or aunt. It is quite impossible that, on any principle of law, the landlord who has a mere right of reversion expectant on the determination of the tenancy and who has not as against his tenant the right to end the tenancy could maintain ejectment against a third person merely because that third person has no title in himself. Accordingly, in this particular case, the fact that the suit was brought against the transferee and not against the tenants, is, in my opinion, no reason whatever why the landlord should succeed. The correct form of the question in these cases was put by Sir R. Couch in Narendra Narain Roy v. Ishan Chandra Sen (4) and is quoted in Madar Mandal's case (3). One has to find whether nothing is left in the tenant which would prevent the zemindar from recovering the possession from the person who claims under the transfer. The landlord has to show that he is entitled to possession of the land now. If he is not entitled to possession of the land now then the only remedy which he could in any case get against the transferee would be a declaration that the transferee has not got the tenancy right in the landlord's property.

The cases subsequent to Dayamayi's case (1) do not, in my opinion, conflict with the view expressed. On the contrary, the case of Siperunnessa Bibi v. Ramdeb Rai (5) seems to me almost exactly in point and the case of Monmatha Kumar Ray v. Josada Lal Podder (6) to which Mr. Sen has been so good as to refer us this morning, in my opinion, exactly to the same point. For these reasons, I think, this appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs.

MUKERJI, J.—I entirely agree in the order proposed to be passed by my learned brother; but in view of the importance of the questions involved I would make a few observations as to what I consider about the matter.

The original tenants, according to the findings of both the Courts below, are still in possession of their homestead and several of the culturable plots, under the transferee, the Defendant No. 1. It has not been found, nor do I think has it been suggested, that the original tenants ever vacated the holding in pursuance of the sale. The sale therefore operated in effect not as a transfer of the entire holding but only of a portion of it. There is authority for the proposition that in such a state of things the sale in substance is a sale of a portion of the holding [see Nabo Kissore Saha v. Dhananjoy Saha (7)]. Now applying to this position the rule laid down in the case of Dayamayi v. Ananda Mohan Rai Chowdhury (1) the landlord would not be entitled to recover possession of the holding unless there has been (a) an abandonment within the meaning of sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act or (b) relinquishment of the holding or (c) a repudiation of the tenancy. It is quite clear then that in order to succeed the landlord will have to bring his case within one or other of the aforesaid three clauses.

Now as to abandonment, it is not open to us upon the plain terms of the aforesaid rule to consider whether the abandonment necessary to be established to confer a right of re-entry on the landlord may not be of a description not covered by sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, a point upon which the decisions appear to be apparently conflicting. The terms "abandonment," "relinquishment" and "repudiation" are terms distinct and not interchangeable, though proof of one may be some evidence, though not conclusive, yet relevant, for establishing facts and circumstances which might go to constitute another. Sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, though it does not purport to define abandonment, plainly indicates what it is. The material elements are (i) that the raiyat should abandon his residence, and that he should do so voluntarily, without notice to his landlord, and without arranging for payment of his rent as it falls due, and (ii) that he should cease to cultivate the holding either by himself or by some other person. In the case of Narendra Nath Roy v. Ishan Chandra Sen (4) which was a case under Act VIII (B. C.) of 1869. Chief Justice Sir Richard Couch observed that if a raiyat having a right of occupancy endeavours to transfer it to any person, and in fact quits his occupation and ceases himself to cultivate or hold the land, he may be rightly considered to have abandoned his right. In Madar Mandal v. Mohima Chandra Mazumdar (3) the Court observed that there can be no doubt that in order to entitle the landlord to re-enter on abandonment by the tenant, it must be an abandonment in the words of sec. 87, namely, that the raiyat voluntarily abandons his residence without notice to the landlord and without arranging for the payment of his rent as it falls due, and ceases to cultivate. In Ram Prasad Koeri v. Jawahir Roy (7a), it was held that abandonment is the effect of the act of the tenant in vacating the holding without making arrangement for payment for his rent as it falls due and for cultivating the land. In Siperunnessa Bibi v. Ramdeb Rai (5) it was held that where a tenant having a non-transferable right of occupancy sells such right to a third person, and having obtained a sub-lease from the purchaser, remains in possession of the land and cultivates it, the landlord, in the absence of repudiation by the tenant of his relation to the landlord as such, is not entitled to recover possession, inasmuch as it does not amount to abandonment, and the learned Judges relied for this proposition upon the decisions in Madar Mandal v. Mohima Chandra Mazumdar (3), Rajani Kanta Biswas v. Ekkari Das (8) and Kalim Sheikh v. Mocham Mondal (9). The decisions in the cases of Ishan Chandra Dhupi v. Nishi Chandra Dhupi (10) and Sailabala Debi v. Sriram Bhattacherjya (11) may perhaps be distinguished on the ground that in those cases the raiyat had parted with the whole of the agricultural portion of the holding and remained in possession of the homestead portion only and ceased paying rent, circumstances from which abandonment might be inferred. The decision in the case of Kali Nath Chakravarty v. Kumar Upendra Nath Chowdhury (12) in so far as it purports to lay down that where a tenant transfers his non-transferable holding, ceases to pay rent to his landlord and accepts a new tenancy from the transferee; and to be based upon the Full Bench case in Narendra Nath Rou v. Ishan Chandra Sen (4) referred to above cannot be treated as dealing with a question of abandonment within the meaning of sec. 87 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the present case none of the facts which would go to constitute an abandonment has been proved or found by the Courts below. Mere non-payment of rent is not evidence of abandonment though non-payment of rent coupled with non-occupation of land is evidence of an intention to abandon it, Goher Sheikh v. Alifuddin Sheikh (13).

The next question is, has there been a relinquishment of the holding? It is sufficient for me to say that it was not alleged that there was any. It is true that rent has not been paid, but mere non-payment is not sufficient though coupled with other facts and circumstances which show relinquishment, Nilmani Dassi v. Sonaton Doshayi (14).

Nextly, has there been a repudiation of the tenancy? I am not prepared to hold that merely entering into an arrangement with the transferee to hold under him a portion of the holding, the sale whereof is binding on the tenant under the law—a portion of the holding having been sold in execution of a money decree and other in execution of a mortgage decree—would amount to repudiation of the tenancy. If special facts are proved such as were found in the case of Rajendra Kanta Biswas v. Ekkari Das (8) or the refusal on the part of the tenant to pay rent continued for a sufficiently long series of years and is based upon the ground of non-liability, repudiation may be inferred. So also in the case of Monmatha Kumar Ray v. Josada Lal Podder (6) to which our attention has been drawn by Mr. Sen this morning it was held that mere execution of a kabuliyat in favour of the transferee does not amount to a repudiation of the tenancy. The original tenants were not parties in the present suit though one of them has been examined as a witness; and what he is alleged to have deposed in the present suit cannot be taken to have constituted a repudiation of the tenancy in the eye of the law.

A further question arose in the case as to whether the landlord could get a decree for khas possession against the transferee although there was no abandonment, relinquishment or repudiation made out on the part of the original tenants. Mr. Sen contended on the authority of the several cases of this Court that a landlord is entitled to have such a decree although he may not succeed in ejecting the original tenants. Reliance has been placed upon the decisions in Madar Mandal v. Mohima Chandra Mazumdar (3) and Dinanath Roy v. Krishna Bijoy Saha (2) and other cases upon which they are based. Speaking for myself, and I say this with the greatest respect for the learned Judges who decided these cases, I have not been able to discover any principles upon which these decisions are founded. The whole law of re-entry is based upon the principle that so long as the tenancy is not terminated by one or other of the modes indicated above, the tenancy interposes and operates as a barrier and the landlord cannot re-enter. I cannot very well see how the original tenant may not be touched on the ground that the tenancy subsists, and so far as the landlord is concerned the tenancy continues unaffected, and the landlord is entitled to look for payment of rent to the original tenant, and yet the landlord can get a decree for khas possession as against the transferee. At any rate, we have not been referred to any decision since the decision in Dayamayi's case (1) in which a similar view has been taken. In the case of Monmatha Kumar Ray v. Josada Lal Podder (6) under similar circumstances it appears that the landlord only obtained a declaration against the transferee that the latter had no right as against the landlord. Of course if the transferee has not acquired any title by his purchase there is nothing to prevent the landlord from getting a declaration in a suit properly framed for the purpose, that the transfer was not binding upon him as was laid down in the case of Sheikh Guzaffar Hossein v. E. Dalgliesh (15). I therefore agree that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

ATKINSON.
LORD SHAW.
LORD WRENBURY.	MACMILLAN &
LORD CARSON.	CO., LTD.,
SIR ROBERT YOUNGER.	Appellants,
1923,	v.
Heard, 25, 26 and 29, October.	K. & J. COOPER,
Judgment, 14, December.	Respondents.

Copyright Act of 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5, c. 46), secs. 1, 8—Compilation with notes of passages from old author, copyright if may be acquired in—Requisites for the acquisition of such right—Abridgment, copyright in.

There is a distinction between the material upon which one claiming copyright has worked and the product of the application of h's skill, judgment, labour and learning to those materials. The product, though it may be neither novel nor ingenious, is the claimant's original work in that it is originated by him, emanates from him and is not copied.

It is therefore not correct to say that a publication, the text of which consists merely of a reprint of passages selected from the work of an author, can never be entitled to copyright. But the skill, judgment, labour, etc., expended should be sufficient to impart to the product some quality or character which the original did not possess and which differentiates the product from the original.

What is the precise amount of the knowledge, labour, judgment or literary skill or taste which the author of any book or other compilation must bestow upon its composition in order to acquire copyright in it within the meaning of the Copyright Act of 1911 cannot be defined in precise terms. In every case it must depend largely on the special facts of that case and must in each case be very much a question of degree.

The publication in respect of which Appellants claimed copyright, in this case consisted, first, of a number of detached passages selected from North's translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander, often separated from each other by considerable bodies of print knit together by a few words so as to give these passages, when reprinted, the appearance as far as possible of a continuous narrative. Secondly, there were notes bearing on the text:

Held, by the Judicial Committee, that the reprint of the passages in question was not an "abridgment" in which copyright could be claimed; and that it did not require such knowledge, judgment, literary skill or taste to compile them as would entitle the compiler to claim copyright therein; but the notes made the book more attractive, the study of it more interesting and informing, enhancing its efficiency and consequently increasing its value as an educational manual, so that the Appellants were entitled to claim copyright in these notes. The Respondents infringed Appellants' copyright by not merely copying but servilely copying many of these notes, and not by publishing a similarly prepared reprint of passages from the same book.

To select scraps from an author and to print them in a narrative form so that the publication expressed, in the author's own words, some of the ideas, thoughts and opinions set forth in his work, does not require the learning, judgment, literary taste and skill requisite to compile properly and effectively an abridgment deserving the name.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 13th October 1921, of the High Court of Bombay in its Appellate Jurisdiction reversing a decree, dated the 10th March 1921, of the said Court in its Original Jurisdiction.

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD. v. K. & J. COOPER.

The Appellants who are publishers in England and other countries brought the suit against the Respondents who are educational publishers in Bombay.

The Appellants published in 1911 a book which they described as "Plutarch's Life of Alexander (Sir Thomas North's translation) edited by H. W. M. Parr." The text of this book was the text of Blackie's unabridged edition of the translation by Sir Thomas North, less certain portions omitted (either apparently as undesirable or as of insufficient interest). Where the omissions occurred the text was just sufficiently altered to keep the thread of the narrative unbroken. The passages to be omitted were selected by Mr. Parr who also wrote notes to the text, and the book was completed by him with a map, introduction, analysis of contents, chronological list, glossary, etc.

In October 1917 the University of Bombay prescribed, amongst other text books for their English matriculation examination of 1919, "Plutarch—Life of Alexander, translated by North (Macmillan & Co.)."

The Respondents also published, amongst other books, for the use of students at the aforesaid examination a book which they described as "Plutarch's Life of Alexander (North's translation abridged) edited with introduction, full notes, etc, by the Reverend A. Darby." The Respondents made a selection of passages to be omitted from the unabridged translation (Dr. Rouse's edition) and these included most of those omitted from the Appellants' book, but the Respondents retained many passages which the Appellants had omitted. The original translation had 40,000 words; the Appellants omitted 20,000 of these and the Respondents omitted only 13,000.

The Appellants alleged in their plaint that the Respondents' book constituted an infringement of the copyright which the Appellants claimed for their book, and they prayed for an injunction, damages, and other relief.

The facts are more fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

The trial Judge (Fawcett, J.) held that the labour, skill and judgment involved in the preparation of the Appellants' book were sufficient to give the text the character of an "original literary work" within the meaning of sec. 1, sub-sec. (1) of the Copyright Act, 1911 and that the Respondents had so far reproduced the Appellants' text as to constitute an infringement of the Appellants' copyright therein.

He further held that there had been an infringement of the copyright in the notes contained in the Appellants' book and he passed a decree in terms of the prayer to the plaint. On appeal the High Court (Macleod, C. J. and Shah, J.) reversed the decision of the trial Judge and dismissed the suit.

The learned Judges were of opinion that the Appellants' book was not entitled to copyright owing to its lack of originality, there being nothing original in picking out for publication portions of a work which is not copyright. With regard to the notes, they were of opinion that although the Respondents' author had had the Appellants' notes before him and had, in some cases, instead of going to a dictionary or other book of reference, saved himself that trouble by accepting the information contained in the Appellants' notes, yet considering the information taken and the number of instances in which it was so taken, there was not sufficient to constitute an infringement of the Appellants' copyright.

From the decree of the High Court on appeal the Appellants obtained special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Sir John Simon, K. C., Messrs. Macminnon, K. C., Macgillivray, K. C. and A. T. Macmillan for the Appellants.—The Appellate Court were in error in holding that these selections could not be the subject of copyright.

The Appellants' book, although composed of a series of selections, has nevertheless been produced by the labour, skill, knowledge and judgment of the author.

It is immaterial that the selections are all from the same book, the work of a single author, inasmuch as the completed book of selections is a new and distinct composition.

The question whether there can be copyright in a selection was decided in the affirmative by Sir Arthur Wilson in the Golden Treasury case, Macmillan v. Suresh Chunder Deb (4), where the principles in Longman v. Winchester (6) and Hogg v. Scott (5) were relied upon.

The "Golden Treasury" case was approved by Collins, M. R. in Moffat and Paige v. George Gill & Sons (8).

See too Emerson v. Davies (3), Walter v. Lane (2), Kelly v. Morris (12) and Lamb v. Evans (1).

The quality of "originality" is not essential in order to constitute copyright. University of London Press v. University Tutorial Press (9).

The text of the Appellants' book is the subject of copyright and there are concurrent findings of the lower Courts that the Respondents' text is the same as that of the Appellants.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., E. B. Raikes and Harold Hardy for the Respondents.—There was no originality in the Appellants' compilation sufficient to entitle them to copyright.

Sec. 1, sub-sec. (1) of the Copyright Act, 1911.

Their compilation was merely an extract from another work which itself was not the subject of copyright. If the Appellants had a right to restrain others from publishing their selection it would follow that there was right to restrain the publication of the entire work and the advantage of cessation of the original copyright would be lost. The "Golden Treasury" case, Macmillan v. Suresh Ch. Deb (4), is distinguishable. The selections there amounted to a new work and it was not argued that they could not be the subject of copyright. Sir A. Wilson's remarks are obiter and are not based on the cases to which he refers. Longman v. Winchester (6) and Hogg v Scott (5) which were referred to by him had for their ratio decidendi the question whether there had been an infringement, not whether there was a copyright. The basis of the Golden Treasury judgment may have been approved of by Collins, M. R. but not the judgment in its entirety.

There can be no copyright in selections from a single work.

Black v. Murray & Son (10).

Abridgement implies a new and original work as distinguished from extracts and the term is not applicable to the Appellants' compilation.

Copinger's Law of Copyright, 5th Ed., pp. 64, 148.

With regard to the notes, their matter was trifling and such as could be obtained from any reliable book of reference. Their value was infinitesimal and they cannot lay claim to copyright.

Sir J. Simon, K. C. in reply.—It is incorrect to say that if the Appellant succeeds, any other person can be restrained from publishing extracts from North's translation. The Appellants claim copyright in the work of their author, not an absolute right as of a patent. He referred to Copinger's Law of Copyright, 5th Ed., pp. 134, 135—Carelis v. Grey (16) and Leslie v. Young (15).

LORD ATKINSON.—The action out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the Appellants to restrain the Respondents, K. and J. Cooper, a firm carrying on in Bombay the trade and business of publishers of educational books, from printing, distributing or otherwise disposing of copies of a certain book published by them hereinafter described, and to recover damages and other relief. The ground on which this relief was claimed was that the Appellants were entitled to the copyright of a certain book entitled "Plutarch's Life of Alexander, Sir Thomas North's Translation. Edited for Schools by H. W. M. Parr, M.A.," and that the Respondents by the publication subsequently in the year 1918 of their aforesaid book entitled "Plutarch's Life of Alexander the Great, North's Translation, edited with Introduction, Marginalia, Notes and Summary by A. Darby, M.A." had infringed the copyright to which the Appellants were entitled in the earlier compilation.

The text of the Appellants' book consisted of a number of detached passages, selected from Sir Thomas North's translation, words being in some instances introduced to knit the passages together so that the text should, as far as possible, present the form of an unbroken narrative. The passages so selected were, in the original translation, by no means contiguous. Considerable printed matter in many instances separated the one from the other. North's translation consisted of 40,000 words; the text of the Appellants' book contained half of them, i.e., 20,000 words, while the book published by the Respondents contained not only the aforesaid 20,000 words but 7,000 words in addition.

In addition to this text comprising the 20,000 words, the Appellants' book contained much printed matter which was omitted from the Respondents' book, namely, marginal notes, an introduction dealing with North's translation and Alexander's place in history, an analysis of the book's contents, a chronological table setting forth the principal dates in Alexander's life, and a few short notes introduced into the text styled transition notes. The text was divided into six chapters; notes bearing on the text and a glossary were appended.

On the 14th October 1917, notice had by order of the Syndicate of the Bombay University been published prescribing certain text-books in English which were required to be used for the Matriculation Examination to be held in this University in the year 1919. The Appellants' book was included in that list. The title of the Appellants' book gives an indication of the purpose for which it was compiled; but it does not clearly appear from the evidence what was the precise purpose or object of the Appellants in limiting the text to 20,000 words and compressing it as they did. It may possibly have been that its length was so limited in order that its contents might be mastered in the time available for its study, and it also may have been limited because the Appellants desired to exclude everything from it which might be of an indecent or indelicate character, or which it might be thought undesirable for school boys to peruse or study. It did not, it would appear to their Lordships, require great knowledge, sound judgment, literary skill or taste to be brought to bear upon the translation to effect any of these objects as the passages of the translation which had been selected are reprinted in their original form, not condensed, expanded, modified or reshaped to any extent whatever.

In or about the month of November 1917, the Respondents published a hand-bill headed, "Bombay Matriculation 1919. Now Ready. Poetical Series, etc." The last book mentioned in the list was the Respondents' entitled as already set forth, with an announcement that it would soon be ready. The following sentences were then added :—

"In response to . . . should bring out reliable annotated editions of English Texts prescribed for the Bombay Matriculation examination, we have this time published such editions, in the confident hope that they will prove equally useful both to teachers and pupils.

"These editions will be found more useful than any published in England as having been specially prepared for Indian pupils, by those competent to understand their needs; and in every respect more reliable than similar editions brought out in this country by editors more or less incompetent for the task they undertake.

"As all our English Text-books will be ready in the beginning of the next month, teachers will be able to use at least some of them in the Pre-Matriculation Class.

"K. & J. Cooper, Educational Publishers, Bombay."

The Respondents' publication is formed on precisely the same general plan as was that of the Appellants'. Its text consisted of a number of detached passages taken from North's translation joined together, the preceding to the succeeding, by a few words where needed so as if possible to give to the whole text the appearance of a consecutive narrative. Notes were also contained in the Respondents' book which were in many instances servilely copied from those contained in the book of the Appellants.

The learned Judges in the Court of Appeal were of opinion that the Respondents intended and designed to publish a book which the student of the University would buy in preference to the book of the Appellants, and that Mr. Cooper's evidence to the contrary was obviously false. Their Lordships entirely concur with the learned Judges of the Court of Appeal in the opinion they have formed on this point.

If the Appellants were not entitled to a copyright in their book, or any material part of it, then the Respondents were entitled to do what they have done. If, on the contrary, the Appellants were entitled to a copyright in their book, or any material part of it which the Respondents had practically copied, then the Respondents were admittedly guilty of infringement. It is obvious, therefore, that the primary question to be determined on the appeal is whether the Appellants were entitled to a copyright in the text of their book and in those notes attached to it which latter the Respondents had in many instances in effect copied.

During the course of the argument much discussion arose as to the result that would follow if North's translation of Plutarch's Life was a publication which was actually the subject of copyright, or was capable of becoming so. These are interesting and rather difficult questions to solve; but their Lordships do not feel themselves called upon to attempt to solve them, because on the facts of this case, they do not arise. North's translation of Plutarch's Life of Alexander does not and never did—and, as the law stands, never can—enjoy the protection of copyright; and the questions which arise for decision must be dealt with upon that assumption.

The books both of the Appellants and the Respondents have in the proceedings been styled abridgments. In the true sense of that word this is an absolute misnomer.

Strictly speaking, an abridgment of an author's work means a statement designed to be complete and accurate of the thoughts, opinions, and ideas by him expressed therein, but set forth much more concisely in the compressed language of the abridger. A publication like that of the Appellants or Respondents, the text of which consists of a number of detached passages selected from an author's work, often not contiguous, but separated from those which precede and follow them by considerable bodies of print knit together by a few words so as to give these passages, when reprinted, the appearance as far as possible of a continuous narrative, is not an abridgment at all. It only expresses, in the original author's own words, some of the ideas, thoughts and opinions set forth in his work. And it is obvious that the learning, judgment, literary taste and skill requisite to compile properly and effectively, an abridgment deserving that name would not be at all needed merely to select such scraps as these taken from an author and to print them in a narrative form.

This point is well brought out in the following passages from the editions of Copinger's "Law of Copyright," published in 1904 and 1915 respectively, i.e., before and after the Copyright Act of 1911. The passages are supported by the authorities relied upon in those editions. The first passage runs thus (p. 39):—

"To constitute a true and equitable abridgment, the entire work must be preserved in its precise import and exact meaning, and then the act of abridgment is an exertion of the individuality employed in moulding and transfusing a large work into a small compass, thus rendering it less expensive and more convenient both to the time and use of the reader Independent labour must be apparent, and the reduction of the size and work by copying some of its parts and omitting others confers no title to authorship, and the result will not be an abridgment entitled to protection. To abridge in the legal sense of the word is to preserve the substance, the essence of the work in language suited to such a purpose, language substantially different from that of the original. To make such an abridgment requires the exercise of mind, labour, skill and judgment brought into play, and the result is not merely copying."

That passage is practically reprinted at p. 64 of the edition of 1915. At pages 148 and 566 the following paragraphs are added. The first runs thus:—

"To constitute a proper abridgment, the arrangement of the book abridged must be preserved, the ideas must also be taken and expressed in language not copied but condensed. To copy certain passages and omit others so as to reduce the volume in bulk is not such an abridgment as the Court would recognise as sufficiently original to protect the author."

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD. v. K. & J. COOPER.

And the second thus :—

"From the above cases it seems possible to draw the conclusion that the mere process of selecting passages from works readily accessible to the public is not, but that difficulty in obtaining access to the originals or skill manifested in making or arranging the selection is sufficient to give the character of an 'original literary work' to the selection."

The cases referred to in support of these statements included most of those which had been previously decided : Lamb v. Evans (1) and Walter v. Lane (2) amongst them.

The learned Judges in the Appellate Jurisdiction apparently came to the conclusion that a publication, the text of which consisted merely of a reprint of passages selected from the work of an author, could never be entitled to copyright. Their Lordships are unable to concur in that view. For instance, it may very well be that in selecting and combining for the use of schools or universities passages of scientific works in which the lines of reasoning are so closely knit and proceed with such unbroken continuity that each later proposition depends in a great degree for its proof or possible appreciation upon what has been laid down or established much earlier in the book, labour, accurate, scientific knowledge, sound judgment touching the purpose for which the selection is made, and literary skill would all be needed to effect the object in view. In such a case copyright might well be acquired for the print of the selected passages.

The 31st section of the Copyright Act of 1911 provides that no person shall be entitled to copyright or any similar right in any literary, dramatic, musical or artistic work, whether published or unpublished, otherwise than under and in accordance with the provisions of this statute or any other statutory enactment for the time being in force. Copyright is therefore a statutory right. Sec. 1, sub-sec. (1) of the Act enacts in respect of what it may be acquired. Sub-sec. 2 of the same section defines its meaning, sec. 2 deals with the methods by which it may be protected, and the moral basis on which the principle of those protective provisions rests is the Eighth Commandment, "Thou shalt not steal." It is for this reason that Lord Halsbury begins his judgment in Walter v. Lane (2) with the following words : "I should very much regret if I were compelled to come to a conclusion that the state of the law permitted one man to make a profit and to appropriate to himself what has been produced by the labour, skill and capital of another. And it is not denied that in this case the Defendant seeks to appropriate to himself what has been produced by the skill, labour and capital of others. In the view I take of this case the law is strong enough to restrain what to my mind would be a grievous injustice." It will be observed that it is the product of the labour, skill and capital of one man which must not be appropriated by another, not the elements, the raw material, if one may use the expression, upon which the labour and skill and capital of the first have been expended. To secure copyright for this product it is necessary that the labour, skill and capital expended should be sufficient to impart to the product some quality or character which the raw material did not possess, and which differentiates the product from the raw material. This distinction is well brought out in the judgment of that profound and accomplished lawyer and great and distinguished Judge,

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD. v. K. & J. COOPER.

Mr. Justice Story, in the case of Frederick Emerson v. Chas. Davies (3), decided in the United States and reported in Story's United States Reports, Vol. 3, p. 768. Some of the points decided are stated in the head note to be first, that any new and original plan, arrangement or combination of material will entitle the author to copyright therein, whether the materials themselves be old or new. Second, that whosoever by his own skill, labour and judgment writes a new work may have a copyright therein, unless it be directly copied or evasively imitated from another's work. Third, that to constitute piracy of a copyright it must be shown that the original has been either substantially copied or to be so imitated as to be a mere evasion of the copyright. The Plaintiff in the case had compiled and published a book entitled "The North American Arithmetic," described as containing Elementary Lessons by Frederick H. Amson, the purpose and object of the publication being to teach children the elements of arithmetic. The complaint was that the Defendants on a date named had without the Plaintiff's consent exposed for sale and sold fifty copies of the Plaintiff's said work, purporting to have been composed by the Defendant Davis, and had subsequently sold 1,000 copies of the same. The main defence was that the book, copies of which were sold by the Defendants, was composed by themselves, and that neither it nor any part of it was copied, adopted or taken from the Plaintiff's book or any part thereof. At p. 778 of the report the learned Judge expressed himself thus:—

"The book of the Plaintiff is, in my judgment, new and original in the sense in which those words are to be understood in cases of copyright The question is not whether the materials which are used are entirely new and have never been used before, or even that they have never been used before for the same purpose. The true question is whether the same plan, arrangement and combination of materials have been used before for the same purpose or for any other purpose. If they have not, then the Plaintiff is entitled to a copyright, although he may have gathered hints for his plan and arrangement or parts of his plan and arrangement from existing and known sources. He may have borrowed much of his materials from others, but if they are combined in a different manner from what was in use before . . . he is entitled to a copyright. . . . It is true that he does not thereby acquire the right to appropriate to himself the materials which were common to all persons before, so as to exclude those persons from a future use of such materials; but then they have no right to use such materials with his improvements superadded, whether they consist in plan, arrangement, or illustrations or combinations, for these are strictly his own. . . . In truth, in literature, in science and in art there are and can be few, if any, things which, in an abstract sense, are strictly new and original throughout."

The learned Judge then deals at length with many, indeed most, of the English authorities, and winds up with a remark in these words, which is singularly applicable to the present case: "I have bestowed a good deal of reflection upon this case, and at last I feel constrained to say that I am unable to divest myself of the impression that in point of fact the Defendant Davis had before him, when he composed his own work, the work of the Plaintiff, and that he made it his model and imitated it closely in his title or section of Addition and in a great measure in that of Subtraction also."

This decision is, of course, not binding on this tribunal; but it is, in the opinion of the Board, sound, able, convincing and helpful. It brings out clearly the distinction between the materials upon which one claiming copyright has worked and the product of the application of his skill, judgment, labour and learning to those materials; which product, though it may be neither novel nor ingenious, is the claimant's original work in that it is originated by him, emanates from him, and is not copied.

(3) 3 Story U. S. Rep 768 (1845).

MACMILLAN & CO., LTD. v. K. & J. COOPER.

It was by confounding the materials with the product that Mr. Upjohn endeavoured to sustain the argument that if the Appellants obtain copyright in their book any reprint of North's translation would be an infringement of it under sec. 8 of the Act of 1911.

Mr. Upjohn also contended as their Lordships understood him that Sir Arthur Wilson did not, in his judgment in the case of Macmillan v Suresh Chunder Deb (4), decide the question of the existence of copyright in the anthology entitled "The Golden Treasury of Songs and Lyrics"; but that assuming copyright existed he decided merely the question of the infringement of it. That is an extraordinary error. In the long headnote of the case it is stated:

"That the suit was instituted on the 27th February, 1890, and that the Plaintiffs complained that the publication of the Defendant's book constituted a breach of their copyright, and prayed for the usual relief by way of injunction and damages. They contended that, although the copyrights of the works of the original authors had long lapsed, they were entitled to the copyright in the selections made by P. (i.e., Mr. Palgrave). It was contended, on behalf of the Defendant, that there could be no copyright in such a selection, and that if any existed the Defendant's book had not infringed it."

The question of the existence of copyright in the anthology was therefore distinctly raised by the Defendant: and Sir Arthur Wilson is at p 961 reported to have expressed himself thus concerning it:—

"And first I have to consider whether there is copyright in a selection. There has not, as far as I know, been any actual decision upon this question, but, upon principle, I think it clear that such a right does exist, and there is authority to that effect as weighty as anything short of actual decision can be."

He then proceeds to state the law, as he conceived it to be, dealing with the existence of copyright in such work as the Golden Treasury, in the following words:—

"In the case of works not original in the proper sense of the term, but composed of or compiled or prepared from materials open to all, the fact that one man has produced such a work does not take away from anyone else the right to produce another work of the same kind, and in doing so to use all the materials open to him. But, as the law is concisely stated by Hall, V. C, in Hogg v. Scott (5), the true principle in all these cases is that the Defendant is not at liberty to use or avail himself of the labour which the Plaintiff has been at for the purpose of producing his work; that is, in fact, merely to take away the result of another man's labour or, in other words, his property."

Sir Arthur Wilson then points out that this principle applies to maps, guide books, street directories, dictionaries, to compilations of scientific work and other subjects, and considers that it applies to a selection of poems. He then gives the reason why it applies to Mr. Palgrave's Golden Treasury in the following words:—

"Such a selection as Mr. Palgrave has made obviously requires extensive reading, careful study and comparison, and the exercise of taste and judgment in selection. It is open to any one who pleases to go through a like course of reading, and by the exercise of his own taste and judgment to make a selection for himself. But if he spares himself this trouble and adopts Mr. Palgrave's selection he offends against the principle"

He then proceeds to quote the following passage from Lord Eldon's judgment in Longman v. Winchester (6), approved of by Lord Hatherley in Spiers v. Brown (7): "A work consisting of a selection from various authors, two men might perhaps make the same selection, but that must be by resorting to the original authors, not by taking advantage of the selection already made by another." Sir Arthur Wilson then adds :—

"I am of opinion that the selection of poems made by Mr. Palgrave and embodied in the Golden Treasury is the subject of copyright, and that the Defendant's book has infringed that right."

So far, therefore, from Sir Arthur Wilson not having decided the question whether or not the Plaintiffs were entitled to copyright in the Golden Treasury, he expressly stated it was the first question he had to consider. He devoted the best part of a page of his judgment to dealing with it. He states explicitly that he was of opinion Mr. Palgrave's selection embodied in the Golden Treasury was the subject of copyright and that the Defendants had infringed his right, and, as was his custom and method, he expressed in clear, precise and appropriate language what were the grounds upon which this decision rested.

The contention to the contrary is in their Lordships' view wholly unsustainable

In Moffat and Paige v. Gill (8), Collins, M. R., as he then was, in the course of his judgment at p. 470, after quoting from Lord Eldon's judgment in Longman v. Winchester (6), the passage which Sir Arthur Wilson had quoted, proceeds to say :—

"Then there is also the authority of the gentleman who was well known in these Courts before he went to India, and who afterwards became a distinguished Indian Judge (Sir Arthur Wilson), in which the very point is raised and decided in the case of Macmillan v. Suresh Chunder Deb (4). In that case the matter in question was the well-known series called the Golden Treasury, which is a series of quotations put together by Mr. Palgrave, and the Defendant had reproduced his work practically, super-adding notes of his own; and the learned Judge upheld or sustained a claim for infringement. It seems to me that that is precisely what the Defendant, Mr. Marshall, did in the present case."

Stirling, L. J., does not expressly mention Sir Arthur Wilson's decision, but Cozens Hardy, L. J., said that, as he entirely agreed with all that had fallen from his brethren, he did not think it necessary to add anything. It is clear, therefore, that Sir Arthur Wilson's decision in the Golden Treasury case was approved of and acted upon by the Court of Appeal in this case and treated, as in their Lordships' view it deserved to be, as a sound decision.

From the preface to the Golden Treasury it would appear that the poems in Book IV correspond to the half century just ended at the time of the publication, and that the proprietors of any copyright pieces which were included in this Book IV gave their permission to Mr. Palgrave for their insertion in his work.

appear to have been cited, and it was held that a person who makes notes of a speech delivered in public and transcribes them and publishes in a newspaper what purports to be a verbatim report of the speech, is the "author" of the report within the meaning of the Copyright Act of 1842, and is entitled to the copyright in the printed report, and can assign it

Lord Halsbury, in his judgment at p. 547, when dealing with the true meaning of the word "author" used in the statute of 1842, points out that every man has a proprietary right in his own literary composition, and that copyright is the exclusive privilege of making copies of it created by this statute which are two wholly different things, and should not be confounded, and restates the question for decision in these words: "The question here is solely whether this book, to use the words of the statute, printed and published and existing as a book for the first time, can be copied by some one other than the producers of it (I avoid the word author), by those who have not produced it themselves but have simply copied that which others have laboured to create by their own skill and expenditure." And again he, at p. 349, seems to express the view that if the skill, labour and accuracy of which he speaks be exercised to reproduce in writing spoken words in a book form, it is, as far as copyright in the written words is concerned, immaterial whether they be wise or foolish, accurate or inaccurate, of literary merit or of no merit at all.

Lord Davey in his judgment pointed out that copyright is merely the right of multiplying copies of a published writing, and has nothing to do with the originality or literary merits of the author or composer, and that the Appellant in that particular case only sought to prevent the Respondents from multiplying copies of this (the Appellant's own report of the speech of Lord Rosebery) and availing himself for his own profit, of the skill, labour and expense by which that report was produced and published.

The only other authority on the point of the acquisition of copyright to which it is necessary to refer is this case of University of London Press, Ltd. v. University Tutorial Press Ltd. (9) in which Mr. Justice Peterson, dealing with the meaning of the words "original literary work" used in sec. 1, sub-sec. (1) of the Act of 1911, at page 608 says:—

"The word 'original' does not in this connection mean that the work must be the expression of original or inventive thought. Copyright Acts are not concerned with the origin of ideas, but with the expression of thought; and in the case of 'literary work,' with the expression of thought in print or writing. The originality which is required relates to the expression of the thought; but the Act does not require that the expression must be in an original or novel form, but that the work must not be copied from another work—that it should originate from the author."

In their Lordships' view this is the correct construction of the words of sec. 1, sub-sec. (1), and they adopt it.

What is the precise amount of the knowledge, labour, judgment or literary skill or taste which the author of any book or other compilation must bestow upon its composition in order to acquire copyright in it within the meaning of the Copyright Act of 1911 cannot be defined in precise terms. In every case it must depend largely on the special facts of that case, and must in each case be very much a question of degree. But their Lordships have no hesitation in holding that there is no evidence in the present case to establish that an amount of these several things has been applied to the composition of the text of the Appellants' book, as distinguished from the notes contained in it, to entitle them to the copyright of it. As to the notes it is altogether different. Their Lordships do not take the view that these notes are trifling in their nature or are useless. On the contrary, they think that the notes make the book more attractive, the study of it more interesting and informing, enhance its efficiency and consequently increase its value as an educational manual. Mr. Upjohn contended that these notes were useless because everything in them was to be found in Lempriere's Classical Dictionary or some other classical dictionary. As if the heads of Indian pupils at school and students about to present themselves for a matriculation examination in the Bombay University were as well stored with classical lore of this nature as are these dictionaries, and that these youths had so keen a recollection of all the matters set forth in these substantial volumes that they did not require to refer to them! If the recollection of the contents of these dictionaries was so faint that they needed to refer to them, it was obviously of advantage to have the information at hand in the notes so that they might dispense with the reference.

Their Lordships are quite of opinion these notes were well chosen, were neatly condensed, were sufficiently copious, were accurate and must have required for the framing of them classical knowledge, literary skill and taste, labour and sound judgment as to what was fitting and useful to be brought to the notice of schoolboys and students about to enter the University. Well, the Respondents have not only copied but servilely copied many of these notes. There is no other way of accounting for the absolute verbal identity of some of the notes in both books.

In the case of Black v. Murray (10), which dealt with the alleged infringement of the copyright in a volume entitled "Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border," the original edition of which was no longer protected by copyright, but a new edition was published to which valuable notes were added, Lord Kinloch, in delivering judgment, dealt with the question of the effect of these notes upon the edition in which they were printed, in a very clear and forcible judgment. He said at p. 355 of the report :--

"I think it is clear that it will not create copyright in a new edition of a work of which the copyright has expired merely to make a few emendations of the text or to add a few unimportant notes. To create a copyright by alterations of the text these must be extensive and substantial, practically making a new book. With regard to notes, in like manner they must exhibit an addition to the work which is not superficial or colourable, but imparts to the book a true and real value over and above that belonging to the text. This value may perhaps be rightly expressed by saying that the book will procure purchasers in the market on special account of these notes. When notes to this extent and of this value are added I cannot doubt that they attach to the edition the privilege of copyright. The principle of the law of copyright directly applies. There is involved in such annotation, and often in a very eminent degree, an exercise of intellect and an application of learning which places the annotator in the position and character of author in the most proper sense of the word. . . . In every view the addition of such notes as I have figured puts the stamp of copyright on the edition to which they are attached. It will still, of course, remain open to publish the text which ex hypothesi is the same as in the original edition But to take and publish the notes will be a clear infringement."

In Jarrold v. Houlston (11), the Plaintiffs were the publishers of a book written by Dr. Brewer called the "Guide to Science." The Vice-Chancellor, Sir W. Page Wood, having fully ascertained the object with which this book was compiled and published and the sources from which Dr. Brewer obtained the information necessary to enable him to write it, stated these matters in the following passage and laid down the principle of law applicable to the facts. He said :—

"If any one by pains and labour collects and reduces into the form of a systematic course of instruction those questions which he may find ordinary persons asking in reference to the common phenomena of life, with answers to those questions and explanations of those phenomena, whether such explanations and answers are furnished by his own recollection of his former general reading or out of works consulted by him for the express purpose, the reduction of the questions so collected with such answers under certain heads and in a scientific form, is amply sufficient to constitute an original work of which the copyright will be protected. Therefore I now have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the book now in question is in that sense an original work and entitled to protection."

The Defendants were publishers of a book called "The Reason Why," which was published in parts styled lectures. The Vice-Chancellor held that the second lecture contained piratical matter, as did also apparently all the lectures from Nos. 5 to 25 inclusive. The Vice-Chancellor made the following order :—

"First, the Plaintiff do bring such action at law against the Defendants as they may be advised . . . for the publication of the book called 'The Reason Why' . . . . and that they undertake to abide by any order that this Court may make with reference to any damage occasioned by this order, in the event of the jury finding in favour of the Defendants. And also on Plaintiffs undertaking to bring such action to restrain Defendants from publishing the book called 'The Reason Why' containing the lectures numbered 2, 3 and from 5 to 25 both inclusive, or any passage or passages copied, taken or colourably altered from the book called 'The Guide to Science,' in the Plaintiffs' Bill mentioned."

(11) 3 K. & J. 708 (1857).

Following that precedent, their Lordships having come to the conclusion that the Appellants are not entitled to a copyright in the text of this book extending from page 1 to page 82 thereof both inclusive, but are entitled to copyright in the notes printed in pages 83 to 94, both inclusive, they will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction, dated the 13th October 1921, should be set aside with costs, and that the decree of Mr. Justice Fawcett of the 10th March 1921, should be amended by inserting after the words "mentioned in the plaint herein" the words "containing the notes and glossary printed on pages 83 to 94, both inclusive, of the said book or any of them, or any portion or portions of the said notes or any passage or passages from the same," and directing that the Respondents should pay to the Appellants all the costs of the hearing of the action before that Judge, and that subject to these amendments that the decree of the first Court ought to be affirmed.

Under the circumstances the parties will bear their own costs of this appeal.

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 368 OF 1922.

WALMSLEY, J.
MUKERJI, J.
1924,
Heard, 12 and 13, February.
Judgment, 14, February.

MATHURAPUR ZEMINDARY CO., LTD., Appellants,
v.
BHASARAM MANDAL and ors., Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 16, assignment of properties together with all arrears of rent—Subsequent decree for back rents, if assigned by operation of law—Doctrines of equity, if applicable in considering whether there was assignment by operation of law—Assignment in writing of back rents, if amounts to an "assignment in writing" of a subsequent decree for the said back rents—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 148 (h), how far allows transferees of properties with back rents to execute subsequent decrees for the back rents.

Where an assignment of some properties had been made by the landlord together with all arrears of rent and a decree was subsequently obtained by the landlord in respect of a portion of the said arrears:

Held—That the assignee had no locus standi to apply for execution of the decree under the provisions of Or. 21, r. 16, C. P. C. as there was no assignment of the decree in fact in writing, and the assignment could not be construed as an assignment of the decree "by operation of law." An execution Court is not warranted in applying doctrines of equity in considering whether there has been an assignment by operation of law, for the word decree-holder must be construed as meaning decree-holder in fact and not as including a party who in equity may afterwards become entitled to the rights of the actual decree-holder and the words of the section relating to the transfer of a decree cannot be construed so as to apply to a case where there was no decree in existence at the time of the agreement. Though there was an assignment of the properties with all its back or future rents, it was essentially different from a transfer of the decree itself.' Ordinarily transferees by operation of law would be legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder or the Official Assignee in the case of an insolvent debtor or the purchaser of a decree at a Court sale or a minor succeeding to the estate which was in the hands of an executor, and other instances where there is a vesting of the interest by operation of statute.

That sec. 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act did not entitle the assignee to execute the rent decree merely because the landlords' interest in the properties were assigned to the former. The provisions of the section only impose on the transferee of a rent decree a further disability which must be removed before he can apply for executing the decree as a rent decree.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th of November 1922 against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Maldah (Babu Srish Chandra Banerjee) in Zillah Rajshahi, dated the 19th of July 1922, affirming the order of the Munsif, 1st Court (Babu Kumud Kanta Sen) at Maldah, dated the 18th of April 1921.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows:—In February 1920 one Mr. Hennessy and others obtained a decree against Bhasaram Mandal and others for rent. The decree-holders in September 1919 and in January 1920 had assigned their properties with all back and future rents to the Mathurapur Zemindary Co. The latter accordingly in July 1920 applied for execution of the decree on being substituted in the place of the decree-holders upon the basis of the assignments. The Munsif disallowed the application, and the order was upheld on appeal. Hence the present second appeal to the High Court.

MUKERJI, J.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal are quite simple.

On the 4th February 1920, Mr. G. Hennessy and others obtained a decree for rent against the Respondents. The Appellants, the Mathurapur Zemindary Co., Ld., on the 17th July 1920, applied for execution of the said decree after being substituted in the place of the decree-holders on the basis of certain assignments in respect of the decree-holders' properties alleged to have been made in the first instance in September 1919 and thereafter in January 1920. The learned Munsif in whose Court the said application was made issued notice on the judgment-debtors to show cause why the substitution should not be made. The judgment-debtors appeared, denied that there was any assignment of the decree in question and challenged the locus standi of the Appellants to get themselves substituted or proceed with the execution. The learned Munsif held that the Appellants were not transferees of the decree either by assignment in writing or by operation of law and therefore they were not competent to apply for execution and consequently dismissed the application for execution. On appeal being taken from the said order, the order was affirmed and hence the present appeal to this Court.

It was contended on behalf of the Appellants that by reason of the provisions of sec. 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act a mere assignment of the decree would not have enabled them to execute the same as a rent decree and inasmuch as they are assignees of the decree-holders' properties in respect of which the rent decree was passed, they were in a better position than mere assignees of the decree, that though there was no assignment of the decree in writing, there was one by operation of law inasmuch as the assignment of the properties had been made together with all arrears of rent, and on principles of equity it should have been held that they were transferees of the decree by assignment. Reliance was placed on their behalf upon the case of Ananda Mohan Roy v. Pramatha Nath Ganguli (1). It is unnecessary to refer to the other cases cited as they do not appear to bear upon the aforesaid contention.

On the other hand, it was contended on behalf of the Respondents that no consideration of equity could arise between an assignor and an assignee such as might arise between a mortgagor and a mortgagee as was the case in Ananda Mohan Roy v. Pramatha Nath Ganguli (1). Reference was made on their behalf to the case of Thakuri Gope v. Malik Mokhtar Ahmed (2) in support of the contention that the transferee under such circumstances could not come in to execute the decree.

At the outset, I may observe that the deeds of assignment upon which the Appellants rely have not been placed before us, nor are they to be found on the record, and the only indication of their contents that can be gathered is from the judgment of the Munsif where he says that "it is contended that the property of the decree-holders with all balances and sums of money due and owing by the ryots and uncollected and unpaid on the day of assignment had been transferred." The relevant provision of the Code is Or. 21, r. 16. It is not pretended in the present case that there was any assignment of the decree in writing and it is well-settled that if it is to be a valid assignment within the meaning of this rule and one not by operation of law it must be in writing and a transferee under an oral assignment has no locus standi [Parvata v. Digambar (3)]. The Judicial Committee in the case of Jatindra Nath Basu v. Peyer Deye Debi (4) has observed that "such a transfer of the decree could, by reason of sec. 232 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882 (which with certain modifications which need not be referred to for our present purposes corresponds to Or. 21, r. 16 of the present Code), be effected only by an assignment in writing."

The contention that there was an assignment by operation of law is mainly based upon the observations of this Court in the case of Ananda Mohan Roy v. Pramatha Nath Ganguli (1). Transferees by operation of law ordinarily would be legal representatives of the deceased decree-holder, or the Official Assignee in the case of an insolvent debtor, or the purchaser of a decree at a Court sale, or a minor succeeding to the estate which was in the hands of an executor, and other instances where there is a vesting of the interest by operation of statute. It is necessary therefore to analyse the aforesaid decision very carefully in order to see whether it really professes to extend the meaning of that expression: The facts in that case were as follows:—Certain properties together with all rents, issues and profits arising therefrom or appertaining thereto were mortgaged, the mortgagee obtained a decree on the mortgage on the Original Side of this Court, and in execution of the decree the properties hypothecated together with all arrears of rent were sold and were conveyed by the Registrar to the Appellants in the appeal on a certain date. On that day, certain rent suits which the mortgagors had instituted previously for back rents in respect of some jamas held under the properties hypothecated were decided and decrees for rent passed in favour of the mortgagors. The Appellants in the appeal applied for execution of the rent decrees and the question arose whether they could do so as there was no assignment of the decrees in writing or by operation of law. The learned Judges in the course of their judgment commented on and distinguished the cases of Ram Sahai v. Gaya (5) and Dost Mohamed v. Altaf Hossein (6) as being inapplicable as the facts therein were different from those in the case they were dealing with. No doubt in the judgment of this Court in that case the observations of Sargeant, C. J., in the case of Parmananda Das v. Vallabhdas (7) were quoted at length, but the decision of this Court, as I read it, did not turn upon the meaning of the expression "by operation of law." This Court held that "in the present case, there was no assignment of the decree for arrears of rent in so many words, but not only the properties under which the jamas in arrears were included, but also all arrears of rents which were the subject of the rent suits were assigned to the Appellants. The arrears of rent were none the less arrears though suits had been brought for them and decrees were passed for them on the very day the conveyance was executed, and we think that in these circumstances the Appellants may be treated as assignees of the decree under Or. 21. r. 16." Reference was no doubt made to the case of Parmananda Das v. Vallabdas (7), but as I read the judgment of that case the decision therein really amounted to this that applying same doctrine of equity in the matter of interpretation of a document, the Court as a matter of fact held that "the decree had been transferred by an assignment in writing." Similarly in the case of Ananda Mohan Roy v. Pramatha Nath Ganguli (1) from the fact that all arrears of rent had been assigned over, and there having been decrees passed in respect of some simultaneously with, if not before, the execution of the conveyance, the construction put upon the conveyance which was in writing was that it also meant to include the decrees.

In the case of Parmananda Das v. Vallabdas (7), there was an assignment by certain executors who were trustees in respect of certain properties in favour of the cesti qui trust, in the most general terms, the words being "all moveable property, debts, claims, things in action whatsoever vested in them as such executors." Sargeant, C. J., observed in his judgment: "But it has been suggested that Parmananda is not a transferee of the decree under sec. 232 of the Civil Procedure Code, because the decree has not been transferred to him by assignment in writing or by operation of law, and therefore he is not entitled to apply for execution. There is no doubt that in a Court of Equity in England, the decree would be regarded as assigned to Parmananda Das and he would be allowed to proceed in execution in the name of the assignors. Here there is no distinction between law and equity, and by the expression 'by the operation of law' must be understood the operation of law as administered in these Courts We think under the circumstances we must hold that this decree has been transferred to Parmananda Das by operation of law. In the present case the decree has been transferred in writing as construed in these Courts." These last words are very important and they appear in the judgment of Sargeant, C. J., himself. In my judgment it is obviously right to invoke the aid of doctrines of equity in the matter of interpretation of a document of this nature executed by a trustee under a Will in favour of the cesti qui trust. If, however, the decision purports to lay down broadly that Courts of execution have to look to equity in considering whether there has been an assignment by operation of law, I regret I am unable to assent to the proposition The Madras High Court in the case of Bansorvittil Bhandari v. Ram Chandra (8) declined to apply the doctrine of equity in somewhat similar proceedings, and observed as follows:—"We are asked to hold that in the event which happened in this case the Appellant is entitled to be treated as the transferee of a decree from the decree-holder for the purpose of sec. 232, C. P. C., notwithstanding that at the time of assignment there was no decree and no decree-holder. It seems to us that we should not be warranted in applying the doctrine of equity on which the Appellant relies, which is stated in Palainappa v. Lakshmanan (9) for the purpose of construing sec. 232, C. P. C. We think the words decree-holder must be construed as meaning decree-holder in fact and not as including a party who in equity may afterwards become entitled to the rights of the actual decree-holder, and that the words of the section relating to a transfer of a decree cannot be construed so as to apply to a case where there was no decree in existence at the time of the agreement." The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had occasion to deal with a somewhat similar provision contained in sec. 208 of VIII of 1859 in the case of Abidunnisa Khatoon v. Amirunnisa Khatoon (10) and their Lordships condemned the consideration of principles of equity in such proceedings. Their Lordships observed as follows: – "Then we come to sec. 208, which, undoubtedly is a section relating to proceedings for execution, and after judgment and decree. It is to this effect :—'If a decree shall be transferred by assignment or by operation of law from the original decree-holder to any other person, application for the execution of the decree may be made by the person to whom it shall have been so transferred, or his pleader, and if the Court shall think proper to grant such application, the decree may be executed in the same manner as if the application were made by the original decree-holder.' It appears to their Lordships, in the first place, that, assuming Wajed to have the interest asserted, the decree was not, in the terms of this section, transferred to him either by assignment, which is not pretended, or by operation of law, from the original decree-holder. No incident had occurred on which the law could operate to transfer any estate from his mother to him. There had been no death: there had been no devolution: there had been no succession. His mother retained what right she had; that right was not transferred to him; if he had a right, it was derived from his father; it appears to their Lordships, therefore, that he is not a transferee of a decree within the terms of this section.

"Their Lordships have further to observe that they agree with the Chief Justice in the view which he expressed, that this was not a section intended to apply to cases where a serious contest arose with respect to the rights of persons to an equitable interest in a decree. It was not intended to enable them to try an important question, such as the legitimacy or illegitimacy of an heir. They are further fortified in this view by the consideration that, under sec. 364 of this Act, no appeal would lie from any judgment or decision given in a proceeding under sec. 208, it appears difficult to suppose that such an important question as this should be triable without appeal. Therefore, in their Lordships' view, agreeing with that of the Chief Justice, sec. 208 does not apply. Even if it did apply, it would appear to their Lordships that inasmuch as proceedings under it are not subject to appeal, probably a suit would lie for the purpose of reversing an order made in pursuance of it."

In my opinion the fact that, under the present law, there is an appeal does not take away from the weight that should attach to the above observations. In the case before us the outstanding features are that there was no assignment of the decree in fact in writing, that no question of equity arises inasmuch as it was a simple transaction between an assignor and an assignee and that the decree was not in fact in existence on the date of the assignment but came into being long after that date. Under such circumstances can the assignee come in? There was no doubt an assignment of the properties, and I may assume with all its back or future rents, but that is essentially different from the transfer of the decree itself: see the observations of Mahmud, J., in Ram Sahai v. Gaya (5) and Hansraj Pal v. Mukhraji Kunwar (11). A person to whom a party agrees to transfer a decree that may be passed in a suit is not a transferee within the meaning of the rule [Bansorrittil Bhandari v. Ram Chandra (8)]. A transfer of the property during the pendency of the suit does not entitle the purchaser to apply for the execution of the decree unless he has taken steps to have his name substituted in the suit in the place of his vendor, and Or. 21, r. 16, C. P. C. does not apply to such a case [Dost Mohamed v. Altaf Hossein (6), Peer Mohamed Rowthen v. Ramathan (12) and Thakuri Gope v. Malik Mokhtar Ahmed (2)]. There having been no transfer by assignment in writing, the Appellants could not by any application to the Court have kept the decree alive [see the observations of the Judicial Committee in the case of Jatindra Nath Basu v. Peyer Deye Debi (4)].

The Appellants' contention based on the provisions of sec. 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act does not really assist them, for, if at all, those provisions impose on the transferee of a rent decree a further disability which must be removed before he can apply for executing the decree as rent decree.

The Appellants' contentions therefore fail, the orders passed by the Courts below are correct and the appeal must be dismissed with costs—hearing fee three gold mohurs.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER No. 129 OF 1923.

CHATTERJEA, J. PANTON, J. 1923, Heard, 16 and 17, August. Judgment, 17, August.	PROMODE NATH ROY, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. BASIRUDDIN QUAZI, Defendant, Respondent.

This was an appeal preferred on the 13th of March 1923 against the order of Girish Chandra Sen, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Pabna and Bogra, dated the 12th of February 1923, reversing the order of Babu Ganga Bhuson Sen, Officiating Sub-Judge of Bogra, dated the 29th September 1921 and remanding the suit to his Court for trial on certain issues.

The facts were these:- The Plaintiff instituted a suit on the 14th April 1919 for recovery of rent at an enhanced rate under sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as well as for additional rent under sec. 52 of the Act against the Defendant who was a tenant. The Defendant in July 1921 raised an objection that the suit could not be proceeded with as an order had been made in June 1920 under sec. 101 directing the preparation of a record-of-rights. The trial Court disallowed the objection and partially decreed the suit. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court set aside that decree and sent back the suit for trial after three months from the final publication of the record-of-rights to be prepared under the notification of 1920. Hence the present appeal to the High Court.

(2) 17 C. W. N. 1141 (1913).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The question raised in this appeal turns upon the construction of sec. 111 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and arises under the following circumstances :—The Plaintiff-Appellant instituted a suit on the 14th of April 1919 for recovery of rent at an enhanced rate under sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as well as for additional rent under sec. 52 of that Act against the Defendant who is a tenant.

The Defendant put in his written statement on the 2nd of June 1919. Subsequently on the 4th of July 1921 he raised an objection that the suit could not be proceeded with having regard to the provisions of sec. 111 of the Bengal Tenancy Act as an order had been made in June 1920 under sec. 101 directing the preparation of a record-of-rights.

The Court of first instance disallowed the objection, tried the suit on the merits and partially decreed the suit in favour of the Plaintiff. On appeal the learned District Judge set aside the decree of the Court of first instance and sent back the suit for the trial of the other issues according to law after three months from the final publication of the record-of-rights to be prepared under the notification of 1920.

The Plaintiff has appealed to this Court and it is contended that he was entitled to proceed with the suit notwithstanding the provisions of sec. 111 and that that section did not apply to a suit which had been instituted in a Civil Court prior to the order made under sec. 101 of the Act.

Now sec. 111 lays down that "when an order has been made under sec. 101, directing the preparation of a record-of-rights, then, subject to the provisions of sec. 104H, a Civil Court shall not . . . until three months after the final publication of the record-of-rights entertain any application made under sec. 158 or any suit or application for the alteration of the rent . . .". On the face of it when an order has been made under sec 101, the Civil Courts' power to entertain a suit or application for the alteration of rent is suspended. The expression used is "entertain." That expression has been considered in connection with sec. 91 of the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act where a similar expression is used and it has been held that the provision that a Civil Court shall not entertain a suit of a particular description does not mean that a suit, if instituted, shall be dismissed. The proper course is to adjourn the trial of the suit until after the final publication of the record-of-rights, see the case of Ram Narayan Singh v. Lachmi Narayan Deo (1)]. The same view has been adopted in the case of Mussi. Hira Koer v. Lachman Gope (2) in connection with the provisions of sec 111 of the Bengal Tenancy Act That is not, however, disputed by the learned Vakil for the Appellant. His contention is that that section cannot have retrospective effect so as to affect suits or applications which had already been instituted or filed before the certification by the Government under sec. 101 was made. It is urged that the statute should not be given retrospective operation unless it is so clearly expressed in the statute itself or the intention is apparent by necessary and clear implication and that to give effect to the provisions of the section as being applicable to suits or applications already pending before the order under sec. 101 is made would be to take away vested rights.

This argument appears to us to proceed upon the assumption that an application of the section to such suits or applications is to destroy or take away any right. But the Court below has merely stayed the hearing of the suit until after the expiry of three months from the date of the final publication of the record-of-rights. The stay of the suit under the circumstances cannot result in loss to the parties. In any case we think that the object of the legislature is to avoid conflicting decisions of the Civil and Revenue Courts upon the same matters. That is why the trial of suit or application in Civil Court is prohibited by the section as soon as the order for the preparation of the record-of-rights has been made.

It is to be observed that the expression used is "shall not entertain" which would include the cases not only not already instituted but cases where suits have already been instituted but not tried. That section means that after an order has been made under sec. 101, Civil Courts shall not try any suit, if such suit has already been instituted, until three months after the final publication of the record-of-rights. That is the order which has been passed by the lower Appellate Court. Under the circumstances we cannot interfere with the order.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed.

As, however, the objection was not taken by the Defendant until long after the certification under sec. 101 had been made we direct that each party do bear his own costs both in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. The costs of the Court of first instance will abide the result.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 1121 AND 1123 OF 1922.

WALMSLEY, J.
SUHRAWARDY, J.
21, November.

MAHMUD SHEIKH and anr., Defendants, Appellants,
v.
MESSRS. KANKINARAH CO., LTD., Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Sch. II, secs. 5 (2), 15, 16—Arbitration—Award—Refusal by one of the arbitrators to act—Co-option of arbitrator—Change in personnel amongst arbitrators made by other arbitrators with consent of parties but without intervention of Court, effect of, if vitiates award—Award, appeal against—Second appeal—Revision.

Where the parties to a suit filed a petition of compromise on certain terms and the remaining matter in difference between the parties was referred to the arbitration of three persons named in the petition of compromise and the reference, and one of the arbitrators having refused to act, the other two co-opted another arbitrator, to which course the parties consented, and these three made an award, and upon that award the Court passed a decree:

Held—That the award could not be set aside though the addition of the co-opted arbitrator was made without the intervention of the Court, and that the decree upon the award was a good decree.

The foundation of proceedings by arbitration is the consent of the parties to a decision by an extra-judicial tribunal and if there is such consent the omission to move the Court under sec. 5 (2) of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code does not render the award a nullity.

Held also—That no appeal and second appeal lay against the decree passed upon the award, and upon the facts found it was not a case for interference in revision by the High Court.

These were appeals preferred on the 10th May 1922 and Rules issued against the decrees of P. H. Graham, Esq., District Judge of Zillah 24-Parganas, dated the 24th of April 1922, affirming the decree of Babu Harendra Nath Banerjee, Munsif, 2nd Court at Barasat, dated the 13th of August 1921.

The facts material to this report are as follows :-

These appeals arose out of suits brought by the Plaintiffs for recovery of khas possession of certain lands after ejectment of the Defendants therefrom. The Defendants contested the suit. Subsequently, a compromise was made between the parties and solenamas embodying the terms of the compromise were filed by both the parties. By the solenamas, it was agreed between the parties that the Defendants would give up possession of the lands in favour of the Plaintiffs and that the Plaintiffs would pay the value of the huts, etc., raised by them on the lands as compensation, and in order to ascertain the value of the huts, etc., three persons named in the petition of compromise were appointed arbitrators. The trial Court thereupon referred the question of compensation to the arbitration of the aforesaid three persons. One of these three arbitrators having refused to act, the other two appointed another arbitrator in his place with the consent of both parties, and these three arbitrators submitted their award. The Defendants, thereupon, filed a petition to the trial Court for setting aside the award on the ground of misconduct of the arbitrators. The trial Court overruled all the objections of the Defendants to the validity of the award and passed decrees in terms of the solenamas and the award.

The third objection, which is material to this report, was to the effect that the arbitrators improperly added another to their number without sanction of the Court, and the trial Court overruled this objection in these terms :—

"As regards the third objection, namely, that the arbitrators improperly added another to their number, it appears from the record of the proceedings before the arbitrators that Babu Ramgopal Bhattacharja, one of the arbitrators, having refused to act, Dr. Brojo Raj Ghose was appointed in his place with the consent of both the parties. In their petition, the Defendants have contended that as Brojo Raj Babu was not appointed an arbitrator by or with the sanction of the Court, he could not validly act as such. In the petition, the Defendants have not stated whether the appointment of Brojo Babu was made with their consent or not. Now at the time of hearing the objections, the Defendants have alleged that they did not give their consent. I cannot believe this allegation of the Defendants. If the Defendants had not approved the appointment of Brojo Raj Babu, why did not they take their objection before the arbitrators or why did not they move the Court in due time and why did they appear before the arbitrators. Their appearance before the arbitrators at least shews that they had implied consent in the appointment of Brojo Babu. As regards the point whether two of the arbitrators could validly appoint another in place of an absent arbitrator, I am of opinion that in view of the express provision of the solenamas on this point, the two other arbitrators were entitled to appoint Brojo Babu in place of Ramgopal Babu Accordingly I overrule this objection also."

Against the decrees of the trial Court, the Defendants preferred appeals. The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court held that no appeals lay, the matters having by consent of the parties been referred to arbitration, so that the Court, having thereafter refused the application to set aside the award, had no alternative but to draw up a decree, and that against the judgment and decree so pronounced no appeal lay.

The Defendants thereupon preferred these second appeals and obtained Rules in the alternative upon applications under sec. 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Gopal Chandra Das for the Appellants.

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Dwijendra Nath Mookerjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows .—

WALMSLEY, J.—These two appeals arise from two suits for ejectment. After some adjournments the parties came to an agreement that the Defendants should vacate the lands in suit, on compensation being paid to them for building and that the sum to be paid by way of compensation should be fixed by three independent gentlemen mentioned in the petition of compromise. The trial Court thereupon referred the question of compensation to the arbitration of these gentlemen. One of them, however, refused to act and the other two co-opted another member, and these three proceeded to make an award. On receipt of the award, the learned Munsif made a decree in accordance therewith, inspite of objections by the Defendants. The objections were four in number and they have been set out in the Munsif's judgment. Nothing has been said to us about the 1st and 2nd, so I do not refer to them. The third related to the fact that when Babu Ramgopal Bhattacharja refused to act, the other two co-opted Dr. Brojo Raj Ghosh without the intervention of the Court. The fourth was that the arbitrators were to make a valuation for the consideration of the Court along with other evidence.

Against the Munsif's decrees the Defendants preferred appeals, and the learned Judge has held that no appeal lay. The only argument addressed to him on behalf of the Defendants was that the so called arbitrators were merely to submit to the Munsif their estimate of the proper value of the building. The learned Judge overruled this argument, and I think he was right in doing so. The terms of the compromise and of the reference are quite clear.

Before us, emphasis was laid on the third objection. It is admitted that the objection was not specifically set out in the grounds of appeal to the District Court and in this Court, but it is said that the general grounds that the decree was not in accordance with the provisions of the Code is wide enough to cover it. It is also admitted that the objection does not appear to have been pressed before the Judge, but again it is said that the objection raises a pure question of law and can be taken at this stage of the case.

I do not think it necessary to attach weight to technical objections against the consideration of the Defendants' argument.

It is undoubtedly true that one gentleman was in the petition of compromise and the reference, but that another gentleman actually served on the Board of Arbitrators and joined in making the award. From the Munsif's judgment it appears that the Defendants did not at first say that the substitution of Dr. Brojo Raj Ghosh was made without their consent. They confined themselves to the technical ground that the substitution had not been made by the Court. At a later stage they said it had been made without their consent and the Munsif said that he did not believe them. That finding of fact was not challenged in the Court of Appeal and it must stand.

The position then is that a change in the personnel of the arbitrators was made with the approval of the Defendants but without the intervention of the Court. It is urged that this is a defect which strikes at the root of arbitration. I cannot accede to this proposition. The foundation of proceedings by arbitration is the consent of the parties to a decision by an extra-judicial tribunal and I am satisfied that there was such consent. I cannot adopt the view that the omission to move the Court under sec. 5 (2) of the Second Schedule to the Civil Procedure Code rendered the award a nullity. As an award it could be set aside only on one or more of the grounds mentioned in sec. 15 and it is not alleged that any of those grounds exist. I hold therefore that the Munsif's decrees on the award were good decrees and the lower Appellate Court was right in holding that no appeal lay against the decrees. No appeal lies to this Court, and therefore these appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Applications under sec. 115 of the Code were presented by way of alternative and Rules were issued on them. The facts I have mentioned, show that there is no reason for us to make use of our discretionary powers for the benefit of the Defendants. The Rules are also dismissed, but without any order as to costs.

SUHRAWARDY, J.—I agree.

LETTERS PATENT APPEAL

No. 1 OF 1922.

NEWBOULD, J. B. B. GHOSE, J. PAGE, J. 1924. Heard, 28, 29, 30 and 31, January Judgment, 22, February.	SURESH CHANDRA MUKERJEE, Plaintiff, Appellant, v. SHITI KANTA BANERJEE and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court, cls. 15 and 36, and Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 98—Appeal from the decision of a Division Bench of the High Court where the Judges differ in opinion—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Arts. 142 and 144—Land reformed after submergence—Suit by owner to recover—Onus of proof of possession or dispossession, on whom lies—Presumption—When adverse possession of part amounts to adverse possession of whole.

In order to prove possession within 12 years the Plaintiff might rely on the presumption that possession of the lawful owner continued as long as the land was incapable of actual possession. But in a case like the present where Art. 142 applied the Plaintiff, if he relied on the presumption, must prove not only that he was the real owner but that the land was incapable of actual user within 12 years before suit.*

LEIGH v. JACK (13), MAHOMED ALI v. KHAJA ABDUL GUNY (4) and PANDURANG GOBIND v. BAL KRISHNA HARI (14) referred to.

This was an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent preferred on the 23rd August 1922 against the decree, dated the 28th July 1922, of Mr. Justice Woodroffe differing in opinion from Mr. Justice Cuming, in appeal from Original Decree No. 233 of 1920, being an appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Zillah Nadia (Mr. J. K. Mukerji), dated the 30th June 1920.

The facts are briefly as follows:—On the north side of river Bhagirathi there was a chur Balliadanga in the District of Nadia and on the south side was a chur adjoining Mouza Kabirajpur, in the District of Burdwan. The river moved gradually in a southerly direction causing accretions to chur Balliadanga and diluviating first the chur adjoining Kabirajpur and part of the Kabirajpur Mouza. The alluvion and diluvion continued until the accretions to chur Balliadanga became reformations in situ of Kabirajpur land. Government settled some of these lands with the present Defendants, and Plaintiff who had putni rights in the Kabirajpur lands, instituted the present suit in 1916, claiming originally 1000 bighas. The trial Court gave the Plaintiff a decree for part of the lands, holding that Plaintiff's title to the other lands was barred by limitation. His appeal to the High Court was heard by a Divisional Bench consisting of Woodroffe and Cuming, JJ., who delivered the following dissentient judgments.

WOODROFFE, J.—This is a suit for declaration of the Plaintiff's title to and for recovery of possession of certain lands covering, it is said, 1,000 bighas in area described in the schedule to the plaint. The facts are fully set forth both in the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge and of my learned brother. I need not therefore repeat them except so far as is necessary for explaining the conclusions at which I have arrived.

Since the date of the plaint, claim to certain lands has been abandoned. The tract on the east within stations m, n, x, v 8, 7, 36, 35m in the Commissioner's map was given up in the trial Court. In this Court so much of the disputed land as lies north of the settlement line of 1901 (which corresponds to the southern banks of the river at the time of the Revenue Survey in 1856) was given up. Out of the lands comprised within the Revenue Survey and the boundary lines of Kabirajpore the Plaintiff's title has been found in respect of 15 chaks and the residuary portion of Mouza Kabirajpore. The chaks are numbered 5, 7, 15, 17, 61, 64, 69, 70, 73, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103 and 104. The residue does not bear any number. These 15 chaks and the residue lie scattered all over the Mouza.

The learned Subordinate Judge has given the Plaintiff a decree for so much of the 15 chaks and the residue as lies speaking roughly south of the southern line of the map of 1903 (thick brown line in the Commissioner's map) which is near to the southernmost line of the partition map of 1899. The Plaintiff's title to so much of the 15 chaks and the residue as lies north of the above-mentioned line has been held by the learned Subordinate Judge to have been extinguished by the adverse possession of the Defendants. The present appeal relates to so much of the disputed land as lies north of the above-mentioned line of 1903 and is covered by the 15 chaks and the residue of Mouza Kabirajpore. The Appellant asks that khas possession be given to the Plaintiff of so much of the whole of the disputed land as is covered by these 15 chaks and the residuary portion of Mouza Kabirajpore.

The decision of the suit depends upon the questions of limitation and adverse possession. It is conceded that the Plaintiff's suit is governed by Art. 142 of the Limitation Act as also that under that Article it is necessary for the Plaintiff to show possession and dispossession within 12 years before the suit. As to the sort of possession within 12 years before the suit and the mode of showing it I deal later. It is also conceded that whilst the burden of proving his case, namely, possession and dispossession within 12 years lies upon the Plaintiff the burden of proving adverse possession lies upon the Defendants. The Defendants are not, however, called upon to prove anything unless and until the Plaintiff has established his possession and dispossession within 12 years. If the Plaintiff does that then the onus is upon the Defendants to prove then adverse possession for 12 years. It is very important in my opinion to keep this distinction well in sight in order to avoid the confusion which is liable to result in cases of this kind in which a very large number of decisions have been cited. The point is, however, in my opinion, clear, namely, that the Plaintiff must first of all establish possession and dispossession within 12 years of the suit. It has been contended on the Plaintiff's behalf that as his title to the land has been found as also that he had possession of the land before diluvion, his constructive possession must be deemed to have continued until the Defendants show that such possession has come to an end. The argument has been carried to the length of the statement that in a case of this kind it is only necessary for the Plaintiff to establish his title and to allege that he is out of possession in order to obtain relief, it being upon the Defendants to allege and prove when such dispossession took place.

SURESH CHANDRA MUKERJEE v. SHIB KANTA BANERJEE.

This, however, in my opinion, is a wrong view of the law. It will be, however, more convenient to deal with this matter after I have set forth the case which the Plaintiff made in the plaint. This is the case upon which his claim must be judged.

According to the plaint diluvion took place in the year 1890. In 1902 there was a reformation. At the time of the temporary settlement by the Collectorate of Nadia in the year 1901 of char Ballidanga the then Collector of Nadia declared the lands to be reformation in situ of Mouza Kabirajpore to which the Plaintiff had title and the Collector released them in favour of the Plaintiff as talukdar of Mouza Kabirajpore. The Plaintiff alleges that at that time the land was in the form of an extensive sand bank and unfit for cultivation and possession. It was only after the rainy season of October 1906 that the land became, according to the Plaintiff's case, fit for cultivation. At that time it is alleged that the Defendants proposed to take settlement of the land from the Plaintiff. But owing to their, that is, the former's, delay the Plaintiff with a view of settling the land with others attempted in March 1913, to have it surveyed by an Amin but the Defendants alleging that the lands were comprised within the settlement mehal belonging to them and denying the title of the Plaintiff prevented the Plaintiff from making the survey. This allegation is denied. The plaint then alleges that the Defendants not having a legal title the Plaintiff has brought this suit. He dates his cause of action as having gradually arisen from the date when a portion of the land first became fit for cultivation, that is, from the 18th October 1906. Obviously this is incorrect, as "becoming fit for cultivation" is not a cause of action. But it appears from the evidence of the witnesses for the Plaintiff and is admitted in argument that the Plaintiff was dispossessed in the year 1906 when the land became culturable: for the evidence of his witnesses is that the Defendants have been in adverse possession since the year 1906. The Defendants claim to have been in possession long before that.

Now the position is this: the evidence of the Plaintiff's own witness establishes, as I have said, the adverse possession of the Defendants for a period of 10 years, a period of two years short of the period of limitation under Art. 142. A question then arises as regards the two years prior to 1906, that is a period of 12 years before the suit. On the face of the plaint the Plaintiff is not barred and if it were established as he alleges that the lands only became capable of possession and were possessed from the year 1906 then the Plaintiff's suit would be in time because during the two years prior to 1906 the lands would have been according to the Plaintiff's case, incapable of possession having reformed only in 1902 and in the case of land incapable of possession it would have to be held that the Plaintiff who has title has constructive possession during such period. But it has been shown to a certainty in this case and it has not been contested before us that the story which has been put forward by the Plaintiff is not a true one and the Judge has described it as absurd. For it has been abundantly shown that it is not true that the land for the first time reformed in the year 1902 as alleged in the plaint. As a matter of fact (to go no earlier) the land reformed in 1860. In that year a settlement was made; as also in 1890 another settlement was made. There was a further reformation and further settlement more than 12 years before the suit That being so the question then arises whether or not the Plaintiff's allegation having been disproved on this head he must not show that he had possession of the land during the period of 1904 to 1906 For the Appellant it is contended that the Plaintiff has not to show this that we must assume in the absence of any evidence and on the strength of his title that during such period he had constructive possession unless and until the Defendants prove their adverse possession during such time In my opinion however this contention is not sound The Plaintiff sued for possession on the allegation of dispossession He is bound to prove possession within 12 years before the suit This possession may be either actual or constructive His witnesses say that he was not in actual possession from the time the land became submerged as it became incapable of such possession and that he has not had actual possession since the land reformed and became culturable The Plaintiff must therefore prove that the land was incapable of actual possession within 12 years before the suit, that is, during the two years preceding 1906 since which date admittedly there has been adverse possession In other words, he must show that his constructive possession continued on account of diluvion and on account of the land being incapable of possession within 12 years of the suit. He must show that the land became incapable of user by submergence or otherwise and remained in such a state of incapacity for user within the period of limitation

Now the question is whether the Plaintiff has shown this It is in the first place to be observed that there has been admitted adverse possession for 10 years before the suit and having regard to the fact that some of the disputed land reformed so far back as the year 1880, some 26 years before the institution of the suit, it is in my opinion primâ facie probable that the two years prior to 1906 the land was capable of possession as it admittedly was during the ten subsequent years. As stated in the judgment the Plaintiff does not claim to have exercised an act of ownership over any part of the reformed land and his witnesses show that possession had been for ten years prior to the suit with the Defendants Of course if the allegation in the plaint be established there would obviously be a distinction between the period of ten years before the suit and the period before that, because the answer to the question why we should not hold that the Defendants' admitted possession of ten years did not extend two years further would, upon the plaint, have been that it could not be extended further because the land was incapable of possession having only been reformed in 1902 But as that case is shown to be untrue that reason can no longer be given The Plaintiff now seeks to establish (if the onus be upon him) that the land was unoccupied and incapable of user during the years preceding 1906 and therefore his constructive possession continued He seeks to do this not by his own evidence of which he has none for that period but by the evidence given on behalf of the Defendants. Some inconsistent arguments have been addressed to us upon this part of the case. Thus the evidence of the Defendants has been attacked as untrue and untrustworthy If that be the fact then the Plaintiff who seeks to use that evidence can gain nothing thereby Again it has been sought to show that the lands of which user has been spoken of by the Defendants' witnesses have not been sufficiently identified with the lands in dispute. It may be, it has been suggested, that the undisputed portions of the char Balliadanga were the subject of some at least of the user of which the witnesses spoke But if this be so then the evidence is irrelevant, because it is only on the assumption that the Defendants' evidence relates to the disputed lands in suit that it can be of any use to the Plaintiff. All that the Plaintiff can consistently do as regards this matter is in my opinion to admit the general trustworthiness of the Defendants evidence as also that such evidence refers to the disputed land but he may at the same time contend that the acts of user which are spoken to are not of such a character as to constitute adverse possession by reason of inadequacy in continuity, extent and so forth. I will discuss shortly the Defendants' evidence when dealing with the question of adverse possession. I am now dealing with the question only whether the Plaintiff has established his case the onus of which lies upon him, namely, possession and dispossession within 12 years of the suit. It is sufficient to say here that in my opinion it is not possible to say that the Defendants' evidence establishes in the Plaintiff's favour the fact that the land in dispute were either not used or were incapable of user and that therefore the Plaintiff had constructive possession within 12 years prior to the suit.

The next question is this: Assuming that the Plaintiff has established his case then the onus is on the Defendants to show that they had adverse possession during period of 1904 to 1906. We must consider whether they have, as the learned Judge has held, discharged that onus.

Before entering into this question it is necessary to advert to an objection by the Respondents, namely, the position of the chaks which the Plaintiff claims has not been in some cases delineated and in others the chaks have not been numbered. In reply to this objection we were asked by the Plaintiff to direct the Commissioner in this case to appear and to relay and number all the thak chaks of Kabirajpur upon the map of the disputed lands prepared and submitted by him. The learned vakil for the Respondents objected to this on the ground that the Appellant should not be allowed to amend his case in appeal. The view, however, which we took with regard to this matter was that the Appellant's case should not fail on such ground if it were possible for the Commissioner to do what the Plaintiff asked without calling any further evidence, in other words, if it was a question of numbering and (if necessary) plotting the chaks from the maps already in evidence in the case and without taking further evidence. We accordingly directed the Commissioner to appear and on his appearance and our making the order in terms of the Plaintiff's petition the learned vakil for the Respondents (without prejudice to his contention above-mentioned) asked us also to direct the Commissioner to plot on his map the Government Settlement chittas of 1880, 1890 and the dags of the partition Commissioner. This prayer we also acceded to.

The Commissioner's report finds that the chaks and residue claimed in the appeal fall within the disputed area. His report, however, raises a question whether only six chaks and not 15 form part of the Appellant's patni. These statements in the report upon this point are objected to on the ground that they raise a new case, the title to these chaks having been found by the first Court to be with the Plaintiff and the only question therefore which, it is said, was left open on our order was the identification of the chaks and their numbering. It is to be observed that the statements to which exceptions are taken are not statements by the Commissioner himself but are taken from the thak statement which was already on the record before the direction was given by the Court to the Commissioner. It is denied on the other hand that it is a new case. Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal for Defendant No. 1 as also the learned vakil who support the same interest state that they argued that the Appellant could not claim all the 15 chaks because the Plaintiff's estate only comprised six chaks. Accepting this statement of the learned vakil it is not in my view of the case as regards limitation necessary to determine this question because I think that the appeal fails on other grounds than that of title. Relaying of the Government chittas of 1880 and 1890 and the partition plots of 1899 show that whatever be the title the lands are covered in part by these chittas. The report identifies the Plaintiff's lands and the lands covered by the chittas.

Upon the question whether the Defendants have proved adverse possession it is to be remembered in the first place that adverse possession for 10 years prior to the suit is admitted. No doubt if (as the Plaintiff alleges in the plaint) the land only appeared and became culturable ten years before the suit that is an answer to the objection as regards limitation. But when we find that that story is untrue and that in fact the land commenced to re-appear at, to go to no earlier dated 1880, that is, 26 years before the suit, it seems primâ facie likely that the adverse possession which is admitted for 10 years existed for the additional 2 years prior to 1906. On the one hand there is nothing to prevent such an inference as that the lands did not reform and become culturable about 1906, and on the other hand we have the fact of the reformation of the land in 1880, 1890 and subsequent years. It is not to be supposed that the land was allowed to remain for so many years without any possession having been taken.

We must distinguish, doubtless, between the question of possession and the nature of possession. It may be that in any particular case acts of possession may be shown which are not adequate to establish adverse possession by reason of continuity, limited extent or other reason. That some possession was exercised over the land in dispute I have no doubt. We have it noted upon the Government map made in the proceedings of 1903 that the Defendants were then in possession. If that statement is correct and the possession amounted to adverse possession then the suit is barred. We also have the fact that settlements have been made with the Defendants from the year 1880 in respect of which revenue has been paid by them. It is to be noted that the Defendants, thus are not in the position of mere trespassers but they are persons who entered into possession under colour of title. As regards this it has been said that where a man enters upon a land claiming title his entry into possession refers to such title. Where he enters without title the seisin is confined to possession by metes and bounds, it being a well-known rule that mere trespassers and squatters must in order to establish adverse possession show actual and not merely a constructive possession. So where there is, as here, an entry into possession of a tract of land under a deed of settlement containing specific boundaries the possession may be referred to the boundaries given in such title deed. I do not say that this is anything more than a rule of evidence. As such it must be applied with reference to the facts of each particular case. Thus as I have said during the course of argument if under a deed giving title to a tract of 100 square miles actual possession is taken only of a very small portion of it and nothing further is done, it may be that such possession would be insufficient to constitute adverse possession of the whole tract to which there was a colour of title. I think, however, that as a rule of evidence in judging whether adverse possession has been established or not we may take into account the fact that the party is not a mere trespasser but is acting under a colour of title. But however this be, my conclusion would be the same, namely, that the Appellant has not shown that the decree should be reversed. In this case the Defendants held under a settlement from the Government. In addition to the fact that the Defendants' possession was noted in the map of the settlement proceedings of 1903 we have the fact that the land was partitioned between the Defendants in 1899 under a decree of the High Court and boundary pillars were set up denoting the parties' respective possession. It seems to me under the circumstances of this case unlikely that persons would for years pay Government revenue without making user any of the land.

As to the actual user the learned Judge says that the Defendants have examined certain witnesses whom he names to prove possession of the char lands. He says: "I think this part of the Defendants' evidence is not at all satisfactory. Such evidence can be manufactured by a powerful man like the Defendant without much difficulty. But there is no doubt that this evidence coupled with the documentary evidence referred to above, unmistakeably show that the Defendants adversely possessed by far the greater portion of the disputed char since 1903." It has been argued that the learned Judge has discredited the oral evidence. But I do not read his judgment in this way. Evidently what the learned Judge meant to say was that without the documentary evidence the oral evidence to which he refers would not have been enough, as it might have been got up. For if it had been in his opinion unreliable in the sense of untrue he could not have said "coupled with the documentary evidence." By so coupling it the Judge in effect says that he does accept it when associated with the documentary evidence in the case. I may observe here that there is no presumption that evidence is manufactured even when given by "a powerful landlord." It must be shown by cross-examination of witnesses or other evidence in the case that there are reasons for disbelieving the evidence on this or on any other ground. It is to be observed in this connection that the Defendants' witnesses are corroborated by the Plaintiff's own witnesses so far as the period of 10 years is concerned extending up to the year 1906. I see no sufficient reason to doubt the evidence given that the Defendants had possession for more than two years before that date. One of the Defendants has given his own evidence which is more than the Plaintiff has done, who on the other hand set up an untrue case and has not appeared to support it.

It is to be observed also in this connection that amongst the witnesses whom the learned Judge mentions the name of the Amin witness Rajani Nath Dey, D. W. No. 7 is not included. Primâ facie he is a disinterested witness, although the contrary has been suggested on the ground that when he went to test the measurement he put up in the Defendant's house. He says that in 1890 Shiba Das Babu, the father of Defendant Shiti Kanta Banerjee, was in possession of the char which he then saw for the first time. He saw it again in 1903. In 1903 he found the major portion of the char under cultivation. About 2 to 2½ rashis wide lands above the water was sandy. Above that all lands were culturable. There were some trees and Shiti Kanta grew kalai on the culturable portion of the char. It has been suggested that the cross-examination establishes that this gentleman refers to the disputed area. But I am unable to read his evidence in this way. Because he refers in cross-examination to certain plots Nos. 11 of Touzi No. 2460 and 26 and 29 of Touzi No. 824 it does not follow that he meant thereby to limit the general statement which he made in his examination-in-chief. Otherwise for what reason was he called?

As regards the documentary evidence to which the learned Judge has referred it consists of partition proceedings of 1899, a note of possession on the map of 1903, rent receipts and chittas as regards four of which at least the Commissioner compared them with the locality. The first mentioned proceedings are of course not binding as a judgment not having been given in proceedings to which the Appellant was a party. But they are evidence to show the origin of the Defendants' possession and relevant in connection with the obtaining of possession and demarcation of lands by metes and bounds under those proceedings. In my opinion the note on the settlement map of 1903 is of great importance.

The learned Judge comes to the conclusion that the tracts of lands which are shown as unculturable in the partition map of 1899 were in the actual occupation of the Defendants in that year and also in 1903. That being so he comes to the conclusion that the Defendants have succeeded in establishing their adverse title to all the reformed lands of Kabirajpur which fall within the settlement map of 1903 and the partition map of 1899.

Doubtless in a case of admitted title one is disposed to regard with strictness evidence of adverse possession and to call for satisfactory proof before deciding against the title. In the present case there was entry under colour of title from the Government and on a fair reading of the evidence, which in my opinion sufficiently establishes both the fact and nature of the possession necessary, I agree with the Subordinate Judge that it does dispose of the Plaintiff's case. In my opinion there is no sufficient ground for disturbing the judgment under appeal and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

A cross-objection has been made with respect to costs. The lower Court has directed that each of the parties should bear and pay their own costs on account of the Commissioner, and as regards other costs half costs have been disallowed. It has been contended in the cross-objection that these orders are incorrect and that they should be reversed having regard to the small area of the land which has been granted to the Plaintiff. No doubt the Plaintiff has claimed a great deal more than what was given by the Court. But he did succeed in part and I am unable to hold that the question of costs in this case raises such a matter of principle as would justify this Court in interfering in appeal.

SURESH CHANDRA MUKERJEE v. SHITI KANTA BANERJEE.

We have already given our order as regards costs of the Commissioner in this Court. But to avoid any further question I may have recorded our order that the costs of the Commissioner in this Court is to be borne by the parties in equal shares. These costs have already been paid to the Commissioner according to the shares stated.

As there is a difference of opinion and there is no majority varying or reversing the decree appealed from the appeal is dismissed with costs.

CUMING, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises is a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession. The Plaintiff's case was that he took a putni settlement of a certain lot Madhusudanpore and that within the lot was a certain Mouza called Kabirajpore and that by virtue of this putni title and also by adverse possession he had acquired a good title and was in possession of the property in suit. In his plaint he does not state when he took the putni settlement or when his adverse possession began. His vakil stated that he took the putni settlement in 1857 shortly after the Revenue Survey. The superior landlord is the Maharajah of Burdwan. The northern boundary of the Mouza Kabirajpore was the river Bhagirathi. In the year [illegible] the river Bhagirathi began to wash away first the char north of Kabirajpore and from the year 1890 it began to wash away the main land of village Kabirajpore and a char appeared on the north side of the river adjoining char Balliadanga which is a char on the Nadia or north side of the river.

From the year 1902 the land of Kabirajpore began to reform on the Nadia side of the river Bhagirathi which is one of the many names for the river Ganges. It may be noted here that at the time the Revenue Survey the river Bhagirathi formed the boundary at this place between the Districts of Burdwan and Nadia.

The Bhagirathi continued to move towards the south and the land of the Mouza Kabirajpore began to be reformed in situ from 1902 and the said land began to be fit for cultivation at the end of the rainy season of 1313 (1906).

In 1904 the Collector of Nadia made a temporary settlement of the char called Balliadanga in the District of Nadia with Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, which char is recorded as Settlement Mehal Nos. 821 and 2460. At the time of the temporary settlement in 1904 a map was prepared and the Collector found that some 665 odd bighas of land which had been measured as forming part of char Balliadanga were really a reformation in situ of village Kabirajpore and so he excluded them from the settlement. These lands were then unfit for cultivation. The Bhagirathi then moved further south and a further tract of land of village Kabirajpore reformed in extent some 334 bighas odd.

The Plaintiff in 1913 sent his Amin to measure the lands. The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 resisted him and would not allow the Plaintiff to measure the land. Hence the suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession on the ground that these lands are reformation in situ of the land of village Kabirajpore which is included within his putni taluk lot 10 Madhusudanpore. The Defendants denied the title of the Plaintiff. They contended that the Plaintiff did not hold a 16 annas share in lot Madhusudanpore, that he had only a fractional interest in Mehal Kabirajpore. They denied that the lands in suit were a reformation in situ of the land of Mouza Kabirajpore. They contended that they were accretions of char Ballia-danga recorded as belonging to Touzi Mehal 824 and 2460 of the Nadia Collectorate, which had been settled with them. Further that the land in dispute had become fit for cultivation more than 12 years before the date of the suit and the Defendants had themselves possessed the lands for more than 12 years before the date of the suit and so the Plaintiff had lost his title, if any, by adverse possession.

They traversed all the allegations of fact in the plaint. Briefly then their case was that the Plaintiff had no title and that the Defendant had acquired a title by adverse possession. The trial Court found that the land in suit was a reformation in situ of the land of Mouza Kabirajpore. The trial Court then dealt with the Plaintiff's two titles to the land in dispute, namely, his claim to so much of the land of Kabirajpore as falls within lot Madhusudanpore under Estate No. 10 and also his title by adverse possession to the other land of the Mouza. He found that the Plaintiff was sole owner of lot Madhusudanpore. Further that Plaintiff had title to Mouza Kabirajpore to the extent of 15 chaks and the residuary portion before the lands were diluviated. He found that the Plaintiff had not established his title of adverse possession to the rest of the village. He found, however, that Defendant had acquired a title by adverse possession to all the reformed lands which fall between the boundary line of the char as shown in the partition map of 1899 and the settlement map of 1903 and that the Plaintiff was only entitled to so much of the 15 chaks and the residuary parts of Mouza Kabirajpore which are bounded on the south by the river Ganges and on the north by the lines 24-24-24-15 (western part of the southern boundary line of the char in Ex. D) and the southern boundary line of the settlement map of 1903 up to the point where it runs towards the east and also of the disputed lands which are bounded by the river, the lines Nos. 35 to 36, 36 to 7 and the eastern boundary lines of the settlement map of 1903 up to the point Q and he was further entitled to mesne profits for these lands.

The Plaintiff has appealed with regard to the land to which his title has been declared but of which it has been found that he has lost title by adverse possession. There was also an appeal regarding the land to which the title was found not to have been established, but part of the appeal has not been pressed. The case which he wishes to establish is as follows :—It has been found that he had title to these lands and that these lands were washed away. So long as the lands remained under water and when they again appeared as a reformation his title subsisted and as the lands were not fit for possession or use when they appeared again he must be considered to be in constructive possession. The Defendants have not shown that they have had continuous possession for more than 12 years before the date of suit. The lands were inundated from time to time and even if the Defendant had any possession as soon as the lands were inundated again the title and possession went back to the true owner, for the Defendants as tortfeasors cannot be held to be in constructive possession during the period that the lands in suit went under water for the doctrine of constructive possession does not apply to a tortfeasor Further that to establish their title by adverse possession the Defendants must prove their actual possession of every parcel of land to which they allege they have acquired a title by adverse possession. The doctrine of constructive possession is not available to a tortfeasor and it cannot be held that if he is proved to be in actual possession of certain portion that he is in constructive possession of the rest of the land having regard to the nature of the land. Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Gopi Nath Mandal (1).

The first question which requires decision is what article of the Limitation Act applies.

Now the Plaintiff sues for recovery of possession on establishment of his title. Clearly therefore Art. 142 applies and the Plaintiff must sue within 12 years of the date of dispossession. This point had been discussed at length in the case of Rakhal Chandra Ghose v. Durga Das Samanta (2) in which all the authorities on the question have been collected and fully discussed and I entirely agree with the decision arrived at. The Plaintiff in this case dates the commencement of his dispossession from the year 1906 October when he says the land became fit for cultivation and further states that when his men went in 1913 to measure the land they were resisted and turned out.

It is contended that the Plaintiff must show that he is in possession within 12 years of the date of suit. This contention no doubt is correct. The Plaintiff Appellant answers that argument by contending that he has been all along in constructive possession. That the land was sand and incapable of actual possession and that therefore it is sufficient for him to show that he has title and that then the Defendant must show that he had held adverse possession for more than the statutory period. He argued that as the property was not capable of actual occupation the presumption is that legal possession continued with him the rightful owner and it is sufficient for him to prove that the property remained in this state till within 12 years of the suit. [Mirza Shamsher Bahadur v. Kunj Behari Lall (3).]

Further that where land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes at such a time and under such circumstances that that state naturally would and probably did continue till within 12 years of suit it may properly be presumed that it did so continue and that the Plaintiff's possession continued also until the contrary is shown [Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Guny (4)].

Now a careful consideration of these cases, Mirza Shamsher Bahadur v. Kunj Behari Lall (3), Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (4) and Rakhal Chandra Ghose v. Durga Das Samanta (2) referred to, shows that there is deviation from the rule that in an action in ejectment the onus is on the Plaintiff to show that he was in possession and was dispossessed within the statutory period. This principle the learned Judges re-affirm. What they do however consider and that is of importance in this case is what is necessary looking at the particular circumstances of the case for the Plaintiff to prove in order to establish his possession within 12 years of the suit.

In the present case it has been proved that before diluvion the title and possession of the 15 chaks and residuary land was with the Plaintiff and the finding has not been challenged by the Respondent in appeal. An attempt was made after the argument had been concluded and the case has been sent to the Commissioner to relay certain plot to argue that the Plaintiff had not established his title to some 9 of these chaks. The case was already concluded and it clearly was not open to the Respondent to raise this point at that stage. The material on which he relied was really on the record before the case was sent by us to the Commissioner for he wished to base his argument on Ex. H. We have now to see what was the condition of the land and the manner of possession. If the Plaintiff can show he has title, that the land was washed away and after reformation was unfit for possession and continued so up to or near a time within 12 years of the date of suit the Plaintiffs would be entitled to the benefit of the presumption that they had constructive possession as rightful owners at the time of dispossession in 1906. If the Plaintiffs are entitled to this presumption then the onus will be on the Defendants to show the Plaintiffs lost their title by adverse possession. The period with which we are mainly concerned so far as adverse possession is concerned is the period two or three years immediately before 1906. Admittedly the land is a char, a reformation in situ of the village Kabirajpore. The Plaintiffs' case was that it was not washed away till 1880. The evidence in the case shows that it was in or before 1880 that the land began to reform and continued the process up to the present time. To this extent obviously the Plaintiff's case is not in accordance with the facts found. How far his case is affected by this will be discussed later on. When the process of diluvion began it is not possible to say but it was apparently some time after 1857 when the Plaintiff purchased.

What has then been the condition of the land after reformation?

To deal with the Defendants' evidence.

In considering all the evidence one fact must be borne in mind that these disputed lands form an accretion to another chur, chur Balliadanga which admittedly belongs to the Defendants. The importance of this is obvious when we see in what a vague way the witnesses have deposed because it is not easy as a rule to say whether any particular statement refers to the chur as a whole or to the land in dispute.

Taking first of all the evidence of Defendant No. 1.

He says that from 1301 to 1305 (1894-98) they possessed the chur partly in khas and partly through tenants. He also sold babla trees growing on the chur and fishermen used to catch fishes and spawn

To what extent kalai was grown he does not state. He does not produce any of his papers to show that he received any money from any tenant or from any one for the sale of his kalai or in case where the kalai was grown by himself his expense of growing it.

The fact that fishermen used to catch spawn and fish on the chur would show it was liable to inundation. He then goes on to refer to the partition proceedings in 1899 and says 200 bighas were unculturable and the rest culturable. This apparently refers to the land in dispute as he says it was the southern portion of the chur. The mere statement by an interested party that the lands were culturable is perhaps of little value.

The only real test is whether they were cultivated. The witness, however, gives us no indication how much of the chur was cultivated. Further on he states that sand is now being deposited in culturable lands and that some 400 or 500 bighas have recently been covered with sand and the lands are again being washed away. Carefully examined this witness' evidence would show that the land or portions of it were liable to submergence and had actually been submerged from time to time, otherwise sand would not be deposited on it or fish caught on it. Accepted at its highest it would prove that kalai had been grown on the land but it gives no indication how much land was sown with kalai and the failure to produce any papers in support of these statements makes the bare statement of little or no value. His next witness is Gobinda Biswas This witness is the Dewan of Defendant No. 2 who has been disputing with Defendant No. 1 for a long time for the possession of chur Balliadanga. He visited the chur in 1899 He states that the chur was fallow from 1899-1901 and that in these years there were no tenants there He states the southern portion of the chur was sandy His evidence proved little or nothing as to the state of the chur except to show that in 1899 some 275 bighas were sandy His evidence is rather vaguely recorded It is difficult to say whether he refers to the whole chur Balliadanga of which the disputed lands form a part only. He however speaks to deposit of silt which would show the chur was inundated from time to time.

The next witness relied on is Rajani Kanta Das (page 169) and the statement on which reliance is placed in his statement—"I saw Balliadanga chur even after 1903. In 1903 I found the major portion of the chur under cultivation." He, however, here refers to the whole chur Balliadanga of which admittedly the northern portion belongs to the Defendants and so possibly the major portion under cultivation refers to the northern portion. He states there were here and there babla trees. It is not possible to say from his statement that he was referring to the disputed land as being under cultivation and this same remark applies to all his evidence. His statements would apply to the undisputed as well as to the disputed portion of the chur.

The next witness to whose evidence our attention has been drawn is Kali Prasanna Chukerbutty (page 172). This witness took an ijara lease of the chur in 1902-1903 and he cannot say whether any part of the land was tenanted then. He simply grew kalai but has no papers to support his statement. Further that at the time of the partition of chur Balliadanga (1899) it was partly culturable and partly full of sand He again is speaking of the whole chur and not only of the disputed portion So it is not possible to say from his evidence whether any portion of the culturable land was in the disputed land or not. He says north of the sand were babla trees and north of the babla trees cultivation, but where the cultivation began is not clear and that is the important point in this case. Whether any act he refers to took place on the disputed or undisputed portion of the chur it is impossible to say. Lastly we have Alef Sheik (p. 182). His evidence helps very little for it is impossible to say whether he refers to the disputed or undisputed part of chur Balliadanga. His evidence would show that a part of the chur was sandy and silt was deposited from time to time which would show that the lands were liable to inundation and were inundated from time to time. The evidence of these witnesses would seem to show that the land was sandy and liable to inundations and was inundated from time to time, a condition often found in reformed chur lands.

SURESH CHANDRA MUKERJEE v. SHITI KANTA BANERJEE.

The Plaintiff's own evidence would go to show that the land did not become culturable till some 10 or 12 years before the date they were deposing, viz.; 6 or 8 years before the date of suit This evidence really only deals with the condition of the land after 1902 where it is alleged by him the land re-appeared and does not deal with the period between 1880 and 1902. It is his case that before 1902 the land was under water. Although this is not a fact he may well have been grievously mistaken, not realising as apparently no one else did, that the lands accreting to chur Balliadanga were really reformation in situ of Kabirajpur His evidence as to the time of reformation in view of the documentary evidence on this point is obviously incorrect. The Defendant has further relied on certain documentary evidence. First the two settlements of 1880 and 1890 In these two settlements one for ten years and one for fourteen the disputed land was settled with the Defendant as part of chur Balliadanga which admittedly belongs to the Defendants The disputed land which increased at each settlement was treated as an accretion to chur Balliadanga which is in the Nadia District and it was not known till the settlement of 1904 that the disputed lands were really a reformation of village Kabirajpore which belongs to the District of Burdwan The mere fact that Defendants took settlement of these accretions does not prove that they were then fit for cultivation and capable of being effectively possessed The zemindar would naturally take settlement of an accretion to his land at a low rate of rent in the hope that it would improve in value and to prevent any rival zemindar taking it. Such settlements are often in the nature of a speculation.

In the settlement map of 1903 when it was discovered that the disputed lands were a reformation in situ of Kabirajpore a note is made that they are in possession of the Defendants. But there is nothing to show what the nature of that possession was. Possibly this entry was made because the former settlement had been with the Defendants. It had been contended by the Defendants-Respondents that the Appellant must have known of these settlements with the Defendants. There is no reason why he should. The settlement was made by the Collector of Nadia The Appellant's land is in the District of Burdwan and they are now on the opposite side of the river. The operation of measuring them need attract no attention Neither would settlement be offered to the Appellant as the Collector of Nadia did not know till 1903 that these lands belonged to Kabirajpore in the District of Burdwan. He treated them as being accretion to chur Balliadanga in the District of Nadia.

The documentary evidence proved nothing about the state of the lands. No doubt the land has been in existence some 40 years but char land may in some cases never become fit for cultivation or possession. It certainly cannot be presumed that it must have. The conclusion to which I have come is that the land in suit after reformation remained incapable of possession in the ordinary way by cultivation until 1906 when Defendants began to cultivate it and that in this case we may fairly presume that constructive possession remained with the true owner up till 1906 Char lands are cases to which the doctrine laid down in Mirza Shamsher Bahadur v. Kunj Behari Lall (3) Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul

(3) 7 C. L. J. 414 (1907).

SURESH CHANDRA MUKERJEE v. SHITI KANTA BANERJEE.

Guny (4) and Raj Kumar Roy v. Gobind Chander Roy (5) is applicable. These lands appear often after many years when the whole configuration of the country due to the shifting of a big river is changed the lands appearing sometimes as in the present case in a different district and only a careful survey showed to what district they belonged. In such circumstances every presumption should be made in favour of the true owner. The case may be viewed as from another standpoint. The Plaintiff having shown by the evidence on the record that neither party had exercised any act of possession a presumption can be raised in his favour as to the question of possession of the land prior to his dispossession by the Defendant [Rakhal Chandra Ghose v. Durga Das Samanta (2)].

The Respondents have contended that the case now set up by the Appellant in appeal differs from the case he made out in his plaint and the case found on the fact. He argues that in the plaint the Plaintiff-Appellant's case was that the lands began to be diluviated in 1880 and the process continued in 1890, that they began to reform from 1902 and began to be fit for cultivation in 1906. Further the Appellant's case in his plaint was that he was dispossessed in 1913 when an Amin went to measure the land whilst his own evidence would show that he was dispossessed in 1906 and onwards.

Now undoubtedly the documentary evidence has shown clearly that the lands had begun to reform in 1880 and obviously therefore the Plaintiff's case is here incorrect. But it cannot be said that Plaintiff has changed in any way the relief he asked for. The relief asked for is the same and it is still his case that the cause of action arose in 1906. He does not seem to date his cause of action from 1913 when the Amin was prevented from going on the land but his plaint states (para. 10) that the cause of action has gradually arisen from the date when a portion of the land became fit for cultivation in 1906.

Then we must bear in mind the peculiar circumstances of the case. It is a case of land reforming after diluviation in a big river which has largely shifted its course. A mere inspection of the land would tell no one whether they were a reformation in situ of any particular land. The District authorities until 1901 treated them as belonging to chur Balliadanga in Nadia District and it was after the Collector of Nadia had released the lands in 1904 that the Appellant realised they were a reformation in situ of his village Kabirajpore. In the particular circumstances of the case I do not think the Plaintiff should be non-suited because he was inaccurate in giving the date when the land reformed. The whole evidence is before the Court, and so it cannot be said that either party has been taken by surprise.

Further the Respondent has contended the case now argued by the Appellant that there was an interruption of the adverse possession of the Respondent by inundation is a new case which was never raised in the lower Court. I do not think there is any substance in this objection.

The Respondent raised the defence of adverse possession and the Appellant is obviously entitled to show that one of the elements necessary for adverse possession, viz., continuity, is absent and this he can show by arguing that the evidence shows the land was under water from time to time.

It is then necessary to deal with the question of adverse possession and to consider whether the Respondent has made out a title by adverse possession. It will be seen that the evidence dealing with this point is practically the same as the evidence which has been dealt with in considering what was the state of the land up to 1906 and the finding I have already come to really disposes of this point. I, however, propose to deal with it separately. The Plaintiff's evidence admits that the Defendants began taking possession of their land in 1906. The suit was instituted in 1916 and there would thus remain at least two years during which the Respondent-Defendant must prove that he held the lands in adverse possession.

Now the Respondent to succeed must prove actual continuous possession of the lands to which he alleges he has acquired a right by adverse possession for the statutory period. No doubt acts of possession over a part of immoveable property may in certain cases be evidence of de facto possession of the whole. This rule however operates with full force in favour only of the true owner and should be applied with caution, if at all, in favour of the wrong-doer [Mohini Mohon Ray v. Promoda Nath Roy (6)]. The possession of the wrong-doer should be held to be confined to what he is in actual possession of [see also Mirza Shamser Bahadur v. Kunj Behari Lall (3) and Secretary of State for India v. Krishnomoni Gupta (7)].

The same question has been discussed in the case of Barada Prosad Roy Chowdhury v. Annoda Mohan (8). Mookerjee, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court points out that to establish adverse possession it is not sufficient to show that some adverse act of possession have been done but the possession must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent of area to establish that it is possession adverse to the true owner and further that the doctrine of constructive possession applies only in favour of the rightful owner and cannot as a rule be extended in favour of a wrong-doer whose possession must be confined to the land of which he is in actual occupation. The learned Judge gives as an instance that where the party relies on possession through their tenants evidence must be given to show the tenants were in actual possession and such possession covered the whole of the disputed land. Further it must be proved that with regard to any particular portion that it has been continuously in the possession of the party claiming adverse possession visible, exclusive and hostile for the statutory period.

It is pointed out that as soon as the land became unfit or incapable of use or occupation the title of the true owner revived. The Respondent has argued that he was not a wrong-doer but entered under a bonâ fide claim of title and so his position is different from a mere trespasser and that he is in the position of a true owner. I am not aware that what is obviously a dangerous doctrine has ever been accepted by this Court.

Examined in the light of these principles the Defendants have clearly failed to make out any title by adverse possession.

SURESH CHANDRA MUKERJEE v. SHITI KANTA BANERJEE.

In considering the probability or improbability of the Defendants' case we must remember that up to 1899 the two Defendants were fighting each other for the possession of the char Balliadanga and this fact might render it highly problematical whether either of them ever had effective possession of the land in dispute. The evidence they rely on is documentary and oral. With regard to the oral evidence the learned Subordinate Judge says it is unsatisfactory and can easily be manufactured but coupling it with the documentary evidence he held that the Defendants adversely possessed the greater portion of the disputed char since 1903. The documentary evidence is mainly the evidence of settlement by the Collector and it is not easy to see how this substantiates the oral evidence which is directed to prove actual possession. To deal with the documentary evidence first.

To take first the two settlements of 1880 and 1890.

They prove that so much of the land as was reformed at the time of the settlement was, together with a tract of land which admittedly belongs to the Defendants, settled with the Defendants. But this does not prove that the Defendants actually occupied or used the land or that it was capable of user. It may well have suited the Defendants to take settlement of these char lands in the hope they would some day become capable of use. But this does not by itself show that the land was actually used and occupied. Then we have the partition proceedings of 1899 These proceedings show that these lands were partitioned together with other lands which admittedly belong to the Defendants. It has been argued that the Defendants would not fight over lands of which they had not possession and were not in occupation. Here again it is to be remembered that the partition suit also included the rest of chur Balliadanga which admittedly belongs to them. That again does not prove that the lands were used or occupied. The settlement map of 1903 has on it the remark that these lands are in the possession of the Defendants but that again does not show what the nature of the possession was. Lastly there are certain chittas which cover a small portion of the disputed land. They are for the years 1306 to 1322 and there are also the counterfoils which it is alleged show receipt of rent from tenants. Their genuineness is very doubtful. They contain the names of some 18 tenants only one of whom is examined, Pachouri, and he says his receipts have been burnt. Of the others it is a remarkable fact that during the space of some 16 years there has been no change in any of the tenants. Exactly the same tenants were holding the holdings in 1322 as in 1306. Some of these tenants must be available. The Commissioner relaid chittas of four of the plots and then using them as a starting point relaid the others on the plan not on the ground. This evidence obviously would not show actual occupation of these plots nor that tenants were ever actually settled there in the absence of the tenants themselves. It would show that when the Commissioner visited the spot in 1916 certain plots were pointed out on the chitta plots and four were identified by him.

Next we have the oral evidence which has already been dealt with in considering the question of the condition of the landlord which it is unnecessary to recapitulate in detail. It shows, even if believed, though I may say I share the learned Subordinate Judge's doubt as to its genuineness, that at some time or other some kalai was grown and some babla trees cut. It is obviously evidence which is not sufficient to prove adverse possession and could be manufactured without difficulty. It does not appear how much kalai was grown, whether on one bigha or on the whole of the disputed land, whether the kalai was grown always in the same place or on different plots or whether it was grown for the statutory period.

The Defendants are Zemindars who presumably keep accounts. Their account books would have shown the money expended in cultivating kalai and the money realised from the sale of it and also the money realised from the sale of babla trees. There is no documentary evidence to support the story that kalai was grown or babla trees cut from the disputed land.

The area in dispute is some 1,000 bighas. Obviously if there had been any real attempt to cultivate any appreciable portion of the land there must have been a considerable expenditure and receipt.

Defendant No. 1 Sib Kanta Banerjee in his examination gives no suggestion how much land was cultivated or for what period, whether it was the same portion or different portions.

Kali Prasanna Chukerbutty took a lease of char Balliadanga from Defendant No. 2, the 12 annas proprietor from April 10th 1902 to April 14th 1904. He states that during this period which ends at a date within the statutory period he cannot say if there were any tenants on the land. Obviously if there had been he must have known it as he was the ijaradar and so clearly the statement is equivalent to an admission that during the period within 1904 there were no tenants in the 12 annas share. His possession consisted of growing kalai; where he grew kalai is not proved, whether on the disputed or undisputed portion of char Balliadanga. He produced no papers to support the bare statement that he grew kalai. It has been argued that he paid Rs. 500 as a yearly rent for the 12 annas share of the char. But though he paid rent it does not necessarily follow that he occupied or used any portion of the char, still less that he actually occupied the disputed portion of the char. After Sib Kanta Banerjee, Defendant No. 1, the 4 as. share-holder took a lease of the 12 annas share. This however was from April 1904 which is within the statutory period the suit being instituted on 25th February 1906. Further the witness does not produce the rent receipt which he alleges he got for the payment of the rent. Then the evidence of Rajani Kanta Dey, witness No. 7 for the Defendant, shows that he measured the land in 1903 on which there were tenants. He states which were the tenanted plots and admitted none of the plots he has described as tenanted fall within the disputed area. Then his evidence goes to show that in 1903 there were no tenants in the disputed area. Further he states that in 1903 there was nothing on the lands in Sib Kanta Babu, the 4 annas Zemindar's khas possession. His evidence would show that in 1903 there were no tenants on the disputed portion of the Balliadanga char.

Boloram Ghose, Defendant No. 3, for Defendant proves that in 1900 he went to the char and that there were then some 25 or 30 bighas of land sown with kalai. Whether these 25 or 30 bighas were in the disputed land or not does not appear. Even if they were, the growing of kalai on some 25 or 30 bighas out of an area of about 1,000 bighas could not obviously amount to adverse possession of the 1,000 bighas. His evidence at the highest would show the cultivation of some 25 or 30 bighas.

Then there is the evidence of Dolu Gobinda Biswas, the Dewan of Defendant No. 2. He apparently last went to the char in 1899 and has not been there since. Then he knows nothing about the period from 1899 up to 1906.

He however states that the disputed char remained uncultivated from 1899 to 1901 and that between these years it was not let out to tenant.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were fighting and it is perhaps improbable that either could really effectively possess the land.

Taking all the facts and circumstances of the case into consideration and even accepting for the sake of argument, the oral evidence of the Defendants' witnesses the evidence is not sufficient to establish a title by adverse possession. The Defendants cannot avail themselves of the doctrine of possession of a part being constructive possession of the whole. They are tortfeasors and must prove actual continuous possession of the land for which they seek to establish a title by adverse possession [Nawab Bahadur of Murshidabad v. Gopi Nath Mandal (1)].

In the present case we have an area of some 1,000 bighas of char land which adjoins the Defendants' lands and the only evidence of possession is that some kalai has been grown from time to time and some babla trees cut. Even if these were proved which I do not think it has, it would amount at the most to isolated acts of trespass. Neither need the true owner necessarily know that such acts were being done when we take into consideration the extent, nature and situation of the property. The taking of settlement from Government cannot be considered as an act of possession. The deputing of an Amin to demarcate the land in the partition suit and the planting of one or two pillars would be an isolated act of trespass.

There is in the present case no possession adequate in continuity, publicity and extent of area to destroy the title of the true owner.

Rejecting, however, as I do the Defendants' evidence of actual possession their case entirely fails for if the oral evidence is disbelieved there is no evidence at all to support a story of adverse possession.

The Defendants have failed to make out any title by adverse possession.

The Respondents have argued that the Appellants have failed to identify the land they claim because the numbers of the chaks have been omitted from the Commissioner's map. What however has happened then? The Pliantiff-Appellant has established his title to some 15 chaks of which the numbers are given, ..., 5, 7, 15, 17, 61, 64, 69, 70, 73, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104 and the residuary lands. There are other chaks to which he had not established his title. The number of these chaks are also known.

Under the orders of this Court the same Commissioner who had made the local investigation replotted on his map all the chaks putting the correct thak number in each chak. It now appears that these 15 chaks of which the numbers have been given above actually fall within the disputed land.

No difficulty would be experienced in granting to the Appellant-Plaintiff a decree capable of execution. He is clearly entitled on the findings I have come to to so much of the disputed land as falls within the 15 chaks and the residue portion of village Kabirajpore which falls within Estate No. 10.

This residue will be found by deducting the chaks of which the title has been found not to be with the Appellant.

A cross-objection has been filed by the Respondent regarding the cost in the lower Court.

In view of the finding to which I have come the cross-objection must fail as I would hold the Appellants are entitled to proportionate costs of the suit throughout. I would decree the appeal so far as the disputed land to which the Plaintiff-Appellant has proved his title, viz., the 15 chaks and the residuary portion of Kabirajpore with proportionate costs throughout.

Against this decision the Plaintiff preferred the present appeal under sec 15 of the Letters Patent

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babus Pramatha Nath Mitter and Hemendra Nath Chatterjee for the Appellant.

Dr. Jadu Nath Kanjilal and Babus Panchanan Ghose and Apurba Charan Mukherjee for the Respondents

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

NEWBOULD, J.- The Plaintiff brought the suit out of which this appeal arises for declaration of his title and also recovery of possession of about 1,000 bighas of land. He succeeded in obtaining a decree for a part only of the land claimed and appealed to this Court His appeal was heard by a Divisional Bench of this Court consisting of Woodroffe and Cuming, JJ. There was a difference of opinion, Woodroffe, J., holding that the appeal should be dismissed while Cuming, J. was in favour of allowing the appeal in part. They held that as there was a difference of opinion and there was no majority varying or reversing the decree appealed from, the appeal should be dismissed. Against this decision the Plaintiff has preferred an appeal under sec. 15 of the Letters Patent. A preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies. This objection we overruled at the commencement of the hearing of the appeal. Though we accept the contention of the learned vakil for the Respondents that the decision of the Judicial Committee in Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (9) shows that the procedure laid down in sec. 98 of the Civil Procedure Code was wrongly applied in the present case, that is immaterial Had the provisions of cl. 36 of the Letters Patent been followed the result would have been the same since the opinion of Woodroffe, J., who is the senior Judge would prevail. Under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent this appeal is clearly competent.

The present suit is due to events primarily caused by the movements of the river Ganges at a part where under the name of Bhagirathi it flowed between the Nadia District on its north and the Burdwan District on its south. At the time of the Revenue Survey by Government of 1855 there were chars on both sides of the river. On the north side was char Baliadanga which was temporarily settled with the Defendants' predecessors in two estates bearing Touzi Nos. 824 and 2160 of the Nadia Collectorate. On the south side was a char adjoining Mouza Kabirajpur which is a part of the estate bearing Touzi No. 10 of the Burdwan Collectorate and in this village the Plaintiff has patni right to certain plots. The river moved gradually in a southerly direction causing accretions to char Balia-danga and diluviating first the char adjoining Kabirajpur and subsequently also part of the Kabirajpur Mouza. This alluvion and diluvion continued until the accretions to char Baliadanga became reformations in situ of Kabirajpur land. While this was going on Government made three surveys and settlements of the land which accreted to char Baliadanga in the years 1880, 1890 and 1903. Even in 1890, some land of Kabirajpur was settled with the Defendants as proprietors of estates Nos. 824 and 2460 and in 1890 still more land of that mouza was settled with the Defendants. During the survey and settlement of 1903 the mistake was discovered and the land found to be reformation in situ of Mouza Kabirajpur was excluded from the settlement. The temporarily settled estates Nos. 824 and 2460 were originally undivided—four annas and twelve annas shares of char Baliadanga. In 1893 a partition suit was brought which after protracted litigation ended in a division of the land after survey by a Commissioner in 1899. The Plaintiff instituted the suit, out of which the appeal arises, on the 25th February 1916. He originally claimed approximately 1,000 bighas of land. In the trial Court he gave up his claim to a large tract on the east and at the hearing of the first appeal to this Court he no longer claimed the land which had been settled with Defendants after the 1903 survey. He originally based his title both on his putni right and adverse possession. The finding that he has no title other than his putni right has not been disputed. He is content to rely on the finding of the trial Court that he has established his putni title to 15 specific chaks and the abosista chak or unnumbered residue. The learned Subordinate Judge gave the Plaintiff's decree for the land within these chaks that was south of the line of the south boundary of the char shown in the settlement map of 1903 and the partition map of 1899. He held that the Plaintiff's title to land north of this line had been barred by limitation.

The case made in the plaint was that diluvion took place in 1890 and reformation in 1902. It was further alleged that the land first began to be fit for cultivation in October 1906 and the Defendant No. 1 then proposed to take a settlement from the Plaintiff. As there was undue delay, the Plaintiff in 1913 attempted to have the lands surveyed and was prevented by Defendant No. 1. This case has admittedly failed. The correctness of the various maps as showing the reformations is not questioned and the map of 1880 shows that reformation in situ had commenced before that year. The Plaintiff's case now is that he was in possession of the chaks to which he has proved title until they were diluviated and his possession must be presumed to have continued and that he is entitled to succeed unless the Defendants can prove that they have destroyed his title by adverse possession. This contention raises the issue as to the party on whom the burden of proof lies in the present case. On this issue I find myself in entire agreement with the finding of Woodroffe, J. The reasoning in his judgment appears to me clear and logical and in accordance with the principle laid down in previous decisions of this Court and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. He points out that the Plaintiff sued for possession on the allegation of dispossession. Art. 142 of the First Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, is therefore applicable and he is bound to prove possession within 12 years before suit. Admittedly he has not had any actual possession since the lands became submerged and it is also admitted that the Defendants have been in possession since 1906, ten years before the institution of the suit. In order to prove possession within twelve years the Plaintiff may rely on the presumption that possession of the lawful owner continues as long as the land is incapable of actual possession. But in a case like the present where Art. 142 applies the Plaintiff, if he relies on this presumption, must prove that the land was incapable of actual possession within twelve years before suit. For the Appellant, it was strongly contended before us that it lay on the Defendants to prove their adverse possession for twelve years before the suit. It was urged that the presumption of possession in favour of the real owner would continue until it is shown that the presumption does not apply by reason of the Defendants having been in adverse possession. It was also urged that the presumption would continue as long as the land continued incapable of ordinary possession, and it is for the Defendants to show when this change took place. These contentions ignore the difficulty in the Appellant's way arising from the fact that he has so framed his suit that the initial burden lies on him to prove dispossession within twelve years. Relying, as he does, on a presumption to discharge this burden he must prove the facts necessary to establish this presumption, that is to say, not only that he was the real owner but also that the land was incapable of possession in the ordinary way. Of the cases cited, the Full Bench decision of this Court in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Guny (4) is the most favourable to the Appellant. The rule laid down at page 752, if read apart from the context, seems to support his contentions: It is as follows:—The true rule appears to be this: "That where land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes at such a time, and under such circumstances that that state naturally would and probably did continue till within twelve years before suit it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the Plaintiff's possession continued also until the contrary is shown." But the rule is qualified by the preceding remarks on page 751 which require the Plaintiff to show such acts of ownership as are natural under the existing condition of the land before he can claim the benefit of the presumption that his possession continued. It is not necessary to discuss all the decisions that have been cited on behalf of the Appellant. Several of them as for instance, Basanta Kumar v. Secretary of State (10), can be distinguished on the broad ground that they were cases where Art. 144 and not Art. 142 was applicable. The head-note of the Indian Report wrongly states that the High Court decided that case on limitation alone holding that the suit was barred by Art. 142. The English Report of the same case quotes the High Court judgment, which clearly states that the case "must be governed by Art. 144." Other cases that were cited follow the decision in Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Guny (4) and give no greater support to the Appellant's contention than that Full Bench decision. I would therefore hold that in the present case it lay on the Plaintiff to prove that the lands were incapable of user within twelve years prior to the suit.

SURESH CHANDRA MUKERJEE v. SRITI KANTA BANERJEE.

For the Appellant it was further urged as an alternative plea that if it is necessary for him to prove that the land was incapable of user, he has proved this at any rate as regards the land south of the survey line of 1890. In order to prove this he relies on the Defendants' evidence, oral and documentary. The case made out by the Plaintiff's witnesses was entirely abandoned at the hearing of the appeal and their evidence was not even read to us. The first piece of evidence on which reliance is placed is that of Gunidas Biswas, defence witness No. 2. He was the gomosta of the second Defendant in respect of the char lands from 1306-8 B. S. In cross-examination he states "I found the sandy tract of the char in the same condition during the period of my service. There was no alteration in its area during that period." It is contended that this proves that no extra land became culturable after the survey of 1890. But if his examination-in-chief be also read, it is clear that what he meant was that during this period, as the river receded there remained a fringe about 1½ or 2 rashis wide of unculturable sandy land and that though the nature and area of this fringe remained unchanged, its position altered as the char extended towards the south. The only other oral evidence to which reference is made in this connection is that of defence witness No. 7 Rajani Kanta Dey. He was a Collectorate Amin and took part in the settlement surveys of 1890 and 1903. His evidence-in-chief is strongly in favour of the Defendants since he says that he saw the char after 1903 and found the major portion of the char under cultivation. It is contended that this evidence refers to the land which was settled with the Defendants in 1904 and not to the land now in dispute That this cannot be, since he was speaking of the land down to the water's edge and the map of the 1903 survey shows the water edge far south of the land settled with the Defendants as part of their estates Nos. 821 and 2460. A similar argument to that based on the evidence of defence witness No. 2 is based on this witness's statement "about 50 to 60 bigha lands must have accreted to the char between 1890 and 1903. In 1903, I found the area of the sandy portion of the char to be 60 to 80 bighas." But this does not mean that the only accretion during these years was sandy land. Our attention has also been drawn to a statement in the settlement report of the 8th March 1904, Ex. P. "The estate consists of a low tract of char land liable to annual inundation." It is urged that as these remarks refer to the land settled with the Defendants, the disputed land to the south would be still more liable to inundation. But the expression "liable to annual inundation" does not mean that the land was actually inundated every year. The same paragraph of the report shows that though ous paddy could not be grown in normal years, kalai and musuri were extensively grown and this supports the Defendants' case that the land was capable of possession. Another argument is based on the map and report of the Commissioner who executed the partition decree in 1899. It is contended that as the south lines of the Commissioner's map and of the settlement map of 1903 are almost identical, there could have been little alteration in the char during the interval between the two surveys. It appears from the Commissioner's report that in 1899 there was practically no culturable land south of the land settled in 1890. But the Commissioner's map does not show the true position of the river in 1899. At the wish of the parties to the partition suit, the Defendants in this suit, he included land which was still part of the bed of the river in his map and divided it between them. It follows therefore that there was a considerable accretion of culturable land to the south of the char between 1890 and 1903. The Defendants' evidence does not show that any land north of the line, which has been given as the south boundary in the decree, was unfit for cultivation within twelve years of the institution of the suit.

SURESH CHANDRA MUKERJEE v. SHITI KANTA BANERJEE.

These findings are sufficient for the disposal of the appeal But even if I had held that the burden of proof lay on the Defendants to prove twelve years' adverse possession, I should decide in their favour. That the Defendants did exercise acts of possession on the land as it reformed and became capable of possession, there can be no doubt Further these acts of possession were all done in the assertion of the claim of the Defendants to the land by virtue of the settlements made by Government This case is distinguishable from Basanta Kumar Roy's case (10) cited above, since there are circumstances to link together various portions of ground so as to make the possession of a part as it emerged amount constructively to possession of the whole.

We all agree that the appeal fails and it is accordingly dismissed with costs.

B. B. GHOSE, J.—It is unnecessary for me to recapitulate the facts of this case as they have been sufficiently stated in the judgment of my learned brother Newbould which I had the advantage of reading. I agree that there is no substance in the preliminary objection taken on behalf of the Respondents that the appeal is not maintainable.

The only question argued on behalf of the Appellant is one of limitation. The allegation in the plaint is that the Plaintiff was in possession of the land in suit before diluvion, which commenced to reform in 1902 and that he has been dispossessed by the Defendants in 1906. That appears to be the proper meaning of the plaint and this was sought to be established by the evidence led by the Plaintiff. The story, however, that the land began to reform in 1902 is untrue, as it is beyond dispute that it reformed long prior to that date and this has not been contested by the Appellant. The suit then being for possession on the allegation of dispossession falls within Art. 142 of the Limitation Act as has been held by both the learned Judges of this Court who heard the appeal in the first instance. This is also not seriously disputed by the Appellant. The burden of proof in such a case is without doubt on the Plaintiff to show that he had been dispossessed within 12 years of the date of suit. The Plaintiff-Appellant admits that he has been dispossessed for about 10 years, the suit having been brought in 1916. The difference between the admitted possession of the Respondents and the period of limitation is within the narrow limit of about two years, during which Appellant must establish his possession in order to succeed in the suit. In the case of Netresen Singh v. Nund Lal Singh (11), Turner, L. J., in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council said; "The Appellant is seeking to disturb the possession, admitted to have existed for about eleven years, of Defendants, who insist on a possession of much longer duration as a statutory bar to the suit.

(11) 8 M. I. A. 199, 220 (1860).

It clearly lies on him to remove that bar by satisfactory proof that the cause of action accrued to him . . . . on a dispossession within twelve years next before the commencement of the suit . . No proof of anterior title such as would be involved in the decision of the boundary question in his favour can relieve him from this burden, or shift it upon his adversaries by compelling them to prove the time and manner of dispossession" The law is the same under the present Limitation Act, where the dispossession from which limitation is declared to run should have taken place within twelve years of the suit. The nature and quality of the possession of the Respondents in this case during the period after the admitted dispossession of the Appellant need not require any discussion. The Appellant may establish his possession within the disputed period of two years by showing that his possession was either actual or constructive. There is no evidence of actual possession or the exercise of any act of possession, however trivial, by the Appellant during that period, for the title being in him such acts might have preserved his title. Constructive possession may also be shown by the fact that the land being under water was incapable of possession or although it was capable of being possessed no one had actually taken possession during the period in question. The Appellant cannot by proving possession at any period anterior to twelve years before suit shift the onus on the Respondents to prove their possession.

Much stress was laid by the Appellant on the observations of Wilson, J., who delivered the judgment of the majority of the Full Bench in Mahomed Ali Khan v Khaja Abdul Gunny (1) and it was contended that as the land in this case did probably continue to have been in such a condition as not to be fit for the usual modes of enjoyment within twelve years before suit, it should be presumed that his possession continued until the contrary is shown. It is urged that it is incumbent on the Respondents to show that they had dispossessed the Appellant during the two intervening years. The meaning of the observations relied on will be clear when read with the preceding remarks in the judgment of that case. What the learned Judge laid down was that so long as the state of the land remained unchanged, the possession of the rightful owner should be presumed to continue unless he is shown to have been dispossessed. Dealing with the case of diluvion by a river, Wilson, J., says (at p. 751): "In such a case, if the Plaintiff shows his possession down to the time of diluvion, his possession is presumed to continue as long as the lands continue to be submerged." It has been established in this case that the condition of the land had changed a considerable number of years prior to the period in dispute, and that is no reason why the ordinary rule that the Plaintiff should prove his possession within the period of limitation should be departed from. The Appellant has not succeeded in proving that the land was incapable of possession on account of its remaining submerged, or that no one else was in possession during the disputed period although the land had emerged from the river.

It is next submitted that the settlement report of 1904 shows that the land was liable to annual inundation and Plaintiff's possession should be held to have constructively revived during such inundation and the suit is therefore n barred. The Appellant strongly relies on the case of Basanta Roy v. Secretary of State (10) as bearing a close resemblance to this case. There are, however, distinctions between that case and the present one in important particulars. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observe, in following the case of Secretary of State v. Krishnomoni (7): "No rational distinction can be drawn between that case and the present one, where the reflooding was seasonal and occurred for several months in each year. It was held that when the land was resubmerged the possession of the Government determined, and that, while it remained submerged, no possession could be deemed to continue so as to be available towards the ultimate acquisition of title against the true owner." [Basanta Roy v. Secretary of State (10).] In that case the Plaintiff did not come to Court on the allegation that he had been dispossessed. It was held that the suit was one to which Art. 141 of the Limitation Act was applicable and it was therefore for the Defendant to show that Plaintiff's title had been extinguished by reason of the adverse possession of the Defendant. In the present case it is for the Plaintiff to establish a subsisting title. There is no evidence that the land was inundated during the two years in question and that there was a cessation of the dispossession by the Defendants by reason of the submergence of the land. The principle on which the cases of Krishnomoni Gupta (7) and Basanta Roy (10) were decided was that the possession of the Defendant was in fact determined by the submergence of the land, when it became derelict and, as was observed in the former case, on the dispossession of the Defendant (Government) by the vis major of the floods the constructive possession of the land was (if anywhere) in the true owners [see Secretary of State v. Krishnomoni (7)]. In the present case there is no suggestion that the inundation had the effect of dispossessing the Defendants or rendering the land derelict, and in my judgment that principle does not, therefore, apply in the present case. The case of Kuthali Mosthavir v. Periqanti (12) was also a case following within Art. 144 of the Limitation Act and moreover the Plaintiff there had proved the exercise of various acts of possession during the currency of his title and is therefore different from the present case.

It is next urged that the Respondents only cultivated small areas during the period of their possession and their possession of a part did not amount to possession of the whole. But assuming the fact to be so, in this case there is the connecting link of claim of title and close connection and interdependence between the part and the whole, as the Respondents were in possession by virtue of settlements obtained from Government of the entire land, which was surveyed at intervals and depicted in maps, and on the whole of which revenue was assessed. Then again the Respondents partitioned the entire land among themselves in 1899 when it was again surveyed and masonry pillars erected in order to demarcate the portion of each co-sharer. The circumstances contemplated as operating in favour of a wrong-doer in the case of Mohini Mohon v. Promoda (6) which has been approved by the Privy Council in Basanta Roy's case (10) are established in this case. This argument of the Appellant also fails.

Lastly, it is urged that Plaintiff should at any rate be given a decree for that portion of the land which lies south of the settlement boundary line of 1890, as it was found by the partition Commissioner in 1899 to be sandy and almost in the bed of the river and could not therefore be the subject of effective possession by the Defendants. It does not however appear that the portion was in the same condition in 1904. Rajani Kanta Dey, Amin of the Collectorate who is an independent witness, says: "In 1903 I found the major portion of the char under cultivation. About 2 to 2½ rashis wide land from the water edge was sandy. Above that all lands were culturable." The sandy portion in 1903 would appear to be the portion for which the Appellant was given a decree by the trial Court. In any case the Respondents having erected pillars on this portion during the partition proceedings and included it within the rest of the land, the possession of this portion cannot be distinguished from the rest. Thus all the contentions of the Appellant fail.

In this view it is unnecessary to discuss the question as to what would have been the effect of the possession by the Respondents if the case fell within Art. 144 of the Limitation Act. It is sufficient to say that under the circumstances of the present case, the possession of the Respondents cannot be held to be surreptitious for occasional acts of trespass and that it had not the qualities of adequacy, continuity and exclusiveness. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

PAGE, J.—I agree that this appeal should be dismissed. In my opinion, it is not incumbent upon the Court in this appeal to consider upon whom lies the burden of proving the dispossession of the Appellant, because "as their Lordships find the evidence sufficient to establish a clear conclusion of fact, it cannot matter now by which party it was given"—per Lord Sumner in Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State (10). The only inference which, in my judgment, can reasonably be drawn from the facts proved at the trial, and set out in the judgment of my learned brother Newbould, is that the Appellant was dispossessed of the lands in dispute more than twelve years prior to the institution of the present proceedings. If that be so, this appeal must fail, because it was undoubtedly incumbent upon the Appellant, having regard to the form of his claim, and the provisions of Art. 142 of Sch. V of the Limitation Act, 1908, to establish the fact that he was dispossessed within 12 years prior to the date upon which he launched this suit.

I desire, however, to state that I am unable to concur in the view which has found favour with Woodroffe and Newbould, JJ., as to where the burden of proof lies in circumstances such as those obtaining in this case. While they accept the Appellant's contention that, inasmuch as both the title to, and the possession of, the lands in dispute were vested in the Appellant before the river Bhagirathi changed its course and the lands became submerged, the said lands are deemed to have remained in the constructive possession of the Appellant so long as they continued to be inundated, these learned Judges were of opinion that "it lay upon the Plaintiff to prove that the lands were incapable of user within 12 years prior to the suit" (per Newbould, J.) and that the Plaintiff "must show that his constructive possession continued on account of diluvion, and on account of the land being incapable of possession within 12 years of the suit" (per Woodroffe, J.). With great respect, I am unable to agree that the burden which lay upon the Appellant was of this nature. In my opinion, the true rule was laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council as follows:—"The Limitation Act of 1877 does not define the term 'dispossession,' but its meaning is well settled. A man may cease to use his land because he cannot use it, since it is under water. He does not thereby discontinue his possession: constructively it continues until he is dispossessed; and, upon the cessation of the dispossession before the lapse of the statutory period, constructively it revives. 'There can be no discontinuance by absence of use and enjoyment, when the land is not capable of use and enjoyment'—per Cotton, L. J., in Leigh v. Jack (13). It seems to follow that there can be no continuance of adverse possession where the land is not capable of use and enjoyment, so long as such adverse possession must rest on de facto use and occupation. When sufficient time has elapsed to extinguish the old title and start a new one, the new owner's possession, of course, continues until there is fresh dispossession, and revives as it ceases." Mr. Justice Wilson intended, I think, to lay down the same rule when he observed: "The true rule appears to us to be this: That where land has been shown to have been in a condition unfitting it for actual enjoyment in the usual modes at such a time and under such circumstances that that state naturally would, and probably did, continue till within twelve years before suit, it may properly be presumed that it did so continue, and that the Plaintiff's possession continued also, until the contrary is shown. This presumption seems to us to be reasonable in itself, and in accordance with the legal principles now embodied in sec. 114 of the Evidence Act." [Mahomed Ali Khan v. Khaja Abdul Gunny (4).] The rule of constructive possession does not create a new title to, or interest in, the lands: it merely operates to maintain the continuance of an existing right or interest. Further acts of possession after the water has subsided are not required to prove possession by the true owner, for in law such possession is deemed to have been throughout continuous and unbroken. The occasion and the necessity for further acts of possession by the true owner arise when, and only when, his right to possess the lands is challenged. So long as his possession is neither threatened nor disturbed what need is there of further witness? I find myself in agreement with the following observations of Melville, J., on this subject:—"The burden of proof being upon the Plaintiff, what is he required to prove! Simply, that the cause of action accrued within the period of limitation made applicable to the suit. This is by no means equivalent to saying that a Plaintiff in an action of ejectment must prove that he has been in possession within 12 years. He may not have been in possession within twelve years, and yet the cause of action may have accrued within that period. If a man buy a piece of open ground, he is not bound to enclose it or to build upon it, or formally to take possession of it; nor, if he do formally take possession of it, is he bound by subsequent acts to proclaim the continuance of his possession. So long as the land remains unoccupied, his rights are not interfered with, and he is not called upon to assert them. He has no cause of action, and there is no person whom he could sue. His cause of action accrues when another person takes possession of the land." [Pandurang Govind v. Bal Krishna Hari (14).] Now, while the doctrine of constructive possession, in my opinion, is equally applicable to cases where the Plaintiff seeks to obtain possession of lands in the possession of another, and to cases where the Plaintiff claims to recover possession of lands of which he alleges that he has been dispossessed, a Plaintiff who frames his suit to recover possession of lands of which he has been dispossessed must needs prove that he has been in possession, and that he has been dispossessed within 12 years prior to commencing proceedings to recover possession of the lands. He must further prove unless it is admitted the time when, and the mode in which such dispossession was effected. Having regard to the evidence adduced at the hearing, so far am I from being satisfied that the Plaintiff in this case has proved that he has been dispossessed of the lands in dispute within 12 years prior to the institution of the suit, that, in my judgment, the true conclusion to be drawn from the evidence is that the Respondents have been in possession of the lands in a manner adverse to the Plaintiff's title, for more than 12 years before the present proceedings were commenced. In my opinion, no question of law is involved in this appeal, which depends solely upon the determination of an issue of fact. For these reasons it appears to me to be a matter of indifference whether Art. 142 or Art. 141 of the Limitation Act is applicable in the circumstances of this case, or upon whom the burden of proof lies, for in any event the appeal fails and should be dismissed.

PRIVY COUNCIL.

[APPEAL FROM BOMBAY.]

LORD SHAW. LORD PHILLIMORE. LORD BLANESBURGH. LORD SALVESEN 1924, Heard, 7, 8 and 11, February. Judgment, 13. March.	KALYANDAPPA BIN AYAPPA DESAI, since deceased (now represented by Ayappa bin Kalyandappa Deshmukh and ors.), Appellants, v. CHANBASAPPA BIN DODAPPA DESAI, Respondent.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 118, 141—Hindu reversioner, suit for recovery by—Defendant claiming to be adopted son of previous owner—Plaintiff proved to have been aware of Defendant's claim of title more than six years before suit—Suit, if barred—Interpretation of statute by Court—Statute re-enacted in same terms—Implication that interpretation was accepted by Legislature.

The words "suit to obtain a declaration" in Art. 118 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act are terms of art, and the article was meant to apply to suits of the class referred to in Ill. (f) to sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

A suit by a Hindu reversioner to recover property from a person who claims to hold the same as the adopted son of a previous owner is governed by Art. 141 and will not be barred if brought within the period limited thereby even if the Plaintiff is proved to have become aware of the Defendant's claim more than six years before the suit.

This was an appeal against a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, dated the 13th April 1917 which set aside a decree of the first class Subordinate Judge of Bijapur and dismissed the Plaintiff's suit with costs.

The property in dispute which consisted chiefly of watan property consisting of Desgat and Gaudki watans belonged to one Dodappa Desai who died in 1878 leaving two widows and a daughter but no son.

Malkamma, the deceased's senior widow, adopted one Madivalappa in 1880 and his name was entered by the Collector as holder of both classes of watans.

In 1886 his name was removed from the Desgat watan register on the ground that he was not a Bhauband of Dodappa in whom under the sanad the Desgat watan would vest.

Madivalappa died in 1895 leaving no issue, but a widow Bishingamma whose name was entered as holder in the Gaudki watan register until it was removed in favour of Malkamma on the 4th October 1899.

In 1901 Malkamma was alleged to have adopted Defendant No. 1, Respondent as son to Dodappa and he had been in possession of the watan property since the date of his adoption. That adoption, however, had not been upheld by the Courts in India.

The Plaintiff instituted the present suit on the 1st of July 1912 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bijapur claiming to be the nearest Bhauband of Madivalappa and as such his heir after his widow's death and prayed for possession of the property in suit and mesne profits.

He pleaded that the adoption of Defendant No. 1 was "not true and not in accordance with the Shastras" and that Dodappa to whom Defendant No. 1 had been adopted was not the last owner but that Madivalappa was the last owner and that the Plaintiff was his heir.

Defendant No. 1 (the Respondent) filed his written statement on the 30th July 1913 and pleaded inter alia that he was the legally adopted son of Dodappa and that the Plaintiff's suit was barred by Art. 118 of the Limitation Act. He also pleaded that the suit was barred by Art. 141 of the Limitation Act as the property in suit had been in adverse possession of Malkamma for a period of more than 12 years.

The learned Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 25th August 1914 and decreed the Plaintiff's claim with costs. He held that the Respondent had been adopted by Malkamma as a son to Dodappa, but that the said adoption was invalid as her power of adoption had been exhausted by adopting Madivalappa and that the suit was not barred by limitation.

The Respondent appealed against the said decree of the Subordinate Judge to the High Court of Judicature at Bombay which decreed the Respondent's appeal with costs on the 13th April 1917. The learned Judges held that the suit was barred by Art. 118 of the Indian Limitation Act.

The Plaintiff appealed to His Majesty in Council.

Mr. T. B. Raikes for the Appellants.—Art. 118 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, is not applicable. The terms of this article which are identical in the 1908 Act and in the earlier Limitation Act of 1877 apply only to a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid, or never in fact took place. It does not apply to a suit for possession.

Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (4) and Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ud-din Khan (7).

The following reasons also prevent the application of Art. 118 : --

(1) The adoption set up by the Respondent in the present case was a nullity being void on the face of it.

(2) The Respondent does not claim to be adopted to the last holder of the estate.

Jagadamba Chowdhrani v. Dakhina Mohun (1) and Mohesh Narain Moonshi v. Taruck Nath Moitra (2) are inapplicable having been decided under the Limitation Act of 1871, Art. 129.

Art. 118 of the later Acts applies only to suits of a particular kind, as for a declaratory decree under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

The question whether a suit is, or is not, brought within time must be decided having regard to the considerations prevailing at the time of its institution not by a consideration of the issues raised later on by the defence.

In coming to its decision in the present case the High Court has been affected by the decision in Shrinivas Sarjerav v. Balwant Venkatesh (9) which followed the Full Bench decision in Shrinivas v. Hanmant (3).

But the latter decision was given in 1899 prior to decisions of the Board already quoted above.

(9) I. L. R. 37 Bom. 513 (1913).

The Appellant contends that the correct view of the law was arrived at by the High Court of Madras in Velaga Mangamma v. Bandlamudi Veerayya (5).

Mr. Wallach for the Respondent.—The High Court have rightly interpreted the decisions of the Board in Jagadamba Chowdhrani v. Dakhina Mohun Roy (1) and Mohesh Narain Moonshi v. Taruck Nath Moitra (2) which are not affected by the later decisions in 1906 and 1911.

Moreover these later decisions in no way suggest that different considerations should be given to Art. 118 under the Acts of 1877 and 1908.

An adopted son takes ipso facto a vested estate and decisions under Arts. 91, 92, 93 are inapplicable.

Mr. E. B. Raikes replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PHILLIMORE.—The suit in this case was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bijapur to recover possession of certain watan lands and other lands of ordinary tenure, the Plaintiff making a claim as the nearest agnate to the last male owner, and averring that his title accrued on the death of the latter's widow. The principal Defendant, the now Respondent, being in possession of the property, pleaded various defences of which the one which is important for present consideration, depends upon the Indian Limitation Act.

The Plaintiff recovered judgment before the Subordinate Judge for possession of the watan lands but not of the lands of ordinary tenure. Appeal was taken to the High Court of Judicature at Bombay, which reversed the decision of the Subordinate Judge and gave judgment for the Defendant.

From this decree, the representatives of the original Plaintiff have appealed to His Majesty in Council. As to the non-watan lands the Plaintiff acquiesced in the decision of the Subordinate Judge against him. Of the watan lands there were two kinds, and it was contended for the Defendant that as regards one kind, known as Desgat watans, he was in a more favourable position than with regard to the others and must in any event succeed. But the Subordinate Judge and the High Court agreed, though for somewhat different reasons, that the parties stood in the same position with regard to both kinds of watan lands. Their Lordships do not find it necessary to go into the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge, but they are satisfied upon the ground given in the judgment of the High Court, that the Defendant was in no better position with regard to the Desgat watans than he was with regard to the other watan lands. But as regards both classes of watans, there is, as the High Court observed, a serious defence under Art. 118 of the Indian Limitation Act.

The facts of the case can be stated in a comparatively short compass. The Plaintiff was cousin to the former owner of this property, by name Dodappa. Dodappa married Malkamma, the second but not contesting Defendant in the case, and died long ago. The Plaintiff averred that after Dodappa's death in the year 1880, Malkamma took in adoption to him as his son, one Madivalappa, who was her daughter's son: that Madivalappa married Baslingamma and died himself in 1895: that upon his death Baslingamma took the ordinary Hindu woman's estate and died in 1903: and that upon her death, Plaintiff's title accrued: and that as he brought his suit on 1st July 1912, he had brought it within the period of 12 years allowed to him by Art. 141 in the Second Schedule to the Limitation Act.

He stated in his plaint that the Defendant denied the validity of Madivalappa's adoption and set up that he, on the other hand, was the person validly adopted by Malkamma as son to Dodappa.

The Defendant No. 1 did in substance set up this case. He admitted some show of adoption of Madivalappa, but denied that it was legal or valid; and he set up his own adoption by Malkamma in 1901. In the proceedings in the first Court, the validity of the adoption of Madivalappa was in contest; but the Subordinate Judge decided that it was valid; and this validity was not disputed in the appeal to the High Court. If Madivalappa were validly adopted, the property passed to him at once upon the adoption; and when he, the adopted son, died, his heir should succeed subject to the estates of the two widows. The adoption, therefore, of the first Defendant, if it can be enquired into at all, must be pronounced either invalid or ineffectual, and such as to confer no title upon the first Defendant to the lands in suit.

The point of law as between the two parties can be stated as follows. Plaintiff says: "I deduce a good title. You have no right to possession as against me, and I bring my suit within 12 years, that being the period allowed to me by Art. 141 in the First Schedule of the Limitation Act, which provides that for a suit by a remainderman or a reversioner 'entitled to the possession of immovable property on the death of a Hindu female,' there is a period of 12 years from the time 'when the female dies.'"

The Defendant says: "You can try to put it in that way, but in truth your suit is one governed by Art. 118, being one "to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid, or never, in fact, took place,' for which you have only six years from the date when the alleged adoption becomes known to the Plaintiff'; and as regards knowledge, I can show you kn w of my claim (as indeed he could sh more than six years ago."

It is true that the Plaintiff in his plaint as originally framed claimed a declaration that the Defendant had not been validly adopted, which was imprudent. But he wisely asked to amend this plaint by striking out this claim and making the suit a plain one for possession, and this amendment was allowed.

The controversy as to which of the tw principles of limitation should be applied in cases of this nature is an old one and has given occasion to many decisions, some of which are in conflict. Some of these authorities amount to decisions on the exact point, which if they are decisions of this Board, must be accepted as conclusive. Others may be said to consist of dicta rather than actual decisions: and others are again decisions of the High Courts in India, and as such entitled to much respect but in no way binding upon their Lordships.

The earlier of these decisions turned upon the construction of the Act of 1871. The article in the schedule of that Act, which dealt with cases of adoption, was in different language from the article in the schedule to the Acts of 1877 and 1908, the two latter being identical in terms.

The Article in 1871, No 129, is ex

(9) I. L. R. 37 B. hereafter that not only is the description of the suit different from that contained in Art. 118 of the two later Acts, but that the time from which the limitation begins to run is different.

However, as regards the earlier Act, the decisive authority is a decision of this Board in Jagadamba Chowdhrani v. Dakhina Mohun (1). In that case their Lordships held that the words "to establish or set aside an adoption" "were not technical words and did not describe with accuracy any known form of suit," and that therefore any suit which brought the validity of an adoption into question must considered as a suit to set aside an adoption, even though it might also be looked at as a suit by the man entitled to recover possession; and that therefore Art. 129 and not Art. 112 (as then numbered) applied.

In the course of their judgment their Lordships made a reference to the Act of 1877, which by that time had been some years in force, though the case had been started so long ago that it was governed by the earlier Act of 1871. These observations are as follows:

"It is worth observing that in the Limitation Act of 1877, which superseded the Act now under discussion, the language is changed. Art. 118 of the Act of 1877, which corresponds to Art. 129 of the Act of 1871 so far as regards setting aside adoptions, speaks of a suit 'to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid or never, in fact, took place,' and assigns a different starting-point to the time that is to run against it. Whether the alteration of language denotes change of policy, or how much change of law it affects, are questions not now before their Lordships. Nor do they think that any guidance in the construction of the earlier Act is to be gained from the later one, except that we may fairly infer that the Legislature considered the expression 'suit to set aside an adoption' to be one of a loose kind, and that more precision was desirable."

The next case to be cited is that of Mohesh Narain Moonshi v. Taruck Nath Moitra (2) in which it was endeavoured to argue that the Act of 1877 and not the Act of 1871 applied; but it was held that the Defendant had established his right before ever the Act of 1877 came into force, and was therefore (though his adoption was an invalid one) entitled to insist upon the Limitation Act of 1871 in his favour. In this decision there was again a reference to the Act of 1877, and the words used by their Lordships were as follows:

"It was suggested that, the Act of 1871 having been superseded by the Act of 1877 the question of limitation should be determined with reference to the provisions of the later statute, in which the language used is somewhat different, the suit there referred to as necessary to save the limitation being described as one 'to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption is invalid, or never, in fact, took place' It seems to be more than doubtful whether, if these were the words of the statute applicable to the case, the Plaintiff would thereby take any advantage."

But then their Lordships proceeded to give the reason why the Act of 1877 would not apply.

In neither of these cases did their Lordships intend to pronounce any decision on the construction of the Act of 1877. Perhaps it might be observed that there is a shade of inclination in the passage of the first judgment towards there being a definite change in the law, and a shade of inclination in the opposite direction in the second judgment.

When the Act of 1877 came to be applied, there were differences of opinion in the various High Courts in India. The authorities are somewhat evenly balanced. Their Lordships, however, deem it unnecessary to go into the detail of the cases which preceded the next judgment of this Board, except the important decision of the Full Bench of the Bombay High Court presided over by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., and decided in the year 1899. The case is reported as Shrinivas v. Hanmant (3). It was there held, partly on grounds of public policy, partly in supposed obedience to the judgments of this Board, and partly in deference to the supposed indication of opinion by this Board, that the same rule should be applied to the Act of 1877 as to the Act of 1871, and that a suit to recover possession which involved the decision of an issue as to the validity or invalidity of the Defendant's adoption, was a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption was invalid or never took place, to which Art. 118 of the Act of 1877 applied and which therefore must be brought within a period of years dating from the Plaintiff's knowledge, and was, in the particular instance, time-barred. The limit of time for these declaration suits which was 12 years under the Act of 1871, had become six years under the Act of 1877.

In that suit, as in the present suit before it was amended, the Plaintiff claimed a declaration that the adoption of the Defendant was invalid, and he also claimed possession of the property, and when pressed by Art. 118 he endeavoured as in the present case, to throw aside his claim for declaration and rely only on the claim for possession. But it was held that the real matter for decision was a question for adoption, and that, therefore, Art. 118 applied

As it was put by one of the learned Judges: -

KALYANDAPPA BIN AYAPPA DESAI v. CHANBASAPPA BIN DODAPPA DESAI.

"Article 141 applies to the ordinary simple case of a reversioner where the validity of the adoption is not the substantial point in dispute, or where the Plaintiff can succeed without impugning the validity of the Defendant's adoption."

Shortly afterwards the case of Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (4) came before this Board. In that case again there was a conflict between the reversioner and a Defendant claiming under an adoption which was held either non-existent or invalid by both Courts in India. Whereupon the Defendant appealed; but his appeal was dismissed. It should be observed parenthetically that in the head note to the report, the important word "not" is unfortunately omitted.

The conclusion arrived at in that case was shortly stated by Lord Macnaghten, who delivered the judgment of the Board, and their Lordships cannot do better than quote the passage in full :—

"On the appeal before their Lordships it was argued that there was at any rate an apparent adoption, and that, on that assumption, it mattered not whether the adoption was valid or invalid, because there was enough to satisfy the provisions of the Limitation Act of 1871, as interpreted by this Board in the case of Jagadamba Chowdhrani v Dakhina Mohun (1). Mr. Cohen, who argued the case with great ability, relied entirely on the Act of 1871. He contended that the Limitation Act of 1877 did not apply because the Appellant relied on title acquired before the passing of the Act of 1877, and his rights were therefore saved by sec. 2 of that Act. He admitted that if the Act of 1877 applied, his client was out of Court.

"Their Lordships are unable to accede to Mr. Cohen's argument. Giving full effect to the Jagadamba case (1) and the other cases which followed it, they do not think that the immunity, such as it is, gained by the lapse of twelve years after the date of an apparent adoption, amounts to acquisition of title within the meaning of sec. 2 of the Act of 1877.

"Their Lordships think that the appeal may be disposed of on this short ground, whether the alleged adoption was or was not an apparent adoption to which the ruling in the Jagadamba case (1) would apply if the Act of 1871 were now in force."

This language looks at first sight conclusive in favour of the Plaintiff in the present suit; but it has been thought in subsequent cases in India, and has been argued before their Lordships, that the decision of this point was unnecessary, because the Plaintiff, being a minor, had three years after attaining majority to bring his suit, and that this provision in his favour superseded the protection given to the Defendant by Art. 118 and left the matter open to be decided according to Art. 141. This line of reasoning seems to assume that you cannot impute knowledge to a minor—a view which is certainly not in accordance with the facts of human nature. But it is not necessary to go so deeply into the matter. It is obvious from a perusal of both the arguments and judgment that the minority of the Plaintiff (though mentioned in the argument) was not the reason for the decision, and that the intention was to decide the same point as is contended for in the present appeal.

In consequence of this decision the High Court of Madras in the case of Velaga Mangamma v. Bandlamudi Veerayya (5) went back upon its previous decision in Ratnamasari v. Akilandamal (6), and held in obedience to the decision of this Board that Art. 118 only applied to declaratory suits in respect of adoption and not to suits for possession, and that in suits for possession Art. 141 was the proper one to apply.

Next in order comes the decision of this Board in Muhammad Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ud-din Khan (7). That was the case of a Mohamedan adoption, in which the District Judge said that Art. 118 was inapplicable, as the adoption was "inherently invalid and ipso facto void"; but the Chief Court reversed his decision and held that the adoption was not inherently invalid, and that Art. 118 applied, and the suit was barred by it.

The Chief Court did not, however, mean to hold that the adoption was valid; because, if the Judges had thought that, there would have been no necessity to rely upon the doctrine of limitation. What the learned Judges meant was that it was an adoption with sufficient colour of title to have it treated as one which would have to be got out of the way by a Plaintiff suing for possession, and therefore that the time limit applicable to suits for declaring an adoption invalid applied.

This decree of the Chief Court was affirmed by this Board upon other grounds, it is true; but in affirming it their Lordships expressed themselves upon the point of limitation as follows:—

"Although their Lordships consider that the question of an adoption was an immaterial issue, they think it advisable to say that the omission to bring within the period prescribed by Art. 118 of the Second Schedule of the Indian Limitation Act, 1877, a suit to obtain a declaration that an alleged adoption was invalid, or never, in fact, took place, is no bar to a suit like this for possession of property. Their Lordships need only refer to Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (4). Under the general Mahomedan law an adoption cannot be made; an adoption if made in fact by a Mahomedan, could carry with it no right of inheritance.

"It may further be observed that, even if an adoption by a Mahomedan was permissible by any valid custom in the Punjab, the Chief Court found that it had not been proved that the parties to the suit belonged to a family to which the Punjab agricultural or other similar restrictive customs must be presumed to apply."

As against the weight of this authority, it has been observed that, generally speaking, a Mahomedan adoption does not confer any right of succession to property, as, indeed, their Lordships said in the passage just quoted. But, on the other hand, as the passage shows and the general trend of the case shows, there may be a tribal custom among Mahomedans (and this particular case came from the Punjab, which is the home of customs) allowing adoption to carry rights of succession. Indeed it was upon some such idea that the Chief Court had relied when it introduced Art. 118 as fixing the period of limitation.

That Hindu tribes converted in more recent times to Mahomedanism may keep as part of their customary law the old Hindu law in respect of family matters and succession, is shown in the recent case of the Halai Memons in 1922, [Khatubai v. Mahomed Haqi Abu (8)].

Anyhow, it would seem that their Lordships desired to take this opportunity of elucidating and affirming their decision in the case of Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (4). In this connection it should be noted that, though the judgment is stated to have been delivered by Sir John Edge, one of the members of the Board was Lord Macnaghten, who had delivered the judgment in Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (4) and must have known well what was intended to have been conveyed by the earlier judgment and by this one.

In 1913 these judgments came under consideration by the High Court of Bombay in Shrinivas Sarjerav v. Balwant Venkatesh (9); and the learned Judges came to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the passages in the two decisions of this Board which have been last cited, they were still bound by the principle expressed in the decisions on the Act of 1871; and they accordingly held that the period of limitation in a case like the present is that of six years from the knowledge of the adoption, differing on this point from the High Court of Madras. Their decision has been followed by the Court in the present case, the learned Judges observing that "the adoption of the Defendant may be clearly invalid by Hindu law and Malkamma's power of adoption may have been already exhausted; nevertheless, the law of limitation will effectively defeat the Plaintiff's claim."

Their Lordships are of opinion that the High Court of Bombay both in this and in the previous case attached too little weight to the authority of the last two judgments of this Board, and further that the learned Judges seemed not to have noticed that since the decision in Thakur Tirbhuwan Bahadur Singh v. Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh (1), the Limitation Act of 1908 was passed by the Indian Legislature with this article in precisely the same language as that used in 1877 after the construction already put upon it by this Board. This, in the view of their Lordships, is a point of considerable importance.

The matter might almost rest here; but as this question has so often been raised and discussed, their Lordships would wish to put it upon the ground of principle as well as on the ground of authority. In the Act of 1871, as observed in the judgment in Jagadamba Chowdhrani v. Dakhina Mohun (1), the words used had no technical meaning, and they were treated as expressing popular language to which in popular reasoning the meaning which prevailed could attach. In the Acts of 1877 and 1908, the matter is otherwise. The words "a suit to obtain a declaration" are terms of art. They relate back to the Specific Relief Act passed in the same year 1877, being Act No 1 of that year, whereas the Limitation Act is Act No. 15. Sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act deals with declaratory decrees, and the illustration (Letter F) is much in point:—

"A Hindu widow in possession of property adopts a son to her deceased husband The person presumptively entitled to possession of the property on her death without a son may, in a suit against the adopted son, obtain a declaration that the adoption was invalid"

It is to this class of suits that this particular limitation applies. The date from which the time begins to run is a subjective or personal date; and the condition of obtaining the particular relief which is sought in a declaratory suit is that the Plaintiff should not be guilty of laches, the measure of laches being fixed by the statute as six years. But if a claimant chooses to run the risk that an adoption which he has not attacked will have every presumption made in its favour by reason of its long standing, he can wait till his reversionary right has accrued, and even till the limit (no doubt a very wide limit) of 12 years from that accruer has passed.

Strange consequences would otherwise ensue. It was decided by this Board in Venkatanarayana Pillai v. Subbammal (10) in the year 1915, that a suit by a presumptive reversioner for a declaration that an adoption was invalid was one brought in a representative capacity and on behalf of all reversioners, and that on the death of a presumptive reversioner the next presumable reversioner would be entitled to continue a suit which his predecessor had begun.

If a suit for possession involving the invalidity of an adoption were to be treated as coming under Art. 118, the first reversioner might have known, and the second might not have known, of the adoption six years before. Or vice versa. And the suit for possession might succeed or fail, and the Defendant might be ousted of his property or keep it if the first reversioner died before he brought his suit to a hearing.

Moreover, it seems not to have been noticed by the Judges of the Bombay High Court who decided the case in Shrinivas Sarjerao v. Balwant Venkatesh (9), that one of the cases cited in Umar Khan v. Muhammad Niaz-ud-din Khan (7) was Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Srimati Krishna Mahishi Debi (11). And this case seems to indicate the true canon of construction. Art. 91 provides a period of limitation for a suit "to cancel or set aside" certain instruments, the period from which the time begins to run, dating again from the Plaintiff's knowledge. The case in Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Srimati Krishna Mahishi Debi (11) was a suit for a declaration that a particular form of lease, made by a Hindu widow, had become inoperative against the reversioners, and for possession of the property. The suit was brought more than three years after the Plaintiffs knew of the making of the lease; and the High Court of Calcutta thought that the time limit applied. The Chief Justice put it that, according to the authorities, if the Plaintiffs could recover possession without setting aside the lease, then Art. 141 would apply; but if they had first to set aside the lease, then Art. 91. Their Lordships agreed so far, and agreed further that the particular lease was voidable only and not void. But they held that the reversioner might treat it as a nullity, and showed his election to do so by bringing an action for possession, and that he had 12 years for so doing; and in that case the Plaintiff had not, as in the present case, amended his plaint by striking out the claim for a declaration.

The present case seems a fortiori. The adoption of the first Defendant was void, and the Plaintiff is entitled to brush it aside and sue for the possession to which he has a right. His time limit is 12 years from the death of the Hindu widow, and he was in time.

A further point was taken for the Appellant against the judgment of the High Court which seemed to assume that one adopted son could claim to be the brother and heir of another adopted son. But it is not necessary for their Lordships to pronounce upon this contention, which might otherwise have had to be seriously considered.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allow-

(CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.)

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 9 OF 1924.

SANDERSON, C. J. RICHARDSON, J. 1924, 25, February.

In the matter of an application of AVIS MARY KATHLEEN GOULDING.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or 41 r. 10, applicability of—Jurisdiction to order security in appeals from a Judge sitting on Original Side.

Or. 41, r. 10, C. P. C. applies to an appeal from the judgment of a Judge sitting on the Original Side.

Per RICHARDSON, J.—Even apart from Or. 41, r. 10, C. P. C., the Court has ample jurisdiction to demand in proper cases security from an Appellant for the costs of the appeal.

SABITRI THAKURAIN v. SAVI (4) and IN THE MATTER OF GOBERDHONE SEAL (3) referred to.

NAWAB BEHRAM JUNG v. HAJI SULTAN ALI SHUSTRY (2) explained.

SESHA AYYAR v. NAGARATHNA LALA (1) not followed.

This matter arose out of an appeal preferred against a judgment of a Judge passed on the Original Side.

The facts will appear from the judgment.

Mr. C. Bagram, Counsel appeared for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Avetoom, Counsel appeared for the Respondent.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an application by the Respondent, Avis Mary Kathleen Goulding, who is the wife of the Appellant, that the Appellant do furnish security for the costs of the appeal to the satisfaction of the Registrar of this Court and that until such security is furnished all proceedings in this appeal be stayed.

It appears that an order was made by a learned Judge sitting on the Original Side of this Court that Mrs. Goulding should be the guardian of her infant daughter Lydia Barbara Goulding who is aged about 6½ years. The Appellant, the father of the infant, has appealed to this Court against that decision.

The petition, which has been filed by the Respondent, states that the Appellant resides in England, and is outside the jurisdiction of this Court and that he has no immoveable or other property in British India. No affidavit has been filed in reply and the learned Counsel, who has appeared for the Appellant, has stated that he is not in a position to deny the allegations to which I have referred.

The learned Counsel for the Appellant, however, has taken the point that this Court has no jurisdiction to make the order. His argument was to the effect that Or. 41, r. 10, C. P. C. does not apply in the case of an appeal from a learned Judge sitting on the Original Side of this Court but that its operation is confined to appeals from Courts outside Calcutta to this Court in its Appellate Jurisdiction; and, secondly, that even though this Court might have inherent jurisdiction to make the order, which has been asked for, it could not exercise such jurisdiction until a rule somewhat similar to that which appears to obtain in the Bombay High Court has been passed by this Court.

In my judgment Or. 41, r. 10, C. P. C. does apply to an appeal from the judgment of a learned Judge sitting on the Original Civil Side, in the absence of any rule of this Court framed in the exercise of the power to regulate its own procedure in its Original Civil Procedure. The only authority which was cited as being contrary to that view is the case of Sesha Ayyar v. Nagarathna Lala (1) which was the decision of a learned Judge of the Madras High Court sitting alone.

Our attention was drawn to the case of Nawab Behram Jung v Haji Sultan Ali Shustry (2) and from that case it appears that the Bombay High Court has a rule which prescribes that in an appeal from the judgment of a learned Judge on the Original Side the Appellant is required to deposit with the memorandum of appeal a sum of Rs. 500 as security for the costs of the Respondent in the appeal or, if more than one, for the costs of each Respondent having different interests. In that case the learned Chief Justice and the other learned Judge, who was sitting with him, came to the conclusion that, inasmuch as the Appellant had complied with the rule as regards the deposit of Rs. 500 and inasmuch as the Respondent had abstained from applying for security of the costs of the original hearing, as he might have done, there was no reason why they should exercise their discretion by ordering that the Appellant should give further security either for the costs of the original hearing and for the costs of the appeal; and the learned Chief Justice concluded his judgment by saying: "We have been referred to no reported case in which such an order has been made, and we do not think (although we do not doubt our power if it were necessary in the interests of justice to make such an order) that a case has been made out for such an order at present."

It seems to me that that case is an authority against the contention which has been put forward by the learned Counsel for the Appellant. That case, as I read it, is not an authority that Or. 41, r. 10, C. P. C. does not apply to such a case as that which we are now considering. It is an authority for the proposition that the rule which was made by the High Court for depositing Rs. 500 was inconsistent with Or. 41 r. 10, but in my judgment, it is not necessary for us to consider the matter at any length, because, in my opinion, there is a decision of this Court which covers this matter.

Our attention was drawn at the end of the argument to the case of In the matter of Goberdhone Seal, an Insolvent: S. M. Lakhypriya Dassi v. S. M. Raj Kishori Dassi (3) which was a decision of Mr. Justice Woodroffe, Mr. Justice Mookerjee and myself and the judgment which was appealed from was delivered by Mr. Justice Chowdhury sitting on the Original Side. The learned Judge held that the sale, which was the subject of the enquiry, by the insolvent to his wife was a fictitious sale and he also held that the transfer by Sorbasundari in the name of Lakhypriya, the Appellant, was a fictitious one; and he held that both the transfers were void as against the Official Assignee. Against that Lakhypriya preferred an appeal. My learned brother Mr. Justice Woodroffe delivered the judgment of the Court. An application was made for security for the costs of the appeal and in that case the learned Counsel, who appeared to oppose the application, relied upon the case of the Madras Court on which the learned Counsel in this case relied and Mr. Justice Woodroffe said as follows:- "The application is opposed both on grounds of law and fact. As regards the first question the point is whether Or. 41, r. 10 applies to the case of an appeal from an order passed by a Judge in insolvency under Act III of 1909. Sec. 8 (b) of that Act states that an appeal shall lie in the same way and be subject to the same provisions as an appeal from an order made by a Judge in the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. The question then is, does the order apply to the latter case? No doubt the case of Sesha Iyyar v. Nagarathna (1) answers this question in the negative. This case was decided prior to the present Code and has not been referred to nor followed so far as we are aware in this Court where the previous practice has been to entertain such applications. Under sec. 117 of the Code its provisions apply to the High Courts save as provided in Parts IX and X. I am of opinion, therefore, that we have power to entertain and adjudicate this application under sec. 117 and Or. 41, r. 10 of the Code. This conclusion is in conformity with the previous practice under which such applications have been adjudicated. It cannot be reasonably held that this Court when sitting in appeal from a decision of the Original Side is deprived of powers necessary to an effective jurisdiction admittedly existent on the Appellate Side of the same Court. For if Or. 41, r. 10 does not apply, there is no other provision applicable and in such a case it would be necessary to invoke the provisions of sec. 151."

The learned Judge concluded by saying that on the facts of that case security should be required.

In view of these decisions, especially in view of the case to which I have referred, In the matter of Goberdhone Seal, an Insolvent: S. M. Lakhypria Dassi v. S. M. Raj Kishori Dassi (3), I have no doubt that this Court has jurisdiction to entertain this application and, if it thinks fit, to make an order in respect of it.

We direct that security to the extent of Rs. 500 for costs of the appeal be furnished by the Appellant on or before the 1st June 1924 to the satisfaction of the Registrar. The appeal will not be heard until the security is furnished; and if the security is not furnished by the 1st June the appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

The Appellant must pay the Respondent's costs of this application.

Since the delivery of judgment, my attention has been drawn to the case of Sabitri Thakurain v. Savi (4), which is a decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and which confirms the opinion which I have already expressed.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

The question is, in my opinion, one of procedure; and even if the view were taken that Or. 41, r. 10, C. P. C., does not of its own accord apply to appeals from the Original Side and even in the absence of any rule on the subject made by this Court, under the powers conferred by sec. 129 of the Civil Procedure Code, I should have been disposed to say that a Court having the general powers of this Court would have ample jurisdiction to demand in proper cases security from an Appellant for the costs of the appeal. It appears however that it has been decided by this Court in the case to which the learned Chief Justice has just referred that Or. 41, r. 10 does apply to appeals from the Original Side; and, that being so, there is nothing further to be said in the matter. Since judgment was delivered our attention has been called to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sabitri v. Savi (4) which puts the question beyond doubt.

WALMSLEY, J. MUKERJI, J. 1924, Heard, 19 and 20, February. Judgment, 26, February

TARAK CHANDRA CHUCKERBUTTY and anr., Defendants, Appellants,

PRASANNA KUMAR SAHA, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), sec 35—Document when not made by a person in performance of official duty or a duty enjoined by law, relevancy of—Return filed by a zemindar to which tenant not a party, probative value of—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 50 (2).

Where in a proceeding under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the zemindar filed a certified copy of an entry from a book in the Collectorate made on the footing of a return submitted by his predecessor-in-title in 1242 B. S. under Reg. VIII of 1793, sec. 48, and Reg. VII of 1799, sec. 15, to prove the fact that a certain taluk did not exist at that date:

Held—That as against the tenant it was of slight evidentiary value to prove the non-existence of the taluk.

That such a document had no higher legal effect than a statement made by a party and as it did not appear that the tenant or his predecessor-in-title was a party to it or that it was made in his presence or that he was interested to see to its accuracy when it was made, the probative value attaching to such a document, assuming its admissibility, must, if any at all, be of the slightest character. It was not sufficient to rebut the presumption arising under sec. 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act from proof of payment of an unvarying rent for 20 years.

MUKERJI, J.—A certified copy of an entry from the books of a Collectorate not shown to have been made by a person in the discharge of an official duty or in the performance of a duty enjoined specially by law does not come under sec. 35 of the Evidence Act.

This was an appeal preferred on the 22nd December 1921 against a decree of the Special Judge of Zillah Noakhali (Mr. B. Sen), dated the 30th August 1921, reversing a decree of the Assistant Settlement Officer (Babu M. M. Chuckerbutty), dated the 16th September 1919.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Ramdayal De for the Appellants.

Babu Bhagirath Chunder Das for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal is preferred by the Defendants. They are the owners of a sikmi taluk named Kashi Chandra Chakerbarty, and in the record-of-rights recently published the rent of the taluk was stated to be not liable to enhancement. The landlord, however, challenged the accuracy of this entry and made an application before the Settlement Officer for enhancement of the rent under the provisions of sec. 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Settlement Officer found that the landlord had failed to rebut the presumptions arising from the entry in the record-of-rights and from payment of an unvarying rent for 20 years and dismissed the application. The landlord appealed and the learned Judge reversed the decision of the first Court: he based his finding on two pieces of evidence, first, the absence of the taluk in a return submitted by the zemindar in 1242 B. S. and second, the name of the taluk, the name being that of the father of the Appellants.

So far as the zemindar's return is concerned, the position is rather obscure. Returns were prescribed by sec. 48 of Reg. VIII of 1793 and also by sec. 15 of Reg. VII of 1799, and it is possible that the document produced in this case was prepared in accordance with one or other of those sections, though why it should have been prepared in 1242 B. S. is not explained. Assuming, however, that the return was made under one or other of those sections, other questions arise. The first is whether the return can be received in evidence at all, the second is whether the nature of the requirements warrants any inference based on the absence of the sikmi in the return, and the third is whether in any event the Defendants can be bound by such an inference.

In the absence of further information about this particular return, I feel unwilling to come to any decision as to whether it could properly be received in evidence; and it is not necessary that I should do so. It is the same with the second objection. Regarding the third objection, however, I feel no doubt. Sanctity may attach to an old document but the return before us was prepared by the landlord alone without any opportunity being given to the tenants of admitting its correctness. It is possible of course that the Defendants' taluk was not in existence then, so that the return could not contain an admission of accuracy by their predecessors, but that explanation cannot be accepted until it is shown that the return contains an exhaustive catalogue of the subordinate interests in the estate, and that the accuracy of the catalogue is admitted by the owners of those interests. It is not suggested that in this case the return can pass such a test. I think therefore that the absence of the taluk in the return certainly cannot bind the Defendants, and that, if it is evidence at all, it is of very slight weight.

The other piece of evidence on which the learned Judge relies is also slight. He says that the taluk bears the name of Kashi Nath Chakerbarty and he assumes that that must be the name of the first holder. That is quite possible. On the other hand the Defendants' case is that their father bought from a Dhupi, and it is quite possible that he at once proceeded to get the tenure known by a more pleasing name.

The learned Judge also explains away three comments made by the first Court. Two of them are of little importance, but the first is cogent. A kobala of 1239 B. S. mentioned a taluk which is still existing under the same name; that taluk, however, was not mentioned in the return of 1242 B. S. and the Settlement Officer used the omission to show that the Defendants' taluk might also have been omitted. The learned Judge misses the point of the argument when he disposes of it by saying that the land described in the kobala is not proved to lie within the taluk.

My conclusion is that the learned Judge is in error: it is not a mere matter of appreciating evidence: he has treated as binding on the Defendants what cannot be more than a slender piece of evidence. It is not necessary that there should be a remand, for all the evidence is before us, and it is clear that if the return of 1242 B. S. does not bind the Defendants, the evidence adduced by the Plaintiff is not nearly enough to rebut the presumption arising from the entry in the record-of-rights.

In my opinion therefore this appeal should be allowed, and the decision of the first Court restored with costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court—the hearing fee in this Court being assessed at two gold mohurs.

MUKERJI, J.—This appeal arises out of a proceeding under sec. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act wherein the Plaintiff sought to enhance the rent of the Defendants' taluk which had been recorded as not liable to enhancement in the finally published record-of-rights.

The rent of the taluk admittedly being paid at a uniform rate for upwards of 20 years immediately before the institution of the proceeding, the Defendants relied upon a presumption that arose in their favour under sec. 50, cl. (2) of the Act. The Assistant Settlement Officer held that that presumption had not been rebutted and dismissed the Plaintiff's case. The Special Judge, on appeal, being of a contrary opinion remanded the case for settling a fair and equitable rent.

Against this decision the present appeal has been preferred by the Defendants.

The learned Special Judge has observed in his judgment that the Defendants are entitled to the presumption arising under sec. 50, cl. (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the presumption afforded by the khatians was also in their favour. He, however, thought that the said presumptions were rebutted by the document (Ex. I) which had been filed on behalf of the Plaintiff and by the fact that the Defendant Kashi Chandra Chakerbarty who is said to have purchased the taluk from one Gobinda Dhupi and whose name the taluk bears did not offer himself for examination and the kobala by which the purchase was made was not produced.

The Appellants urge that the document Ex. I is not admissible in evidence, that at any rate its evidentiary value is very little as against him, that no adverse inference should have been drawn from the non-examination of Kashi Chandra Chakerbarty who was a very old man at the time of the proceedings and who is now dead, and they have put in an application praying that the kobala which they are now in a position to file may be taken as additional evidence in the case.

These contentions are opposed on behalf of the Respondents on whose behalf reliance is placed on sec. 35 of the Evidence Act and the terms of the Regulations under which the document (Ex. I) in question was prepared.

Now, the document Ex. I is a certified copy of a list which describes itself as follows:—"Paper as per details under sec. 48 of Reg. VIII of 1793 and sec. 15, cl. (8) of Reg. VII of 1799 relating to 10 annas, 13 gandas, 1 kara, 1 krant share of Perganah Amarabad, District Bhulua, dated the 15th Pous 1242 B. S. (29th December 1835)." It therefore is a certified copy of an extract from the books of the Collectorate in which the papers filed under the provisions of the aforesaid regulations used to be kept or copied. We have not been referred to any statute under which the books in question are kept. It has not been shown to us that the public servant, whoever he was, who made the entry in the books purported to state a fact in the entry in the discharge of his official duty. It does not also appear that the person who made the entry did so in the performance of a duty specially enjoined by the law. The paper therefore in my opinion does not come under sec. 35 of the Evidence Act at all. The section is based upon the circumstance that in the case of official documents entries are made in the discharge of public duty by an officer who is authorised and accredited agent appointed for the purpose. The law reposes such a confidence in public officers that it presumes they will discharge their several trusts with accuracy and fidelity. The circumstances relating to this entry do not stand these tests. It is likely that the books were kept for the information of the Collector but that does not make them binding as official records of the facts contained in them. The probative value of this document is to be assessed first of all by the application of the presumption contained in sec. 79 of the Evidence Act which would go to prove that it is a correct copy of the entry in the register of the Collectorate; then by the application of the presumption contained in sec. 114, illustration (e) of the Evidence Act it may be held that it is a correct copy of the list filed in the Collectorate. We may perhaps go further and assume that the list was, as a matter of fact, filed by the party by whom it purports to have been filed Even then it remains a statement made by a party, and its legal effect the weight to attach to it would have to be determined by the application of such tests as have to be applied to all other statements. If it is sought to be used as an admission against the party making it, its probative value is considerable. Where it is sought to be used in favour of the party who made it, it must fulfil the requirements of sec. 21, cl. (1) read with sec. 32 of the Evidence Act, or it must be relevant otherwise than as an admission. Taking it at its best it is a list filed by a zemindar, independent talukdar or an actual proprietor of land containing a record of engagements made by him with dependent talukdars who would pay revenue to Government through him. The Defendants' taluk does not find mention in this list. We may assume that the Plaintiff's predecessor had entered into engagements with all his dependent talukdars, for the Defendants do not claim to have ever paid revenue direct to Government; but still the question remains as to whether the omission of the Defendants' taluk from that list can be taken as evidence of any value to show that the taluk did not exist at the date when the list was filed. In filing the list the Plaintiff's predecessors were making a statement to which the Defendants' predecessors were not parties: it does not appear that the statement was made in the latter's presence: nor does it appear that the latter were at all interested in seeing that the taluk was entered in the list. Under the circumstances I am of opinion that the probative value attaching to the list must, if any at all, be of the slightest character, assuming that it is admissible in evidence as corroborative evidence of the Plaintiff's denial of the existence of the taluk on the date the list was filed. The Plaintiff did not produce the kobala of his purchase or his collection papers.

TARAK CHANDRA CHUCKERBUTTY v. PRASANNA KUMAR SAHA.

Then as to the inference arising from the non-examination of the Defendant Kashi Chandra Chackerburtty, I do not think the learned Special Judge was justified in the view that he took that in his old age he felt delicacy to state falsehood and so his son deposed in the case, nor again does the non-production of the kobala carry the matter any further.

In my opinion the Plaintiff has failed to rebut the presumption which arises in favour of the Defendants, and it must be given effect to. I therefore agree in the order which my learned brother has passed and reverse the judgment of the Special Judge and restore that of the Assistant Settlement Officer with costs

MOOKERJEE, J.
CHOTZNER, J.

TARAPRASONNO CHONGDAR, Plaintiff, Appellant,
v.
NRISINHA MURARI PAL and ors., Defendants, Respondents.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), Sch. II, Art. 17, suit to set aside a putni sale, whether a suit for a declaratory decree without consequential relief—Proper court-fee payable—Bengal Court Fees (Amendment) Act (IV of 1922, B. C.), deficit court-fees on suit instituted before the Act leviable under the old Act—Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), sec. 12—Appeal against order for levy of court-fees, when lies.

A suit instituted under sec. 14 of the Putni Regulation VIII of 1819 for the reversal of a putni sale and for temporary injunction and confirmation of possession, is not a suit for a declaratory decree without consequential relief, and as such cannot be instituted with the fixed court-fee payable under Art. 17 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, because the sale was not void but voidable and prayers for injunction and for confirmation of possession are prayers for consequential relief.

Ad valorem court-fees were payable under the Court Fees Act of 1870, and not under the Bengal Court Fees (Amendment) Act of 1922, where the plaint was presented before the latter Act came into force.

An appeal against the order for payment of ad valorem court-fees under the Amending Act was competent notwithstanding the provision of sec. 12 of the Court Fees Act, because this was not a case of appraisement or fixation of value with a view to determine the amount of fee chargeable, but the dispute involved root questions of principle as to the nature of the suit and the retrospective operation of statutes.

UPADHAYA THAKUR v. PERSIDH SINGH (9) and other cases referred to.

This was an appeal preferred on the 12th of August 1922 against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan (Babu Atul Chandra Banerjee), dated the 5th of May 1922.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Babu Bankim Chandra Mookerjee for the Appellant.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

MOOKERJEE, J.—This is an appeal by

(1) 18 C. L. J. 404 (1911).
(2) 6 C. L. J. 427 (1907).
(3) 7 W. R. 461 (1867).
(9) I. L. R. 23 Cal. 723 (1896).

the Plaintiff in a suit for the reversal of a sale held under the Putni Regulation of 1819. The appeal raises an important question of law, namely, whether a suit instituted under sec. 14 of Reg. VIII of 1819 for the reversal of a putni sale is a suit to obtain a declaratory decree where no consequential relief is prayed within the meaning of Art. 17 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act of 1870.

The putni in suit was brought to sale under the provisions of the Regulation on the 15th May 1919 when the third Defendant became the purchaser. He defaulted in the payment of rent, with the result that the putni was brought to sale again on the 15th May 1920 when the first two Defendants, the sons of the third Defendant, became the purchasers. The fourth Defendant is the original putnidar, and the remaining four Defendants are the zemindars. The Plaintiff, who is the darputnidar, instituted this suit on the 16th June 1920 for the reversal of the second sale held on the 15th May 1920. The sale is impeached on a variety of grounds and the plaint contains the following statement of the reliefs sought.

First, a declaration that the auction sale held under Reg. VIII of 1819 on the 15th May 1920 of the putni regarding the Mahal Kankora in suit is fit to be set aside, and that the said auction sale is void, inoperative and invalid and is not binding and effectual; and a decree accordingly and confirmation of the Plaintiff's possession thereof in darputni right; and Secondly, a temporary injunction as against Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 restraining them from obtaining or holding possession of the Mahal in suit until the disposal of the suit.

The Defendants contended that this was not a suit for declaratory decree and could not be instituted on a plaint which bore a court-fee of Rs. 10 only under Art. 17 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act. Thereupon an issue was raised to the following effect, namely, whether proper court-fees had been paid on the plaint. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that proper court-fees had not been paid and he directed that Rs. 740 be recovered from the Plaintiff as deficit court-fees. The Plaintiff failed to comply with this order, and the plaint was consequently rejected with costs.

On the present appeal, the Plaintiff has urged, first, that the suit was of the nature contemplated by Art. 17 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act and secondly, that in any view the court-fee demanded from him in the trial Court was in excess of what was properly leviable. In our opinion, the first contention must be overruled but the second must prevail.

As regards the first point, it is plain from the provisions of secs. 14 and 15 of Reg. VIII of 1819 that a suit for the reversal of a putni sale is not a suit for a declaratory relief within the meaning of Art. 17 of Sch. II of the Court Fees Act. Cl. (1) of sec. 14 provides that it shall be competent to any party, desirous of contesting the right of the zeminder to make the sale, whether on the ground of there having been no balance due, or on any other ground, to sue the zemindar, for the reversal of the same, and upon establishing a sufficient plea, to obtain a decree with full costs and damages. The purchaser shall be made a party in such suit and, upon decree passing for reversal of the sale, the Court shall be careful to indemnify him against all loss, at the charge of the zeminder or person at whose suit the sale may have been made. It is manifest that the suit thus instituted is not solely for a declaration that the sale is a nullity. It is, on the other hand, a suit for the reversal or cancellation of the sale, on the assumption that if the validity of the sale were not challenged, the sale would remain operative between the parties; Ramsona Chowdhurani v. Sonamala Chowdhurani (1). The suit further contemplates that the decree of the Court shall indemnify the purchaser against all loss at the charge of the zeminder or the person at whose instance the sale may have been made.

The plaint in the case before us leaves no room for doubt that the Plaintiff treated the sale as one which required to be reversed or cancelled, and the prayer clause embodies a prayer for confirmation of possession as also for an injunction. The reason for these prayers becomes plain when we examine the provision of sec. 15 of the Putni Regulation. The first clause of sec. 15 provides that so soon as the entire amount of the purchase money shall have been paid in by the purchaser, at any sale made under the Regulation, such purchaser shall receive from the officers conducting the sale, a certificate of such payment. The second clause then provides that when a new purchaser shall proceed to take possession of the lands of his purchase, if the late incumbent, himself, or the holders of the tenures or assignments derived from the late incumbent, and intermediate between him and the actual cultivators, shall attempt to offer opposition, or to interfere with the collections of the new purchaser, from the lands composing his purchase, the latter shall be at liberty to apply immediately to the Civil Court for the aid of the public officers in obtaining possession of his rights. There is next a provision for the issue of a proclamation declaring that the new incumbent having, by purchase at a sale for arrears of rent due to the zeminder, acquired the entire rights and privileges attaching to the tenure of the late talukdar in the state in which it was originally derived by him from the zeminder, he alone will be recognised as entitled to make the zeminderi collections in the mofussil and no payments made to any other individual will on any account be credited to the raiyats or others in any suit for rent, or on any other occasion whatever, when the same may be pleaded These provisions make it plain that when the purchaser takes full measures to obtain delivery of possession, the putnidar and the persons who have derived title from him are effectively dispossessed, for the tenants are enjoined not to pay rent either to the defaulter or to others who claim derivative title from him. We must take it that it was in view of these provisions that the Plaintiff asked for confirmation of possession and an injunction to restrain the purchaser from obtaining delivery of possession.

It has not been disputed that prayers for injunction and for confirmation of possession are prayers for consequential relief; see the cases of Umatul v. Nauji (2), Jhumak Kamti v. Debulal Singh (3) and Dina Nath Das v. Rama Nath Das (4). The view we take is also supported by the decisions in Drapu Chaudhury v. Ishan Chandra Das (5) and Mahammad Takibuddin Buddi v. The Collector of 24-Parganas (6), which are instances of suits to set aside sales for arrears of revenue; they are in no sense suits for mere declaration without consequential relief.

(1) 13 C. L. J. 404 (1911).

TARAPRASONNO CHONGDAR v. NRISINHA MURARI PAL.

The present case in our opinion illustrates the danger emphasised by Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J., in Deokuli Koer v. Kedarnath (7), where he observed that attempts are frequently made to frame suits for possession or suits for declaration with consequential reliefs, in such a way as to make them bear the appearance of suits for purely declaratory reliefs. We are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge has correctly held that the present suit was not a suit for declaration.

As regards the second point, we are of opinion that the Subordinate Judge fell into an error when he determined the amount of court-fees leviable by reference to the provisions of the Bengal Court Fees (Amendment) Act, 1922, (Act IV of 1922, B. C.), which came into operation on the 1st April 1922. The suit had been instituted on the 16th June 1920 and the amount of court-fees leviable on the plaint must be determined by a reference to the law as it stood on that date. This view receives support from the provisions of sec. 149 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. The decision in Aradhan v. Golam (8) is clearly distinguishable. In that case, a memorandum of appeal was presented to this Court without a copy of the decree. It was consequently a memorandum which could not be received, as the fundamental document was not annexed. The memorandum was accordingly returned to the Appellant. When he refiled it with the copy of the decree, not only had the period of limitation expired but, in the interval, the Stamp Act of 1867 had come into operation. In these circumstances, Mr. Justice Jackson held that the court-fee to be levied was the court-fee payable when the proper memorandum was brought into Court. In the case before us, there was a proper plaint presented on the 15th June 1920 apart from the question of court-fee payable.

The result follows that the Plaintiff is bound to pay Rs. 465 as additional court-fee due on the plaint and Rs. 735 as additional court-fee leviable on the memorandum of appeal presented to this Court. This makes an aggregate of Rs. 1,200. The Plaintiff-Appellant must deposit this amount in Court within one month from this date. If the deposit is made, the appeal will stand decreed and the suit will be remitted to the Court of first instance for trial on the merits. If the amount is not deposited, the appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

When the court-fees shall have been paid in this Court, there will be an order under sec. 13 of the Court Fees Act to enable the Appellant to obtain a refund of Rs. 755 and the usual certificate will issue.

We may add finally that this appeal is competent notwithstanding the provision of sec. 12 of the Court Fees Act. This is not a case of appraisement of or fixation of value with a view to determine the amount of fee chargeable; the dispute involves root questions of principle as to the nature of the suit and the retrospective operation of statutes: Upadhaya Thakur v. Persidh Singh (9), Studd v. Mati Mahto (10) and Prokash Chandra Sarkar v. Bishambhar Nath Sahi (11).

The Respondents are entitled to their costs in this Court in any event. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs for each set. The Respondent who undertook to prepare the paper book will be entitled to the costs incurred in that behalf from the amount deposited by the Appellant.

KHARARIA MIJAZILA ZEMINDARI SYNDICATE, LTD., Decree-holders, Petitioners.

v.

OMED SHEIKH and ors., Judgment-debtors, Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or 21, r 11 (1), sub r. (2)—Or 19, r. 2 (1)—Verification of execution petition by person other than decree-holder—Court's permission if necessary before verification—Verification if must be made in Court—Proof that verifier was acquainted with facts.

When an application for execution is signed and verified by a person other than the decree-holder, all that is necessary is that the Court should be satisfied that the person who signed the verified application is acquainted with the facts of the case. It is not necessary, under Or. 21, r. 11 (2), for the verification to be made after permission therefor has been obtained from the Court or that it should be made in the presence of the Court.

As, upon the affidavits, there was no doubt in these cases that the person who verified the applications was acquainted with the facts, there was no ground for rejecting the applications.

These were Rules issued on the 2nd March 1923 against an order of the Munsif of Perojpur (Babu Sasi Kumar Ghose), rejecting certain applications for execution on the ground of the verification of the petitions not having been properly made.

Applications for execution of number of decrees obtained against tenants were filed in the Court of the 2nd Munsif of Perojpur on behalf of the Petitioners who were a zemindari company having their registered office in Calcutta. The applications were signed and verified on 18th December 1922 by one Khettranath Ghose whose duty it was to collect the rents as they fell due from the tenants of the locality in question, to keep accounts of such dues and receipts in payment thereof, to see to the institution of suits for arrears of rent due from the tenants and to the realisation of decrees obtained in such suits by execution, and on the same day made an affidavit to furnish proof to the Court's satisfaction that he was acquainted with the facts of the several execution cases. The applications were then filed and, on the 20th December 1922, the Petitioner's pleader moved the Court by petition to accept the said affidavits of Khettranath Ghose as sufficient proof of his competence to sign and verify the petitions within the meaning of Or. 21, r. 11, sub-r. (2) of the Civil Procedure Code. The order of the Munsif passed on 21st December 1922 on one of these petitions (and similar orders were passed in the others) was as follows :—

"The decree-holders' officer verified the application for execution on 18th December 1922 but he applied for permission to do so on 20th December 1922; hence permission cannot be granted. The petition is rejected. Inform the decree-holders' pleader. Decree-holders may take steps within five days after the re-opening of the Court."

On the 6th January 1923, the decree-holders' pleader made a further application pointing out inter alia that the verification was in accordance with the law and praying that the applications for execution signed and verified as aforesaid be accepted and duly registered. Upon this petition the Court passed the following order on 9th January 1923 in one of the cases, similar order being passed in the other cases also:—

"Heard pleader. Decree-holders did not produce the person who signed the verification and only filed a petition for registering the petition for execution on the grounds stated therein. As the verification is not properly made, so the application cannot be registered. The petition is rejected and also the application for execution is rejected."

Petitioners thereupon moved the High Court and obtained these Rules.

In his explanation the learned Munsif stated that the practice of the Courts at Perojpur was that "the person intending to verify swears an affidavit and personally appears before the Court and obtains permission from the Court to verify the application and he then signs the verification in the presence of the Court." He added that, so far as he understood, r. 11, cl. (2) of Or. 21, C. P. C., also required that when the verification was to be signed by any person other than the applicant, it should be signed by him in the presence of the Court; "otherwise the Court cannot be satisfied that it is actually signed by the very person who swears the affidavit." "In the present case Khettranath Ghose did not appear before the Court at all and I was not satisfied that the verification had been actually signed by him."

Babu Nagendra Nath Ghose for the Petitioners submitted with reference to the provisions of sub-r. (2) to r. 11 of Or. 21, C. P. C., that it was not a question of the Court granting or refusing "permission." to verify, when the person who verifies is not the decree-holder. All the Court is concerned with is to see whether there is evidence to satisfy it that the person who verifies is acquainted with the facts of the case. The Code nowhere insists on the verifier attending Court to obtain permission to verify and making his verification in Court after such permission has been obtained. The verification may be made before the presentation of the petition and the Court may be satisfied about his knowledge of the facts otherwise than by a personal examination of the verifier. In fact in many instances, it may be practically impossible to produce him in all the Courts in which applications verified by him may have to be presented about the same time. Plaints verified by the same man may have to be filed on tamadi day in a number of Courts situated in different districts (cf. Or. 6, r. 15). In these cases the verifier's being acquainted with the facts was sufficiently proved by the affidavit. Or. 19, r. 2 (1), C. P. C. There was no case for insisting on the personal attendance of the deponent to support the statements he made in the affidavit. No advantage is to be gained by complicating the procedure. Or. 21, r. (1), sub-r. (2), read with Or. 19, r. 2 (1), suggests a quite simple procedure which should be followed as a rule, and there were no facts justifying a departure in these cases.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

These Rules must be made absolute. It is not necessary that the application for execution made by a person other than the decree-holder under Or. 21, r.

KHARARIA MIJAZILLA ZEMINDERI SYNDICATE, LTD. v. OMED SHEIKH.

11 (2) should be verified after the application for permission has been made; nor is it necessary that the verification should be made in the presence of the Court. All that is necessary is that the Court should be satisfied that the person who signed the verified application is acquainted with the facts of the case. In the present case there can be no doubt that the person who signed this application was acquainted with the facts of the case and there was no ground for rejecting the application.

We accordingly set aside the order of the lower Court rejecting these applications and direct that he do admit them and do proceed according to law.

This order will govern Civil Revision Nos. 143 to 146 of 1923.

We make no order as to costs in these Rules.

Let all records be sent down at once.

[APPEAL FROM THE CHIEF COURT OF THE PUNJAB.]

VISCOUNT FINLAY.	SETH KANHAYA LAL,
LORD DUNEDIN.	since deceased (now

SIR JOHN EDGE.	Hanuman Parshad
MR. AMEER ALI.	and anr.), Appellants,
1923,	v.
Heard, 27, February, 1, 2, 5 and 22, March.	THE NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED,
Judgment, 23, April.	DELHI, Respondents.

Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872), sec. 72—Money paid under coercion, suit to recover—Equitable defences, if available—English mortgage by Limited Company in favour of trustee for debenture-holders with power of sale—Power of sale, if valid—Purchase at sale by debenture-holder, if in breach of fiduciary obligation—Reason of the rule, identity of buyer and seller—Registration Act (III of 1877), secs. 33, 34, 35, 87—Presumption that document purporting to be presented for registration under special power of attorney was duly registered and document duly executed.

In a suit to enforce a statutory right given by sec. 72 of the Contract Act to recover money paid under coercion, no defences arising otherwise than from the actual circumstances which enforced the payment, and which bear only upon the relation of the parties inter se, are available, the English authorities from MOSES v. MCFARLANE (1) downwards not being applicable to the matter.

A limited Company issued debentures and secured them by a mortgage in the English form in favour of trustees for the debenture-holders with the power of sale, sec. 69 of the Transfer of Property Act being found not to govern this particular transaction:

Held—That the reasoning in BHUWANEE CHURN v. JOY KISHUN (2) and KESHAVRAV KRISHNA v. BHABANJI BABAJI (3) (besides that they did not deal with mortgages in English form) did not apply to the case of a limited company issuing debentures and securing the debentures by a mortgage in favour of trustees with power of sale.

The trustee for the debenture-holders exercises such power of sale not only on behalf of the debenture-holders but also on behalf of the Company, and a purchase at such a sale of the mortgaged property by a holder of the debentures is not invalid, this not being a case where the interest of the seller to get the highest price and of the buyer to get the lowest is centred in the same person, the prohibition of law being against the merging of the two positions.

SETH KANHAYA LAL v. THE NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, LIMITED, DELHI.

Where the endorsement on the deed as registered stated that the person who presented the document for registration had a special power of attorney authorising him to do so, it must be presumed that the power of attorney was a proper power under sec. 33 of the Registration Act.

Sec. 34 of the Registration Act imposes upon the registering officer the duty of enquiring as to the due execution of the document, and by sec. 35, he registers the document on being satisfied as to the various particulars mentioned, so that when the question of execution is raised the presumption from registration of omnia presumnutur rite et solemniter acta applies, and further all defects in his procedure are expressly cured by sec. 87 of the Act.

This was an appeal against a judgment and decree dated the 15th January 1919 of the Chief Court of the Punjab reversing a judgment and decree dated the 15th December 1915 of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Class, at Delhi.

The suit in which the said decrees were passed was brought by Seth Kanhaya Lal, the Plaintiff-Appellant, against the National Bank of India, Limited, Delhi, the Defendants-Respondents, to recover from the latter a sum of Rs. 83,005, together with Rs. 27-8-3 as interest thereon. On the 15th August 1902 the Defendant Bank which had obtained a decree against the Delhi Cotton Mills Company Limited obtained an attachment against certain mills at Sabzi Mandi and on the 20th August 1902 took possession of them to obtain satisfaction for a sum of Rs. 83,005, the balance then unpaid under such decree. It was found by both Courts in India that the Defendant Bank was aware that at a public auction sale held on the 25th June 1902 the Plaintiff-Appellant had purchased the property attached free of all encumbrances and was on all material dates the proprietor thereof. On thus being ousted from his property the Plaintiff-Appellant paid on the 27th August 1902 under protest the said sum of Rs. 83,005 to the Bank and on the following day brought the present suit against it. The Subordinate Judge decreed the suit but on appeal the Chief Court reversed that decree and dismissed the suit with costs holding that the Plaintiff-Appellant was in a fiduciary position to the Bank within the meaning of sec. 88 of the Indian Trusts Act No. II of 1882 and consequently was not "entitled to a refund of the money which he had paid under protest."

The history of this litigation may be stated as follows:—On the 13th January 1891 the Delhi Cotton Mills Company Limited (hereinafter referred to as "the Mill Company") issued debentures for Rs. 200,000 bearing interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum. The debentures were redeemable on the 15th January 1901. The debenture-holders were entitled pari passu to the benefit of and subject to the provisions contained in an indenture of the same date made between the Mill Company of the one part and John Alexander Anderson and two others as trustees of the other part, whereby certain properties of the Mill Company were vested in the trustees for securing the payment of the principal moneys and interest payable by virtue of the debentures and the performance of the stipulations and conditions therein contained. By the said deed of indenture the Mill Company conveyed to the said trustees "all and singular the piece or parcel of land hereditaments and premises Cotton Mills and works machinery engines apparatus chattels and effects (with the exceptions hereinafter mentioned) described and referred to in the first schedule hereto" (which were therein called "the mortgaged premises") on the usual trusts to be found in favour of trustees for debenture-holders. One of the conditions was that if "an execution or attachment be issued out upon or against any of the property of the Company," the trustees were especially and fully empowered to enter upon and take possession of the mortgaged premises and to sell and convert the same at their discretion for the benefit of the debenture-holders. The deed also empowered the trustees to delegate by a general or special power of attorney or otherwise all or any of their powers.

On the 21st March 1891 the Mill Company entered into an agreement with the Defendant-Respondent Bank for a credit for current expenses up to a limit of Rs. 200,000 and as security the Bank was given "a lien and charge on all manufactured goods and on all raw materials now or at any time hereafter belonging to the Company upon their premises at Delhi." It was also provided that the Mill Company should keep manufactured goods and raw materials sufficient to cover the advances made by the Bank and that in case such goods and materials were insufficient to cover such advances the Bank should have a right to take possession of them and dispose of the same by private sale or public auction. The agreement was for a period of one year, but the parties thereto appeared to have acted as if it had not been so limited. By another similar agreement made on the 6th March 1900 between the said parties the cash credit given by the Bank was increased by an additional Rs. 100,000. On or about the 30th June 1900 the Bank took possession of and subsequently sold the manufactured goods and raw materials on the premises of the Mill Company on the allegation that the latter had committed a breach of contract by not keeping such goods and materials in sufficient quantities to cover the amount due to the Bank. After the said sale a sum of Rs. 78,670-8-11 was still owing to the Bank.

Owing to the action of the Bank the Mill Company found itself in very great financial difficulties, and its directors therefore made arrangements with the Plaintiff-Appellant, Seth Kanhaya Lal, who was the proprietor of the firm of Magni Ram Jai Narain, to obtain financial assistance. On 20th August 1900 the Mill Company and the Plaintiff-Appellant entered into an agreement which recited that the former was indebted to various persons on debentures, hundis, cash advance and otherwise to the extent of about Rs. 475,000 and was in need of a further sum of about Rs. 225,000 for working expenses, that the Plaintiff-Appellant had already advanced Rs 250,000 and had agreed to advance or get advanced a further sum of Rs. 2,25,000 for the liquidation of its debts and also to provide or procure for its working expenses a sum of not exceeding Rs. 225,000 on the terms and conditions thereinafter mentioned. By this agreement the Mill Company gave the Plaintiff-Appellant a second mortgage on its property already charged in favour of the holders of the debentures of 1891 as security for the sum of Rs. 250,000 already advanced by him and interest thereon. It was also thereby agreed that on the Plaintiff-Appellant making or procuring another advance of Rs. 225,000 the Mill Company should execute a first mortgage on the same properties in favour of persons advancing the same, and that on the Plaintiff-Appellant making or procuring a further advance for working expenses and for the purchase of cotton and other goods and stores the Mill Company should execute in favour of persons making the advance a mortgage bond mortgaging all the raw materials, stores and manufactured goods on the usual terms and conditions, and more especially on the terms and conditions contained in the agreement dated the 12th March 1891 and made between the Mill Company and the Bank. The Plaintiff-Appellant was appointed as the managing agent of the Mill Company on the terms and conditions stated in the agreement.

On the 2nd November 1900 the Mill Company executed a deed in favour of the Plaintiff-Appellant hypothecating, as security for Rs. 225,000 to be advanced for working expenses as and when required and interest thereon, the then existing and thereafter acquired raw materials, stores, manufactured goods, and also providing that "in case all such properties not being sufficient to repay such advances and interest" the unrealised balance should form a charge on the property already mortgaged by the deed of 20th August 1900.

On the 19th December 1900 the Bank brought a suit against the Mill Company in the Court of the District Judge, Delhi, for the balance due to it and for a declaration "for a lien on all the Defendant's raw materials and manufactured goods until the Plaintiff's claim was fully satisfied." The Mill Company contested the Bank's claim for the declaration on the ground inter alia that "the Bank's security did not extend to the raw materials supplied by a third party over which the latter will have a lien under law in all circumstances."

Early in April 1901 the Plaintiff-Appellant advanced to the Mill Company a further sum of Rs. 225,000 which was applied to discharge the principal and interest due under the debentures of 1891. On 6th April 1901 the Mill Company issued fresh debentures to the Plaintiff-Appellant on the same security for the principal sum advanced and interest thereon, and also executed a fresh trust deed in favour of new trustees, Lachhman Das and Rukma Nand, containing identically the same terms and conditions as those in the trust deed of 1891.

On the 2nd August 1901 the District Judge dismissed the Bank's suit against the Mill Company, but on appeal the Chief Court of the Punjab on the 21st April 1902 decreed its suit and declared that the Bank had a lien on all the raw materials and manufactured goods of the Mill Company until the satisfaction of the decree. On the 16th May 1902 the Bank applied for the execution of the decree by attachment of the Mill Company's movables and premises and factory. But the District Judge passed an order on the same day "that warrant for attachment of the movable property be duly issued for the 6th June 1902." On the 17th May 1902 warrant of attachment of the movable property in possession of the Mill Company was duly issued and the Bailiff of the Court executed the warrant the following day (i.e., 18th May 1902) by attaching certain movables mentioned in his report. The next morning, that is, on 19th May 1902, Mr. Clarence Kirkpatrick, a barrister-at-law and an advocate of the Chief Court of the Punjab, acting under a Power-of-Attorney executed in his favour by the trustees of the deed of the 6th April 1901 entered upon and on their behalf took possession of the property comprised in that deed and informed the Bank in writing of his action. On the same day the Mill Company and the Plaintiff-Appellant objected to the attachment and the District Judge made an order setting aside the attachment. On the 31st May 1902 the District Judge affirmed the last-mentioned order. The Bank then appealed to the Chief Court and on the 20th June 1902 that Court passed an interim order prohibiting the Mill Company and the present Plaintiff-Appellant "from dealing in any way with the property attached to the Bailiff on or about the 18th May," and directing the District Judge to warn the said trustees that pending further orders they should take no steps in regard to the property attached.

Both Courts in India concurrently found that the mill premises and machinery of which the said trustees took possession on the 19th May 1902 was not attached on the previous day and that they did not take possession of anything that was under attachment or on which the Bank had a lien by virtue of the declaration made in its favour and against the Mill Company on the 21st April 1902. After advertising in the leading newspapers of India the properties of which the trustees had taken possession were put up for sale at a public auction held on the 25th June 1902 in the presence of the then manager of the Bank and many others, and the same was sold to and purchased for Rs. 5,02,000 by the Plaintiff-Appellant, who was the highest bidder. On 30th June 1902 the Mill Company executed in favour of the Plaintiff-Appellant a registered deed of conveyance in respect of the properties sold to him. Both Courts in India have found that the trustees sold the said properties in the exercise of the powers conferred on them by the trust deed of the 6th April 1901, that they sold what they were entitled to sell, that the sale admittedly realised a good price, that it was regular in all respects and could not be impeached in any way, and that it was a good sale whereby the Plaintiff-Appellant became proprietor to the knowledge of the Bank of the premises and mills at Sabzi Mandi. The sale proceeds were applied to payment of what was due under the debentures (Rs. 22[illegible]9 and odd) what was due on the second mortgage of the 20th August 1900 (Rs. 25[illegible]1) and the expenses of the sale (Rs. [illegible]0,000). After these payments were made there was left a balance of Rs. 10,849 odd annas which amount was deposited in Court and the Bank attached it and realized thereof Rs. 9,999 6-0 towards part satisfaction of its decree against the Mill Company. No portion of the sale proceeds was applied towards any satisfaction of the debt due to the Plaintiff-Appellant under the agreement of 2nd November 1900.

In the Bank's appeal in the proceedings in execution of its decree against the Mill Company the Chief Court delivered judgment on the 4th August 1902 dismissing the appeal against the Plaintiff-Appellant, but allowing it against the Mill Company, setting aside the orders of the District Judge, dated the 19th and 31st May 1902 respectively and directing the District Judge to proceed according to law on the basis of the attachment of 18th May 1902. On 15th August 1902 the Bank applied for execution of its decree against the Mill Company "by attachment of the premises of the Company" and the District Judge accordingly made an order to issue an attachment warrant. It was duly issued and on the 20th August 1902 the mill property already purchased by and conveyed to the Plaintiff-Appellant was attached. On the 27th August 1902 the Plaintiff-Appellant petitioned the Court stating that the properties attached were his and did not belong to the Mill Company tendering under protest the amount still due to the Bank under its decree against the Mill Company and praying for the release of the property attached. On the same day the District Judge passed an order that the amount tendered be received and paid over to the Bank, which passed a receipt for Rs. 83,000 in favour of the District Judge. The following day a balance of Rs. 5 still due was paid and the Court passed an order releasing the said properties from attachment.

On the 28th August 1902 the Plaintiff-Appellant brought the suit giving rise to this appeal against the Bank in the Court of the District Judge, Delhi. In his plaint the Plaintiff alleged that he was then and had been since the 25th June 1902 to the knowledge of the Bank the sole proprietor of the premises, buildings and the mills situate at Sabzi Mandi and therein described, that on the 15th August 1902 the Bank in execution of its decree against the Mill Company applied for the attachment of such property wrongfully stating that it was the property of the Mill Company and obtained on the 18th August 1902 a warrant of attachment, that on the 20th August 1902 the Bank wrongfully and illegally attached and took possession of the said property, and consequently the Plaintiff was compelled to pay and on the 27th August 1902 paid to the Bank Rs. 83,005, the balance then unpaid under its decree, and that he was entitled to recover that amount together with interest for one day amounting to Rs. 27-8-3. The Plaintiff therefore prayed for a decree for Rs. 83,032-8-3 with interest at 12 per cent. per annum from the date of the suit until realisation. The Plaintiff also made certain allegations and claimed Rs. 10,000 as damages, but he subsequently withdrew the claim for damages.

The Bank filed a written statement pleading that the suit as framed would not lie and that the plaint did not disclose any coercion in respect of the said payment within the meaning of sec. 72 of the Indian Contract Act. The Bank denied that the Plaintiff was the proprietor of the said property or that he was such proprietor to its knowledge.

On those pleadings the District Judge framed five preliminary issues and on the 18th November 1902 he gave judgment to the effect that the payment made by the Plaintiff was voluntary and not under compulsion and consequently so far as the recovery of the money was concerned the plaint disclosed no cause of action. He therefore dismissed with costs the claim for the recovery of the money and directed that the action should proceed on the question of damages for illegal attachment. He then recorded the statements made by the parties and framed further issues. But the Plaintiff having unsuccessfully applied for the drawing up of an order embodying his said decision, decided not to proceed with that part of the case which related to damages and consequently did not appear on the further hearing whereupon the District Judge passed a decree on the 26th May 1903 dismissing the whole case for default under sec. 102 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882. The Plaintiff appealed to the Chief Court of the Punjab against that decree and on the 27th March 1907 that Court passed a decree dismissing the appeal on the ground that no appeal lay against an order dismissing a suit under the said sec. 102. From that decision the Plaintiff appealed to His Majesty in Council and on the 9th March 1910 their Lordships of the Privy Council delivered judgment holding that the order of the 18th November 1902 was a final decision on the case as to the recovery of the money paid and that therefore it was not competent to the District Judge to dismiss that part of the case under the powers of sec. 102, and that the case should be remitted to the Chief Court in order that the appeal to that Court, so far as it related to the recovery of the money paid, might be heard and decided on its merits. The case then went back to the Chief Court and on the 27th January 1911 that Court delivered judgment in favour of the Bank holding that the payment made by the Plaintiff-Appellant was not made under compulsion and passed a decree dismissing the appeal with costs. Thereupon the Plaintiff again appealed to His Majesty in Council and on the 25th February 1913 their Lordships of the Privy Council delivered judgment in favour of the Plaintiff holding that as the case then stood their decision must be based on the assumption that the allegations in the plaint were true in fact, that a wrongful interference with the Plaintiff's lawful enjoyment of his own property was alleged, that the Plaintiff was clearly entitled to rid himself of that unlawful interference by any lawful means without thereby affecting his right to hold the Bank liable for that which it had thus caused him to do, that the Plaintiff was unquestionably entitled to demand a repayment of the amount paid by him under protest, because it was an involuntary payment produced by coercion, viz., the wrongful interference of the Bank, with his full and free enjoyment of his own property, and that the case should be remitted to the Chief Court in order that the case might be sent to the District Judge to hear and determine.

The case then went back to the District Judge, who erroneously granted the Bank's application to permit it to put in fresh pleas. He was of opinion that though it was doubtful whether the Bank was entitled to put in fresh pleas at that stage of the case, it would be advisable in order to avoid a further remand to permit the Bank to do so provided that the fresh pleas were not inconsistent with the pleas raised in its written statement. Thereupon the Bank pleaded that the agreement between the Plaintiff and the Mill Company, dated 20th August 1900, was a good agreement whereby the Plaintiff undertook to pay the debts of the Mill Company, that it was the Plaintiff's duty, as the managing agent of the Mill Company to discharge its decree against the latter but the Plaintiff took advantage of one of the provisions of the said trust deed to defeat the Bank's decree, and acting through persons who were in reality his agents, though acting for the trustees, succeeded in getting possession of the property of the Mill Company, that it would be inequitable "to allow the Plaintiff to take advantage of his trickery and fraud" and to recover from the Bank a sum of money which he was bound in law and equity to pay to the Bank under the said agreement of the 20th August 1900, that the power of attorney executed in favour of Mr. Kirkpatrick was not duly registered and consequently the action taken by him and the trustees had no legal validity, that the Plaintiff had no good title to the property in question, that the sale to the Plaintiff was irregular and that Plaintiff was not entitled to interest and costs.

The Plaintiff in reply denied all allegations of trickery and fraud, disputed the Bank's construction of the agreement of the 20th August 1900, and contended that the Bank having received the balance of the sale proceeds was estopped from challenging the sale and questioning the Plaintiff's title.

The District Judge framed further issues. There were altogether 26 issues, of which five were disposed of as preliminary issues, and five more which related to the claim for damages are not now material. The issues now made were as follows:—

(6) Has Plaintiff since the 25th June 1902 been proprietor of the property or any part of it mentioned in para. 1 of the plaint, and if so, under what circumstances did he become so?

(7) Was a portion of the purchase money still unpaid on the date of attachment?

(8) If issue No. 6 be found in the affirmative, was he so to the knowledge of Defendant, and is Defendant estopped from denying Plaintiff's title?

(9) Was the said property owned by the Delhi Cotton Mills, Limited, on and after that date or liable to attachment at the instance of the Defendant?

(10) Did the Defendant on that date know that the said company had no right, title or interest thereon?

(11) Did the Defendant on the 15th August 1902 wrongfully state that the said property belonged to the Delhi Cotton Mills, Limited and thereon obtain an order for attachment thereof?

(12) Was any, and if so, what immovable property of the Delhi Cotton Mills attached on the 16th or 18th May 1902, i.e., before the alleged title of the Plaintiff arose, and if so, what was the effect of that attachment?

(18) Was the sale in the Plaintiff's favour authorised?

(19) Do the facts mentioned by the Defendant in the further pleas amount to fraud in law or collusion?

(20) Is the plea of fraud inconsistent with the previous pleas, and is the Defendant debarred from raising it on that ground?

(21) Is the sale made to Plaintiff void on account of fraud or collusion alleged by Defendant in additional pleas?

(22) Was the Plaintiff bound to discharge the decree of the Defendant Bank under the agreement of 20th August 1900?

(23) Was the attachment of May 1902 a good attachment, and if so, was the Plaintiff's purchase of the property mentioned in para. 1 of the plaint subject so such attachment?

(24) Is the Defendant Bank estopped from denying Plaintiff's title to the property?

(26) In the event of Plaintiff obtaining a decree, ought he to be awarded interest or costs?

The suit was tried by the Subordinate Judge, 1st class, Delhi, who delivered judgment in favour of the Plaintiff on the 15th December 1915. He held that the trustees had power under the deed executed in their favour by the Mill Company to enter upon its premises and to take possession of the same and the factory, that there was nothing wrong in the action of Mr. Kirkpatrick in taking possession of the mills when the attachment of the 16th May 1902 was issued, that the power of attorney executed in his favour was validly registered and in any case its registration was not compulsory, that the attachment made on the 18th May 1902 only affected movable property and the immovable property was not then put under attachment, that when the sale took place on the 25th June 1902 the property then sold to the Plaintiff was not under any attachment, that the Plaintiff had proved payment of full consideration and on the 25th June 1902 became and since then had been the proprietor of the plaint property, that all proceedings in connection with the sale were taken with the full knowledge of the Bank and on the 26th June 1902 the Bank knew that the property had passed away from the hands of the Mill Company and that the Mill Company had no right, title or interest therein and consequently it was not capable of being thereafter attached in August 1902, that no property attached on 18th May 1902 was sold to the Plaintiff on the 25th June 1902, that the sale was fully authorised, that the plea of fraud was "purely an after-thought of the Defendant and a mere make-shift made after a lapse of twelve years," that the Bank had failed to establish any fraud, that the agreement of 20th August 1900 did not throw any duty on the Plaintiff to discharge any debt of the Mill Company and he was not thereby bound to pay the Mill Company's debt due to the Bank, that though the Plaintiff was the managing agent of the Mill Company he was also their debenture-holder and secured creditor and in what he did he was acting within his rights, that no exception could be taken with respect to the sale, which was bonâ fide and legal, that the Bank having received the balance of the sale proceeds was estopped from questioning its validity and that the Plaintiff had "succeeded by virtue of his own right" and had "done nothing that was illegal or wrong for him to do." In the result the learned Subordinate Judge ordered that the Plaintiff was entitled to recover from the Bank Rs. 83,032-8-3 with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of suit until realisation on Rs. 83,005 and costs. A decree, dated the 15th December 1915, was accordingly drawn up.

Against the said decree of the Subordinate Judge the Defendant Bank appealed to the Chief Court of the Punjab and the Plaintiff filed cross-objections praying for a higher rate of interest. On the 15th January 1919 that Court delivered judgment in favour of the Bank and passed a decree allowing the Bank's appeal, dismissing the Plaintiff's cross-objections, setting aside the decree appealed from, and dismissing the Plaintiff's suit with costs in both Courts. In this Court the Bank relied upon only some of the points urged before the lower Court. The learned Judges who heard the appeal upheld the sale of the 25th June 1902, holding that at the time of the sale the immovable property of the Mill Company was not under any attachment and none of the movables attached on the 18th May 1902 were included in the property sold to the Plaintiff, that the terms of the trust deed itself were clear, that on the issue of any execution or attachment the trustees were empowered to enter upon and take possession of the premises and sell or convert into money the same, that the intended sale was widely advertised and a specially favourable price was obtained thereat, that the Plaintiff, though a mortgagee, debenture-holder and managing agent of the Mill Company, was legally entitled to bid for and buy the property, that the fact that the trustees were close connections of the Plaintiff and ready to follow obediently his behest did not invalidate the legality of the sale, that there was no doubt that the proceedings of Mr. Kirkpatrick were honest throughout, and that no objections could be taken on his part in conducting the sale, and the sale must be upheld. But they said that "the real question arising in the case appears to us to be whether considering the circumstances in which Kanhaya Lal (the Plaintiff) obtained a financial hold over the Company, and thereby secured his own advances thereto, and eventually made irrecoverable the decree of the Bank, he is equitably entitled to demand a refund of the money which he paid under protest." After reciting various circumstances, the learned Judges held that the principles of sec. 88 of the Indian Trusts Act No. II of 1882 applied to the actions of the Plaintiff and that he was not entitled in equity to any relief."

Against the said decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab the Plaintiff has appealed in the ordinary way to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and L. M. Parikh for the Appellants.—The suit was to recover money paid under coercion. In 1913 the Privy Council held that the Plaintiff (whose representatives are now Appellants) was entitled to the return of his money provided he could show that the mills were his property at the time of the attachment and the case was remanded on this issue. The Subordinate Judge has decided in the Plaintiff's favour, and the Chief Court have reversed that decision on the ground that it was not equitable for the money to be paid back.

The latter decision is erroneous, for the Privy Council have already decided that the Plaintiff has a good cause of action under sec. 72 of the Indian Contract Act

The Plaintiff obtained the money by taking advantage of his dual position and if he sold as manager he ought to have paid the money to the Bank. In equity he has no right to recover in his personal capacity.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. in reply.—This was not a sale by a mortgagee but a sale by a trustee for the debenture-holders under a power contained in the trust deed. The law in India is the same as the law in England with regard to companies and the trust deed was not a mortgage within the Transfer of Property Act.

Here there were different legal entities and the case is distinguishable from the decisions referred to in Waghela Rajsanji v. Masludin (20).

The objection to the registration has not been taken in the pleadings nor in the Respondents' case and cannot now be raised.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DUNEDIN.—The present action is to recover a sum of Rs. 83,005 with interest, being a sum paid, as alleged, under coercion and as such recoverable under sec. 72 of the Contract Act. In order to make the matter intelligible it is necessary to give the history of the various transactions which have given rise to the claim.

A limited company called The Delhi Mills Cotton Company was established before 1891 and carried on business. In January 1891, it issued debentures to the extent of two lacs of rupees in favour of a Mr. Anderson and others. The debentures were secured by a mortgage of immoveable property of the company. Later in the same year the company arranged for a cash credit with the Respondents—the National Bank of India—to the extent of two lacs. By a supplementary agreement of the 6th March 1900, this was increased to three lacs. In security of the sums to be advanced under the cash credit, the company gave the bank a lien on all manufactured goods and on all raw materials hereafter belonging to the company. The company came to owe the bank large sums, and on the 30th June 1900, the Respondents put in force their lien and sold off the manufactured goods and stock of raw material of the company. After realisation of the effects sold, the company still owed Rs. 78,000 odd. The company being in need of money to continue business applied to the Appellant, and on the 21st August 1900, entered into an agreement with him. In terms of this agreement the Appellant advanced to the company three separate sums of Rs. 2,25,000 each, the first sums to be applied in paying off the debentures issued in favour of Mr. Anderson and others; the other sums were to be used for the payment of debts and the provision of working capital. By the agreement, the company further agreed to give a mortgage on its whole immoveable property and also to give a lien for its stock and raw material in the same manner as it had given lien to the Respondents. By another term of the agreement the Appellant was made managing agent of the company and given full and exclusive power as to the management of its business with certain provisions as to his remuneration. The Appellant advanced the money, entered upon the management, and continued the business. He paid up the earlier debentures and a new mortgage was granted in favour of certain persons—Lachhman Das and Rukma Nand—who were to act as trustees for the debentures which were now held by the Appellant. The provisions of this mortgage were the same as the provisions in the original mortgage to Mr. Anderson and others; and allowed the mortgagees, if any attachment was put in force against the company's immovable property, to enter into possession and effect a sale. On the 20th December 1900, the Respondents raised an action against the company for the sum of Rs. 79,000 odd still due to them. This action was unsuccessful before the first Judge, but on appeal judgment was given as craved, and on the 21st April 1902, it was declared that the bank had a lien on raw material and manufactured goods. On the 16th May 1902, an application was made for attachment of all the property—both movable and immovable—of the company. On the same day an order for an attachment was made, but the order only referred to attachment of the movable property. Certain of the goods of the company were, on the 18th May, attached in virtue of this order. An objection was taken on the 19th May, and the attachment was set aside on the same day. A Mr. Clarence Kirkpatrick, who had obtained a power of attorney from Lachhman Das and Rukma Nand, entered into possession of the immovable property in virtue of the mortgage. Notwithstanding the order of the 19th May, the Respondents brought up the matter again and asked that the movables attached should be sold. On the 31st May, the District Judge refused to give any such order in respect of his previous order of the 19th May. Appeal was taken against this, and on the 20th June the Chief Court set aside the orders of the 19th and the 31st May, and an interlocutory order was pronounced against the company dealing with the articles attached and a warning issued against the trustees (who had entered into possession of the premises) from interfering with the articles attached. On the 25th June, Mr. Clarence Kirkpatrick, after all due advertisement, exposed the mills for sale and they were, on that date, bought by the Appellant for Rs. 502,000. After deducting the expenses and paying the sum due to the Appellant as debenture-holder and as mortgagee there remained a sum of Rs. 10,000 odd which was sent by cheque to the company. This cheque was attached by the Respondents and paid to them.

The proceedings as to the attachment came up for final disposal on the 4th August, when the District Judge was directed to proceed on the basis of the attachment of the 18th May. Inasmuch, however, as the attachment was admittedly only of movable property, the Respondents on the 15th August put in a further application for attachment of the premises. Following up this the mills themselves were attached on the 20th August. On the 27th August the Appellant, who, in virtue of the sale, had become the owner of the mills, put in a petition for removal of the attachment on the ground that it was his own property which was being attached for a debt of the company. To remove the attachment he paid the debt under protest. The next day he raised the present suit to recover the money so paid under coercion in terms of sec. 72 of the Contract Act. There was originally added a claim for damages. The suit has had a most unfortunate history and been protracted for a very long period, different claims having been already twice before the Board. What happened may be best stated in the words of Lord Moulton in the judgment of the Board upon the second appeal :—

"In his plaint the Plaintiff states that he was the sole proprietor of such mills and of their contents . On thus being ousted from his property he took the course of paying under protest the sum claimed Having thus freed his property from the attachment, he at once brought the present action claiming a return of the money so paid and damages for the alleged illegal acts of the Defendants.

In reply to the above plaint, the Respondent bank filed certain preliminary pleas relating to the claim for the return of the money paid under protest of which it is only necessary to cite the first, which was that 'the suit as framed will not lie.' It is admitted that the plea is in substance identical with the more usual form of plea, viz., that the plaint discloses no cause of action.

The District Judge no doubt with the laudable intention of shortening the proceedings and thereby lessening the costs, heard an argument on these preliminary pleas before requiring anything further to be done by the Defendants, and on the 18th November 1902, he gave judgment to the effect that so far as the recovery of the money was concerned, the plaint disclosed no cause of action. He therefore dismissed with costs the claim for the recovery of the money and directed that the action should proceed on the question of damages for illegal attachment. The Plaintiff, having, in vain, applied for the drawing up of an order embodying this decision, decided not to proceed with that part of the case which related to damages and consequently did not appear on the further hearing, whereupon the District Judge dismissed the whole case for default under sec. 102 of the Civil Procedure Act. The Plaintiff appealed to the Chief Court against this decision, and that Court dismissed the appeal on the ground that no appeal lay against an order dismissing a suit under sec. 102. From this decision the Plaintiff appealed to His Majesty in Council, and their Lordships held that the order of the 18th November 1902, was a final decision on the case as to the recovery of the money paid and that therefore it was not competent to the Judge to dismiss that part of the case under the powers of sec. 102. They therefore remitted the case to the Chief Court in order that the appeal to that Court, so far as it related to the recovery of the money paid, might be heard and decided on its merits."

Their Lordships go on to find that the payment under the circumstances described was a payment under coercion and remitted the case that the defences, other than that rested on the words of the statute, might be disposed of.

The Subordinate Judge gave judgment in favour of the Appellant, but on appeal that judgment was reversed and the suit dismissed, and it is from that judgment that the present appeal lies. The judgment of the Appeal Court proceeded on one ground alone—namely, that on consideration of the whole circumstances it was not equitable that the money should be paid back. That view was supported before their Lordships by a very lengthy and careful argument examining all the English decisions, from Moses v. McFarlane (1) downwards, as to what defences were available to the action for money had and received. In their Lordships' opinion all these authorities are beside the question. The right here sought to be enforced is a statutory right expressed in terms of sec. 72 of the Contract Act, and this Board has already held that the circumstances gave rise to that statutory right. To append a consideration (as the Court of Appeal has done) of the relation of parties inter se—apart from the actual circumstances which enforced the payment—is simply to allow counter-claim under another name, and counter-claim in the Punjab is not admissible.

While this disposes of the ground on which the Appellate Court reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge it does not dispose of all the grounds of defence The Respondents assert that the mills did not belong to the Appellant, and if that were so then necessarily the Appellant could not complain of the attachment. As regards the sale itself there is no ground of challenge. Mr. Kirkpatrick was duly authorised by the deed under which he acted, due notice was given of the sale and no fault is found with the procedure at the sale itself. The Respondents attack the sale on other grounds. First they say that it is not possible in India to put a clause into a mortgage deed allowing of sale except through the medium of the Court, and second, they say as the Appellant was the debenture-holder in whose interests the sale was brought on, he was incapable of purchasing. As to the first point, there is no positive enactment prohibiting such a stipulation being annexed to a mortgage, for sec. 69 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply, the Act not having been extended, at least at the time of these transactions, to the Punjab Their Lordships' attention was, however, directed to the cases of Bhuwanee Churn v. Joy Kishun (2) and Keshavrav Krishna v. Bhabanji Babaji (3). Their Lordships do not question these authorities, but they consider they have no application to the case of a limited company issuing debentures and securing the debentures by charge in favour of trustees with the into poss of sale. The whole reasoning in virtue to the judgments cited was the standing necessity of protecting persons who from their circumstances needed protection entering into transactions of loan, and the class of mortgages there dealt with did not include mortgages in the English form. To say that a limited company—a creature of statute—requires protection or that the trustees for the debenture-holders are the persons who might take advantage of the scanty knowledge of the mortgaging company—the kind of argument which led to the decision in those cases and which was applicable in terms to transactions between the persons aforesaid—is really to consider the situation in a light almost absurd.

As regards the second point, there are numberless authorities to the effect that when anyone is in a fiduciary position he cannot sell to himself. Thus an ordinary trustee cannot buy trust property nor can an official appointed to conduct a sale for creditors be himself the purchaser. See York Buildings Company v. McKenzie (4). But no such position arose here. Mr. Kirkpatrick, who was the seller, sold not on behalf of the debenture-holder alone but on behalf of the company. It was his duty and interest to secure as high a price as possible so that the balance—after meeting secured debts—should go to the company. Such a balance was in fact received. The fact, therefore, that the buyer was himself a holder of the debentures became irrelevant. There was no merging of the two positions which is what is prohibited—namely, that the interest of the seller to get the highest price and of the buyer to get the lowest price, is centred in the same person. This point accordingly fails. The only remaining point was this—the Respondents urged that the conveyance in favour of the Appellant was bad because the registration was not in order in respect that the registration does not bear that a proper power of attorney was possessed by the person asking for the registration and in respect that it does not afford proper evidence of the execution by Lachhman Das—one of the signatories to the deed of transfer.

These points were admittedly not taken before the Courts below and their Lordships would be slow to admit their validity in such circumstances. But further they think they are unsustainable on their merits. The deed was presented by Mr. Kirkpatrick and the endorsement of the deed as registered bears that he held a special power of attorney authorising him to appear. It must therefore be presumed that the power of attorney was a proper power under the terms of sec. 33 of the Registration Act.

Then as regards the execution of Lachhman Das—a witness was examined who deponed to the fact. Now, by sec. 34, the duty of enquiring as to execution is put upon the registering officer, and by sec. 35 it is provided that if he is satisfied as to various particulars he shall register the documents. Here again, the presumption from registration of omnia presumuntur rite et solemniter acta would apply; but the matter is finally set at rest by sec. 87, which provides that "nothing done in good faith pursuant to the Act by any registering officer shall be deemed invalid merely by reason of any defect in his appointment or procedure."

Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, the decree of the Chief Court set aside with costs and the decree of the Subordinate Court restored.

The Respondents will pay the costs of the appeal.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 109—Suit under sec. 106 withdrawn with liberty to sue again—Suit for same relief if lies in Civil Court.

The landlord who had instituted a suit under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for the correction of an entry in the record-of-rights as to the status of his tenant withdrew it with liberty to institute a fresh suit if not barred. He did not institute a fresh suit under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, but sued in the Civil Court for the same relief:

Held—That the suit was not maintainable in view of the provision of sec. 109 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

This was an appeal preferred from the decision, dated the 5th April 1919, passed by P. C. De, Esq., Additional District Judge, Pabna, reversing on appeal the decision, dated the 31st May 1918, passed by Mr. T. K. Chowdhury, First Subordinate Judge, Pabna.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

DINO NATH SIKDAR v. ANADI KRISHNA DUTT.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the Defendants in a suit instituted by their landlords for the correction of an entry made in a record-of-rights regarding their status. The record-of-rights was finally published on the 29th May 1914. On the 27th August 1914, the landlords instituted a suit under sec. 106 for the correction of the entry. On the 9th March 1915 they were permitted to withdraw the suit under sec. 106 with liberty reserved to them to institute a fresh suit if not barred. They did not institute a fresh suit under sec. 106; on the other hand on the 27th March 1915 they instituted the present suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for precisely the same relief as that claimed by them in the suit under sec. 106. We have compared the claim as set out in the present plaint with that in the suit under sec. 106, and we have found that they are expressed in identical language. The prayer is for correction of an entry in the record-of-rights regarding the status of the Defendants. In these circumstances the question arises whether the suit is or is not barred under the provisions of sec. 109.

Sec. 109 provides that subject to the provisions of sec. 109A, a Civil Court shall not entertain any application or suit concerning any matter which is or has already been the subject of an application made, suit instituted or proceedings taken under secs. 105 to 108, both inclusive. There can be no controversy that the present suit concerns a matter which formed the subject of the suit previously instituted under sec. 106. Primâ facie therefore according to the plain language of sec. 109 the suit is barred. The Plaintiffs contend, however, that sec. 109 is not applicable, because as they were permitted to withdraw the previous suit the position is exactly the same as it would have been if the previous suit had never been instituted. This is contrary to the language of sec. 109 and is opposed to the decision in Sreemati Abeda Khatun v. Majubali Chowdhury (1), where the earlier authorities will be found reviewed. We are of opinion that the salutary provisions of sec. 109 should be strictly enforced and not whittled down. In the case before us the Plaintiffs could and should have availed themselves of the liberty reserved under the order of the 29th March 1915 to institute a fresh suit under sec. 106. This they have not done, and they cannot be permitted to evade the provisions of sec. 109.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Court below set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts, on the ground that it is barred under the provisions of sec. 109.

This was an appeal preferred on the 19th of February 1923 against the order of the District Judge of Zillah Burdwan (P. E. Cammiade, Esq.), dated the 25th of November 1922, reversing the order of the Subordinate Judge of Asansole (Babu H. K. Neogi), dated the 22nd of December 1921.

The facts of the case appear from the judgment.

Babu Bankim Chandra Mukherjee for the Appellants.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WALMSLEY, J —I have had the advantage of reading the judgment which my learned brother is about to deliver, and I agree in the substance of the order that he proposes to make If there is a right of appeal to this Court, that is, if the learned Judge was right in thinking that an appeal lay to him, I agree that his decision on the merits was wrong and should be reversed.

Personally however I do not think that an appeal lay and consequently I hold that we should interfere under the provisions of sec. 115, C. P. C. My reasons for thinking that no appeal lay are as follows :—The view that the matter comes within the scope of sec. 47, C. P. C., rests on the footing that the question has arisen between the parties to the suit brought by Sitaram. It must be that suit, because Jadab was not a party to the other.

The parties to that suit are Sitaram on the one side and Jadab and Anil on the other side, and the order for rateable distribution can be treated as an order falling within the scope of sec. 47, C. P. C., only if it raised a question between the parties to that suit relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree. We have to see whether there was such a question. On behalf of Jadab it is argued that there was such a question: on the ground that but for the order of rateable destribution 2,932-15-0 would have been credited towards the satisfaction of Sitaram's decree, instead of 2,631-15-0 It is urged that in respect of the sum of Rs. 301 there is a question between Jadab and Sitaram relating to the discharge of Sitaram's decree. I agree that there is a question relating to the discharge of the decree but I cannot regard it as one between Jadab and Sitaram. The question is not whether Sitaram should relax his hold on any portion of the sale proceeds, but whether Dwarika should be allowed by order of the Court to lay hands on that portion. If however it be conceded that the question has arisen between Sitaram and Jadab, it is obvious that it cannot be decided in the absence of Dwarika and Ram Kumar. That means that an outsider to the suit must be brought into the proceedings, and this addition destroys the element of identity which appears to be a necessary ingredient in proceedings under sec. 47, C. P. C.

As however I think that the Judge's order should be reversed, I see no reason to differ from the order proposed by my learned brother, and the appeal will be disposed of in accordance with his judgment.

MUKERJI, J.—Jadab Chandra Ganguly and Pashupati Hazra were two partners in a certain business. Dwarika Das Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari instituted a suit in the Small Cause Court at Asansole against Pashupati Hazra and one Umananda Hazra, and Pashupati Hazra having died during the pendency thereof, obtained a decree against Umananda Hazra and the heir of Pashupati Hazra, a minor named Anil Kumar Hazra. The decree was for money due from Pashupati Hazra and Umananda Hazra in their personal capacities and had nothing to do with the partnership. The decree was put into execution against Anil Kumar Hazra in execution case No. 327 of 1920 of the Small Cause Court and certain movable properties belonging to the partnership were attached, upon which Jadab Chandra Ganguly preferred a claim alleging that he had a half share therein and prayed for a release of the said half share from attachment in claim case No. 23 of 1920. To this Anil Kumar Hazra agreed on the understanding that his half share should be allowed to be sold in execution of the decree in the aforesaid execution case No. 327 of 1920. Orders to the said effect were passed on the 24th December 1920 and the sale was fixed for the 7th January 1921.

On the 7th January 1921 Jadab Chandra Ganguly preferred another claim in claim case No. 1 of 1921 objecting to the sale on the ground that the half share of Anil Kumar Hazra in the movables, that is to say, the share that had been attached and was about to be sold was not saleable. The sale was accordingly put off, Jadab was called upon to submit accounts of the partnership business which he never did, and eventually the claim was dismissed.

DWARIKA DAS MARWARI v. JADAB CHANDRA GANGULY.

In the meantime on the 3rd January 1921 one Sitaram Marwari obtained a decree against Jadab Chandra Ganguly and Anil Kumar Hazra in respect of moneys due from the partnership, and on the 14th January 1921 in execution case No. 18 of 1921 of the Subordinate Judge's Court at Asansole attached all the movables, a half share of which had already been attached in execution case No. 327 of 1920 and the said movables were sold on the 9th March 1921 for Rs. 3,025.

By petitions filed on the 1st March 1921 and 3rd March 1921 Dwarika Das Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari tried to put off the sale impugning the bona fides of the decree obtained by Sitaram Marwari and also the conduct of Jadab Chandra Ganguly in at first consenting to the half share of Anil Kumar Hazra being attached and then getting the sale of that share put off by filing a further claim as aforesaid, and they prayed that that claim should be disposed of and the sale in execution of their decree might take place first. Eventually on the 5th March 1921 they prayed for rateable distribution of the sale proceeds of the share of Anil Kumar Hazra as between themselves and Sitaram Marwari. On the 19th March 1921 Sitaram Marwari put in a petition objecting to the rateable distribution on the ground that his decree was against the partnership and therefore the sale proceeds must go to satisfy his decree but thereafter on the 9th April 1921 he put in a further petition agreeing to the rateable distribution.

On the 30th July 1921 and again on the 7th December 1921 Jadab Chandra Ganguly put in petitions objecting to the rateable distribution mainly on the grounds that the sale proceeds should go to satisfy the decree of Sitaram as their decree was for money due from the partnership, that the judgment-debtors in the two execution cases were different and therefore the prayer for rateable distribution was not maintainable.

The learned Subordinate Judge by orders passed on the 22nd December 1921 held that the objection of Jadab Chandra Ganguly should be overruled on the ground of waiver and estoppel and he ordered rateable distribution in the following way, that is to say, Sitaram Marwari was to get the costs Rs. 51-9 and poundage fee Rs. 40-8 and out of the balance, that is to say, Rs. 3,025 less Rs. 92-1, a half, viz Rs. 1,466-7-6 representing the share of Jadab Chandra Ganguly, and that the other half share, viz., Rs. 1,466-7-6 representing the share of Anil Kumar Hazra was to be divided rateably between the two sets of decree-holders, that is to say, Sitaram Marwari was to get Rs 1,165-7-6 and Dwarika Das Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari were to get Rs. 301.

Against this order Jadab Chandra Ganguly appealed to the District Judge of Burdwan and the learned District Judge overruling an objection as to the competency of the appeal before him, allowed the appeal and ordered the whole of the sale proceeds to be paid to Sitaram Marwari.

The present appeal and application in revision have been preferred by Dwarika Das Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari against the aforesaid order of the learned District Judge.

Of the contentions put forward on behalf of the Appellant it is necessary to notice only two, viz., that no appeal lay against the order of the learned Subordinate Judge and that Jadab Chandra having expressly consented to the attachment of the half-share of Anil Kumar Hazra must be taken to have waived all objections to the rateable distribution of the sale proceeds on the footing that they represented the proceeds of partnership property and must be availed of first to satisfy the debts of the partnership.

On behalf of the Respondent it has been urged that the question decided by the learned Subordinate Judge was one between the parties to the suit and related to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree passed therein and therefore came within the purview of sec. 47, C. P. C. and was appealable; that the whole of the sale proceeds must, in view of sec. 262 of the Contract Act, go towards the payment of the partnership debts and further that the application for rateable distribution was not maintainable inasmuch as the judgment-debtors of the two decrees are not precisely the same. The Respondent also supports the view which found favour with the learned District Judge that he was not precluded from objecting to the rateable distribution by reason of his petition of consent releasing the half share of Anil Kumar Hazra in the movables.

The first point for consideration therefore is whether an appeal lay to the District Judge against the order of the Subordinate Judge. Now, an order under sec. 73, C. P. C. is not appealable unless it also comes under sec. 47, C. P. C. and satisfies all the requirements thereof [Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadunath Banerjee (1)]. In order to be appealable the order must therefore decide a question arising between the decree-holder Sitaram Marwari on the one hand and the judgment-debtors Jadab Chandra Ganguly and Anil Kumar Hazra on the other. In determining whether the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge fulfilled these tests, the cases cited at the Bar do not afford us any real assistance. In Jagadish Chandra Saha v. Kripanath Saha (2), the Petitioners had a decree against certain judgment-debtors, the Opposite Party had a decree against certain judgment-debtors who were not exactly identical with the former set of judgment-debtors, the Opposite Party applied for rateable distribution, the application was refused by the Court of first instance; the Opposite Party appealed and an order for rateable distribution was passed by the Appellate Court. The Petitioners then appealed to this Court and it was held that the order of the Court of first instance refusing rateable distributions did not come under sec. 244 of the old Code of Civil Procedure and therefore no appeal lay from it. This presumably was on the ground that this was no determination on any question relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree which was under execution as between the parties to the suit in which it had been passed and the order only purported to decide a contest between two rival decree-holders. In Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadunath Banerjee (1), the Petitioners had obtained a decree against a firm, while the Opposite Party had obtained a decree against one of the partners of the firm. During the pendency of a proceeding for rateable distribution as between the Opposite Party and certain other execution creditors of the said partner, the Petitioner had made an application for rateable distribution which was refused. That order was held as being one between two rival decree-holders which did not affect the interest of the judgment-debtor and so did not come under sec. 47, C. P. C. so as to confer a right of appeal. In cases where as between the parties to the suit a question relating to the execution, satisfaction or discharge of the decree passed therein has been decided by the order for rateable distribution, it has always been held that an appeal lies. [Venkataperumal v. Venkata Reddi (3) and Sorabji Coovarji v. Kala Raghunath (4)]. In the case of Kashiram v. Mani Ram (5), the Court held that the order which was passed in that case and by which rateable distribution was refused did not decide a question which arose between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed or their representatives within the meaning of sec. 244 of the old Code of Civil Procedure. In the case before us the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge determined, as between Sitaram Marwari on the one hand and the judgment-debtors Jadab Chandra Ganguly and Anil Kumar Hazra on the other, a question, on the application of Dwarika Das Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari, as to what extent the decree under execution was to be satisfied and therefore, in my judgment, the order came under the purview of sec. 47, C. P. C. and the learned District Judge was in my judgment, right in his view of the competency of the appeal before him

Coming now to the merits, the whole basis of the order of the learned District Judge is that the decree being for recovery of moneys due from the partnership no rateable distribution could be made and the whole of the sale proceeds should be available for its satisfaction. In my judgment the petition of the Respondent preferring a claim to a half share and consenting to a release of his half share only and agreeing to the sale of the half share of Anil Kumar Hazra in execution of the decree for the personal debts of the latter's father amounted to a declaration that the partnership had ceased and had the effect of divesting the said half share of the movables of its character as partnership property, and to such property the provisions of sec. 262, C. P. C. relating to partnership property would no longer apply. The Subordinate Judge was perhaps not right in the view that this conduct of Jadab Chandra Ganguly amounted to waiver or estoppel and it may be that the principle that where a party has elected to adopt a certain course of action he will be confined to that course which he has deliberately adopted may not apply in the present case. It is clear, however, that neither Sitaram Marwari nor Jadab Chandra Ganguly, until he applied on the ground that the said half share was not saleable in execution of the decree of Dwarika Das Marwari and Ram Kumar Marwari treated this half share as still clothed with the incidents of partnership assets. In my opinion the learned District Judge was wrong in the view that he took of the matter and the principle underlying the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is the correct one to apply to the case.

As for the maintainability of the application for rateable distribution the contention of the Respondent is based upon the amendment of the law due to the insertion of the word "passed" in sec. 295 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act X of 1882). As observed by Strachey, C. J., in Bithal Das v. Nand Kishore (6) · "The object of the section is two-fold The first object is to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceeding, to obviate in a case where there are many decree-holders, each competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately getting the property. The other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property by placing all the decree-holders in the position as I have described upon the same footing and making the property rateably divisible among them instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property." These objects would not be furthered but rather defeated by putting upon the rule the interpretation which the Respondent asked us to adopt. In Balmer Lawrie & Co. v. Jadu Nath Banerjee (1) this Court declined to express any opinion on the question as to whether principle enunciated in the Full Bench decision in the case of Ganesh Das Bagria v. Shiva Lakshman Bhakat (7) was affected by the alteration of the law. In my opinion if the legislature intended to effect any such alteration, it would have expressed it in terms more clear and specific. This contention put forward on behalf of the Respondent must fail.

I therefore agree with my learned brother in reversing the order of the learned District Judge and restoring that of the learned Subordinate Judge with costs in all Courts—the hearing fee in this Court being assessed at three gold mohurs.

The Rule is discharged.

[CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

RULE No. 29 OF 1924.

Redemption suit—Jurisdiction, valuation for—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 15, Or. 34, rr. 7, 8—Court Fees Act (X of 1870), sec. 7, para. IX- Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), sec. 8.

Jurisdiction in suits for redemption of mortgage depends not on the amount of the principal money due on the bond, but on the amount ultimately found to be due to the Defendant mortgagee. Valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction in such suits does not follow that for the purpose of court-fees, redemption suits being expressly excluded from the operation of sec. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act.

Competency of a Court depends on the nature of the suit and also the pecuniary jurisdiction of Court.

the 17th September 1920, passed in appeal from the decision of the Munsif, 7th Court, Barisal (Babu Bishnupada Roy), dated the 25th April 1922.

This was a suit for redemption instituted in the 7th Court of the Munsif at Barisal. The trial Court held that the debt due by the Plaintiff to the Defendant on the bond being over Rs. 1,000, the suit was beyond the limits of his pecuniary jurisdiction; and he therefore returned the plaint to the Plaintiff [Or. 7, r. 10 (1)] for presentation to the proper Court. The lower Appellate Court held that the jurisdiction of the primary Court to entertain that suit, depended on the amount of the principal mortgage money secured by the mortgage bond and remitted the case to the learned Munsif for trial on the merits. This rule was obtained for setting aside the said order of the lower Appellate Court.

Babu Suresh Chandra Taluqdar for the Petitioners.

Babu Abinash Chandra Guha for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This Rule was obtained on grounds Nos. 4 and 6 of the petition which are as follows :—

4. For that on a valid and correct construction of law on the subject the learned Subordinate Judge ought to have held that the suit was beyond the pecuniary jurisdiction of the learned Munsif

6. For that the learned Munsif having heard also the evidence and arrived at his own findings thereon, the learned Subordinate Judge has erred in law and acted without jurisdiction in not expressing his definite conclusions thereupon

The suit was one for redemption and the Munsif before whom it was instituted proceeded by way of a preliminary issue to decide the question whether he had the pecuniary jurisdiction to try it. Evidence was led on both sides and upon it he came to the conclusion that the debt due by Plaintiff to Defendant was over Rs. 1,000 and that consequently the suit was beyond his jurisdiction. He accordingly returned the plaint for presentation to the proper Court. Plaintiffs appealed and the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the order and remitted the case to the lower Court for trial on the merits.

He pointed out that a redemption suit comes under sec. 7, cl. ix of the Court Fees Act and the plaint has to be stamped with court-fees payable on the principal sum assured. But sec. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act does not cover redemption suits so that valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction does not necessarily follow valuation for the purpose of court-fees. The Allahabad and Madras High Courts say that sec. 8 does not lay down either that the valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction must necessarily be different from that for the purpose of court-fees.

The learned Judge further observed that he saw no practical difficulty from Or. 34, rr. 7 and 8 of the Code of Civil Procedure because the Court would not direct the Plaintiffs to pay a certain sum but only direct that if a certain sum was paid within a certain time Plaintiffs would have a certain relief in respect of the mortgaged property and if they failed they would be debarred from getting it in future If no payment were made the mortgagee would be entitled to ask for the sale of the property but that would be no part of the decree though it could follow from the decree incidentally

The learned Judge then proceeded to make some observations on the evidence recorded by the Munsif, adversely criticising his findings though not definitely disagreeing with them.

The learned vakil who has appeared in support of the rule urges that the procedure adopted by the Court of appeal below was erroneous and that the learned Judge should have come to a definite finding on the evidence.

As regards the second contention we are of opinion that though the learned Judge may possibly have carried his criticisms a little too far, it was not his intention to consider the evidence except from the point of view of the Munsif's jurisdiction and he was careful to guard against the imputation of having prejudged the case by saying: "It is not my intention to thrust my views upon the Court which would have to try the case and the Court should try it uninfluenced by my observations."

We think, however, that as the facts stand, the learned Judge was in error in remitting the case to the Munsif for trial on the merits.

He has relied on the case of Kedar Singh v. Matabadal Singh (1) which follows earlier cases of that Court as an authority for the proposition that the value for purposes of jurisdiction of a suit for redemption of a mortgage is the amount of the principal mortgage money and not the value of the property mortgaged and that the law has not been affected by the passing of Act VII of 1887, sec. 8.

That view was also taken by the Madras High Court in the case of Jallaldeen v Viyayaswami (2).

It is said in these cases that sec. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act does not cover redemption suits so that valuation for the purposes of jurisdiction does not necessarily follow valuation for the purpose of court-fees nor will valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction necessarily be different from that for the purpose of court-fees. Therefore the law as laid down in the earlier cases is unaffected by the Suits Valuation Act.

With great respect to the learned Judges who decided these cases we cannot but feel considerable doubt as to the correctness of these decisions If the legislature had not contemplated a change in the law it is not easy to understand why redemption suits should have been expressly excluded from the operation of sec. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act. The section does not say that the value determinable for the purposes of jurisdiction is the value determinable for the purpose of the initial payment of court-fees. We are therefore inclined to the view that jurisdiction will depend not on the amount assured but on the amount ultimately found to be due.

Our attention was drawn to the case of Rameswar Mahton v. Dilu Mahton (3), where it was held that in a suit for possession with mesne profits the Munsif had jurisdiction to ascertain the mesne profits and to give effect to the order made in the decree notwithstanding that the amount of such mesne profits when added to the value of the suit might come to a sum in excess of the hearing jurisdiction of his Court.

That case was considered and distinguished in Golap Singh v. Indra Kumar (4), where it was pointed out that "the amount of mesne profits for which the Munsif made a decree had accrued entirely after the institution of the suit and depended upon the length of time during which the Defendant might manage to keep the Plaintiff out of possession, inspite of the decree in his favour."

The decision on principle too which had been doubted in Ijatulla Bhuiyan v. Chandra Mohan (5) was disapproved.

It is also pointed out (at p. 374) that the provision of the Suits Valuation Act only shows that for purposes of jurisdiction the value of the suit must be taken to be determined by the value determinable for the computation of court-fees. But this does not conclude the question whether a Court of restricted pecuniary jurisdiction is competent to make a decree in a suit for accounts, valued at less than Rs. 1,000 for an amount in excess of Rs. 1,000 which is the pecuniary limit of its jurisdiction.

It may be conceded that a suit should be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it (sec. 15, Code of Civil Procedure). Competency means jurisdiction and the competency of a Court depends upon the nature of the suit and upon its own pecuniary jurisdiction. That jurisdiction must be determined with reference to the various Acts constituting the Courts and the question of valuation by reference to the Court Fees and Valuation Acts.

The jurisdiction of the Munsif here is limited to the trial of suits, the value of which does not exceed Rs. 1,000. Now primâ facie it is the Plaintiffs' claim which determines jurisdiction and the jurisdiction continues whatever the event unless a different principle comes into operation to prevent such a result as to make the proceedings from the first abortive. It is precisely such a contingency which has arisen in the present case. The evidence recorded by the learned Munsif satisfied him that the debt due by the Plaintiffs on the bond was more than Rs. 1,000. He therefore held that the suit was beyond his pecuniary jurisdiction. In our judgment that view was correct both in law and on principle.

We are further of opinion that the learned Judge has failed to appreciate the mandatory effect of Or. 34, rr. 7 and 8. The Court must declare the amount due at the date of the decree and direct its payment within a certain time. If the money is not paid, the Court must on Defendants' application under r. 8 (4) pass a decree for the sale of the property. It is difficult to understand therefore how such an order would "be no part of the decree, though it would follow from the decree incidentally."

The substance of the matter is that if the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit, it has no jurisdiction to make the decree. As explained in Golap Singh's case (4) cited above at p. 375 "if a Court of limited pecuniary jurisdiction took cognizance of a suit in which the sum claimed was larger than the amount over which the Court had jurisdiction any judgment it might give would be void."

The result therefore is that the Rule is made absolute with costs 2 gold mohurs and the order of the lower Appellate Court discharged; the plaint will be returned to the Plaintiffs for presentation to a Court of competent jurisdiction.

HARNATH KUAR v. INDAR BAHADUR SINGH (1) and SRI JAGANNADA RAJU v. SRI RAJAH PRASADA RAO (2) referred to

These were appeals (consolidated by the order of the High Court, dated 22nd April 1921) against one judgment and three decrees of the High Court at Calcutta, dated 23rd August 1920, on appeal from the judgment, dated 20th August 1919, and three decrees, dated 5th December 1919, of the same High Court in its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The principal points for determination were :—

(1) Whether the Appellant was entitled to specific performance of the contracts entered into by the Respondents? And in the alternative

(2) Whether the Appellant could recover the amounts paid to the Respondents and damages?

On or about the 25th August 1902 one Gopal Lal Seal, a wealthy Hindu inhabitant of Calcutta governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu law died childless, possessed of considerable properties both movable and immovable, leaving surviving him two widows Srimati Kumudini Dasi and Srimati Nayanmunjari Dasi and five nephews (sister's sons) viz., Gouri Mohan Mullick, Giri Mohan Mullick, Panchanan Mullick (Respondent), Kanta Mohan Mullick and Jogendra Nath Mullick.

A Will purporting to have been made by the said Gopal Lal Seal was propounded by Babu Nagendra Nath Mitra, pleader, and Srimati Kadambini Dasi, Gopal Lal's mother, as executors, by which inter alia three-quarter share of the entire property was to go to Panchanan whereas 1 anna (1/16) share was to go to other nephews whom the said Gopal Lal had treated as his sons during his life-time. The said Will was disputed by the said widows of Gopal Lal and probate of the said Will was on 3rd August 1902 refused by the High Court at Calcutta. An appeal to His Majesty in Council was preferred against the said refusal of the grant of probate.

The Respondents were in great difficulties in the matter of financing. The Appellant, on the representation made by the Respondents that the said Will was genuine and that they were entitled to their respective shares, came to their assistance and lent them large sums of money. Separate agreements which were supported by an affidavit were executed by the Respondents on the 7th May 1908 in favour of the Appellant. By the said agreements the Respondents agreed to sell to the Appellant their respective shares for a sum of Rs. 300 per month given to each of them, their heirs and representatives in perpetuity. The terms of some of the said agreements were in brief as follows :—

"Consequently we are helpless in this world. It is very hard for us to meet the expenses of our food and clothing or household (expenses) or to find relief from distress or danger. Moreover, in consequence of numerous expenses legitimate and otherwise in carrying on litigation in the High Court regarding the Will of Gopal Seal, whatever funds we had had or whatever moneys we had received from our maternal grandmother, Kadambini Dasi deceased, having all been exhausted, we have become involved in debts. Consequently, for purposes of (the expenses for) our food and clothing and for keeping the house and for other expenses and for repayment of petty debts and for relief from distress and danger and for other expenses we have been and we are, for the period of about 1½ one and a half years obtaining monies from you (Appellant) under verbal arrangement. I, Sri Gouri Mohan Mullick, shall convey in your favour whatever rights I have to the estate of Gopal Seal deceased (that is to say, rights under the Will or reversionary rights) immediately upon the same being established. On this understanding I have taken and have been taking from you (money) at the rate of Rs. 300 three hundred rupees per month (and shall do so) in perpetuity through my heirs and representatives."

"God forbid, but if in case, the Privy Council appeal be dismissed, that is to say, should the Will of Gopal Lal Seal deceased be held untenable, even in that eventuality you shall, in pursuance of this arrangement, continue to give me (money) at the rate of Rs. 300 three hundred rupees per month in perpetuity through my heirs and representatives. And I make this promise, too, that I shall sell to you the right by inheritance (that is to say, reversionary right) to the whole of such portion of the said estate as I shall get by reason of being his future heir, on one week's notice, within three months of the date of my getting the said share (and) for the consideration as stated above (namely it being fixed that I, Giri Mohan Mullick, shall consider as due to me from you in perpetuity through my heirs and representatives Rs. 300 three hundred rupees per month) and that I shall give you possession of the property."

"If by right of inheritance I get more than one anna share, then I shall execute the conveyance in respect of same too, for the said consideration, namely, upon Rs. 300 three hundred rupees per month being fixed as due (to me). Although I am making this agreement for the sale of the aforesaid consideration of the 0-1-0 one anna share receivable by me under the Will, if in case, I get less than 0-1-0 anna, one anna share by right of inheritance (that is to say, by reversionary rights) then I shall sell even the same for the afore-mentioned consideration. For the said reason you shall not be competent to fix a lower amount less than Rs. 300 three hundred rupees per month."

"If the Will is held untenable by the Privy Council then so long as our maternal aunts (mother's brother's wives) Srimati Kumudini and Srimati Nayanmunjari Dasi shall remain alive until then we shall have no possession in the said estate. For this reason I am giving this undertaking too, that if our maternal aunts relinquish their life-interest either jointly or severally or sell (the same) to you, then from the date of such relinquishment or sale, we shall become the owners of the estate by right of inheritance; and then the very share of which we shall become the owners, shall be counted as the share received by us by right of inheritance and (I) shall execute a conveyance for the same within three months from the date of the said relinquishment or the said sale to you; and (I) shall give you possession (of the said share)."

On 18th March 1909 the said appeal preferred by the present Respondents re the Will of Gopal Seal was dismissed by His Majesty in Council. The widows of Gopal Seal were held entitled to life estates while the Respondents became declared reversioners to succeed after the decease of the said widows.

On or about 28th November 1909 the Respondents executed other agreements in favour of the Appellant confirming the one executed prior to the said decision of the Privy Council on 7th May 1908, the material portion of which runs as follows:—

"I made one registered agreement with you in the past English year 1908 on date the 7th May. You have performed all the acts in pursuance of that agreement. I too am prepared to perform all the acts so far as it has been in my power to do so, but owing to the unpropitiousness of the stars the suit for the probate of the Will of Gopal Lal Seal deceased having been lost in the Most Honourable Privy Council the receipt of the consideration by you is delayed for the present. You will have to wait till the death of or relinquishment or transfer to you of the estate by the two wives of maternal uncle, upon their death taking place or in the ordinary course of events when the estate of Gopal Lal Seal deceased will change hands from them and I shall get the said estate, I shall convey to you the said estate immediately after getting it and it will be then that in accordance with the above mentioned agreement I shall be competent to receive the monthly allowance of rupees five hundred a month but not before that, this is certain. And you on the strength of both the agreements may and shall be competent to compel me to convey the estate at your pleasure either through the protection of the Court or however you may desire."

The Respondents also received further large sums of money from the Appellant.

The said Kumudini Dasi having died on 21st November 1917 the Respondent Gur Mohan Mullick brought a suit against Navanmunjari Dasi the surviving widow, on 28th November 1917 for possession of the properties held of the said Kumudini. The said suit was however compromised on 28th March 1918. The said Navanmunjari relinquished her rights in the said properties held by the deceased widow in favour of the Respondents, their brothers and cousin.

The Respondents having obtained possession of their respective shares on 25th November 1918 the Appellant brought the present suits (Nos. 1389, 1390 and 1391 of 1918) in the High Court of Calcutta Original Side against the Respondents. He relied upon the said agreements of 7th May 1908 and 28th November 1909 and stated that he had all along been fulfilling his side of the contract and making large payments to the Respondents as set forth in schedule to the plaint. He prayed inter alia for the following reliefs:—

(c) That it be declared that in the events that have happened the Plaintiff is entitled to have a conveyance duly executed and registered by the Respondents in respect of his equal one-fifth share as aforesaid and to be put in quiet and peaceful possession of the same.

(d) That the Defendant may be directed to duly execute and register a conveyance of the said share to the Plaintiff and in default a proper conveyance may be directed to be executed and registered by the Registrar of this Honourable Court.

(e) That the Respondent may be directed to make over possession of such properties as are now in his possession or which may thereafter come into his possession with mesne profit, if any.

(f) Or in the alternative the Defendant may be decreed to pay to the Plaintiff Rs. 3,36,000 for damages and for the amounts advanced by the Plaintiff with interest.

The Respondents duly filed their written statements by which they denied the Plaintiff's claim and inter alia pleaded that the said two agreements are for the transfer of an expectancy and are therefore void, and inoperative in law.

On the aforesaid pleadings the following issues were framed :—

(1) Does the plaint disclose any cause of action?

(2) Are the agreements of the 7th May 1908 and the 28th November 1909 or either of them illegal or void on the ground that they deal with an expectancy?

(3) Is the suit for specific performance of the two agreements maintainable?

(4) Is the Defendant estopped from raising issues Nos. 2 and 3 assuming the facts alleged in paras. 3A and 10A of the plaint and the particulars thereof to be true?

(5) Are such facts true?

(6) Have the events mentioned in the agreements happened to enable the Plaintiff to sue for specific performance?

(7) Are the circumstances under which the agreements were executed stated in para. 3 of the plaint true, and if so, are the agreements void and inoperative?

(8) Were the agreements treated as cancelled and inoperative?

(9) Is the Plaintiff entitled to a refund of the amounts (if any) paid by him on the basis of the said agreements or either of them, with interest, and if so, at what rate?

(10) Is the claim for the alleged advances mentioned in paras. 3A and 4A of the plaint and in the particulars thereof or any portion thereof barred by limitation?

(11) Is the Plaintiff in any event entitled to damages?

The said suits were heard by Mr. Justice Greaves who delivered his judgment on the first four issues, the rest having been reserved for evidence to be taken thereon. His findings were as follows :—

"I accordingly as regards issues Nos. 1 to 4 hold that (1) the plaint discloses no cause of action so far as the agreements are concerned; (2) that the agreements are void in so far as they deal with the expectancy; (3) that the suit for specific performance of the agreements is not maintainable; (4) that no question of estoppel arises as regards issues Nos. 2 and 3. This issue was not really pressed on behalf of the Plaintiff, nor indeed could it, I think, be contended that there could be estoppel against the provisions of a statute."

He dismissed the suit with costs on 20th August 1919.

Dissatisfied with the said judgment, dated 20th August 1919, the Plaintiff appealed to Appellate Side of the High Court of Calcutta. The appeal was heard by a bench composed of Mookerjee and Fletcher, JJ., who delivered their judgment on 23rd August 1920 dismissing the Plaintiff's appeal.

Hence this appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Abdul Majid for the Appellant.—There is nothing inherently impossible in a contract for the future sale of future expectations nor is it forbidden by Hindu law. Sri Jagannada Raju v. Sri Rajah Prasada Rao (2) was wrongly decided.

Even if the agreement is void the Appellant is entitled to recover the money he had advanced.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents were not called upon.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SUMNER.—Three points have been argued on these appeals, one by Mr. De-Gruyther, the leading Counsel for the Appellant, and two others by Dr. Abdul Majid, the junior Counsel.

The Plaintiff, the present Appellant, had agreements with three persons, who are the Respondents, only two of whom, however, appear, by Counsel, under which he purported with great elaboration to purchase from them their expectations under the Will of their uncle, or alternatively their rights as his nephews expectant upon the termination of the surviving widows' rights in the property of the uncle, and among many other purposes, which are recited in this agreement, for which advances are agreed to be made, one, and apparently the principal one, was that an appeal might be prosecuted ultimately to His Majesty in Council for the purpose of establishing a Will which the deceased was said to have made. Unfortunately their Lordships, affirming the decision in the Court below, found that that Will was a forgery. That therefore reduced the expectations of the three Respondents to their interest in the property after the widows' rights should come to an end, and as a matter of fact after a time one widow died and a compromise was entered into with the approbation of the Court in respect of the rights of the other widow, the effect of which was to accelerate the time when the nephews became entitled to the inheritance.

In the present suits in India the trial Judge stated ten issues. The first four of those issues were argued and dealt with by him. The point in substance upon which those four issues turned was whether or not the agreements were illegal or void on the ground that they dealt with an expectancy. There were a number of others—as a matter of fact, eleven in all—but the remaining seven were not dealt with by the learned Judge. An application was made to him that he should pronounce a decree giving effect to his determination of the first four issues, which he declined to do upon the ground that there remained some issues in the case which had not been dealt with, one of them, for example, being an issue whether the Plaintiff was entitled to a refund of the amounts which he had in fact paid or any of them, and another whether his rights were barred by limitation.

The present Appellant was advised that his best course was to obtain an immediate decree upon the four issues, which had been dealt with and appeared at that time to be the only substantial ones, in order that he might prosecute his appeal to the High Court, and ultimately to His Majesty in Council, and he therefore elected to abandon all the other issues, whatever they might be; in fact, he never called any evidence in support of them, and a formal order was made upon his petition disposing of them all in that way. We are told, and very likely it may be so, that at that time the advice was largely influenced by the consideration that it was still thought to be an open question before their Lordships whether, apart from the Transfer of Property Act, it might be held competent to these heirs, according to the ordinary Hindu law, to contract to transfer, and ultimately to transfer their expectation, such as it was and no doubt, if that was the real point of the litigation, it was worth while to abandon minor points in order to get that issue determined. Between the time when the decree was asked for and obtained and the present time there has been a decision of their Lordships' Board in the case of Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (1) and although, as it appears to their Lordships, it simply restates what had frequently been stated before, the Appellant now recognises that the last word has been said, so far as he is concerned, about the possibility under Hindu law of such an interest being transferred.

Under these circumstances an application was made to their Lordships by Mr. DeGruyther to allow the petition which had been presented to the High Court to be recalled, and the decree that was made upon that petition to be set aside and so to allow in some shape or form discussion, if not proof, of the remaining issues in the case, the object being to show that there were, or might be, circumstances in which it possibly could be held that the time of the discovery of the illegality of the contracts was not the time when the contracts were made and the parties knew the law or must be presumed to have known it, but at a later date (what date their Lordships are not exactly told). It was urged that, if such circumstances could be suggested here, a view similar to that which the Board took in the case above mentioned might be taken in favour of the present Appellant also. In that case, however, there were special circumstances, wholly different from those in the present case, circumstances which were proved in evidence and were sufficient for their Lordships to act upon and to enable them to say that the discovery in the case was later than the date of the contract itself. There has been no suggestion anywhere in the course of the present proceedings that any such facts occurred as could alter the view which must normally be taken of the meaning of the word "discovery" and of the time at which that discovery must be held to have occurred. Not only so, but it was by the deliberate act of the Appellant himself, for considerations which at the time were very likely wise considerations, that he closed the door to any investigation of that issue at all. Their Lordships are content to dispose of the first point by saying that the additional issues cannot be gone into now and that upon the face of the matter the appeal must be dealt with upon the question whether, either under the Transfer of Property Act or under the Hindu law applying to purchases of expectations of inheritances, there is any ground upon which these contracts can be supported.

Dr. Abdul Majid has developed these points, and his points appear to be two, setting aside for the moment the Transfer of Property Act, upon the ground that it deals with an actual transfer or conveyance and not with a contract to transfer. It is contended that there is nothing in the reason of the thing to prevent two parties, who are concerned in the way in which these parties were concerned, from entering into a contract for the future sale of future expectations. It is admitted that there is no authority to be found anywhere which supports the view that such a contract is possible, and it is admitted that there is authority in India to the contrary, the authority in question being the case of Sri Jagannada Raju v. Sri Rajah Prasada Rao (2), which so satisfied the learned Judge at the trial that he expressed his assent to the reasoning, without further discussion, and the High Court in its turn was satisfied also. The reasoning of that decision may well be summed up first in a quotation from the judgment of Chief Justice Wallis, and secondly, in a quotation from that of his colleague, Mr. Justice Tyabji.

"On this question, looked at apart from authority, I should not entertain any doubt, as it seems futile to forbid such transfers of expectancies if contracts to transfers them are to be enforced as soon as the estate falls into possession. In these circumstances it seems to me that it is our duty to give effect to what we consider plain provisions of our statute law instead of following a course of English decisions which would appear to have been based, from the very first, on a regard for long established practice rather than on principle, and to have failed to commend themselves to Lord Eldon."

Then Mr. Justice Tyabji, at page 559, says:—

"The Transfer of Property Act does not permit a person having expectations of succeeding to an estate as an heir to transfer the expectant benefits; when such a transfer is purported to be made an attempt is in effect made by the two persons to change with each other their legal positions; and an attempt by the one to clothe the other with what the Legislature refuses to recognise as rights, but styles as a mere chance incapable of being transferred. It would be defeating the provisions of the Act to hold that though such hopes or expectations cannot be transferred in present or future, a person may bind himself to bring about the same results by giving to the agreement the form of a promise to transfer not the expectations but the fruits of the expectations, by saying that what he has purported to do may be described in different language from that which the Legislature has chosen to apply to it for the purpose of condemning it. When the Legislature refuses the transaction as an attempt to transfer a chance, it indicates the true aspect in which it requires the transaction to be viewed."

Their Lordships think that they are only following out numerous other passages which have been referred to in earlier judgments of this Board when they accept that reasoning and that conclusion. It is impossible for them to admit the common sense of maintaining an enactment which would prevent the purpose of the contract, while permitting the contract to stand as a contract, or to see how by appealing to sec. 65 of the Indian Contract Act, or to the nature of the bargain as a mere bargain de futuro, they could uphold it as a contract when it is a contract as to which, not only must specific performance be refused under the Transfer of Property Act, but as to which damages can never be recovered, because the contract is not a performable contract until the realisation of the expectation occurs.

There is another way in which the learned Counsel for the Appellant puts the point, namely, that there is here a contract wholly distinguishable from any contract as to spes successione, because, after carefully providing for all eventualities, the documents deal with the possibility of the widows, or one of them, relinquishing their life interests either jointly or severally, or selling them to the reversionary heirs, in which event from the date of the relinquishment or sale, the heirs would become the present owners of the estate by right of inheritance. It is suggested that this provision ought to be read as relating to a transaction with strangers, embedded in the middle of a much longer contract with the parties to this appeal and relating to their hopes of inheritance; in other words, that it should be treated as though it read: "Further, if we can obtain by purchase from total strangers to the family a portion of our late uncle's property, then we undertake to sell it to you on the same terms as those upon which we have undertaken to sell our spes successione." It is not necessary to discuss how far such a contract might be supportable, because it is quite plain upon the documents that this is not such a contract, and therefore the point, ingenious though it is, is sufficiently dealt with by dismissing it.

(2) I. L. R. 39 Mad. 554 (1916).

The result, therefore, is that on all the points the appeals fail. As they have been consolidated in India and before their Lordships there will be one set of costs only, and the two successful Respondents who appear by Counsel will get that set of costs, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION

No. 162 OF 1923.

SANDERSON, C. J.
RICHARDSON, J.
1924,
15, February.

Re: ALLIANCE BANK OF SIMLA, LTD.: PETER DONALD MACPHERSON, Appellant, v. DUGALD McKECHNIE and ors., Respondents.

Provident Fund, members of, if and when entitled to priority over the unsecured creditors and shareholders of a Company in liquidation—Fiduciary relationship, if any, between the Company and the members of the Provident Fund—Moneys belonging to the Provident Fund mixed with other monies of the Company, if specific Payment of interest by trustee, if consistent with the existence of a fiduciary relationship.

The Alliance Bank of Simla, Ltd., having gone into voluntary liquidation, the question arose, whether the members of a provident fund established by the Company for the benefit of its employees were entitled to receive payment in full of the amounts of the balances standing to their respective credit in the books of the Company in priority to the unsecured creditors and the share-holders or whether they were only entitled to rank pari passu with the unsecured creditors. It appeared that according to the rules of the Provident Fund made by the Company each member thereof subscribed a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the amount of his monthly salary; that on every 31st of December and 30th of June the Company contributed to the fund a sum equal to the aggregate amount of the subscriptions paid by the members; that the sums from time to time subscribed by each member were credited to his account in the Company's books and all sums contributed by the Company divided among the members in proportion to the amount of their respective subscriptions and the share of each member in the Company's contribution was thereupon credited to his account; and that the Company paid interest on every 31st of December upon the capital amount standing to the credit of each member at a certain rate; and that the account of the fund was kept in the general books of the Company where a subsidiary ledger was also maintained showing the amount from time to time standing to the credit of each member and a pass book was issued to each member.

R. 9 of the Provident Fund Rules provided that the Company should have a lien on the amount standing to the credit of each member in respect of all losses, etc., which it might have to pay or be put to by reason of any act, embezzlement, etc., of such member and that the amount standing to the credit of each member in respect of his subscriptions to the fund and the interest thereon should be deemed and treated as a deposit made by him with the Company as security for his fidelity and might be disposed of accordingly and that in the event of any claim arising by the Company, the member against whom such claim should arise, should absolutely forfeit to the Company all right and interest to and in the moneys standing to his credit in respect of contributions made by the Company. Rr. 9 and 10 provided that in certain contingencies a member of the Provident Fund should be paid only the amount standing to his credit in respect of his own contributions (with or without interest) and all moneys standing to his credit in respect of contributions made by the Company and the interest thereon should revert to and become the property of the Company:

Held—That having regard to the rules of the Provident Fund and the method according to which the Company dealt with the contributions of the members of the Fund and its own contributions and interest thereon, there was a fiduciary relationship between the Company and the members of the Provident Fund.

Held also—That the contributions of the members of the Provident Fund as also the contributions of the Company and the interest paid by the latter were specific moneys in the hands of the Company, although they were at all times mixed up with other moneys of the Company: and the Company having had at all times much larger sums than the amount standing to the credit of the Provident Fund, must be assumed to have used their own moneys rather than the money it held in trust for the Provident Fund.

JAMES ROSCOE (BOLTON) LTD. v. WINDER (5) referred to.

Held therefore—That the members of the Provident Fund were entitled to priority over the unsecured creditors and share-holders in respect of the contributions made by them to the fund as also in respect of the contributions made by the Company and the interest paid by it.

Re: ALLIANCE BANK OF SIMLA, LTD.

This was an appeal preferred on the 29th November 1923 from the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 28th of August 1923, passed in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Langford James and Mr. T. Ameer Ali for the Appellant.

Mr. H. R. Pankridge for the ordinary creditors of the Bank.

Mr. J. C. Hazra (for Mr. C. Bagram) for the Liquidators.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves which was given in respect of an application made by the Liquidators of the Alliance Bank of Simla, Ltd., which was filed on the 20th of August 1923.

It appears that on the 27th of April 1923 the Bank had suspended payment. It subsequently went into voluntary liquidation, and the Petitioners were appointed Liquidators.

The question in this case arises in connection with a claim of the employees of the Bank, who were members of a Provident Fund, established by the Bank in 1892 for the benefit of its employees. The Petitioners asked for the direction of the Court as to "the manner in which they were to deal with claims made by such members, that is to say, whether such members were entitled to receive payment in full of the amounts of the said credit balances in priority to the unsecured creditors and the share-holders of the said Bank or whether such members were entitled only to rank pari passu with the said unsecured creditors."

The learned Judge's decision was given on the 28th of August 1923 and was as follows :—"The result is that I hold that the members of the Provident Fund have no priority over the unsecured creditors and they are only entitled to rank pari passu with them."

The appeal was filed on the 29th November 1923, and the Appellant is Mr. P. D. Macpherson who was manager of the Calcutta Branch of the Bank and who was a member of the Provident Fund.

The first point raised by the learned Counsel for the Appellant was that the Bank was trustee of the amounts standing to the credit of the Provident Fund for the employees who were members of the Provident Fund or that, at any rate, the Bank occupied a fiduciary relation towards the members. He relied upon the terms of the Rules and Regulations of the Provident Fund and upon the method of dealing with the fund by the Bank.

Speaking generally, there is no doubt that a fiduciary relationship may be established without the use of the word "trust" and that a person may constitute himself a trustee and, without any actual transfer of the legal estate, he may so deal with the property as to deprive himself of its beneficial ownership and declare that he will hold it in trust.

The question in this case, in the first instance, must be considered with reference to the rules and regulations and they must be read as a whole in order to obtain their true effect and meaning.

The material rules are :—

"N. B.—Membership of the firm is required by the Company of all their employees who are eligible for membership."

R. 1 states the persons who are eligible for membership.

Re: ALLIANCE BANK OF SIMLA, LTD.

R. 3 deals with old employees and it is not necessary to consider that clause in detail.

4. "Each member shall subscribe monthly a sum equal to five per cent. on the amount of the monthly salary, paid to him by the Company, and shall pay to the Company the amount of his subscription immediately on the receipt by him of his salary for the month preceding, and the Company may from time to time deduct from any sum payable by the Company to any member for salary such sum as may be required to pay any subscription due by him to the fund."

5. "The Company shall, on every 31st December and 30th June, contribute to the fund a sum equal to the aggregate amount of the subscriptions of the members during the preceding half year under r. 4."

6. "The sums from time to time subscribed by each member under rr. 3 and 4 shall forthwith on payment thereof be credited to his account in the books of the Company and all sums contributed by the Company under r. 3 shall forthwith and all sums from time to time contributed by the Company under r. 5 shall, as soon as may be after each 31st December and 30th June, be divided (by book entry) among the members in proportion to the amount of their respective subscriptions, and the Company shall thereupon credit the account of each member in the books of the Company with his share of such contribution."

7. "The Company shall also contribute to the fund on every 31st December and 30th June interest upon the capital amount from time to time standing to the credit of each member, at the same rate (but not exceeding 5 per cent. per annum) as shall be from time to time paid by the Company on fixed deposits for periods of one year and upwards and such interest shall, as soon as may be after each 31st December and 30th June, be credited to the account of each member in the books of the Company."

8. "The account of the fund shall be kept in the general books of the Company at their Head Office, where a subsidiary ledger shall also be maintained showing the amount from time to time standing to the credit of each member, and a pass book shall be supplied to each member which shall be made up and balanced half-yearly."

It will be convenient to state now how the scheme contained in these clauses was carried out. By the consent of both parties certain books and documents, which were not before the learned Judge, were put in before the hearing of the appeal. We were shown an account of the Provident Fund in the general ledger, in which the amounts subscribed by the employees were credited to the fund. Each half-year the Bank's contribution was credited to the account of the fund. I take, as an instance, the end of the half-year in December 1922. Rs. 51,472-13-8 was credited to the Provident Fund's account as the Bank's contribution. This amount was made up of two sums—Rs. 35,272-2-1 and Rs. 16,200-11-7. The first was the Bank's contribution under r. 5 and was the equivalent of the aggregate amount of the subscriptions of the members during the preceding half-year. This amount was debited in the Bank's books to the "charges account." The second sum was the interest contributed by the Bank under r. 7 and this sum was debited in the Bank's books to the "interest account."

A rough balance-sheet, which was produced to us, showed the total amount standing to the credit of the Provident Fund as a liability of the Bank under the heading of "deposits." The sum was not specifically stated in the published balance-sheet, but was included with other sums on the liability side of the account. There was a "subsidiary ledger" kept in pursuance of r. 8 which showed the amounts credited to the account of each member in respect of his own contribution, the Bank's contribution, and the interest as provided by rr. 6 and 7.

The remaining clauses to which reference should be made are :—

9. "The Company shall have a first and paramount lien upon the amount from time to time standing to the credit of each member in respect of all losses, damages, costs, and expenses which the Company may at any time pay, sustain, or be put to, by reason of any act, embezzlement, mismanagement, neglect or default of or by such member and the amount from time to time standing to the credit of each member in respect of his subscriptions to the fund and the interest thereon shall be deemed and treated as a deposit made by him with the Company as security, for his fidelity, and may be disposed of accordingly, and in the event of any claim arising by the Company under this rule the member against whom such claim shall arise shall absolutely forfeit to the Company all right and interest to and in the moneys standing to his credit in respect of contributions made by the Company under rr. 3 and 5 and the interest thereon."

10. "If any member shall be dismissed from the service of the Company for misconduct or incompetence, he shall (subject to any claim by the Company under r. 9) be paid only the amount then standing to his credit in the books of the Company in respect of his own subscriptions to the fund and without any interest thereon, and the interest thereon and all moneys standing to his credit in respect of contributions made by the Company under rr. 3 and 5 and the interest thereon shall revert to and become the property of the Company."

11. "On the retirement of any member from the service of the Company without the consent of the Directors, he shall (subject to any claim of the Company under r. 9) be paid only the amount then standing to his credit in the books of the Company in respect of his own subscriptions to the fund and the interest thereon, and all moneys standing to his credit in respect of contributions made by the Company under rr. 3 and 5 and the interest thereon shall revert to and become the property of the Company."

12. "On the retirement of any member from the service of the Company with the consent of the Directors he shall (subject to any claim by the Company under r. 9) be paid,"

"(a) if he shall have been in the service of the Company for less than 15 years, the amount then standing to his credit in the books of the Company in respect of his subscriptions to the fund and the interest thereon, and such portion of the moneys then standing to his credit in respect of contributions made by the Company under rr. 3 and 5 and the interest thereon as the Directors may, in their absolute discretion think fit, and the balance of such last mentioned moneys and interest thereon shall revert to and become the property of the Company;

(b) if he shall have been in the service of the Company for 15 years and upwards, the sum standing to his credit in the books of the Company on the 30th June or 31st December on which he shall retire if his retirement take place on either of the said days (including his share of the contribution by the Company and interest to be credited on that day) and otherwise the sum standing to his credit on the 30th June or 31st December immediately preceding his retirement, together with the amount of his paid up subscriptions for the then current half-year."

The learned Counsel for the Appellant placed much reliance upon the provision contained in r. 9 that the Bank should have a lien upon the amount standing to the credit of each member in respect of the matters mentioned in cl. 9 and argued that this showed that the amounts thus standing to the credit of the members were their property; otherwise, he urged, the provision that the Bank should have a lien upon such amounts would be meaningless as the Bank could not have a lien upon its own property.

Reliance was also placed by the learned Counsel upon the words occurring in rr. 10, 11 and 12 "shall revert to and become the property of the Company," the argument being that these words showed that the moneys therein referred to were the property of the members and would only revert to and become a property of the Bank when the contingencies therein referred to arose.

The learned Judge came to the conclusion that, in respect of the sums contributed by them, the employees were depositors with the Bank in the same manner as a customer who had opened an account with the Bank, and were merely creditors of the Bank ranking with those who had a current or deposit account with the Bank.

With much respect to the learned Judge, in my opinion, the provisions to which I have drawn attention are inconsistent with that position. When a customer in the ordinary course of business opens a deposit or current account with the Bank and deposits money, the relation of creditor and debtor arises and the money so deposited becomes the money of the Bank. The provision that the Bank was to have a lien upon the amount standing to the credit of the members, which represented the contributions of the members, seems to me inconsistent with the moneys belonging to the Bank as in the case of an ordinary deposit by a customer with the Bank.

In the same way, the provisions that in certain contingencies certain portions of the moneys standing to the credit of the members shall revert to and become the property of the Bank are, in my opinion, inconsistent with the position occupied by a customer who has deposited money with the Bank in the ordinary course.

The learned Counsel who appeared for the unsecured creditors relied on certain rules as being inconsistent with the existence of fiduciary relationship and, in particular, he referred to rr. 7 and 12 (a).

R. 7 deals with the liability of the Bank to contribute interest upon the amount standing to the credit of each member. The learned Counsel argued that it was inconsistent with the position of a trustee that the Bank should be allowed to use the funds for the purpose of the Bank and should yearly have to pay interest at a specified rate which would mean that the Bank might thereby make a profit out of the fund.

This clause, taken by itself, might seem to be inconsistent with the existence of a fiduciary relationship between the Bank and the members; but the rules and regulations must be read as a whole.

Apart from this, the provision as to interest is not, in my opinion, wholly inconsistent with the existence of a fiduciary relationship. In Gee v. Liddell (1), (1) 35 Beav. 629; L. R. 2 Eq. 341 (1866).

Re: ALLIANCE BANK OF SIMLA, LTD.

the testator directed his executor to stand possessed of £2,000 upon trust to retain the same in his own hands at interest of 4 per cent. or to invest it and to pay the interest to his daughter for her separate use during her life. This provision permitted the trustee to retain the money in his own hands and pay interest at a specified rate to the beneficiary, the trustee presumably being entitled to make such use of the capital by way of investment or otherwise as he thought fit. Yet no question arose as to the direction creating a trust. I am not, therefore, convinced that the provision as to interest in the rules is so inconsistent with the existence of a fiduciary relationship that the Court should disregard the other provisions in the rules which, in my opinion, point to the existence of such a relationship. The other clause upon which the learned Counsel for the creditors mainly relied was cl. 12 (a). This clause deals with the retirement with the consent of the Directors of a member, who has been in the service of the Bank for less than 15 years. It provides that he should be paid the moneys therein specified and the interest thereon "as the Directors may, in their absolute discretion, think fit." The learned Counsel argued that the discretion thus vested in the Directors was inconsistent with the existence of a fiduciary relationship. That taken by itself may be so; but this clause concludes by saying that "the balance of such last mentioned moneys and the interest thereon shall revert to and become the property of the Company." This points to the conclusion that until such discretion was exercised the moneys were not the property of the Bank but of the individual members.

This clause was no doubt inserted to discourage the employees from leaving the

The question still remains whether . Appellant is entitled to payment in full of the balance standing to his credit in priority to the unsecured creditors.

The learned Counsel for the unsecured creditors admitted that, if there was a fiduciary relationship between the Bank and the members of the Provident Fund, the Appellant would be entitled to priority in respect of the contributions made by him which were credited to his account. This admission, in my judgment, was rightly made in view of the decision of In re Hallett's Estate (2).

The learned Counsel, however, argued that the Appellant would not be entitled to priority in respect of the contributions made by the Bank and the interest provided by the Bank.

Reference was made to the case, which I have cited, in Ex parte Blane (3); and at p. 244 Davey, L. J., says as follows :—"There is nothing in our decision in the present case which is in conflict with the decision in In re Hallett's Estate (2). In order to follow trust money, there must be a specific property capable of being identified, into which the money has been converted, and in that case this doctrine was applied in this way; it was said that, where a trustee pays his own money and also trust money into his banking account,

It is true that the Bank did not allocate any particular monies or notes to the fund, but the two classes of contributions formed one trust fund, and, if the moneys constituting this fund were mixed with the other moneys of the Bank, it was the same as if the moneys had been placed in a box as Lord Davey pointed out in the case to which I have referred.

There is no doubt that at all material times the Bank had much larger sums at their disposal than the amount standing to the credit of the Provident Fund and the Bank must be assumed to have used their own unfettered funds for their own purposes rather than the trust fund.

In addition to this, it is difficult to see how, from the point of view of business, the Bank could have made a more effectual allocation of their contributions to the trust fund than, in fact, they did.

The contributions were, in the first place, credited to the fund in the general ledger. The amounts, to which each member was entitled, were then credited to the accounts of the individual members. The Bank could not operate upon or alter the accounts of the individual members except in the manner and under the conditions specified in the rules and regulations and when the contingencies therein mentioned arose.

In my judgment, therefore, the Appellant is entitled to priority not only in respect of the contributions made by him but also in respect of the contributions made by the Bank, which contributions will include the sums equivalent to the aggregate amounts subscribed by the Appellant and the interest provided by the Bank.

In my judgment, therefore, the appeal must be allowed and the learned Judge's order set aside, with the exception of his direction as to costs, which will stand.

The direction of the Court will be that members of the Provident Fund are entitled to receive payment in full of the amounts standing to their credit in respect of the Fund in priority to the unsecured creditors and share-holders of the Bank.

The costs of the parties appearing in this appeal will be paid by the Liquidators out of the assets, when taxed as between attorney and client, and the Liquidators' costs will be taxed as between attorney and client.

RICHARDSON, J.—The Provident Fund to which the case relates is of a type which is now common enough. The nature of a fund must no doubt depend on its rules, but as I conceive, the burden of proving that such a fund as this is a trust fund should not be unduly heavy.

The fund was created and controlled by the Alliance Bank of Simla, Ltd., which is now in course of liquidation. When the Bank suspended payment on the 27th April 1923 there stood to the credit of the fund the sum of Rs. 6,79,401.

Under the rules those of the Bank's employees who fulfilled the conditions required for membership of the fund were compelled to subscribe thereto, and every half-year the Bank contributed a sum equal to the aggregate amount of the subscriptions of the members during the preceding half-year. Every half-year the Bank also contributed interest at a rate not exceeding the rate at which interest was paid in fixed deposits and not exceeding 5 per cent. per annum. The half-yearly contributions of capital were divided (by book entry) among the members in proportion to the amount of their subscriptions and the half-yearly interest was paid upon the capital amount from time to time standing to the credit of each member.

The account of the fund was kept in the general books of the Company at their head office where a subsidiary ledger was also maintained showing the amount from time to time standing to the credit of each member. Each member was supplied with a pass book which was made up and balanced half-yearly.

In the case of a member who was also a customer of the Bank in the ordinary sense, his Provident Fund account was wholly distinct from his personal account.

As to the mode in which the subscriptions of members were collected, it appears that those who had no personal accounts received their salaries in full and returned their subscriptions to an officer of the Bank whose duty it was to collect them. Members with personal accounts were credited in those accounts with their salaries in full and debited with their subscriptions. In the latter case, it is not correct, in my opinion, to say that the Bank never received the money. What the Bank did was to retain in their own possession moneys which would otherwise have been paid by way of salary.

I come then to the first point in the case, namely, that as it appears to me the money in this fund so constituted never became the property of the Bank in the sense that the relationship between the Bank and the members was merely that of debtor and creditor. On the contrary, I hold in accordance with the contention submitted by learned Counsel for the Appellant, that the amount standing to the credit of each member was his property in the possession and under the control of the Bank. I find confirmation of this view in those rules which provide that in certain events, the whole amount standing to a member's credit less his own subscriptions or the whole amount less his subscriptions and the interest thereon or the whole amount less his own subscriptions (with interest) and such portion of the Bank's contributions with interest as the Directors might in their absolute discretion think fit, should "revert to and become the property" of the Bank. These words necessarily imply that before such reversion the money was the property of the individual member whose title was to cease in favour of the Bank for a larger or a smaller proportion—as the case might be—of the amount at his credit.

A still larger power was given to the Bank by r. 9 under which the Bank had a paramount lien on the amount from time to time at credit of each member in respect of any losses due to embezzlement, neglect or default on his part. For this purpose a member's subscriptions with interest were to be treated as a deposit made by him as security for his fidelity with a liability on his part in the event of his default to forfeit all benefit in the total amount at his credit. This condition does not, in my opinion, subtract from the force of the words to which I have already referred. The subject-matter of the lien was the property, not of the Bank, but of the member and it did not cease to be his property so long as he discharged his duties faithfully. The rule says that the moneys shall be treated as security deposits—that is, deposits belonging to the members. It does not say that the moneys shall be treated as fixed deposits made by the members as if they were ordinary customers of the Bank. Nor does it appear to me to be material that the Provident Fund was included in the half-yearly balance-sheets of the Bank under the heading of fixed deposits. There is no evidence in my opinion on which it can be successfully contended that the members acquiesced in their fund balances being treated as fixed deposits. I might perhaps, if it were necessary, go further and say that it was a breach of duty on the part of the Directors not to treat the fund as entirely separate and distinct from the fixed deposits made by ordinary customers.

Nor am I impressed by the argument founded on the duty imposed on the Bank of paying interest on the capital amount at the credit of each member at a rate which might be less than the rate at which interest was earned by the Bank on their investments. The Bank or its Directors were substantial contributors to the fund and it was open to them to fix the conditions on which their contributions should be made. The fact, if it be a fact, that the Directors derived a profit for the Bank by investing the fund does not alter the nature of the fund or convert it into a loan made to the Bank by the members. The rule would not have been inconsistent with the investment of the fund as a separate fund.

It would doubtless have been more regular if the fund had been placed under the control of trustees expressly appointed to administer it, but once the conclusion is arrived at that the moneys in the fund were the moneys of the members and not of the Bank, I think it follows that the Bank or the Directors occupied a fiduciary position in regard to it.

If I am right so far, the next question, the question perhaps on which the controversy has mainly centered, is whether there was ever any concrete sum of money which the members are entitled to follow. It is at this point I think that I part company with the learned Judge who tried the case. He says (p. 47) that the members are not entitled "to claim priority over the unsecured creditors as cestui que trusts as there is no specific property in respect of which they can claim this position." With great respect it appears to me incorrect to say that the fund consisted merely of book entries and that book entries cannot be followed. The book entries were intended to represent and in my view of the matter did represent moneys in the actual possession and custody of the Bank. What the Bank did was to mix these moneys with their general balances but it is not disputed that the general balances always exceeded, and no doubt considerably exceeded, the whole amount at credit of the fund. The fund was therefore a continuous fund. The total was always there in the possession of the Bank. If proper steps had been taken, the fund so far as I can see might at any time had been invested. In fact the Directors by a resolution of 1st November 1915 did allocate certain investments to cover the whole amount at credit—though this resolution, for reasons which are not fully explained, was subsequently cancelled at a meeting held on 1st August 1916.

This view leads naturally to the conclusion that the members are now entitled to follow the fund on the principle laid down in the case of In re Hallett's Estate (2).

(2) L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 696 (1880).

The present case appears to me to be distinguishable from the case of In re Hallett & Co., Ex parte Blane (3) where no trust money was actually received by the trustee and none therefore was paid by him into his own account at the Bank. In the present case, if I am right, the moneys were received by the Bank and mixed with the general balances.

There remains the subsidiary question whether any distinction is to be drawn between the members' subscriptions on the one hand and on the other the Bank's contributions and the credits in respect of interest. It appears to me that this question should be answered in the negative. The contributions and interest may have been paid out of deposits received from customers, but as I see the matter the money was effectually transferred to the Provident Fund and was lost to the depositors just as much as if it had been spent on making bad investment. If A borrows money from B to pay C and does pay C, B has no claim against C. He has only a debt against A. There seems no reason why the Bank's customers or depositors as creditors of the Bank should be paid out of moneys belonging not to the Bank but to the members of the Provident Fund, though they happen to have been mixed up with the Bank's general balances.

In concluding I desire to add that In re Hallett's Estate (2) was discussed by Lord Haldane in Sinclair v. Brougham (4). I refer particularly to the passage at pp. 420 and 421 of the report, where Lord Haldane says this :—"But while the common law gave the remedy I have stated, it gave no remedy when the money had been paid by the wrong-doer into his account with his Banker, who simply owes him a debt, so that no money was or could be, in the contemplation of a Court of law, ear-marked. Here equity, which had so far exercised a concurrent jurisdiction based upon trust, gave a further remedy. The Court of Chancery could and would declare, even as against the general creditors of the wrong-doer, that there was what it called a charge on the Banker's debt to the person whose money had been paid into the latter's Bank account in favour of the person whose money it really was. And, as Jessel, M. R., pointed out in Hallett's case (3) this equity was not confined to cases of trust in the strict sense, but applied at all events to every case where there was a fiduciary relationship. It was, as I think, merely an additional right, which could be enforced by the Court of Chancery in the exercise of its auxiliary jurisdiction, wherever money was held to belong in equity to the Plaintiff."

So far as I can see, there is no difference between the case in which a trustee pays trust moneys into his account with a Bank and the claim is made upon his balance and the case in which the Bank themselves mix trust moneys with the general mass of the moneys which they hold. In the one case, the charge is on the balance at credit of the trustee or person in a fiduciary capacity who has paid trust moneys into his own account. In the other the charge is on the general balances of the Bank.

The importance of the fact that the Bank's general balances at all times exceeded the amount standing to the credit of the Provident Fund is brought out by the decision of Sergeant, J., in James Roscoe (Bolton) Ltd. v. Winder (5)

Re: ALLIANCE BANK OF SIMLA, LTD.

These cases were not cited at the Bar yesterday, but I have ventured to refer to them as they appear to me to confirm the conclusion at which I had arrived.

For these reasons I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the appeal should be allowed.

dra Narain Bhattacharjee for the Petitioners.

Mr. Khondkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GREAVES, J.—The Petitioners were convicted on the 6th June 1923 by the District Magistrate of Chittagong under the provisions of sec. 147, I. P. Code and sentenced to varying terms of imprisonment and they were all bound down under the provisions of sec. 106, Cr. P. Code. They appealed to the District Judge but their appeals were dismissed on the 5th September 1923. This Rule was granted against their conviction and sentence on the 27th September 1923.

The facts are as follows :— In thana Fatikchari in the District of Chittagong there is a hill stream called Dhurung khal which flows from the range of hills to the north of Chittagong passing in its course through or near to the villages of Dhurung, Sundarpur and Ekkolia. The villagers of these villages had been accustomed to use the water of this stream for drinking purposes, for domestic purposes and for cultivation and also for floating down timber from the hills. The stream in the rainy season often overflowed its banks breaking through its western bank despite the erection of bundhs from time to time. As a result the villagers on the lower reaches of the stream suffered from scarcity of water. Proposals for the erection of a strong bundh to prevent the overflow on the western bank were considered from time to time but nothing was done and eventually the old bed of the stream was dried up owing to the water escaping through the breach on the western bank. Certain persons, amongst them one Enayet Ali Chowdhuri, got settlement of the old bed of the stream and cultivated it, but the settlement was made on terms that if steps were taken to make the stream flow in its old bed it should be vacated.

Ultimately a sum of Rs. 11,000 was raised by public subscription and a bundh was erected on the western bank in 1918 and the stream flowed once more in its old bed. The erection of the bundh was made with the approval of the then Collector and under the supervision of the District Board Overseer. During the rains of 1918 a breach occurred on the eastern side of the stream and a road was damaged. Proceedings under sec. 133 were accordingly instituted against the persons who had erected the bundh for its removal and during the pendency of these proceedings a civil suit (No. 90 of 1918) was instituted against the 1st and 2nd parties in the sec. 133 proceedings claiming rights in the flow of water along the old bed of the stream, for its maintenance and for keeping the bundh intact. An order was passed in the sec. 133 proceedings in July 1919 for removal of the bundh within 7 days but this Court stayed the proceedings pending the decision of the civil suit. The Secretary of State was made a party in the civil proceedings and ultimately the suit was decreed and a perpetual injunction granted against all the Defendants including the Secretary of State, the right of the Plaintiff being established to divert the flow of the stream into its old bed. Subsequently the order under sec. 133 directing the removal of the bundh was set aside by this Court. The Secretary of State appealed against the decree in the civil suit and a compromise decree was passed on the 17th March 1921, providing (1) for the re-excavation by the Plaintiff of the old bed of the stream, some part of the work to be done before 31st March 1921 and for the erection by them before 30th April 1921 of a bundh on the eastern side of the stream in accordance with the District Engineer's report, (2) that if the work of excavation and of bundhing the eastern bank was not completed by 30th April 1922 the injunction would be cancelled and the Respondents (that is, the Plaintiffs in the suit) would raise no objection to the Defendants or any other person cutting the western bundh and bundhing the eastern bank. In June 1922 the bundh on the eastern bank was damaged and one of the Defendants in the civil suit applied to the Collector of Chittagong for permission to remove the western bundh. The Collector on the 21st June 1922 directed the khas Tahasildar to enquire and report and as a result of his report passed an order on the 29th June in the following terms:—

"29th June 1922. Read reports of the khas Tahasildar Rouzan and the solenama in accordance with which the District Judge decreed the appeal on 21st March 1922. It is clear that the conditions had arisen which authorise the Defendants without objection by the Opposite Party to cut the western bundh. I am informed that inspite of this, opposition from the Opposite Party is apprehended. The very heavy rains of the past week makes this a very urgent matter. Issue order under sec. 144, Cr. P. C., to Abdul Bari Chowdhuri, Jugabandhu Moharer and Ahmed Ullah Chowdhury and to the public generally to abstain from interfering when the western bundh is cut. Serve it through Sub-Inspector, Fatikchari and tell him to be present when the bundh is cut.

District Magistrate."

This order has been spoken of as an order by the District Magistrate directing the bundh to be cut. This in terms it is not, but I am inclined to think that in effect it really amounts to such an order for the District Magistrate, who in his capacity as Collector represented the Secretary of State in the civil suit and who was in effect a party thereto, was taking upon himself to construe the consent decree of the Civil Court and to say, that the circumstances had arisen which justified the dissolving of the injunction of the Civil Court and the cutting of the western bundh. In my view the District Magistrate had no right to usurp the functions of the Civil Court in this way, the injunction was still subsisting and could only be dissolved by the Court which granted it and it was this Court alone which could construe its own decree and say whether the circumstances had arisen which would justify the dissolution of the injunction and the cutting of the bundh. The fact that he may have acted on the advice of the Government pleader as to the construction of the consent decree cannot make his order a legal one in the view I take. The District Magistrate's order was served on the Amlas of Abdul Bari Chowdhury as he was away and they and Ahmed Ullah Chowdhury on the 4th July 1922 petitioned the District Magistrate to keep his order under sec. 144, Cr. P. Code in abeyance until the eastern breach was repaired. This he refused to do relying on the report of the khas Tahasildar. In the result a riot took place about noon on the 4th July, for when Enayet Ali Chowdhury and his party accompanied by the Police proceeded to cut the western bundh they were resisted by the villagers who were interested in its preservation assisted by other persons of neighbouring villages. One of the villagers was killed in the riot and persons of both parties were injured.

In the result criminal proceedings were instituted and the Petitioners before us were convicted. Two common objects were stated in the charge, (1) enforcing by means of criminal force or show of criminal force a right or supposed right in respect of Dhurung bundh which had been ordered by lawful authority to be cut, (2) compelling by means of criminal force or show of criminal force the persons concerned in cutting the bundh to omit to cut the bundh which cutting they were legally entitled to do. Three points were urged before us on behalf of the Petitioners—(1) Illegality in procedure, (2) that the maintaining the bundh was not illegal, but as of right as the injunction had not been dissolved and that therefore there can be no conviction, (3) that the persons who came to cut the bundh were not entitled to do so and that there was therefore no offence, it being said that the District Magistrate's order, if it was an order to cut the bundh, was an illegal order as it was not made under sec. 133, Cr. P. C. and that it could not be made under sec. 144, Cr. P. C. In addition various minor criticisms were directed against the form of the order. It was further urged that if the order under sec. 144 was not an order to cut the bundh then no one had any authority to do so on 4th July 1922 in face of the order of the Civil Court and that the conviction cannot stand and that it cannot be sustained by saying that there was disobedience of the Magistrate's order having regard to the common objects named in the charge, disobedience of the Magistrate's order not being one of these. It is not I think necessary to decide in the circumstances of the case whether an order to cut a bundh could be lawfully made under sec. 144, for this was not in terms the Magistrate's order. In the result there was no order in express terms to cut the bundh and no one was entitled on the 4th July 1922 to cut the bundh in view of the Civil Court's injunction which was subsisting on that day and this being so neither of the common objects set out in the charge have been or could be established with the result that the conviction of and sentence passed on the Petitioners must be set aside and their bonds and bail bonds will be cancelled.

PANTON, J.—I agree that the Rule must be made absolute. The ultimate cause of this disturbance was, in my opinion, the loose language of the petition of compromise which was embodied in the decree of the District Judge. It created the impression that in certain events the western bundh might be demolished without any further order of the Court. This view, as my learned brother has pointed out, is incorrect. Then again both Courts below seem to have treated Mr. Birley's order as an order to cut the bundh. This, in terms, it was not. It was an order under sec. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure forbidding interference with the cutting of the bundh when this was done by persons not acting under his order. A mob, among which were the present Petitioners, attacked the Police who were seeing to the enforcement of the order. But so far as the efforts of the assailants were directed to saving the bundh from destruction these persons were not an unlawful assembly; and since the common objects set out in the charge are limited as they are, the convictions cannot be supported.

REF. No. 140 OF 1923.

NEWBOULD, J.
C. C. GHOSE, J.

SARAT CHANDRA SEN,
Complainant,
v.
YAKUB TALUQDAR,
Accused.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 426 —Mischief—Dead tree, cutting and removal of, if amounts to an offence of mischief.

Where the accused, a servant of a landlord, was convicted of mischief for having cut and removed a dead jack fruit tree standing on the homestead of the tenant·

Held—That the act did not amount to an offence of mischief.

This was a Reference under sec. 438, Cr. P. C. made by the Sessions Judge of Bogra (G. C. Sen, Esq.), against the order of a Deputy Magistrate of Bogra (Babu M. N. Kundu), dated the 25th April 1923, convicting the Petitioner under sec. 426, I. P. C. and sentencing him to a fine of Rs. 10, in default to undergo 7 days' rigorous imprisonment.

The facts of the case will appear from the letter of Reference which was as follows :—

"Under sec. 438 of the Criminal Procedure Code, I have the honour to submit herewith the record of the marginally noted case for necessary orders by the Hon'ble Court.

The case for the prosecution was that one Kishori Mohan was a Bhuggattardar under one Jogeswari Gupta in respect of his homestead piece of land, that Kishori Mohan was at Nwadip for some time and that his brother was placed in charge of that bari, that one day in last November the landlord had a jack fruit tree worth Rs. 15 or Rs. 20 removed from the bari through his servants and that the servants thus committed an offence under secs. 426 and 352 of the Indian Penal Code.

The defences were that tree removed was a dead one, that the tree was removed under the orders of the landlord who was entitled to it, that the servants removed it bonâ fide without any criminal intention, that Kishori had left and had disposed of the bari and that the land was in khas possession of the landlord.

The learned lower Court found that the tree removed was a dead one, that the brother of Kishori was in charge of the bari, that it was not in possession of the landlord and that the servants must have shared the criminal intention of the master. He accordingly convicted one of the accused under sec. 426 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 10.

The case was tried summarily. It seems to me that the conviction is bad in law and should be set aside on the following among other grounds :–

(1) The facts proved and found do not constitute an offence under sec. 426 of the Indian Penal Code. The cutting and removal of a dead jack fruit tree do not amount to its destruction or to such a change in a property or in its situation thereof as destroys or diminishes its value or utility or affects it injuriously. A dead jack tree cannot be of less value or less utility simply because it is cut and removed. It can only be used as timber or fuel wood. It can be used for those purposes only after it is cut. Such being the case the cutting and removal do not amount to a mischief as contemplated by sec. 425 of the Indian Penal Code.

(2) The trying Magistrate was wrong in holding that a servant must necessarily share the criminal intention of his master. An absence of a finding that the servant himself intended to cause loss or damage vitiated the conviction under sec. 426 of the Indian Penal Code. The facts of the case would show that the servants had probably no dishonest intention in cutting and removing the tree and that his conduct was bonâ fide.

(3) As a number of intricate questions of law were involved this summary trial was bad.

(4) The dispute was of a civil nature and the parties should have been referred to the Civil Court."

Babu Dinesh Chandra Roy for the Accused.

Babu Satis Chandra Sinha for the Complainant.

The Judgment of the Court was as follows :—

We agree with the learned Sessions Judge that the conviction of the accused for committing mischief cannot be upheld. We accordingly set aside the conviction of the accused Yakub Taluqdar and acquit him of the charge of having committed mischief; and we direct that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Judgment, 15, May.

Putlibai and ors, Appellants,
v.
Sorabji Naoroji Gamadia and ors., Respondents.

Indian Succession Act (X of 1865), secs. 99, 100, 101, 102, how to be construed—Parsi, Will of—Conception of joint family, if may be referred to in construing such Will—Absolute gift, clause repugnant to, invalid.

The testator, a Parsi, by cl. (9) of his Will, disposed of certain houses along with certain furnitures upon trust to permit his daughter during her life and until death or marriage, whichever shall first happen, and also all his sons and also their respective families during as well as after the respective life-time of such respective sons, including the widows of any of his male lineal descendants, to occupy the said houses and make use of the said furniture free of rent during their respective life-times and until the youngest of his grandsons living at the death of the last survivor of his sons shall attain the age of 18 years. By cl. (10) provision was made for the maintenance and upkeep of all such of his children and their respective families entitled to the right of residence as aforesaid until the expiration of ten years from his death or until the death of his last surviving son, whichever should first happen.

Cl. (11) of the Will directed that at the expiration of 10 years or after the death of the last surviving son, whichever should first happen, the properties (subject to the rights of residence already referred to) were to be divided into five shares of which one was to go to each son, but for life only. If he died, the persons presumptively entitled to the corpus under subsequent provisions were to have the income till the death of the last survivor of the five sons. Then by cl. (12) each son might by deed or Will appoint in favour of his own sons or their lineal descendants, and on failure of such issue in favour of his widow and daughters or their lineal descendants. By cl. (13), in default of the exercise of this power, the share of each son, if he had left a son or issue of such son living at the death of the last survivor of the testator's sons, was to be held for the sons of such son and the issue of his predeceased sons per stirpes and if the son of the testator left no such son or issue then for his widow and daughters and the issue of predeceased daughters. Cl. (14) devised the residue of the testator's property to the executors upon trust to convert for payment of funeral and testamentary expenses, debts and legacies and to divide the balance into five equal parts and pay one part to each of his sons for his absolute use with a proviso that the trustees should not be bound to sell for ten years and should in the meantime be entitled to carry on the business of the testator:

Held, as to the interpretation of cls. (9) and (10), that although the principle of joint family may not apply to a Parsi with the rigidity with which it applies in the case of a Hindu, still the conception of joint family rights which is common in Oriental countries ought not to be left wholly out of sight in interpreting the words of a Parsi Will.

That the words in cls. (9) and (10) imported a gift to the sons of the right of residence and maintenance for themselves and their wives and families along with such servants as were required.

Semble :—Secs. 99, 100 and 101 of the Succession Act might give rise to difficulty if the claim was made on behalf of a widow and family who have survived a son.

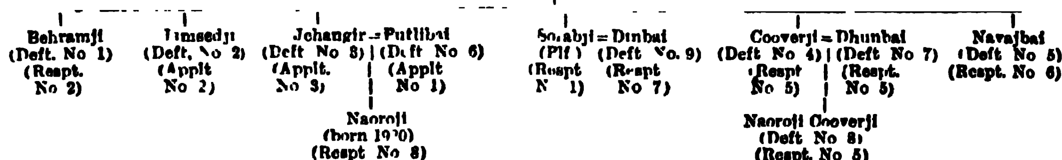
That secs. 100, 101 and 102 of the Act being applicable to persons subject to a variety of systems of jurisprudence must be construed according to the generally current meaning of the words used and apart from such technical considerations as are only appropriate in the law of England.

That the limitations in cls. 11 to 13 contravened the provisions of sec. 100, as the bequests to the sons, daughters, widows and issue of the testator's sons did not in all possible instances dispose of the subject-matter to which they applied and so failed to comprise the whole of the remaining interest of the testator, cls. 15 and 16 of the Will moreover providing for forfeiture of the interest of the unborn beneficiaries in certain contingencies.



That the postponement of the residue for ten years or until the death of the surviving son was inoperative, the interest to which this direction was attached being absolute.

This was an appeal against the decree of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay in its Appellate Jurisdiction, dated the 8th April 1920 which slightly varied a decree of the same Court in its Original Jurisdiction, dated the 14th March 1919.

The suit was brought by the first Respondent for the construction of the Will of his father Naoroji Jehangir Gamadia and for the administration of his estate.

NAOROJI JEHANGIR GAMADIA (d 1916)

The testator died at Bombay on the 21st July 1916 leaving five sons and one daughter all of full age and all unmarried, but three of his sons (Appellants Nos. 2 and 3 and Respondent No. 2) married since the testator's death. By his Will, dated the 8th March 1915, he appointed three of his sons, viz., Behramji (4th Respondent), Jamsedji (2nd Appellant), and Jehangirji (3rd Appellant) as his executors and trustees. The present appeal was preferred by the wife of Jehangirji and by an Order in Council, dated the 27th day of March 1923 special leave was given to Jamsedji and Jehangirji to join as co-Appellants.

The clauses of the said Will which are material to this report and upon which the decision of the Courts below was sought were the 9th to the 16th and they were as follows :—

"9. I devise the bungalow in which I reside at Mahalaxmi and my house No. 56 in Homjee Street Fort together with all furniture articles of domestic or personal use or ornaments and all other chattels and effects including all horses carriages with the exception of moneys and securities for money which shall be in or about the said respective permises at the date of my death (hereinafter called the said furniture and effects) to my said executors upon trust to permit my daughter during her life and until her death or marriage whichever shall first happen and also my sons and also their respective families during as well as after the respective life-time of such respective sons including the widows of any of my male lineal descendants to occupy the said premises and make use of the said furniture and effects free of rent during their respective life-time and until the youngest of my grandsons living at the death of the last survivor of my sons shall attain the age of 18 years and from and after such youngest of my grandsons as aforesaid shall attain the age of 18 years to sell realise and convert the same into money and divide the sale proceeds after deducting all expenses among such persons as shall be entitled to the proceeds of my other Bombay properties under the directions in that behalf contained in cls. 11, 12 and 13 hereof: Provided always and hereby direct that the right of residence hereby granted to every member of the family as aforesaid is strictly personal and will entitle such member personally to right of residence and use of the furniture and effects but that such right shall not entitle any member entitled thereto to transfer or alienate the same to any other person not entitled thereto and that such right of residence of any member entitled thereto shall forthwith cease and determine and become void if he or she shall attempt to transfer alienate or encumber the same or if the legal effect or consequence whereof shall be such transfer: Provided always and I hereby direct that if any of my sons entitled to the right of residence under this clause shall marry any daughter or grand-daughter by son of Ardeshir Hormasji Wadia or cease to profess the Zorastrian Faith or become a convert or shall marry a person not professing the Zorastrian Faith or not born of Parsi parents professing Zorastrian Faith then in any of such cases the trust in favour of such person and his family for the right of residence or the use of furniture herein contained shall forthwith cease and determine and become void and that such person or his wife (not professing the Zorastrian Faith or not born of Parsi parents aforesaid) or issue by such wife shall not be entitled to the benefit of such right of residence or the use of such furniture: Provided further and I hereby further direct that any female descendant of mine entitled to reside in the said premises and use the said furniture shall subject as aforesaid be entitled to do so so long only as she shall be unmarried and that on her marriage the right to reside in the premises and use the furniture shall absolutely cease and determine: Provided further and I hereby authorise my trustees with full power to add to or make improvements in and upon the said premises or to erect one or more separate houses or bungalows in the compound of the said premises and purchase additional furniture and articles for domestic use including horses carriages and motors for additional accommodation of the beneficiaries entitled to a right of residence in the said premises and for that purpose to expend moneys out of the corpus of any of my estate the trustees may in their discretion consider available therefor.

"10. I further devise all my immoveable properties in Bombay (including my Mahalaxmi bungalow and Homjee Street House mentioned in cls. 8 and 9 hereof but the same subject to the trusts by the said clauses directed) hereinafter referred to as the Bombay properties to my said executors upon trust to collect and get in the income thereof or such part thereof as may be tenanted and after defraying all charges for repairs taxes maintenance improvements and laying out of the said premises to expend the balance for the maintenance and upkeep of all such my children and their respective families entitled to the right of residence under cl. 9 hereof as shall reside in the said premises reserved for their residence until the expiration of 10 years from my death or until the death of my last surviving son whichever shall first happen.

"11. I direct that from and after the expiration of the said 10 years from my death or from and after the death of my last surviving son whichever shall first happen the trustees shall divide my Bombay properties (but the said Mahalaxmi bungalow and Homjee Street house subject to the right of residence therein granted) or the sale proceeds thereof and the investments for the time being representing the same into five equal shares or parts and hold such share as that of each such son upon trust to pay the income of each such share to such son until his death and from and after the death of each son or if he shall have died previously to pay the same to such persons as shall be presumptively entitled to the corpus under the provisions in that behalf hereinafter contained until the death of my last surviving son and from and after the death of my last surviving son to hold each of such shares upon such trusts as such son may have pursuant to the power in that behalf hereinafter given in cl. 12 hereof directed.

"12. I hereby authorise every son of mine whose interests shall not have ceased under cl. 16 hereof to dispose of by Will or deed upon such trusts and upon such conditions with such restrictions powers and provisions as he may think fit but subject to the proportion of shares and order of priority hereinafter provided and subject to cls. 15 and 16 hereof in favour of his issue widow or next-of-kin the share which shall be treated as allotted to him as aforesaid provided that he shall exercise such power in manner following that is to say if he shall have a son or sons or a lineal descendant of a son or sons not debarred under cl. 16 hereof then in favour of such son or sons or lineal descendant or descendants only and if more than one in equal shares per stirpes to the exclusion of his widow and daughters and issue if any of every daughter but if he shall have no son or descendant of a son then in favour of his widow and daughter or daughters or lineal descendant of a daughter if any but so nevertheless that the widow shall not be given more than what she would be entitled to in case of intestate succession nor more than half of the whole of the share of the son if her share according to the intestate succession amongst Parsis shall exceed half of such share and in the case of the daughters and lineal descendants of daughters or any of them being more than one then in equal shares per stirpes and that so long as any son shall have left a lineal descendant male or female the power hereby given shall not be exercised in favour of any other next-of-kin and that such son shall also have power to exclude the widow whether there shall be any issue of his or not.

"13. And I direct that in default of exercise of such power and in so far as such power shall not extend or the trusts created thereby shall fail or determine then subject to the exercise of such power I direct that my trustees shall hold the share of such son of mine upon the trusts following that is to say if any son shall have left a son or sons or issue of any predeceased son living at the death of the last survivor of my sons and whether he shall have left the widow and daughters or a daughter and issue of any predeceased daughter or a widow alone or a daughter or daughters or issue of any predeceased daughter or any of them living at the time aforesaid or not the trustees shall divide such share of my son to the exclusion of the widow and daughters or daughter or issue of any predeceased daughter and all and every of them amongst all the sons of my son and the issue of any predeceased son of my son in equal shares such issue taking by substitution per stirpes according to the law for intestate succession among the Parsis the share which their his or her father would have taken if alive at that date and if there shall be only one son the trustees shall pay the whole of such share to such son alone to such exclusion as aforesaid. But if any son of mine shall have left no son or issue of such son of my son but shall have left a widow with daughters or a daughter only and issue of any predeceased daughter or any of them then the trustees shall divide such share between the widow and the daughters or a daughter and the issue of any predeceased daughter in manner following that is to say if there shall be a widow and more than one daughter or a daughter and descendants of one or more than one daughter the trustees shall divide the share of such deceased son amongst the widow and daughter or daughters and the issue of predeceased daughter or daughters if any so that the widow of my deceased son shall be entitled to double the share of a daughter and the issue of any predeceased daughter shall take by substitution per stirpes the share which their his or her mother would have taken had she been alive at that date or if there shall be only a widow with one daughter only or the issue of one predeceased daughter only then the trustees shall pay one moiety of the share to the widow and shall pay the remaining moiety to such one daughter or divide the same equally between the issue of the predeceased daughter and if my son shall have left no son or issue of any son nor a widow but shall have left only daughters or a daughter alone and the issue of any predeceased daughter or daughters or only the issue of one or more predeceased daughter or daughters or any of them then my trustees shall divide the whole of such share amongst such daughter or daughters and the issue of any predeceased daughter or daughters or the issue of such predeceased daughter or daughters as the case may be in equal shares such issue of a predeceased daughter taking by substitution per stirpes the share which their his or her mother would have taken had she been alive at that date and if there shall be only one daughter or issue of one predeceased daughter only the trustees shall pay the whole of such share to such daughter or divide the same equally amongst the issue of the predeceased daughter and if my son shall have left no son or any issue of any son nor any daughter or issue of any daughter but shall have left only a widow then the trustees shall pay to such widow one quarter of the share and the three quarters shall be added to the remaining shares of my sons.

"14. I devise and bequeath all the rest and residue of my moveable and immoveable property whatsoever unto my said executors upon trust to convert the same or such part thereof as may be necessary into money for payment thereout of my funeral and testamentary expenses and my just debts including those if any the recovery whereof may have been barred by the law of limitation and the legacies hereby or by any codicil hereto bequeathed and divide the residue or the sale proceeds thereof and the sale proceeds of such part thereof as may have been sold or converted and form part of such residue into five equal parts and pay one of such equal parts to each of my said sons for his absolute use and benefit: Provided always that my said trustees shall not be bound to sell the said property for a period of 10 years and shall in the meantime be entitled to carry on my business with full powers as if they were absolute owners thereof and without being responsible for any losses.

"15. Provided always and I declare that in case any person beneficially entitled to any share or interest in the income or corpus of my estate (hereinafter called the said interest) shall at any time alienate or charge or attempt to alienate or charge the said interest in the said trust premises or any part thereof or in case any reason of his or her bankruptcy by or any other event (whether happening before or after my decease) the said interest or any part thereof shall or but for this provision would belong to or become vested in some other person or persons or if one or more decree or decrees shall be passed against any such beneficiary for a sum exceeding rupees twenty-five thousand (Rs. 25,000) or if he or she shall become indebted in any sum or sums exceeding at any one time rupees twenty-five thousand (Rs. 25,000) then the trusts hereinbefore in the several clauses hereof contained for payment of the said interest whether in the income or the corpus to such beneficiary shall immediately thereupon cease and become void. And in the event of such interest being a share in the income of any of the trust premises or trust funds may during the residue of his or her life pay and apply such income or any part thereof in their absolute discretion unto or for the maintenance support or benefit of all or any to the exclusion of the others or other of the following objects namely. In the event of any such beneficiary being male such male and his wife if any and children or child or remoter issue for the time being in existence and in the event of such beneficiary being a female such female and her husband (if any) and children or child or remoter issue for the time being in existence in such share and manner as the said trustees may think fit and in case and so long as there shall be a want of such objects other than such beneficiary then unto or for the maintenance and support or benefit of all or any to the exclusion of the others or other of the following objects namely the said beneficiary and the person or persons to whom or for whose benefit the said income would for the time being be payable or applicable if the said beneficiary were then dead in such shares and manner as my trustees may think fit. And after the death of the said beneficiary and the determination or failure of the life interest of such beneficiary and subject to the discretionary trust or power lastly hereinbefore contained my trustees shall hold the said share of the income upon trust for the persons who would have become entitled thereto under the provisions in that behalf contained in this my Will and in the event of such interest being a share in the corpus of my estate (hereinafter called the share in the corpus) the trustees shall hold the share in the corpus in trust for such persons who would become entitled thereto on the death of such beneficiary under the provisions in that behalf contained in this my Will subject to this and the next clauses hereof: Provided always that if any beneficiary under these presents shall be unmarried at the time of determination of his or her interest under this clause but shall marry after the determination of such interest then and in that event and so often as she or he shall marry the interest reserved for the benefit of his or her wife or her husband under this clause shall come into existence in the same manner as if he or she had been married at the time of such determination of such interest.

"16. Provided further and I further direct that if any beneficiary beneficially entitled to any share or interest in the income or corpus of my estate (hereinafter called the said interest) shall cease to profess the Zorastrian Faith or become a convert or shall marry a person not professing the Zorastrian Faith or not born of Parsi parents professing the Zorastrian Faith then on the happening of any of such events the right of the beneficiary to the said interest whether in the income or the corpus shall forthwith cease and determine and become void as if she or he had died on the happening of such event and the trustees shall hold such interest in trust for such person or persons as shall be entitled to the interest on the death of such beneficiary subject to this and the last preceding clause hereof."

On the death of the testator probate of his Will was granted to the executors named therein and they have purported to administer his estate.

On the 22nd March 1918 the Plaintiff instituted the present suit and prayed for the Will to be construed by the Court, and for a declaration that, subject to the provision for maintenance and residence of the testator's daughter (4th Respondent) and to provision being made for carrying out specific bequests the whole of the estate of the testator had become presently divisible between the sons of the testator. He further prayed that the rights and interests of the Plaintiff and Defendants in the estate might be ascertained and declared, and that the Plaintiff's share might be made over to him.

The Plaintiff whose contentions in his plaint were supported in their written statements by the 3rd, 5th and 7th Respondents submitted that the trusts created by cls. 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13 of the Will and the proviso postponing distribution for 10 years were void and inoperative. Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 5 and 6 filed a joint written statement submitting that the trusts in favour of persons other than the sons and daughter of the testator were valid and that administration of the estate by the Court was unnecessary. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3 also filed a separate written statement in their capacity as trustees.

The suit came for trial before Macleod, J., and the following issues were framed:—

(1) Whether the right of residence bequeathed by cl. 9 was valid except with reference to the sons and daughter of the testator.

(2) Whether cl. 10 was operative or valid except as regards the sons and daughter of the testator.

(3) Whether the provisions in cls. 10 and 14 postponing the division of the Bombay properties for ten years or until the death of the last surviving sons were valid.

(4) Whether the power of appointment given by cl. 12 of the Will was validly created.

(5) Whether there was any possible appointee who would be appointed under the said power to take a valid interest in the estate.

(6) Whether cl. 13 was valid and operative.

(7) Whether cls. 15 and 16 were not valid.

(8) Whether on the true construction of the Will the five sons of the testator were not entitled to have the residue of the estate divided between them subject to provisions being made for the residence and maintenance of the daughter of the testator.

On the 14th March 1919, judgment was delivered by the learned Judge who decided the above questions as follows:—

(1) and (2). The gift of a residence to the members of the family was not a gift, to a class and as there were no grandchildren in existence at the death of the testator the bequest in their favour was void under sec. 99 of Act X of 1865.

(3). The effect of these clauses was to direct an accumulation of income and was invalid.

(4) and (5). The testator gave a power to his sons to appoint in favour of persons unborn at his death with the condition that the interests of any appointee should cease on the happening of anyone of certain named events. The appointees therefore would not take the remaining interest of the testator in the thing bequeathed and it follows that the power of appointment could not be validly exercised.

(7). Valid.

(8). The residuary estate was now divisible among the five sons subject to provision being made for the residence and maintenance of the testator's daughter and a decree was passed accordingly.

From this decree an appeal was preferred by the 2nd and 3rd Defendants in their personal capacity.

The appeal came on for hearing before a Division Bench of the High Court consisting of Heaton, Acting C. J. and Marten, J., and in the course of argument terms were agreed on by Counsel representing the parties before the Court.

These terms were communicated to the Court which intimated that they would be certified as for the benefit of the minor and ordered a draft consent decree to be drawn up and submitted for approval.

On the 19th September 1919 an application was made by the Plaintiff for approval of the draft minutes of the decree. On the 7th October 1919 Defendant No. 2 asked for a declaration that the consent terms were not binding on him and on the 9th October 1919 the 2nd and 3rd Defendants also applied for exclusion from the proposed decree.

The three applications were heard together before the same two Judges who delivered judgment on the 8th April 1920.

They held that although Counsel for the 1st Defendant had consented to the terms of compromise he had apparently done so under a misapprehension of fact and such consent was not binding, and that Defendant No. 9 though represented by the same solicitors as her husband was not represented by separate Counsel and they decided that the agreement was not enforceable. They accordingly allowed the 1st Defendant's application, dismissed the other two and ordered the appeal to be re-heard.

At such re-hearing a further judgment was delivered on the 8th April 1920. The learned Judges agreed substantially with the findings of the first Court on the issues in the case and held that, cl. 9 must be confined to the daughter and five sons: the limitations intended to take effect under cls. 11, 12 and 13 after the death of each son are all void and the reversionary interests expectant on the determination of each such life estate formed part of the residuary estate of the testator.

The proviso in cl. 14 postponing the sale of the properties for 10 years was void as being repugnant to the absolute estate given to the five sons in the residue, and in the events that had happened cls. 15 and 16 could no longer apply to the absolute interests given by cl. 14.

The present appeal was preferred by Defendant No. 6, the wife of one of the executors, but by an order in Council, dated the 27th day of March 1923 Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were ordered to be struck out as Defendants and added as co-Appellants.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Appellants.—The gift under cl. 9 is not a class gift; it is a gift to the sons who in an Oriental community are representative of the whole family. The family as contemplated by the testator was a family beginning with his son and going on to his grandson.

The words "strictly personal" are merely in reference to the provision against alienation. Sec. 99 of the Succession Act does not apply; the gift is not to a person but to the family as represented by that person.

The limitations contained in cls. 11 to 16 cannot be construed until the events contemplated occur. Lalit Mohun Singh Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (1) and Narendra Nath Sircar v. Kamalbasini Dasi (2).

Cls. 15 and 16 are void under sec. 101, Indian Succession Act; sec. 100 applies and these clauses cannot defeat cls. 11, 12 and 13.

Nor is sec. 100 applicable. The whole interest has been given to the trustees and it is immaterial how it is divided up.

In Ill. (c) to sec. 101 there is a possible period when the fee is in the air; that shows that if events happen during the period allowed by sec. 101, sec. 100 is not applicable.

The law of Doe d. Blomfield v. Eyre (3) relied on by the lower Court has been excluded by sec. 100 of the Succession Act.

Sir John Simon, K. C. and Mr. J. G. Wood for the Respondents Nos. 1 and 9.—Cl. 9 contemplates three categories, the testator's (1) daughter, (2) son and (3) family and each is separately provided for.

Limitations to others than the sons are void under sec. 99.

Cls. 15 and 16 are valid, and the limitations contained in them destroy those in cls. 11, 12, 13, because they fetter the "remaining interest of the testator" and the whole remaining interest is not bequeathed and is void under sec. 100.

It is not premature to decide the question of construction because present rights are affected by it.

Hampton v. Holman (4) and In re Staples (5).

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and G. D. McNair for the Respondents Nos 3 and 5 contended that the right of residence was confined to the sons and their families and that the provisions of cls. 11, 12 and 13 of the Will were void under sec. 100 of the Indian Succession Act. So long as there is any possibility of defeasance the beneficiary does not hold the estate in the same unfettered manner as the testator and does not receive the whole of the remaining interest in the thing bequeathed.

Mr. E. B. Raikes replied.

VISCOUNT HALDANE. This is an appeal from a decree, made on the 8th April 1920, of the High Court at Bombay, in its appellate capacity, affirming with variations a decree dated the 11th March 1919, of Macleod, J., the Judge of first instance. The questions decided arose in a suit for the construction and administration of the trusts of the Will of the late Naoroji Jehangir Gamadia, who left a large estate, mainly in Bombay. The chief questions which their Lordships have to decide are whether certain provisions made by the Will for persons other than the testator's sons and daughters, relating to residential property, are valid, and whether other and more general dispositions also made by the Will can be treated as effective

The Courts below have decided that all the dispositions referred to, with certain limited exceptions, are invalid, and that consequently the property is now presently divisible between the testator's sons equally under a gift of the residuary estate, but subject for a limited period to a right of maintenance out of the income of such persons as during that period may be entitled to the benefit of such of the excepted dispositions of residential property as have been found to be valid.

The suit was originally brought by the first Respondent against the Respondents Nos. 4, 2, 3, 5 and 6, and the present Appellant. The Respondents Nos. 7, 8 and 9 were added as Defendants by order. The Respondent No 10 is a child of the first Appellant, and was added as a Defendant during the proceedings in the Appellate Court below.

The first Appellant is the daughter-in-law, and the second and third Appellants are sons of the testator, who left in addition, three other sons and a daughter, who are Respondents The second and third Appellants were Defendants to the suit, and by an Order in Council of the 27th March 1923, were ordered to be added as co-Appellants.

By the Will the testator, after declaring certain charitable trusts of a house in Bombay, as to which no question now arises, disposed by cl 9 of other houses in Bombay described as the Mahalaxmi Bungalow and 56 Hornjee Street, along with certain furniture and other effects :—

"upon trust to permit my daughter during her life and until her death or marriage whichever shall first happen, and also all my sons and also their respective families during as well as after the respective lifetime of such respective sons, including the widows of any of my male lineal descendants to occupy the said premises and make use of the said furniture and effects free of rent during their respective lifetime and until the youngest of my grandsons living at the death of the last survivor of my sons shall attain the age of 18 years and from and after such youngest of my grandsons as aforesaid shall attain the age of 18 years to sell, realise and convert the same into money and divide the sale proceeds after deducting all expenses among such persons as shall be entitled to the proceeds of my other Bombay properties under the directions in that behalf contained in cls 11, 12 and 13 hereof, provided always and I hereby direct that the right of residence hereby granted to every member of the family as aforesaid is strictly personal and will entitle such member personally to right of residence and use of the furniture and effects, but that such rights shall not entitle any member entitled thereto to transfer or alienate the same."

There then followed provisos that on any attempted alienation or transfer the right should cease, and also provisions directing that in case of any son marrying a daughter or son's daughter of a certain person or ceasing to profess the Zoroastrian faith or marrying a person who would not profess that faith or was not born of Parsi parents professing the faith, "then and in any such case the trust in favour of such person and his family for the right of residence and use of furniture herein contained shall forthwith cease and determine and become void."

By cl. 10 the immovable properties in Bombay, including the bungalow and the Homjee Street houses, subject to the trusts affecting them already mentioned, were devised on trust to expend the net income for the maintenance and upkeep of all such of his children and their respective families entitled to the right of residence under cl. 9 as should reside in the premises there reserved for their residence, until the expiration of ten years from his death or until the death of his last surviving son, whichever should first happen.

It is on these two clauses that the first question to be decided arises. It will, however, be convenient before further reference to this question, to set out so much of the rest of the Will as is required for the decision of the other questions.

Cl. 11 directed that on the expiration of the first ten years from the testator's death, or from and after the death of his last surviving son, whichever shall first happen, the trustees should divide the Bombay properties (but the Mahalaxmi Bungalow and the Homjee Street House subject to the right of residence therein granted), or the sale proceeds thereof, and the investments for the time being representing the same into five equal shares, and should hold each such share as that of each such son upon trust to pay the income of each such share to such son until his death, and from and after the death of each son, or, if he should have died previously to pay the same to such persons as should be presumptively entitled to the corpus under the provisions in that behalf thereinafter contained, until the death of his last surviving son, and from and after the death of the last surviving son to hold each of such shares upon such trusts as such son might have pursuant to the power in that behalf thereinafter given in cl. 12 directed.

Cl. 12 authorised every son whose interest should not have ceased under cl. 16 to dispose by Will or deed upon such trusts and upon such conditions with such restrictions, powers and provisions as he might think fit, but subject to the proportion of shares and order of priority thereinafter provided and subject to cls. 15 and 16 in favour of his issue, widow or next-of-kin, of the share which should be treated as allotted to him as aforesaid, provided that he should exercise the power in the manner following :—

(1) If the son had sons or lineal descendants of sons, then in their favour only.

(2) In default of these, in favour of his widow and daughters or lineal descendants of daughters.

(3) Only in default of any lineal descendants, male or female, in favour of any other next-of-kin.

Cl. 13 directed that, in default of the exercise of the power so given, each son's share should devolve on his sons or their issue per stirpes, and failing such sons or issue, on his sons' widows and daughters, or the issue of the latter. In the event of failure of sons and daughters and their issue the widow of any son was to take one-fourth of his share, and the testator's remaining sons were to have the remaining three-fourths added to their shares.

Cl. 14 devised the residue of the testator's property to the executors upon trust to convert for payment of funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies, and to divide the balance into five equal parts, and to pay one part to each of his sons for his absolute use with a proviso that the trustees should not be bound to sell for ten years, and should in the meantime be entitled to carry on the business of the testator.

Cl. 15 directed that in case any person beneficially entitled to any share in the income or corpus of the estate should (1) alienate or charge his interest; or (2) become bankrupt; or (3) should have decree passed against him for over Rs. 25,000; or (4) should become indebted in any sum or sums exceeding Rs. 25,000, his interest should thereupon cease and become void, and it was directed how such interest should be applied according as it was a share in the income or in the corpus.

Cl. 16 directed that if any beneficiary should cease to profess the Zoroastrian faith, or become a covert, or marry a person not born of Parsi parents, his interest should forthwith cease and become void as if he or she had died, and the trustees should hold such interest in trust for such persons or person as should be entitled to it on the death of such beneficiary but subjest to the provisions of cls. 15 and 16.

The questions raised in this appeal fall under two heads. The first relates to the persons entitled to the rights of residence given by cl. 9. The second is concerned with whether the five sons of the testator to whom he has given his residuary estate have become entitled to have it divided among them at once, provision being made only for the maintenance and residence of the testator's daughter, the right to such an immediate division being based on the invalidity of the limitations and powers in cls. 11 to 16, inclusive.

The case was elaborately argued in the Courts of Bombay, first before Macleod, J., and afterwards before the High Court at Bombay in its Appellate jurisdiction, Heaton, Acting C. J., and Marten, J., being the Judges. In the Court of Appeal there were two hearings, the first of which resulted in a judgment mainly concerned with procedure and ending with a direction for a re-hearing to be concerned with the merits. The re-hearing took place in the spring of 1920. The outcome was that the decision of Macleod, J., was, so far as the substance was concerned, affirmed, but for somewhat different reasons, and with declarations which differed in form from those made by him.

The learned Judges in both Courts below delivered opinions characterised by much knowledge and consideration and from the work put into those judgments their Lordships have derived much assistance. If they have arrived at conclusions on certain points divergent from those reached below, it is not from want of appreciation of the weight attaching to the views there expressed.

Turning, in the first place, to the points raised on the construction of cls. 9 and 10, these are whether the rights of residence and maintenance under these clauses extend to anyone excepting the sons and daughter of the testator. So far as the question is one of more than mere construction account must be taken of the provisions in the Indian Succession Act, under which, by sec. 100, "where a bequest is made to a person not in existence at the time of the testator's death, subject to a prior bequest contained in his Will, the later bequest shall be void, unless it comprises the whole of the remaining interest of the testator in the thing bequeathed." Sec. 101 of the Act invalidates any bequest whereby the vesting of the thing bequeathed may be delayed beyond the life of a person living at the testator's death, and the minority of some person to be in existence at the expiration of that period, and to whom, if he attains full age, the thing bequeathed is to belong. Sec. 102 provides that if a bequest is made to a class of persons, with regard to some of whom it is inoperative by reason of the rules in the two preceding sections or either of them, such bequest is void.

The rules just quoted constitute the law of British India applicable to succession to the property of everyone except Hindus, Mohammadans or Buddhists. They are, therefore, applicable to those subject to a variety of systems of jurisprudence, and must therefore be construed according to the generally current meaning of the words used and apart from such technical considerations as are only appropriate in the law of England. The Will in the present case was that of a Parsi, and although the principle of joint family may not apply to a Parsi with the rigidity with which it applies, for example, in the case of a Hindu, still the conception of joint family rights which is common in Oriental countries ought not, in their Lordships' opinion, to be left wholly out of sight in interpreting the words of a Parsi such as the author of the Will before them. When, therefore, the question arises as to the meaning of the direction in cl. 9 to the executors to permit occupation to the daughter until death or marriage, and to all the sons and also all their respective families, during as well as after the respective life-times of the sons, including the widows of the testator's lineal male descendants the testator ought to be contemplated as having before his mind the family arrangements which would be natural in the case of his own sons. As to the daughter no question arises. No reference is made to a family in her case, and it may well be that she could not properly claim a right to bring in husband and family if she had them. But in the cases of the sons their Lordships think that on the true construction of the words the title conferred on them to occupy extended to occupation along with their wives and families. The question is one purely of intention as shown by the particular words used in this Will, and their Lordships think that so regarded the words give the right to the sons themselves, and that it is only through them that it extends to those they would naturally bring in for the purposes of occupation. Servants must be included on more general grounds. Even the daughter must be entitled if she resides to have a cook and the servants necessary for a household. But, while in her case it is not natural in the same way that she should bring with her a family of which she is not the head, in the cases of the sons they may have such families and be bound by religion as well as law to have these resident with them. The individual right of occupation is, therefore, although made strictly personal by the proviso to the clause, one which, while given to the sons themselves, is of this character. The expression "personal" in the proviso signifies, in the light of the words prohibiting alienation which follow, merely that the testator desired to prohibit attempts at alienation of a son's title. As the sons are all alive, no question so far arises as to the title to reside which can be claimed for the widows or families of deceased sons.

Their Lordships therefore abstain from expressing an opinion on the title in such circumstances. They desire merely to point out that secs. 99, 100 and 101 may give rise to difficulty in the claim of a widow and family who have survived a son. It is not clear that the whole of the testator's interest in the thing bequeathed was comprised in the bequest in such a case in their favour. All that is decided on this occasion is that the words used import a gift to the sons of the right to occupy for themselves and their wives and families, along with such servants as are required. The Appellant, Putlibai, is the wife of the Appellant, Jehangir, and it is clear on this construction that she ought to be allowed to occupy along with her husband who supports her claim, if he desires it. But the title is in law that of Jehangir, the husband, and not hers. It does not, however, appear that serious additional expense has been incurred through her having joined with her husband in this appeal, and the course taken has its convenience from the point of view of the Courts. What has now been said disposes also of the analogous question raised under cl. 10 as to the persons entitled to the maintenance allowances provided by that clause.

As to the other questions raised in the appeal their Lordships have arrived at substantially the same results as the learned Judges in the Courts below. They think that, subject to provision being made for the valid bequests as to which no question arises, and for giving effect to the rights of occupation and maintenance just considered, the five sons of the testator have a present title to have the residue of the testator's estate divided between them. The Will by cl. 11 directs that at the expiration of ten years, or after the death of the last surviving son, whichever should first happen, the Bombay properties and their proceeds (subject to the rights of residence already referred to), are to be divided into five shares, of which one is to go to each son. But he is to have a life interest only. If he dies, the persons presumptively entitled to the corpus under subsequent provisions are to have the income until the death of the last survivor of the five sons. Then, by cl. 12 each son may by deed or Will appoint in favour of his own sons or their lineal descendants, and on failure of such issue then in favour of his widow and daughters or their lineal descendants. By cl. 13, in default of the exercise of this power, the share of each son, if he has left a son or issue of such son living at the death of the last survivor of the testator's sons, is to be held for the sons of such son and the issue of his predeceased sons per stirpes, and if the son of the testator has left no such son or issue then for his widow and daughters and the issue of predeceased daughters.

Their Lordships concur in the view expressed in the judgments of the Court of Appeal that these limitations contravene the provisions of sec. 100. The bequests to the sons, daughters, widows and issue of the tetator's sons thus made do not in all possible instances dispose of the subject-matter to which they apply, and so fail to comprise the whole of the remaining interest of the testator. It is obvious that he has reserved contingent rights which might well prove to be of value. The unborn beneficiaries do not take the whole interest undisposed of by reason of the title of his own sons being only for their lives. But the difficulties are not exhausted by these considerations. Cl. 15 gives over the share in income or corpus alike of any beneficiary who alienates, in any of a number of ways, and in that event creates a discretionary trust, which may extend, so far as the income is concerned, only to a part of it, for the benefit according to selection by the trustees of some others of a class of beneficiaries somewhat wider than that of those who are to take under the clauses just referred to. The 16th clause also puts an end to the title of every beneficiary who ceases to profess, or marries anyone not professing the Zoroastrian faith, and gives the interest over in favour of those who take on the death of such beneficiary. In the face of this clause it cannot be contended successfully that sec. 100 is complied with. For the whole of the remaining interest need not pass out of the hands of the trustees if there is a forfeiture of the income of the sons of the testator.

It was argued that, even if these questions may arise, they do not arise now, and that the Court ought to have refused to decide them, in accordance with the principle that declarations are not usually made as to merely future interests. But the interests are not merely future interests. If the argument based on the invalidity of the subsequent limitations just considered is well founded, the five sons have a present title to the residue subject only to the minor provisions already referred to, which title they are now in a position to enforce.

It follows from this conclusion that in so far as there is a direction in cls. 10, 11 and 14 implying a postponement of the division of the residue for ten years, or until the death of the last surviving son, that the direction is inoperative, the interests to which it attaches being absolute.

Their Lordships think that what they have said disposes of all the questions that were argued at the Bar. The reasoning of Macleod, J., is somewhat different from that of the Court of Appeal, although the result he reached was in essentials not different. Their Lordships have not thought it necessary to express an opinion on the grounds on which Macleod, J., himself arrived at in conclusion that the five sons were presently entitled to absolute interests. But they appreciate the acuteness which guided him in the distinctions he drew, and they do not desire to be understood as differing from his mode of approaching the questions he decided merely because they have themselves adopted what seems to them the simpler argument which prevailed with the Court of Appeal.

There remains the question of the form of the decree. After putting the procedure into what seemed to them a somewhat better shape by the first judgment they delivered, the Court of Appeal declared in a final judgment, to begin with, that the right of residence given by cl. 9 to each son was strictly personal and did not entitle him to take with him his wife and children as residents. With this declaration their Lordships are unable to agree for the reasons already assigned. They are of opinion that the right is one which is given at all events to each of the sons now alive individually, and is a right which entitles each son to occupy not only by himself, but with his wife and family and such servants as he requires. A declaration to this effect must be made. As to the rest of the decree of the Court of Appeal their Lordships see no reason to disturb any part of it, and it stands affirmed. That Court dealt with the costs of the suit and of the appeal in a fashion to which their Lordships take no exception, excepting so far as concerns the direction that the Appellants and the second Respondents in the Court of Appeal should pay costs. Their costs in the Courts below must be provided for out of the estate.

As to the costs of the appeal to the Sovereign in Council, they have given to this question consideration. The litigation has been occasioned by dispositions made by a wealthy testator in contravention of the law of India. The points so raised have given rise to much difficulty and complication. The first Appellant may not strictly speaking have been entitled to sue or to bring this appeal. But her husband has joined with her in a way that gets over any serious consequences arising from this. Under these circumstances their Lordships think that the costs of all parties of this appeal as between solicitor and client should be paid out of the estate. The case will go back to the Court of first instance, with directions to vary the decree in accordance with what has been now said.

They will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Judgment, 23, April.	Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 50 (2) —Presumption arising from uniform payment of rent for 20 years, if rebutted by confirmatory kabuliyat.

The landlord relied on a kabuliyat of a date later than the Permanent Settlement to rebut the presumption arising under sec. 50 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act from proof of payment by the tenant of the same rent for more than 20 years that the rent has not varied from the time of the Permanent Settlement:

Held—That the kabuliyat being a confirmatory kabuliyat could not be relied on for showing that a new tenancy had been created by it or that there had been a change of rent since the date of the Permanent Settlement.

These were consolidated appeals from one judgment and 10 decrees, dated the 25th March 1919, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which affirmed the judgments and decrees made on various dates by the District Judge on appeal from the judgments and decrees of the Settlement Officer of Jalpaiguri.

The Appellant was the landlord and the Respondents were his tenants, and the main question for determination on the present appeals was—whether the rent of the several tenants was liable to enhancement, and that depended upon the true construction of the kabu- liyat (i.e., counterpart of the lease) executed by the tenants.

The Settlement Officer in some cases held in favour of the landlord, but the District Judge and the High Court decided that the rent of the tenants was not liable to enhancement. Hence the present appeals.

The appeals arose out of a number of suits filed either by the landlord or his tenants under sec. 106 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, and the facts and circumstances of them all were practically identical. The terms of the kabuliyat executed by the several tenants in favour of the landlord were similar. It would be sufficient to state in detail the pleadings in only one suit, namely, Suit No. 21 of 1913, which was filed by the landlord on the 18th September 1913, in the Court of the Settlement Officer of Jalpaiguri, for a declaration that the rent of his tenant was liable to enhancement.

The material terms of the kabuliyat executed by the tenant in suit No. 21 of 1913 were the following:—

"You have granted an amaldari fixing the rent from this year at the aforesaid sum of Rs. 31 (rupees thirty-one) per annum. I, too, of my free will, having agreed to pay the said rent, submit this kabuliyat to the effect that I shall year by year and kist by kist pay the said rent into your office according to demands, and take dakhilas, etc., and continue to enjoy the profits. I shall not be allowed credit for any payment even of a single cowri as rent if made without any dakhila, I shall keep intact the limits and boundaries of the jote as before. I shall plant trees, but shall not cut and sell any, nor shall I excavate any large pit, etc. If I do so, I shall pay as penalty three times the value thereof. As no measurement and jummabandi are made now, you have given the amaldari at the aforesaid rent. I shall submit a fresh kabuliyat and take a fresh pottah at the jumma that may be assessed afterwards upon measurement. If I wickedly withhold payment of rent, or do not submit a kabuliyat at the jumma that may be assessed upon measurement then you shall bring the said jote into your khas possession, or let it out to another tenant and thereby make arrangement for realization of rent."

The Defendant in Suit No. 21 of 1913 pleaded that the rent of his tenancy was not liable to enhancement, and after framing the necessary issues the said Settlement Officer delivered judgment on the 1st May 1914. He held that the rent of the tenant was liable to enhancement, and concluded his finding in the following words:—

"A perusal of the recital as well as of these terms clearly points to the fact that the parties were entering into a fresh contract, and though the rent of the tenancy was left unenhanced the old contract was put by and a fresh one entered into. It cannot therefore properly be said that the tenancy in suit existed from a time previous to the date of this kabuliyat, i.e., 9th Aswin 1274. The kabuliyat clearly stipulates enhancement of rent, and therefore the rent is liable to enhancement."

The Defendant appealed from the above decision to the District Judge of Dinajpur, who came to a contrary conclusion and allowed the tenant's appeal, observing as follows:—

"The fact that this was the first document executed between landlord and tenant concerning the jote does not necessarily imply the creation of a new right. It expressly provides that the rent payable shall be the same as it was before, and the clause about the revision of the terms in accordance with the result of any future measurement does not introduce a new element or a condition which could not have been enforced against the former tenant, if there had been no sale. But this is the stipulation which I presume the learned lower Court was referring to when it said that this kabuliyat clearly stipulates for enhancement of rent. I think that it only stipulates for an enhancement of rent in the event of the area being found to be more than the estimated area."

After the decision of the said District Judge in Suit No. 21 of 1913, the Settlement Officer held in the other suits that the rent of the several tenants was not liable to enhancement, and his judgment was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge.

The landlord appealed from the decrees made against him in the several suits by the District Judge to the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal which heard all the appeals together and delivered one judgment on the 25th March 1919.

The learned Judges of the High Court affirmed the decision of the District Judge in terms following :—

"We think that the learned District Judge was right in holding that the kabuliyat did not stipulate for the enhancement of rent except in the event of the area being found on measurement to be in excess of what was then estimated To use the words of the Court in the case of Bisheswar Roy Chowdhury v. Rajendra Kumar Singh (1), 'the document is the recognition of a previously existing interest and not the creation of a new one.' It is noticeable that the rent has, in fact, remained unchanged throughout."

(1) 18 C. W. N. 949 (1914)

In the result the High Court made decrees dismissing the appeals of the landlord with costs, and he preferred these appeals from those decrees to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for the Appellant ex parte contended that, upon the true construction of the kabuliyat, the presumption raised by sec. 50, sub-sec. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, was rebutted and the rent of the tenants was liable to enhancement.

They referred to Upendra Krishna Mandal v. Jomail Khan Mahomed (2) and Nabakumari Debi v. Behari Lal Sen (3).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD BUCKMASTER.—Their Lordships see no reason for the further consideration of this case. The whole question for determination is whether or no there has been proved in the suits which have ended in these appeals anything which will rebut the presumption established by sec. 50, sub-sec. 2 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885. That presumption is stated to follow from these conditions, that :—

"If it is proved in any suit or other proceeding under this Act that either a tenure-holder or raiyat and his predecessors in interest have held at a rent or rate of rent which has not been changed during the twenty years immediately before the institution of the suit or proceeding, it shall be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that they have held at that rent or rate of rent from the time of the Permanent Settlement."

The evidence upon which the Appellant relies is to be found in the form of the kabuliyat under which the Respondents held their title. This has been the subject of consideration by the High Court and by many Judges in the various suits. The real question upon the face of that kabuliyat is whether it shows that there has been a new tenancy then created, or whether it is executed in reliance upon a pre-existing tenure.

Their Lordships have considered the document carefully, and they see no reason whatever to differ from the views expressed in the Courts through which this case has proceeded that the kabuliyat undoubtedly proceeds upon the basis that there were pre-existing rights, and consequently it cannot be relied upon for the purpose of showing that there has been a change in the rent since the date of the Permanent Settlement.

For this reason their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that these appeals should be dismissed. As the Respondents have not appeared, there will be no order as to costs.

[ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION.]

SUIT No. 3379 OF 1921.

BUCKLAND, J. 1924, 8, January.

SARUPCHAND HUKUMCHAND v. MADHORAM RAGHUMALL.

Rules of the High Court, Original Side, Chap. X, Rule 36—Jurisdiction of the Court to vacate an order for dismissal before it is perfected—Cases referred to arbitration, appearing in the special list, jurisdiction of the Court to make order in—Matters referred to arbitration, parties to be diligent in.

The principle that where an order has not been perfected, the Judge has power to reconsider the matter applies equally well to an order of dismissal for default under Chap. X, r. 36, Rules of the High Court in its Original Jurisdiction. But the jurisdiction comes to an end once the order is completed.

IN RE SUFFIELD AND WATTS (1) followed.

SCRIPT PHONOGRAPHY CO., LTD. v. GREGG (2) explained.

It does not necessarily follow from Sch. II of Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 3, sub-sec. (2) that when cases referred to arbitration appear in the special list, the arbitration cannot be superseded and such order as seems right and proper made in the suit itself.

By referring matters to arbitration under Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) parties may not make opportunities to delay the solution of their differences.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. N. N. Sarkar and Mr. B. C. Ghose for the Plaintiff.

Sir Binode Mitter, Mr. H. R. Panckridge and Mr. K. P. Khaitan for the Defendant.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows —

BUCKLAND, J.—This is an application to vacate an order made on the 14th December last dismissing a suit for default under Chap. X, r. 36 of the rules of this Court in its Original Jurisdiction.

Before dealing with the facts I will refer briefly to the point taken on behalf of the Defendants that I have no jurisdiction to entertain the application on the ground that, though a Judge ordinarily may rehear and vacate an order made by him before it is drawn up and filed so as to become effective, he cannot do so with reference to an order of dismissal. The general principle is well-established. I have been referred to In re Suffield and Watts (1), in which Lord Justice Fry enunciated the principle that when an order has not been perfected the Judge has power of reconsidering the matter, but once completed his jurisdiction has come to an end. I myself have already had occasion to consider the principle and apply it, and I am informed that many of my learned brethren in unreported cases have done the same. I thought there was no doubt about it, until learned Counsel contended that though the rule generally might be as stated, yet it did not apply where the suit had been dismissed. In support of this he has referred me to certain authorities, but from them it does not appear whether or not in all the order had been perfected. He therefore places greater reliance on Script Phonography Co., Ltd. v. Gregg (2). But the point which I have to consider did not arise. Mr. Justice North held that though an order had not been drawn up and served upon the Plaintiff it became operative as from the date when it was made with reference to the next step which the Plaintiff ought to have taken and which he did not take. This involves consideration of the matter from a very different standpoint. Certainly it does not, as I read the case, mean that a Judge is precluded from rehearing and vacating an order made by himself so long as it has not been drawn up or served because the order happens to be one of dismissal. In my opinion the point has no substance.

Another point has been taken by Mr. Sarcar which I think I should mention, though he does not now wish to rely upon it. He has drawn my attention to the second schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, sec. 3, sub-sec. (2), which provides that where a matter is referred to arbitration the Court shall not, save in the manner and to the extent provided in the schedule, deal with such matter in the same suit. That would appear to preclude cases which have been referred to arbitration being dealt with when they appear on the special list. It does not necessarily follow that when they so appear the order for arbitration cannot be superseded (and that probably would be the correct course) whereupon such order as seems right and proper could be made in the suit itself. But rather than have the matter dealt with upon this basis as that would mean further delay, Mr. Sarkar is willing that I should deal with the whole matter.

He has also submitted that inasmuch as the case did in fact appear on the protective list within six months of its institution the rule under which it was dismissed cannot apply. If necessary, I should obtain a certificate from the Registrar as to this, for the parties are not in a position fully to inform me.

Coming to the merits it appears that the delay was occasioned while the matter was before the arbitrator. Facts such as those which are set out in the petition were stated at the time when the case appeared in the protective list; but they were not proved by affidavit, and consequently I was unable to pay any attention to such statements. During the period between the 17th November 1922 and the ultimate dismissal it appears that practically nothing was done. The parties agreed in April 1923 for the time for the making of the award to be extended. The Defendant says that he was ready to agree to that course, but that it was for the Plaintiff to make the necessary application which the Plaintiff failed to do.

SARUPCHAND HUKUMCHAND v. MADHORAM RAGHUMALL.

Then the arbitrator left for his native village which further delayed matters, and the Plaintiff alleges that it was agreed that the arbitration should be proceeded with after he returned. There is nothing in support of this, no documentary evidence, and the Defendants deny that any such agreement was made. There can be no doubt that the delay was considerable, also that parties whose duty it was to take steps to make the arbitration effective did not take them, and I should be very reluctant to make any order in favour of the Plaintiff were this a suit for damages only. But it is stated--and it is not denied—that as regards Rs. 1,578-1-6 the suit is actually for the price of goods sold and delivered. If that is so, I feel that it may result in injustice not to allow the suit to proceed where the Defendant has actually had goods but has not paid the price. But, nevertheless, it ought to be made clear to parties, who wish to take advantage of the second schedule to the Code of Civil Procedure and accordingly agree to refer suits to arbitration rather than have them tried by this Court, that they may not thereby make opportunities to delay the solution of their differences. Means and processes are at their disposal if the arbitrator do not proceed with diligence and it is not sufficient excuse to say that the matter has been referred to arbitration and the fault is that of the arbitrator. But for reasons stated I vacate this order and I direct that the suit be heard. The suit will appear on the warning list on Monday the 4th February. Costs costs in the cause.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2573 OF 1921

WALMSLEY, J.
SUHRAWARDY, J
1923,
21, November.

JAGABANDHU NANDI and ors., Defendants, Appellants,
v.
ABDUL HAMID MEA and ors., Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 148A—Co-sharer's suit—Plaint, whether in compliance with the section—Decree, if rent decree.

Where a co-sharer landlord's plaint in a suit for rent mentioned what was the rent payable in the 16 as. share, what was payable in the different shares, what was believed to be due altogether for the period in suit with damages in the 16 as. and what was due to the Plaintiffs on their shares and what was payable to the other landlords in their shares, and then went on to allege that the other landlords having refused to let the Plaintiffs know what was due to them, the Plaintiffs had been unable to ascertain that and on that account they asked for a decree for the amount due to themselves alone and in the alternative prayed that if the other landlords wished to be added as Plaintiffs on disclosing what was due to them then they might be transferred from the category of the Defendants to that of Plaintiffs:

Held—That there was sufficient compliance with the requirements of sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the decree in the suit was a rent decree.

BAIKUNTHA NATH v. RAMAPATI (1) distinguished.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st of November 1921 against the decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of

(1) 27 C. L. J. 101 (1917).

JAGABANDHU NANDI v. ABDUL HAMID MEA.

Zillah Bakerganj (Babu Jatindra Chandra Lahiri), dated the 17th of August 1921, modifying the decree of the Munsif, 1st Court at Barisal (Babu Surjamani Dev), dated the 7th of June 1922.

The facts material to the report were as follows :—

The Plaintiffs brought a suit on a mortgage. Two of the mortgaged properties were purchased by the Defendants in execution of decrees for rent obtained by the Nawab of Dacca, a co-sharer landlord. These rent suits purported to be under sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the plaints of these suits following statements, amongst others, were made :—

"The Plaintiffs and the co-sharer Defendants own and possess, by separate collection, in zemindari and mirash ijara right, the 16 annas zemindary No. 3558, Tappa Sultanabad, the Plaintiffs' share being 13 as. 11g. 3k. 2kr. 4 til, and that of the co-sharer Defendants being 2 as 5g. 1k. 16 til. . . . . . .

The sum of Rs. 143-5-8 p. including damages as per account given in schedule below was due to the Plaintiffs and co-sharer Defendants from the tenant Defendants, of this Rs. 122-15-6 was payable to the Plaintiffs and Rs. 20-6-2 p. to the co-sharer Defendants. . . . . . .

Although the Plaintiffs and the co-sharer Defendants have separate tahasil, for the purpose of realising the rent of the entire mehal under sec. 148 (ka) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, it is necessary to make all the proprietors parties and to institute a suit for the whole of the arrears of rent and cesses in respect of the holding. But the co-sharer Defendants acting in collusion with tenant Defendants have not allowed the Plaintiffs to know, if any amount of rent is due to the said co-[illegible]s, and the Plaintiffs not being able [illegible] the same institute this suit for the present for the amount of Rs. 122-15-6 due to their share for the reliefs given below.

Prayers.

(ka) A decree may be passed for the amount claimed together with future interest against the tenant Defendants.

(kha) If the co-sharers desire to be added as Plaintiffs on disclosing the rent due to them, then they or any of them who so desire may be transferred to the category of Plaintiffs.

(ga) If the co-sharers pray to be added as Plaintiffs, the amount that may be due to them be added to the claim in suit and on accepting the deficit court-fees, a decree may be passed for the said claim with future interest, and for Rs. 122-15-6 separately in the share of the Plaintiffs."

After their purchase the Defendants had served a notice under sec. 167 of the Bengal Tenancy Act upon the Plaintiffs annulling their mortgage incumbrance. In the mortgage suit, the Defendants pleaded that the Plaintiffs could not enforce their mortgage decree against the properties purchased by them. The Plaintiffs' case was that the rent suit was not properly framed under sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, therefore the Defendants were not entitled to annul the incumbrance. The Munsif held that the rent suits were properly framed under sec. 148A, Bengal Tenancy Act and therefore the mortgage could not be enforced against the properties sold in execution of these rent decrees. The Plaintiff appealed and the Subordinate Judge set aside the decision of the Munsif by his judgment in which he observed inter alia :—

"The primary claim was in respect of the Nawab's share, for there was a prayer to the effect that if the Banerjees, about whose dues nothing was known, would appear and claim any arrears, they might be transferred to the category of Plaintiffs and their dues might be included in the suits. None of the Banerjees, however, appeared and the suits were decreed for the Nawab's share as claimed. Now these prayers were exactly the same as were made in the case of Baikuntha Nath Sen v. Ramapati Chatterjee (1), where it was observed that the suit was not properly framed under sec. 148A, Bengal Tenancy Act. The section requires that the suit should be for the whole rent due at the time of institution and that it is only a suit instituted for the whole rent that may afterwards be proceeded with for the Plaintiff's share with special consequences. In the present case the Nawabs started their suits for their shares of the rents. Their intention was surely to frame a complete suit but there was a defect inasmuch as they did not say in so many words that nothing was believed to be in arrear in the co-sharers' share and that consequently the claim in their own share represented the entire rent. Such a statement was made in the case of Nandalal Chowdhury v. Kala Chand Chowdhury (2) and as it was made in a case of joint collection, their Lordships found that there was a compliance with the requirements of sec. 148A. In such a case, to my mind, the question is not only one of form but of fact also and it is open to the contesting Defendants to show that the claims in the rent suits were for the entire rents but no evidence on this point appears to have been adduced by them. In the case of Brohmandannath Deb Sircar v. Hem Chandra Mitter (3), the absence of any suggestion or proof on the point no doubt led to a finding that the claims in dispute there were for the entire rent but the reason for the inference was that the contention was raised by the very co-sharer landlords who had been impleaded as pro formâ Defendants."

Babu Brajendra Nath Chatterjee (with him Dr. Sarat Ch. Basak and Babu Sachindra Nath Roy Chowdhury) for the Appellants.—The learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in holding that the rent suits were not under sec. 148A, Bengal Tenancy Act. The plaint in para. 5 distinctly says that the suit was brought under sec. 148A, Bengal Tenancy Act and that the Nawab, the co-sharer landlord, wanted to bring a suit for the whole rent that was due at that time, but he could not do so because his co-sharers, the Banerjees, who were in collusion with the tenants, would not give any information whether their share of the rent had been realised or not. I submit this was sufficient compliance with the requirements of sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

[SUHRAWARDY, J.—But the Nawab did not sue for the whole rent; he sued only for his share of the rent; he did not say that nothing was due to the co-sharers, the Banerjees, so that the arrears due to him were the whole amount due at that time.]

It was impossible for the Nawab to say that nothing was due to the other co-sharer landlords. They did not give him any information. How could he say that nothing was due to the other co-sharers when he had not and could not get any information regarding the matter. He stated in the plaint what was the real state of things. The Court in that rent suit treated the plaint as a plaint under sec. 148A and even up to this time it has not been proved that any rent was due to the other co-sharers at the time of those rent suits. The Subordinate Judge himself says in his judgment that there was the intention to bring the suit under sec. 148A but there was a defect inasmuch as it was not stated in so many words that nothing was believed to be due to the other co-sharers. He relied upon the case of Baikuntha v. Ramapati (1), but that case is quite distinguishable. There was no separate collection but here the Nawab collected his share of rent separately. The very fact that all the co-sharers were made parties, though each was entitled to sue for his share alone, goes to show that the suit was under sec. 148A.

There are some other cases in my favour, viz., Nandalal v. Kala Chand (2), Brohmandannath v. Hem Chandra (3), Prafulla Chandra v. Baburam (4) and Ramdhyan v. Pardip Singh (5). Then there is another important fact. In the rent suit which took place in 1914, the Court made a decree under sec 148A and ordered sale of the tenures under the Bengal Tenancy Act and the Defendants purchased with a power to annul all incumbrances. And this power was exercised by the Defendants and notice under sec. 167, Bengal Tenancy Act was served upon the Plaintiff annulling the incumbrances. And the order of sale made by the Court in the rent suits either rightly or wrongly is still standing, it has not been set aside and I. submit as long as that order stands, its legal consequence, viz., the annulment of the incumbrance must follow.

Babu Gunada Ch. Sen (with him Babu Prasanta Bhusan Gupta) for the Respondents —The rent suit was not one under sec. 148A, Bengal Tenancy Act. The facts were exactly similar to the facts of the case of Baikuntha v. Ramapati (1). I take my stand upon that decision. There are certain other decisions no doubt, but the facts were different. The Plaintiff in the rent suits did not say that nothing was due to the other co-sharers, he must be prepared to swear that his suit was for the whole rent and that nothing was due to the other co-sharer; unless he is prepared to swear that he cannot get a decree under sec. 148A.

[SUHRAWARDY, J.—But how could he swear when he could not get any information as to whether anything was due to the other co-sharers?]

But the law requires that he must do so, otherwise he could not get a rent decree with its special advantages. Again in para. 3 the Nawab says that Rs. 143 and odd were the whole amount due but the suit was for Rs. 122 and odd. I rely upon the case of Baikuntha Nath v. Ramapati (1) and as long as that decision is not overruled, this appeal cannot succeed.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WALMSLEY, J.—This appeal is preferred by some of the Defendants who bought at an auction-sale some property which had been included in a mortgage executed by the Defendant No. 1 in favour of the Plaintiff. The Defendants say that the sale was a rent sale at which they purchased and that, after they had purchased, they took steps under the Bengal Tenancy Act to annul the encumbrances and, in consequence, the property in their hands is exempted from the mortgage liability. The whole question turns upon whether or not the decree in execution of which the Defendants made their purchase was a rent decree and that again turns upon the question whether the plaint which led up to the decree was a plaint such as is contemplated by sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Munsif held that the plaint was properly drawn up under sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal took a contrary view and he relied on the decision in the case of Baikuntha Nath Sen v. Ramapati Chatterjee (1). It appears to me that the learned Judge has really misunderstood that decision. If the opening paragraphs of that judgment are read, it will be seen that there was practically no attempt on the part of the Plaintiff in that suit to comply with the provisions of sec. 148A of the Tenancy Act. There was only a casual reference to the fact that some share of the rent might be due to the co-sharers and, if necessary, the Plaintiff might be allowed to amend his plaint so as to secure a decree for the whole sum. That decision, I think, stands by itself on a set of facts which may be distinguished from the facts of other cases. On the other hand, there are several cases—Nandalal Chowdhury v. Kala Chand Chowdhury (2) and Brohmandannath Deb Sircar v. Hem Chandra Mitter (3) and later cases in which the facts appear to be very similar to those in the present case. All of them have this common feature that the Plaintiff in each case made an honest effort to frame his suit in such a manner as to comply with the provisions of sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the present instance, the Plaintiffs certainly tried to do so and I think they succeeded. A translation of the plaint has been placed before us and it appears that the plaint mentioned what was the rent payable annually in the 16 annas share, what was payable in the different shares, what was believed to be due altogether for the period in suit with damages in the 16 annas and then what was due to the Plaintiffs in their share and what was payable to the other landlords in their shares. Then, the plaint went on to allege that the other landlords refused to let the Plaintiffs know what was due to them and the Plaintiffs had been unable to ascertain that and on that account, they asked for a decree for the amount due to themselves alone. They also made an alternative prayer that, if the other landlords wished to be added as Plaintiffs on disclosing what was due to them, then they might be transferred from the category of Defendants to that of Plaintiffs. In my opinion, there was sufficient compliance with the law as set out in sec. 148A of the Bengal Tenancy Act in the rent suit which led up to the Defendants' purchase. Accordingly I hold that Defendants-Appellants bought the property at a rent sale and then made it free from the mortgage liability. The result is that this appeal is allowed, the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside so far as plots Nos. 1 and 2 are concerned and those of the Court of first instance are restored with costs in this Court and in the Court of Appeal below.

SUHRAWARDY, J.—I agree.

PRIVY COUNCIL.
[APPEAL FROM BOMBAY.]

VISCOUNT HALDANE.
LORD PHILLIMORE.
LORD CARSON.
1923,
Heard, 4 and 7, May.
Judgment, 7, June.

ALCOCK, ASHDOWN & Co., LTD., Appellants,
v.
THE CHIEF REVENUE AUTHORITY OF BOMBAY, Respondent.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 45—High Court, if may direct Chief Revenue Authority to state a case under Income Tax Act (XX of 1918), sec. 51—Government of India Act (9 & 10 Geo. 5, Ch. 101), sec 106 (2), if a bar—Opinion of Chief Revenue Authority that application requiring case to be stated frivolous, if conclusive—Investments in securities of capital, whether question of fact or law.

The High Courts have power under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act to direct the Chief Revenue Officer to state a case under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act of 1918, where the latter refuses without justification to do so.

The order of a High Court directing the Chief Revenue Authority to state a case under sec. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1918 would not be an exercise by the High Court "of original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue" within the meaning of sub-sec. (2) to sec. 106 of the Government of India Act, the second part of the clause being also inapplicable, as such a proceeding has not to do with the collection of the revenue but with the preliminary assessment to ascertain what that revenue is.

The opinion of the Chief Revenue Authority that an application of the person to be assessed asking him to state a case for the opinion of the High Court is frivolous and that the reference is unnecessary, is not conclusive. If there is a serious point of law to be considered, there lies a duty upon the Chief Revenue Authority to state the case, and if he does not appreciate that there is such a serious point, it is in the power of the High Court to control him and to order him to state a case.

When a capacity or power is given to a public authority, there may be circumstances which couple with the power a duty to exercise it.

JULIUS v. BISHOP OF OXFORD (3) followed.

The question whether capital placed in a particular investment is capital employed in the business or not, is not a pure question of fact upon which the decision of the Chief Revenue Authority would be conclusive but a question of law or of mixed law and fact.

This was an appeal by the above-named Appellants from an order of a Division Bench of the High Court of Judicature at Bombay (Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction) made on the 21st of October 1920 discharging a rule nisi obtained on the 20th of August 1920 by the Appellants for an order in the nature of a mandamus directing the Respondent to show cause why the Respondent should not refer to the High Court for its decision certain questions arising out of an assessment to excess profits duty made upon the Appellants by the Respondent under the Excess Profits Duty Act, 1919 (Act No. X of 1919).

The sole question in this appeal was whether the Respondent was bound to state a case and refer the same together with his opinion thereon to the High Court pursuant to sec. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918 (Act No. VII of 1918) and sec. 15 of the Excess Profits Duty Act, 1919. The facts upon which

(3) L. R. 5 A. C. 214, 222 (1880).

this question arose were, shortly, as follows :—

The Appellants were a joint stock company incorporated under the Indian Companies Act of 1882 having their registered office at 40, Church Gate Street, Fort, Bombay, and engaged in engineering, shipbuilding and general contracting work.

The Respondent was the authority appointed (by Rules made pursuant to sec. 18 (1) of the Excess Profits Duty Act 1919) to hear appeals against assessments to excess profits duty made under that Act.

During the years 1912 to 1918 the Appellants had accumulated profits of trading, and, finding that in the war years the possibilities of employing these accumulated profits in their engineering, shipbuilding and general contracting work were limited, they retained a considerable portion of these accumulated profits in their business in the form of cash and securities. These profits were bonâ fide accumulated and retained in this way and were kept in the business in the form of cash and securities, simply in order that they might be readily available for employment in the erection of new buildings and in purchase of plant, machinery, stock and materials when opportunity offered.

The Appellants' books and accounts were made up to the 31st December in each year. The following figures are a summary of an affidavit by one of the directors of the company showing profit and loss for the year ending 31st December 1918.

At 31st December 1918 the capital of the business was—

Fixed and other assets employed in "Engineering" and general contracting works as shown by balance sheet . .	Rs. 37,29,643
Excess depreciation written off assets disallowed by Collector of income tax	7,55,978
	44,85,621
Less—Liabilities as per balance sheet . . .	22,07,985
Capital excluding all cash and investments . .	22,77,636
Cash and investments as per balance sheet . .	50,13,786
Total capital at 31st December 1918 .	Rs. 72,91,422
The Appellants in their return deducted from such total the profits for the year 1918 under sec. 1 of Sch. II of the Excess Profits Duty Act, 1919 .	16,17,710
Capital employed as claimed by Appellants .	Rs. 56,73,712

On the 5th of August 1919, the Appellants made a return to the Collector of Taxes of their profits for the purposes of the Excess Profits Duty Act, 1919, under which excess profits duty at the rate of 50 per cent. was charged upon the excess of the profits of an accounting period over the standard profits ascertained as provided by the Act. [The Indian Excess Profits Duty is chargeable in respect of the profits of any business carried on in British India on the amount by which the profits in the accounting period exceed the standard profits.] By sec. 5 of the Excess Profits Duty Act, 1919, the profits of the business are the "taxable income" as finally ascertained for the purposes of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, which (by sec. 14 of the latter Act) is the aggregate income from all sources (with certain exceptions not relevant here) of the assessee, including income from securities.

In making this return, the Appellants (as they were entitled to do) elected that their standard profits should be computed as provided by sec. 6 (1) (b) (iii) of the Act. They accordingly selected the years 1913, 1914, 1916 and 1917 and claimed that their profits of the accounting period did not reach the point which involved liability to the duty.

The ground upon which this claim was based was that all the assets of the Company representing issued capital and accumulated profits earned by the Appellants should be treated as capital employed in the business within the meaning of the proviso to sec. 6 (1) of the Act, and, on this contention, the Appellants would on the figures -as to which there was no dispute - be under no liability to excess profits duty for the accounting period, namely, the year ending 31st of December 1918. This contention was rejected by the Collector of Taxes who refused to treat the assets represented by cash and securities above referred to as forming part of the capital employed in the Appellants' business save to the extent of Rs. 6 lakhs and allowed only as the total capital employed in the Appellants' business the sum of Rs. 16 lakhs. The Collector of Taxes took the view that, so far as the assets were in the form of cash and securities, and not of engineering or contracting plant or implements, they did not (save to the extent of the 6 lakhs above-mentioned) form part of the capital employed in the Appellants' business and should not be taken into account for the purposes of the section. The Collector's decision will be found in the record. No ground was given by him for the elimination of Rs. 12 lakhs of the capital employed represented by assets other than cash and securities, namely, the balance of the Rs. 22,77,636. He did not fix the standard capital required by the Act.

On the 30th of October 1919 the Appellants appealed against this assessment to the Respondent. The appeal was heard on the 3rd of August 1920 by the Respondent who, on the 5th of August 1920, confirmed the assessment.

At the hearing of the appeal, the Appellants contended that the whole of the cash and securities above-mentioned standing in their balance sheet for the year ending 31st December 1918 should be taken into account in arriving at the amount of capital employed in their business and, pursuant to sec. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918 (which provides for a statement of a case on a point of law), and sec. 15 of the Excess Profits Duty Act, 1919, applied to the Respondent to draw up a statement of the case setting forth the question and to refer the same together with his opinion thereon to the High Court for its decision. Notwithstanding this application, however, the Respondent, by the order referred to, held that as the law was quite clear on the point it was unnecessary to refer the case to the High Court and has in fact refused to refer it.

The Appellants accordingly presented a petition, dated the 19th of August 1920 to the High Court under the provisions of sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, 1877 (Act No. I of 1877) praying that the Respondent might be ordered to refer the question together with his opinion thereon for the decision of the High Court and on the 20th of August 1920 obtained from the Honourable Mr. Justice Setalvad an order nisi to that effect. This Act provides (sec. 45) that any of the High Courts of Judicature at Fort William, Madras and Bombay may make an order requiring any specific act to be done or forborne, within the local limits of its Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, by any person holding a public office, whether of a permanent or a temporary nature, or by any corporation or inferior Court of Judicature.

On the 13th of October 1920, the Appellants moved the High Court for a rule absolute. The motion was heard by a Division Bench of the High Court consisting of Sir N. C. Macleod (the Chief Justice) and the Honourable Mr. Justice Fawcett who by order, dated the 21st of October 1920, discharged the rule nisi. The High Court took the view that the question as to what was the capital employed in the business for the purposes of the Excess Profits Duty Act was a question of fact and that no point of law was involved, and that only such part of the assets as was found by the Collector to be at the end of the accounting period in the form of engineering, shipbuilding and contracting works or plant, plus such part of the cash and securities as the Collector had thought proper to allow, was capital employed in the business for the above purposes.

On the 19th of January 1921 the Appellants, feeling themselves aggrieved by the order of the High Court, presented a petition to the High Court (in appeal from its Original Civil Jurisdiction) for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. The petition came on for hearing on the 17th of February 1921 when the High Court (consisting of the Honourable the Chief Justice and the Honourable Mr. Justice Shah) reserved judgment.

On the 2nd of March 1921 the Court certified that the case was fit for appeal to His Majesty in Council. The judgments delivered by the members of the Court are set out in the record.

The Appellants duly complied with all the conditions imposed upon them in relation to their appeal to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs Clauson, K. C., Latter, K. C. and Cyril King for the Appellants.—There is a statutory duty upon the Chief Revenue Authority to state a case for the opinion of the Court under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act, 1918 and it is not material that the duty is in relation to income tax.

In order to enforce that duty the High Court has power in the nature of a mandamus under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act.

The memorandum of association contained power to invest funds which become capital "employed in the business" within the meaning of the Excess Profits Duty Act, 1919.

The words "employed in the business" do not refer merely to funds used in the trade, it can include capital invested within the powers of the memorandum.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Reginald Hills for the Respondent.—This was purely a revenue matter and the High Court had no jurisdiction because of sec. 106, sub-sec. (2) of the Government of India Act, 1915.

Income Tax Act, 1918, give the Revenue Authorities a discretion as to whether or not they will take the opinion of the High Court. There is no imperative duty laid upon them such as to justify an order in the nature of a mandamus.

The words of the Act "it shall be lawful" do not compel the Revenue Authority to exercise its power and the principle of Julius v. Bishop of Oxford (3) is not applicable.

In any event the High Court has expressed an opinion unfavourable to the Appellant so that no useful purpose would be served by ordering it to consider the matter, as from their decision no appeal lies.

Tata Iron and Steel Co. v. Chief Revenue Authority (5).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PHILLIMORE.—This is an appeal from an order made by the High Court of Judicature at Bombay on the 21st October 1920, discharging with costs a rule nisi directed to the Chief Revenue Authority of Bombay, whereby the Authority was called upon to show cause why he should not be ordered to refer to the Court for its decision certain questions stated in Ex. D to a petition presented to him, or in the alternative why he should not hear and determine according to law the application of the Petitioners. The following is the matter in dispute. The applicants for the rule, Alcock, Ashdown and Company, Limited, the present Appellants, were called upon under the Indian Excess Profits Duty Act, 1919, to make a statement of their profits for the year 1918. Under the powers given them by the Act they elected to have the standard of their profits ascertained upon an average of the four years 1913, 1914, 1916 and 1917. They thereupon made a return of the average capital and the average profits of these four years and of their capital and profits for the year 1918, whereby they purported to show that the percentage of profit for 1918 was not in excess of the average profit on the average capital of the four standard years; and they claimed, therefore, to be exempt from excess profits duty.

The Collector of income tax, however, made an assessment upon them whereby he brought out their excess profits at upwards of 17 lacs of rupees, on which a 50 per cent. duty would have to be paid after some minor deduction had been made, and he required the payment of this duty by three instalments.

The Appellants appealed to the Chief Revenue Authority, and their appeal was heard on the 3rd August 1920. At the hearing of that appeal, Counsel for the Appellants asked the Authority to state a case for the opinion of the High Court, and by letter dated the 5th their agents set out the questions upon which they desired the case to be stated. In the meanwhile, and apparently before this letter had reached the Authority, he, by letter dated the 5th, informed them that at the hearing he had confirmed the assessment made by the Collector of income tax. In his letter he further said that it had been decided that as the law was quite clear on the point, it was unnecessary to refer the case to the High Court.

On the 11th August the Authority sent an answer to the agent's letter of the 5th—which, by some accident, is referred to as dated the 4th. This answer was to the following effect :—

"I have the honour to state that the appeal was finally decided by me on the 3rd instant. A reference to the High Court was deemed unnecessary.

"In calculating the income liable to duty, income from investments excluded from business capital has been specifically excluded This is added as, from your letter under reply, you seem to be under some misapprehension and think that such income has also been charged with duty."

Thereupon the Appellants obtained the rule nisi. In their petition to the Chief Revenue Authority they had made the following averment :—

"The Collector has disregarded the first proviso to sec. 6 (1) of the Act, and has held that the investments of the Petitioner did not form part of the business capital of the Petitioner, notwithstanding that under secs 6 (1) (b) (iii), under which the Petitioner is to be assessed, the interest on such securities is to be brought into account and notwithstanding the nature of the Petitioner's business The Collector has arrived at his assessment by a compromise which is not justified by the provisions of the Act"

The application for the rule was supported by an affidavit of which the following are material passages .—

"During the war it was impossible for Messrs Alcock, Ashdown and Company Limited, to expand their business by the erection of new buildings and it was impossible for them to obtain plant, machinery, stock and materials, and that therefore part of their profits which were bonâ fide retained in the said business for the purpose of expanding the same had to be retained in the form of cash and investments pending such time as they were able to expend the same for the purposes aforesaid In addition to such accumulated profits the said cash and investments included Rs 22,07,981-5-3, which the Company owed.

"On the 31st December 1917, their cash and investments amounted to Rs 23,70,178 and on the 31st December 1918, to Rs. 50, 13,786.

"By the 31st December 1919, the said item of cash and investments had been reduced to Rs. 32,77,555, and now stands at the sum of Rs. 30,15,292."

And there was a further submission that an allowance of 6 lacs was the allowance of an arbitrary figure.

On showing cause the Authority exhibited to an affidavit copies of "the decisions," in other words, the reasons for the decisions, of the primary Revenue Authority and of the Chief Authority on appeal. From these it appears that both the Revenue Authorities had purported to follow the principle of construction laid down by them in a previous case, whereby they had arrived at the conclusion that in calculating capital, only the capital actually employed in the business was to be taken into account; that in this case the Income Tax Collector found that 50 lacs of rupees were invested in securities or kept as fixed deposits in other concerns, that in his view this money was money employed in those concerns and not in the business of the company, that from the statement of the representative of the Appellants it appeared that at the most about 16 lacs would be required in the near future for the expansion of the business, that the whole of it could be safely disregarded in computing capital employed in the business, but however that might be, he (the Collector) had taken an arbitrary figure of about 6 lacs which he thought might be regarded as capital temporarily set aside but required for business purposes, and regarding the rest as capital not to be employed in the business, had reduced the capital from over 56 lacs to about 16, and therefore brought out a huge profit.

The Chief Revenue Authority, while generally agreeing and confirming, said that he considered the Collector's allowance of 6 lacs was liberal.

When the matter came on for argument before the High Court, the first question to be decided was whether the Court had any jurisdiction to order the Authority to state a case. This was argued before the High Court upon the language of sec. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1918, which is made by the Excess Profits Duty Act applicable also to cases under this Act. But in the case prepared for their Lordships' Board and in the argument before their Lordships, the objection to the jurisdiction was put more broadly. The High Court of Bombay in considering this point merely applied itself to the question whether or not the Authority had a duty in the circumstances to state a case. But as the point was raised before their Lordships, it took the form of saying that even if the Authority had a duty, the Court could not require him to exercise it; and for this purpose reliance was placed upon the well-known general purview of Indian legislation which excludes matters of revenue from the consideration of the ordinary Civil Courts, the principle being exemplified in the case of Spooner v. Juddow (1) and upon sec. 106 (2) of the Government of India Act, and lastly, upon a recent decision of the High Court of Madras, given since this case was before the Court of Bombay [Chief Commissioner of Income Tax, Madras v. North Anantapur Gold Mines, Limited (2)].

Upon the point thus broadly stated, their Lordships have no difficulty in pronouncing a decision. To argue that if the Legislature says, that a public officer, even a Revenue Officer, shall do a thing, and he without cause or justification refuses to do that thing, yet the Specific Relief Act would not be applicable, and there would be no power in the Court to compel him to give relief to the subject, is to state a proposition to which their Lordships must refuse assent. Sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act enables any of the three High Courts to "make an order requiring any specific act to be done or forborne . . . . . by any person holding a public office whether of a permanent or a temporary nature, or by any corporation or by any Court of Judicature," provided that "such doing or forbearing is under any law for the time being in force, clearly incumbent on such person or Court in his or its public character or on such corporation in its corporate character" and subject to other certain conditions not material to this case.

It is true that the section is not to authorise the High Court "to make any order which is otherwise expressly excluded by any law for the time being in force." The excluding law is suggested to be the already cited clause in sec. 106, sub-sec. (2) of the Government of India Act, which is in the following terms:—

"The High Courts have not and may not exercise any original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, or concerning any act ordered or done in the collection thereof according to the usage and practice of the country or the law for the time being in force."

In their Lordships' view, the order of a High Court to a Revenue Officer to do his statutory duty would not be the exercise of "original jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue," and the latter part of the clause need not be considered, for the proceedings in this case had not to do with the collection of the revenue, but with the preliminary assessment to ascertain what that revenue was.

ALCOCK, ASHDOWN & CO., LTD. v. THE CHIEF REVENUE AUTHORITY OF BOMBAY.

There remains, however, the question which was also considered by the High Court of Madras, though rather as a branch of the question on which their Lordships have just pronounced their decision than as a separate point in itself, and which was considered by the High Court of Bombay in the present case and in another case which has recently been before their Lordships. This question the Bombay Court determined adversely to the Chief Revenue Authority, holding that there would be under sec. 51 of the Income Tax Act a duty to state a case if a point of law arose. Here it is necessary to refer somewhat in detail to the provisions of the two Acts. Sec. 15 of the Excess Profits Duty Act, 1919, says that the provisions of various sections, including sec. 51, "of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, shall apply, with such modifications, if any, as may be prescribed, as if the said provisions referred to excess profits duty instead of to income tax, and every officer or authority exercising powers under the said provisions may exercise the like powers under this Act in regard to excess profits duty as he or it exercises in regard to income tax under the said Act."

Sec. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act must be set out at length :—

"51. (1) If, in the course of any assessment under this Act or any proceeding in connection therewith other than a proceeding under Chap. VII, a question has arisen with reference to the interpretation of any of the provisions of this Act or of any rule thereunder the Chief Revenue Authority may, either on its own motion or on reference from any Revenue Officer subordinate to it, draw up a statement of the case and refer it with its own opinion thereon, to the High Court, and shall so refer any such question on the application of the assessee, unless it is satisfied that the application is frivolous or that a reference is unnecessary.

"(2) If the High Court is not satisfied that the statements contained in the case are sufficient to enable it to determine the questions raised thereby, the Court may refer the case back to the Revenue Authority by which it was stated, to make such additions thereto, or alterations therein, as the Court may direct in that behalf,

"(3) The High Court upon the hearing of any such case shall decide the questions raised thereby, and shall deliver its judgment thereon containing the grounds on which such decision is founded, and shall send to the Revenue Authority by which the case was stated a copy of such judgment under the seal of the Court and the signature of the Registrar; and the Revenue Authority shall dispose of the case accordingly, or, if the case arose on reference from any Revenue Officer subordinate to it, shall forward a copy of such judgment to such officer, who shall dispose of the case conformably to such judgment

"(4) Where a reference is made to the High Court on the application of an assessee, costs shall be in the discretion of the Court."

It is said that, though under this section the Chief Revenue Authority may, if he thinks fit, draw up a statement of the case and refer it to the High Court, he is not bound to do so, even on the application of the person to be assessed, if he is satisfied that the application is frivolous or that the reference is unnecessary, and that the Authority has in the present case shown that he is satisfied that the application was frivolous and the reference was unnecessary.

Their Lordships, however, agree with the Bombay High Court that this is too narrow a construction of the section. Take first the case which is last in the clause. If the assessee applies for a case, the Authority must state it, unless he can say that it is frivolous or unnecessary.

He is not to wait for the Court to order him to do it; it will be a misfeasance and a breach of the statutory duty if he does not do it. Put that case aside. The rule here is supported upon the earlier part of the section. No doubt that part does not say that he shall state a case, it only says that he may. And as the learned Counsel for the Respondent rightly urged, "may" does not mean "shall." Neither are the words "it shall be lawful" those of compulsion. Only the capacity or power is given to the Authority. But when a capacity or power is given to a public authority, there may be circumstances which couple with the power a duty to exercise it. To use the language of Lord Cairns in the case of Julius v. The Bishop of Oxford (3):—

"There may be something in the nature of the thing empowered to be done, something in the object for which it is to be done, something in the conditions under which it is to be done, something in the title of the person or persons for whose benefit the power is to be exercised, which may couple the power with a duty, and make it the duty of the person in whom the power is reposed to exercise that power when called upon to do so."

In their Lordships' view, always supposing that there is a serious point of law to be considered, there does lie a duty upon the Chief Revenue Authority to state a case for the opinion of the Court, and if he does not appreciate that there is such a serious point, it is in the power of the Court to control him and to order him to state a case.

So far their Lordships are in agreement with the High Court. There remains the question which has led to this appeal. The High Court has apparently considered that there is no serious point of law involved in this case. It was, indeed, contended by Counsel for the Respondent that the High Court had accepted the position that there was a question of law and then had gone on to decide it adversely to the Appellants; but their Lordships think this contention inadmissible. If there is a point of law, it ought to be decided in a regular manner and upon proper materials; and here it should be said that the manner is not regular and that it is at least doubtful whether the materials are complete.

Their Lordships must therefore consider whether the High Court should have ordered a case to be stated. This, as it appeared to the learned Chief Justice, depended upon the question whether the Chief Revenue Authority had reasonable grounds for being satisfied that a reference was unnecessary. This is not quite the way in which their Lordships would put it. But to proceed: In the view of the Chief Justice profits not employed in the business are not capital for the purpose of this Act, and profits intended to be employed in the business are not therefore necessarily to be treated as capital, and finally, whether profits are or are not employed in the business is a question of fact to be determined by the Authority. Fawcett, J., agreed, and held that it was not shown to be clearly incumbent on the Chief Revenue Authority to refer these questions to the Court, and that he had reasonable grounds for being satisfied that the reference was unnecessary.

Quite recently, in the case of The Gas Lighting Improvement Company, Limited v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue (4), before the House of Lords, a decision has been given on the English Excess Profits Act, the terms of which, so far as they differ, are less favourable to the present Appellants than the terms of the Indian Act. In this case the House decided against the tax-payer that the question whether capital placed in a particular investment was capital employed in the business or was not, was not a pure question of fact upon which the decision of the Income Tax Commissioners would be conclusive but was a question of law or of mixed law and fact, the decision of the Commissioners upon which would be open to review; and accordingly it was reviewed, and judgment was given against the tax-payer that the particular investment in question did not form part of the capital of the business.

It follows that the decision of the Authority in this case could not be held to be conclusive as a decision upon a mere question of fact. Nor did the Chief Revenue Authority or his subordinate so treat it. They treated it as a matter of principle and refer to their judgments in a previous case as laying down the principle, that is laying down the law upon the subject.

In their Lordships' view, an important question of law upon the construction of the statute is involved. This may be most tersely expressed by asking the question what are the interest-bearing securities which form part of the assets of the business and are therefore to be treated as part of the capital; and one guide in arriving at this conclusion may well be the difference of language between the later Indian and the earlier English Act.

It is true that these are not Acts of the same legislature, and that the Indian Legislature and the draftsman whom it employed may have thought it unnecessary to introduce provisions like those contained in paras. 8 and 12 of Part I of the fourth schedule of the English Act, and may have meant no variation from the scheme of the English Act when it and he introduced the words "securities" and spoke of interest on certain securities as being profits from the business. Too much stress, therefore, should not be laid on these differences. At the same time, it is noteworthy that the Indian Act takes notice of the English Act in Sch. I, para. 4; and the Court may come to the conclusion that the reason for the differences between the two Acts is not a mere difference of drafting, but a deliberate variation due to the different conditions under which business is carried on in India and in England.

On the whole, their Lordships think that the Chief Revenue Authority should have been ordered to state a case and they will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, and that the rule nisi should have been converted into an order absolute in the terms of the first alternative expressed in the rule nisi, and that the Appellants should have their costs in the High Court and before this Board.

IVES & BARKER v. WILLANS (1) explained.

This was an appeal against the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose, dated the 8th of January 1924, passed in the exercise of Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

The Advocate-General (Mr. S. R. Das) and Mr. S. C. Roy for the Appellants.

Mr. N. N. Sarkar and Mr. P. N. Chatterjee for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose. The order of the learned Judge was made on the 8th of January 1924, whereby he dismissed an application made by the Karnani Industrial Bank under sec. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act that the suit in question should be stayed.

The circumstances of this case, as far as my experience goes, are certainly out of the ordinary.

It appears that the suit in question was brought by Satya Niranjan Shaw and another for arrears of rent, mesne profits, damages and other reliefs against the Bank which was holding certain premises under a lease granted by the Plaintiffs. The summons was served upon the Defendant Bank and the Bank entered appearance on the 19th of November last year. It then appeared that the Bank had brought a suit against one of the Bank's sub-tenants; and, the learned Judge, apparently thinking that it was desirable that these two suits should be disposed of at or about the same time, made an order that the suit against the Bank by the Plaintiffs and the suit by the Bank against the sub-tenants should be placed in the daily list before the learned Judge to be mentioned. On the 22nd of November those two suits were placed in the learned Judge's daily list; and, then what happened may be taken from the affidavit which has been filed on behalf of the Plaintiffs. Mr. H. D. Bose on behalf of the Plaintiffs mentioned this suit to the Court when Mr. Justice Ghose asked the learned Counsel appearing for the Defendant Bank when his clients would file their written statement, whereupon the said learned Counsel asked for a certain time but the learned Judge directed that the Defendant Bank should file their written statement on Monday following, i.e., on the 26th November and the learned Counsel for the Defendant thereupon pressing for a little longer time, the Court ordered the Defendant Bank to file their written statement by Wednesday following, i.e., on the 28th November and also made a cross order for discovery by Friday following, i.e., to say on the 30th November and also an order for inspection. The learned Judge summarised the proceedings as follows : —"This case was set down on the list on a particular date last month to be mentioned. Counsel on behalf of the present applicant appeared and informed me that no written statement had been filed. Upon that there was a discussion as to how much time was wanted for the purposes of filing the written statement. Learned Counsel asked for a longer time than I was prepared to give and ultimately I allowed a certain period to the applicant to file his written statement, and there was cross order for discovery."

In my judgment the question in this case depends upon whether the application by the learned Counsel for the Defendant Bank for further time to file the written statement under the circumstances, which I have mentioned, amounted to "taking a step in the proceedings" within the meaning of sec. 19 of the Indian Arbitration Act. The section provides that the party against whom any legal proceedings have been taken may at any time after appearance and before filing a written statement or taking other steps in the proceedings apply to the Court to stay the proceedings. The notice of the application in the present case was served on the 3rd of December and the date for which the notice was given was the 10th of December. I do not see how it is possible for us to hold that the application which the learned Counsel for the Defendant Bank made for further time to file the written statement was not a step in the proceedings. The learned Advocate-General appearing for the Appellant Bank has pointed out that the suit was put on the list at the instance of the learned Judge and it was the learned Judge who in the first instance asked the learned Counsel what time he would require for the written statement. However, if the Bank were intending to object to the jurisdiction of the Court and were intending to make an application to stay the suit on the ground that the matter should be referred to arbitration, the proper answer to the learned Judge's question for the learned Counsel would have been that the Bank did not intend to file any written statement, inasmuch as they were going to apply for a stay of the suit and that they did not desire to take any step in the proceedings. With respect to that the learned Advocate-General has stated that the learned Counsel was not aware of the facts and was not properly instructed. The answer to that is that if that were so, the learned Counsel ought to have applied for an adjournment before taking any step at all, but he did in fact apply for further time to file a written statement. I am unable to say that that was not taking a step in the proceedings. It may be said in a sense that the learned Counsel was unexpectedly put into a somewhat awkward position and that the point is a technical one. On the other hand, the position is governed by the words of the section and, the only question at issue at the present moment is whether the dispute between the parties should be tried by arbitrators or by a Judge of the Court.

For these reasons in my judgment this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

RICHARDSON, J.—I agree.

The point is a technical one and I see no escape from the words of sec. 19 of the Act. The party who appears by Counsel in a suit and applies by such Counsel for time to file a written statement appears to me to be taking a step in that suit. The case differs in that respect from the case of Ives & Barker v. Willans (1) to which we were referred, where there was no such application. It is quite true that the step here was taken before a copy of the plaint was received; but surely the concise statement of claim which had been received coupled with the notice to quit the premises which had also been received should have put the Defendant Bank on their guard. They knew of course all about the arbitration clause in the lease and, after all, if the point is a technical one, we are not deciding the dispute between the parties on the merits; the only question now is whether the dispute should be tried by the Court or by arbitrators.

JOHN DICKINSON & Co., LD.

Calcutta Rent Act (III, B. C., of 1920), secs. 2, 4 and 15—Furnished premises—Applicability of the Act—Right of the Controller to fix the hire of furniture—Whether the Act determines the agreement by parties—Right to recover agreed rent after rent has been standardised

On 3rd February 1920 the Defendant Company agreed to take the lower flat of a house at Rs. 600 a month including furniture and entered into possession on the 1st June 1920. On 14th October 1920 the Defendant Company applied to the Rent Controller for standardisation of rent and on 30th March 1921 the Rent Controller fixed a standard rent for the premises at Rs. 275 per month including the furniture. The Plaintiff applied to the President of the Tribunal who decided that the Controller had no power in fixing the standard rent to include hire of furniture and fixed it at Rs. 200 per month for the premises unfurnished. Since then rent had been paid at the rate so fixed and the Plaintiff brought this suit to recover the balance of the amount agreed to be payable under the agreement of the 3rd February 1920:

Held—That the Plaintiff was entitled to the balance.

The Rent Controller can fix the standard rent of "premises" where the "premises" are comprised in a furnished flat but he has no power to fix the hire of furniture.

Though the Controller or the Tribunal, as the case may be, may make an order standardising the rent to be paid in respect of premises when such premises have been let at a given rent which includes payment for the use of furniture, the parties to the agreement remain under their original liability whatever effect such order may have as between other parties or in other circumstances.

The order does not determine the agreement.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment of the Hon'ble Mr Justice Buckland.

Mr. T. Ameer Ali for the Plaintiff.

Mr. H. R. Pankridge (with Mr. Westmacott) for the Defendant Company.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

BUCKLAND, J.—This is a suit to recover the sum of Rs. 5,860 as rent of a furnished flat in No. 12, Loudon Street and a small amount of Rs. 86-7 which is not in dispute. The material facts as to which also there is no dispute are as follows:—By a letter dated the 3rd February 1920 the Defendant Company agreed to take "the lower flat of the house at the above (12, Loudon Street) address at Rs. 600 a month including furniture" from the 1st of May next till the 31st October 1921. The Defendant Company entered into possession on the 1st June 1920. On the 14th October 1920 the Defendant Company applied to the Rent Controller appointed under the Calcutta Rent Act and on the 30th March 1921 the Rent Controller fixed a standard rent for the premises at Rs. 275 per month including tho furniture. The Plaintiff applied to the Tribunal which decided that the Controller had no power in fixing a standard rent to include hire of furniture and fixed it at Rs. 200 per month for the premises unfurnished. Since that time rent has been paid at the rate so fixed and the Plaintiff claims to recover the balance of the amount agreed to be payable under the agreement of the 3rd February 1920.

This raises an interesting point of law under the Act and the contentions submitted on behalf of the Plaintiff are two :—(1) That the Act does not apply to a furnished flat (or house), and (2) that if the Rent Controller (or Tribunal) has power to fix a standard rent in respect of premises let furnished but upon the basis of their being unfurnished the lessor is still entitled to the full sum agreed upon.

The preamble of the Act states that it is expedient to restrict temporarily the increase of rents in Calcutta. "Premises" are defined by sec. 2 (e) as follows :—"'Premises' means any building, or part of a building, or hut let separately for residential, charitable, educational, or public purposes, or for the purpose of a shop or an office, including any land appertaining thereto and let therewith." This section also provides that the expression shall include a room or rooms in a hotel, boarding house or lodging house, but that has no application to this case. Sub-sec. (f) defines standard rent in relation to any premises as :—(i) The rent at which the premises were let on the 1st day of November 1918, or, where they were not let on that date, the rent at which they were last let before that date and after the 1st day of November 1915, with the addition, in either case, of ten per cent., on such rent; (ii) in the case of any premises which were or shall be first let after the 1st day of November 1918, the rent at which the premises were or may be first let.

Then follows a third definition of standard rent by reference to sec. 15 in the following words :—(iii) In the cases specified in sec. 15, the rent fixed by the Rent Controller. The three definitions are distinct so far as this section is concerned.

Sec. 15 contains six sub-sections, some of which are again sub-divided, in particular sub-sec. (3). Sub-secs. (1), (2), (4), (5) and (6) are matters of procedure and do not affect the powers of the Rent Controller. Sub-sec. (3) supplies the third definition in sec 2 (f) (iii), where it would more properly find a place. It begins :—"In any of the following cases the Controller may fix the standard rent at such amount as having regard to the provisions of this Act and the circumstances of the case he may deem just."

This allows a discretion to the Controller, the only limits upon which appear to be those imposed by the words quoted and the sub-sections stating when such discretion may be exercised. These are five in number and they state sets of circumstances to which the hard and fast rules provided by sec. 2 (f) (i) and (ii) might not be applicable or appropriate.

Those stated in sub-sec. (3) (b) alone can have any application to this case. Its terms are as follows :—Where in the case of any premises let furnished, it is necessary to distinguish, for the purpose of giving effect to this Act, the amount payable as rent from the amount payable as hire of furniture.

ELLEN EVELINE WELLS v. JOHN DICKINSON & CO., LD.

The effect of this sub-section will have to be considered, but before doing so I will deal with the first proposition, that the Act does not apply to a furnished flat (or house), for this point is within a narrow compass.

The argument addressed to me on behalf of the Plaintiff is that a furnished flat (or house) is not within the term "premises" as there defined. A flat or house certainly is within the definition, with equal certainty furniture is not, and a "furnished flat" is referred to by learned Counsel for this purpose as though it were a third thing and a "composite article" as he has termed it.

I cannot accept the proposition that a furnished flat is necessarily a distinct, concrete, indivisible thing though it may be so treated either in a statute, as in the case of the English Rent Restriction Act where it is referred to as a dwelling house let at a rent which includes payment in respect of use of furniture, 5 and 6 Geo. V. Cap. 97, sec. 2 (2), 10 and 11 Geo. V. Cap. 17, sec. 12 (2) (i), or by agreement between parties where the rent includes a sum for the use of furniture as in Sutton v. Temple (1), where Lord Abinger, C. B. referred to such an agreement on a contract of a mixed nature for the letting of a house and furniture.

Without some indication that the Rent Act so regards the combination of a flat or house and furniture, I do not think I should be justified in holding that so far as the combination includes "premises," the sections of the Act which refer to "premises," do not apply to a furnished flat or house. In this view the broad contention that no order can be made by the Rent Controller standardizing the rent of "premises" where the "premises" are comprised in a furnished flat falls to the ground. The expression I have employed is equally applicable to the certification by the Controller of the standard rent in cases where sec. 2 (f) (i) and (ii) apply and to cases where he fixes it under sec. 15 (3).

What, however, may be the effect of an order by the Rent Controller standardizing the rent in such circumstances is another matter and presents a problem of which it is not easy to find the solution.

As observed, the Plaintiff's case is that notwithstanding the standardization of the rent of the "premises" she is entitled to recover the whole monthly sum agreed to be paid.

The Defendant Company's contention is that the agreement between the parties is determined by the order of the Tribunal, and the Plaintiff may not recover more for rent of the premises than the sum allowed by that order, which imposes a new obligation on the tenant, who becomes a statutory tenant. This leaves the question of the furniture untouched, for it is indisputable that the Tribunal was right in holding that the Controller had no power to fix the hire of the furniture and it has not been argued to the contrary. In order to provide for this lacuna it is contended that as the parties have not entered into a new agreement as to the furniture, and presumably cannot agree, it is for the Court to assess a reasonable rate at which hire of the furniture shall be paid.

The foregoing argument is based on sec. 15 (3) (b). I do not say that the Tribunal (or Controller, who for the present purpose are identical) may not invoke that sub-section when an application is made to standardize the rent of premises let furnished at the time when the application is made. But since no order can be made as regards the hire of the furniture the question is what is the effect of an order standardizing the rent of premises let furnished.

If the agreement is determined it would be open to the lessor to remove his furniture. But, though he has submitted that the agreement would be determined, learned Counsel for the Defendant Company would not accept this proposition and contended that the lessor would be under the original obligation to provide furniture, and that in order to arrive at the sum payable for its use the parties would be compelled either to agree or to litigate. In short, the tenant is to have the benefits of the agreement and of the Act and the Court may have to perform the functions of a valuer and make a new contract between the parties.

There is nothing in this or in any other section expressly providing that the agreement between the parties shall be determined. Nor can I construe the Act or the section as so providing by implication. Such a construction could only be placed upon the Act or the section if it were so provided in the clearest language, and the Act must not be taken as meaning more than it says.

Sec. (4) (i), which provides that rent in excess of the standard rent shall, notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary, be irrecoverable has not been referred to, nor could it be without begging the question, for it refers to the rent of the "premises."

The Act creates difficulties of which it provides no solution. Recourse must therefore be had to general principles so far as they do not conflict with the Act and do not make its terms insensible.

The solution I think is to be found in the agreement between the parties. That agreement is such a document as Lord Abinger, C. B. in Sutton v. Temple (1) described as a "mixed contract," and, as there pointed out, it is only by virtue of such a contract that the obligation to supply goods and chattels suitable to the occupation arises. Learned Counsel's contention that though the agreement is determined by the order of the Tribunal the lessor must leave the furniture involves the same view of the contract. The parties themselves have chosen so to treat the subject-matter of their agreement. Apart from what I have said as to the construction of the Act, the view which parties express in their written contract is one to which effect should be given if that can be done consistently with the words of the Act.

The Tribunal's order relates to the "premises," that is only a part of the subject-matter of the agreement. Though the order of the Tribunal stands, and it may be that in other circumstances advantage could be taken of it, as to which I express no opinion, it is in my opinion ineffective as touching this agreement.

Since this solution discards the only application of sec. 15 (3) (b) which learned Counsel has propounded, I propose to test it further by seeing what useful purpose that section may serve.

Comparison between sec. 2 (f) (i) and (ii) and sec. 15 (3) (b) leads to the conclusion that the former are not intended to apply to furnished premises, and that where applicable the arbitrary rule supplied by the former is to be followed, and the discretion may be exercised in certain cases where that arbitrary rule is inapplicable. Sec. 15 does not extend the scope of the Act. The Act also appears to regard the rent of premises on 1st November 1918 as the normal rate to be paid.

(1) 12 M. & W. 52, 60 (1843).

ELLEN EVELINE WELLS v. JOHN DICKINSON & CO., LD.

I will consider the effect of these sections in four concrete instances.

(A). Premises let unfurnished on 1st November 1918 and let unfurnished at the time when standardization is applied for. This presents no difficulty, and application of the sections is obvious.

(B). Premises let furnished on 1st November 1918 and let unfurnished when standardization of rent is applied for.

If sec. 15 (3) (b) is intended, as has been argued, to apply to cases where the premises are let furnished at the time, when standardization is applied for, that section would not apply to this case. Nor could the Controller make an order certifying the standard rent in accordance with sec. 2 (f) (i), for that contemplates the rent of unfurnished premises on 1st November 1918.

Here sec. 15 (3) (b) could usefully be invoked to ascertain the rent of premises unfurnished on 1st November 1918, and without doing so it is difficult to see how the Controller could proceed at all.

(D). Premises let furnished on 1st November 1918 and let furnished when standardization is applied for.

A comparison of what would occur in these two instances leads to a singular result as regards the suggested determination of the agreement by sec. 15 (3) (b). In (C) the standard rent would be ascertained automatically by reference to the rent on 1st November 1918. In (D) the standard rent would be a matter of discretion and to fix it the Controller, as in (B), would discriminate between the amount payable as rent and the amount payable as hire of furniture on 1st November 1918, that is to say, only in (D) would he invoke sec. 15 (3) (b).

Now whatever may be the effect, as regards an existing agreement, of invoking sec. 15 (3) (b) in fixing the standard rent, there could be no such effect in (C) because in that instance the standard rent would have been certified without reference to that section. Yet in both (C) and (D) the conditions to which the standard rent when certified or fixed have to be applied are the same. Therefore, if the effect of invoking sec. 15 (3) (b) in fixing the standard rent is to determine an existing agreement to let a furnished house, in (D) such agreement would be determined but in (C) it would not.

This shows that sec. 15 (3) (b) was not intended to have that effect, for, if it were, it is inconceivable that where the rent of premises let furnished is arrived at through sec. 2 (f) (i), the Act should have omitted to make a similar provision.

The words "let furnished" in sec. 15 (3) (b) cannot ordinarily be taken as referable to the time when standardization is applied for. The object of that section is to enable the Controller to fix the standard rent. If a thing has to be measured by a standard, the standard cannot be arrived at from such thing itself. So, to distinguish between the amount payable as rent and the amount payable as hire of furniture at the time when standardization is applied for will not advance the ascertainment of the standard rent. The distinction must be made with reference to some other time. The Act generally takes November 1918 as the appropriate time, though it is not necessarily so as regards sec. 2 (f) (iii) read with sec. 15 (3) (b).

This seems to be the proper application of sec. 15 (3) (b), and if it is taken as referable to the time when standardization is applied for in order to fix the standard rent it is meaningless.

In my judgment, though the Controller or Tribunal, as the case may be, may make an order standardizing the rent to be paid in respect of premises when such premises have been let at a sum which includes payment for use of furniture, the parties to that agreement remain under their original liability, whatever effect such order may have as between other parties or in other circumstances. The Plaintiff is entitled to succeed and there will be judgment for the sum claimed with costs on scale 2 and interest on judgment at 6 per cent.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL, Opposite Party, and other owners Claimants, Respondents.

Calcutta Municipal Act (III, B. C., of 1899), secs 157, 557, cl. (d)—Acquisition of part of holding, presumption under latter section, if applies—Valuation of holding made before and after the acquisition, difference between, if may be held to be annual value of portion acquired—Valuation at 18 years' purchase.

Where a small portion of a holding having been acquired by the Calcutta Corporation, the rest of the holding was revalued for purposes of assessment, and it was argued that in view of sec. 557, cl. (d) of the Calcutta Municipal Act (III of 1899, B. C.), the value of the portion acquired should be presumed to be 25 times the difference between the annual values of the holding as assessed before and after the acquisition:

Held—That the presumption under sec. 557, cl. (d) arises only when the entire holding is acquired and did not therefore apply in this case. But having regard to the provisions of sec. 151 of the Calcutta Municipal Act and the presumption that official acts are properly performed (there being no other evidence), the annual value of the property acquired was the difference between the two annual values assessed by the Municipality, but the presumption under sec. 557, cl. (d) not being applicable, the value was assessed at 18 times the annual value, the same number of years' purchase having been allowed in a similar case.

This was an appeal preferred against the decree of the Special Land Acquisition Judge of Zillah 24-Parganas (F. W. Ward, Esq.), dated the 28th June 1922.

The facts of the case appear sufficiently from the judgment.

Babus Dwarka Nath Chakraburtty and Surendra Nath Guha for the Secretary of State.

Babus Nagendra Nath Ghose and Haradhan Chatterjee for Claimants, Respondents.

This is an appeal against the decision of the Special Land Acquisition Judge of the 24-Parganas in a land acquisition case. A piece of land measuring 9

chattaks 27 sq. ft. was taken from the claimant's premises for the purpose of rounding off the corner between Bowbazar Street and College Street in this town. The Collector valued the land acquired at Rs. 15,000 and houses thereon at Rs. 1,390. On the objection by Mahendra Nath Srimany, the lessee of the premises, reference was made to the Land Acquisition Judge and he supported the Collector's award. Against this decision this appeal has been preferred. The owner of the premises is a Respondent to this appeal, but he has joined forces with the Appellant, and the appeal is really made on behalf of both and court-fees have been paid on the full amount now claimed. There is very little evidence on the record to help us in determining the value of the land. The Appellant relies on the municipal valuation. The entire holding of an area of 1 bigha 4 cottas odd was valued under sec. 151 of the Calcutta Municipal Act, III of 1899, in the year 1917 and the annual value was then assessed at Rs. 11,448. After this land had been acquired, the remaining premises were revalued and the annual value was assessed at Rs. 9,917 in October 1921.

The first contention of the Appellant is that having regard to the provisions of cl. (d) of sec. 557 of the Calcutta Municipal Act the market value of the land in this case should be presumed to be 25 times the difference between the annual value assessed in 1917 and that assessed in 1921, or as it is put in another way, having regard to the provisions of this clause the market value of property in 1917 was 25 times Rs. 11,448; in 1921 the annual value of the remainder of the property was 25 times Rs. 9,917. There being no evidence to suggest that there had been any alteration in the value of the land the value of the land acquired must be the difference between these two sums. We are unable to accept this argument as a sound proposition of law. The provisions of cl. (d) provide for a presumption and advantage could only be taken of that presumption when facts are proved which make the clause applicable. The presumption, however, only applies to holdings which have been acquired. We cannot therefore apply the presumption either to the original holding or the part of it which has not been acquired. But we think the Appellant has a firmer ground on the second part of his argument. Having regard to the provisions of sec. 151 and the legal presumption that official acts are properly performed the annual valuation made by the Municipality must apparently be equivalent to the profit which the owner of the land would obtain from it. There is no evidence to show that the difference in the annual value of the land was due to any other cause than the reduction of its area by the acquisition of a part of it. It was within the knowledge of the Municipality who have adduced no evidence on this point, if there was any reason why these assessments by them should not represent the annual value of the property to the proprietor in each case. It is true that the Appellant has himself given no satisfactory evidence as to the profit obtained by him by letting the land, but we hold that he was entitled to rely on these valuations of the Municipality which were in his favour. With nothing to rebut the evidence of those admissions we must hold that the annual value of the property acquired was the difference between the two annual values assessed by the Municipality. But since we have held that the presumption under cl. (d) of sec. 557 is not applicable the claimant in the absence of any evidence that 25 years' purchase is a reasonable number of years' purchase to allow is not entitled to be benefited by that figure under the clause. The number of years' purchase which should be allowed when calculating the market value must be based on the evidence adduced in each case. In the present case the only evidence at all as to the number of years' purchase that should be allowed is furnished by a copy of the decision in land acquisition proceedings of land which was acquired for similar purposes at another corner of these cross-roads. In his judgment in that case, Ex. B., the District Judge based his valuation on 18 years' purchase and that decision was accepted by the claimant without appeal. On the evidence therefore we hold that 18 years' purchase should be allowed in the present case.

The result is that this appeal is decreed. In calculating the total compensation to be made in place of the sums of Rs. 15,000 for land and Rs. 1,390 for houses allowed by the Collector the market value of the land and houses will be taken at Rs. 27,558. In addition to this the claimant will get 15 per cent. allowance on this sum and also damages Rs. 1,450 allowed by the Collector. The amount of compensation awarded will be paid to the Appellant lessee and the owner Respondents jointly. The damages awarded by the Collector will be paid to the Appellant lessee alone.

The costs will be given in proportion to the result. The Appellant will get his costs in proportion of the extra amount awarded to the extra amount claimed. The Secretary of State will get his costs in proportion of the amount of the claim now disallowed to the extra amount claimed. The owner Respondents will pay their own costs in both Courts.

The cross-objection is not pressed and is dismissed without costs.

JOYGUNNESSA BIBI v. MAJILULLAH MAMED PROMANIK.

This was an appeal against the decree of G. B. Mumford, Esq., District Judge of Zillah Jalpaiguri, dated the 10th of January 1921.

The Defendant-Appellant and her late husband created wakf in June 1898. The husband was the first mutwali who held the office till his death in April 1903 when the Appellant became trustee. This suit was brought to remove her from the office on the ground of gross mismanagement of the trust property, and on the ground that the same had been treated as secular properties. The trial Court believing those facts decreed the suit and the Defendant has appealed.

Babus Nakuleswar Mukerjee and Ramaprosad Mukerjee for the Appellant.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

This is an appeal against a decree for the removal of a mutwali in a suit instituted under sec. 92, C. P. C. The wakf was created on the 10th June 1898 by Sawy Ali and Joygunnessa Bibi. The former became the first mutwali and continued to hold office till his death which took place on the 28th April 1903. The latter thereupon became the mutwali. It is alleged that during her time the wakf estate has practically disappeared, the properties included in the estate have been treated as secular properties not dedicated for charitable purposes, and have actually been partitioned. The lands have also been sold for the personal debt of the mutwali. The performance of religious, charitable and educational acts enjoined by the wakfnama has ceased, the mosque has fallen into decay and the Madrassa and Fakirkhana no longer exist. In view of these facts, which have been established by the evidence, the District Judge has directed that the mutwali be removed and he has also appointed new mutwalis. The evidence has been placed before us and we have come to the conclusion that the order for removal must be maintained.

The Appellant is one of the joint founders of the endowment and it has been urged that out of consideration for her feelings, the Court should be reluctant to remove her from the office during her life-time. There is some force in this contention; but it is plain that on account of her age she is no longer able to conduct the management of the wakf properties. The fact is that the management has in effect vested in the relations of the Appellant who are not particularly anxious to maintain the wakf. In these circumstances, we see no escape from the conclusion that the interest of the endowment, founded by the Appellant herself, requires her removal. It cannot be disputed that a mutwali should not be allowed to continue in office if her management of the institution is detrimental to the interest of the endowment. This is not a case of errors and irregularities but rather of gross mismanagement. The principles applicable in cases of this class were explained in Azizur Rahaman v. Ahidannessa (1). The Court will be guided solely by considerations of the welfare of the trust, and will not hesitate to remove a trustee who has purchased the trust property or concurred in a breach of trust, Exp. Reynolds (2) and Moore v. M'Glynn (3), or has wrongfully alienated trust property, Srinath v. Radha Nath (4); or has been guilty of wanton waste

The decree of the District Judge for the removal of the Appellant must consequently be confirmed.

We are, however, not satisfied that the persons who have been appointed mutwalis are really qualified to hold that office. After enquiry we have come to the conclusion that, in the interest of the endowment, the office of mutwali should be vested in two persons, namely, Khasmuddin Pradhan and Abdul Majid Basania who are accordingly appointed mutwalis. These gentlemen have expressed their willingness to undertake the management of the endowment, to hold the office of mutwali, and forthwith to institute suits for the recovery of the trust estate. They have offered to furnish security to the satisfaction of the District Judge to the extent of Rs. 1,000, such security to be furnished within six weeks from this date; in the meanwhile, they will be allowed to institute suits lest any question of limitation should arise. There will be no order for the costs of this appeal.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 145—Bengal Alluvial Lands Act (V of 1920, B. C.), sec. 3, if ousts Magistrate's jurisdiction to deal with probable breach of peace in respect of alluvial lands recently reformed—Examination of a Court witness after arguments by both sides finished, how far can be challenged when no objection taken in lower Court

It is open to the Magistrate in the case of alluvial lands recently reformed, where questions of breach of the peace arise, to deal with the matter either under Act V of 1920 (Bengal Alluvial Lands Act), or under the provisions of sec. 145, Cr. P. Code.

RE: WILLIAM BAKER (1) and other cases referred to.

Where a Court witness was examined after both sides had closed their cases and finished their arguments, but neither party asked the Magistrate after the said witness was examined to allow further argument:

ABDUL JABBAR MUNSHI v. MAFIZUDDI SARKER.

GREAVES, J.—This Rule was granted at the instance of the second party in sec. 145 proceedings on three grounds, first, that the provisions of the Bengal Alluvial Lands Act (Act V of 1920) governed the matter and that there was no jurisdiction in the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to deal with the matter under sec. 145; secondly, on the ground that the Magistrate having discarded as unreliable the only evidence on the record erred in making the order which he did finding possession with the first party only on surmise and on the allegation of the first party which was not supported by reliable evidence; thirdly, on the ground that the Magistrate erred in law in examining the amin as a Court witness after the close of both parties' case and after arguments had been submitted to him. The dispute in question was with regard to a char, char Kashim, to the south of which lay another char, char Umed which was submerged—both chars lying in the Meghna river. It appears that there has been a dispute between the Government and the Sukul Babus with regard to the ownership of char Kashim which was settled by half of the char Kashim, namely, the western half, being relinquished by the Government to Sukul Babus, the eastern portion being retained by the Government as Government khas mahal and settled with the Sukul Babus. I will deal with the third ground first. It does not appear that either party asked the Magistrate after the amin had given his evidence to allow further argument. This being so, it is too late at this stage to raise the question which is raised by the fifth ground of the petition.

So far as the first point is concerned, that is to say, ground No. 1 of the petition, in our view notwithstanding the argument addressed to us it is open to the Magistrate, in the case of alluvial lands recently reformed, where questions of breach of the peace arise, to deal with the matter either under Act V of 1920 or under the provisions of sec. 145. It was urged before us by the learned Vakil who appears for the second party that in the case of alluvial lands recently formed the provisions of sec. 145 are impliedly repealed by Act V of 1920, and the learned Vakil relied on various authorities where this principle is laid down. Amongst them are Re: William Baker (1) and another case, Pegler v. Monmouthshire Ry. Co. (2) and the case of Fletcher v. Calthorp (3) and two recent cases, Fortescue v. The Vestry of St. Mathew, Bethnal Green (4) and Summers v. Holborn District Board of Works (5). Nobody disputes the proposition for which the learned Vakil was contending that where you have an earlier Act with certain penalties and a subsequent Act with other penalties as a general proposition the earlier statute is repealed by the later statute even if there are no express words in the later statute repealing the former. But I think it is clear if you look at sec. 10 of Act V of 1920 that this negatives any idea of the implied repeal of sec. 145 so far as recently formed alluvial lands are concerned. It is contended that the first part of this section is a mere surplusage, but it seems clear when one reads the words of the section that it does contemplate proceedings under sec. 145 even after the institution of Act V of 1920.

ABDUL JABBAR MUNSHI v. MAFIZUDDI SARKER.

Moreover I can well conceive that having regard to the provisions of cl. 3 of Act V of 1920 there may well be cases, which are somewhat doubtful as to whether they fall within the provisions of sec 3, and it may be necessary in view of the doubt, if a breach of the peace is apprehended, that the matter should be dealt with under the provisions of sec. 145. The learned Vakil for the second party suggests that so far as cl. 3 is concerned the opinion of the Collector is decisive as to whether they are recently formed lands or not. The section does not make his opinion conclusive and I am not certain that it would not open to argument that he may have formed a wrong opinion as to whether the provisions of sec. 3 are applicable or not. In any case looking at the provisions of Act V of 1920 and specially cl. 10, we think it is clear that there was no implied repeal of sec. 145, so far as alluvial lands recently formed are concerned by Act V of 1920.

The remaining point is ground 4. Apparently, the second party and the first party are tenants of lands in char Kashim. Char Umed, as I have stated, had disappeared and there was some accretion of land to char Kashim. This was claimed by the tenants of char Kashim as accretion to their land. Three, however, of the tenants went behind the back of the others to the Government—it being Government khas mahal land, and suggested that the accreted land was really char Umed and that this land should be settled with them. As a result of this—a survey was held on behalf of the Government, and the other tenants of char Kashim in disgust apparently have since these proceedings kept the second party out of char Kashim. What is said is that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate having suggested that in cases of this kind it was difficult to get any impartial evidence and having impliedly rejected the evidence of the first and second parties and further suggested that the three witnesses whom he named were reliable has subsequently rejected the evidence of these witnesses and arrived at his decision as to possession of the first party upon surmises which he has formed or arrived at. I do not think that the judgment really bears the interpretation sought to be put upon it. It is true that the Magistrate suggests, as must be the case, that the evidence of both the first and second parties is biassed evidence but it does not mean that he necessarily rejected that evidence; and it seems to me that he has arrived at his decision after rejecting the evidence of the three witnesses whom he considers impartial witnesses, and rejected that evidence for the reasons which he has stated and that having done so he has accepted the evidence as to the possession of the first party. This being so there is no ground for our interference on this point.

Under the circumstances the Rule must be discharged.

DUVAL, J.—I agree.

J. N. R. Rule discharged.

MUSAMMAT JAITI, Appellant,
v.
BANWARI LAL and ors., Respondents.

Hindu law—Mitakshara—Separation by one coparcener—Other coparceners, if remain joint or are separate—Presumption—Joint family business continued after such separation becomes a statutory partnership—Dissolution, date of, of such partnership—Suit by partner's widow for accounts—Limitation.

There is no presumption, when one Mitakshara coparcener separates from the others, that the latter remain united. An agreement amongst the remaining members of the joint family to remain united or to reunite must be proved like any other fact.

The family business continued after such separation becomes an ordinary partnership subject to the Contract Act. On the death thereafter of one of the coparceners, the partnership is dissolved, and a right to an accounting arises, so that his widow's suit to enforce the right becomes barred, if not brought within six years, unless the widow has been admitted as a partner to a new partnership, in which case the date of dissolution would be the date of the suit.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 24th December 1917, of the Chief Court of the Punjab, which affirmed a decree, dated the 26th May 1916, of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Amritsar.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit on the ground of limitation but the Appellate Court without discussing the question of limitation has held that the Plaintiff-Appellant has failed to establish her title to the relief she claims.

The relationship of the parties would appear from the following pedigree :—

Gobind Ram died leaving his five sons who constituted a Hindu joint family governed by the Mitakshara law. Jai Dayal died very young and the remaining four brothers lived together and carried on business jointly at Amritsar.

In or about 1876 the joint family was broken up and the entire assets of the co-parcenary were divided into four equal shares. For the satisfaction of the eldest brother, Ishar Das, his three brothers executed a deed of relinquishment on the 7th Jeth Badi 1933, that is, 15th May 1876.

The deed recited that "we have divided amongst ourselves property, ornaments, clothes, utensils, cash, and all other articles, including business." It specified certain property with which "Daya Ram has no concern," and certain other property "which remains the joint property of Harbhagwan and Rup Lal (alias Rup Chand)," and mentioned others which "still remain joint of all the four co-sharers in equal shares."

The Appellant instituted the present suit on the 5th May 1911 in the Court of the Senior Subordinate Judge of Amritsar.

In her plaint she stated that her husband (who had died in 1905) and his three brothers had separated in or about 1876; that after the severance of the family status and estate her husband and his two brothers, Harbhagwan and Daya Ram, carried on business as tenants in common or partners and that on her husband's death she was admitted into the partnership business. She sued for dissolution of the partnership and prayed that a decree for the following reliefs might be passed in her favour against the Defendants :—

(a) For possession, by partition, of one-third of the houses entered in the plans attached to this petition of plaint.

(b) For one-third of the business of the trading shops known as "Har Bhagwan-Rup Chand" and "Rup Chand-Daya Ram" which might be found in the shape of cash and goods after adjustment of account.

(c) If this ordinary bhaiwali (parcenary) were considered partnership it might be dissolved.

(d) The costs of the case might be awarded.

(e) If the Plaintiff were found entitled to any other relief in the opinion of the Court it might be granted.

The Defendants Daya Ram and the sons of Harbhagwan (deceased) filed a written statement denying the Plaintiff's claim. They pleaded amongst other things that, in 1876, only Ishar Das separated from the joint family, leaving the remaining three brothers joint and undivided as before, and that the Defendants succeeded by survivorship on the death of the Plaintiff's husband, Rup Chand, and that the Plaintiff was not entitled to anything beyond maintenance.

The following issues were framed for trial up to the 13th February 1915 :—

(1) Whether after the separation of Ishar Das the remaining brothers continued to be members of joint Hindu family, and whether the parties' family has been a joint Hindu family up to this time?

(2) Did they convert the joint family business into a partnership?

(3) Is the plaint properly stamped?

The third issue was not pressed.

The learned Subordinate Judge placed the onus of proving the first issue on the Defendants and Counsel for the Plaintiff made the following statement on the 9th March 1915 :—

"No evidence is to be produced on behalf of the Plaintiff in respect of issue No. 2. Issue No. 2 is simply a contra issue to No. 1. The Plaintiff will produce rebutting evidence in respect of issue No. 1."

No oral evidence was produced by either party. After examining the documentary evidence the Senior Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 26th May 1916. He found the first two issues in favour of the Plaintiff. He held that, as already stated in para. 5, the deed of relinquishment, dated the 15th May 1876, was clear evidence of the severance of the joint family. In regard to the other documents he said as follows :—

"Defendants' own account books show that the three brothers, i.e., Rup Chand, Harbhagwan and Daya Ram, though continued joint in business as partners, became separate in food, lodging and expenses after the separation of Ishar Das—

(a) Accounts were gone into and profits were shown pro rata in separate khatas, i.e., one-third share of each of the three brothers (vide list, p. 15).

(b) Brothers gave neondra on the marriages of the children of each other (vide p. 12), death money (bura din) on the death of members of each other's family (p. 13), and money drawn by any brother is shown in his own separate khata (p. 14). All the abstracts (pp. 12 to 15) are based on the accounts (D. 7 to 11 filed by themselves).

I don't think that such dealings are conceivable in a joint Hindu family of which the idea is that all must earn for the common weal of the family and never think of his defined share."

"I have therefore not the least hesitation in finding that on the separation of Ishar Das the family of the parties ceased to be a joint Hindu family in the strictest sense of the term; or, in other words, its members ceased to be coparceners. Thus I find the first issue against the Defendants

As to the second issue, there is no doubt that the three brothers allowed their shares to remain in the business ever since the separation of Ishar Das, and the account books of their firm show beyond any reasonable doubt that each brother was entitled to take one-third share of the profits of the business, but the relationship thus created was a partnership as defined in sec. 238, Contract Act, rather than the ancestral business of a joint Hindu family. Punjab Reports 97 of 1910 appears to me to apply to the case fully in this respect"

But the learned Senior Subordinate Judge noticing at the time of writing his judgment that an important issue emerged from the pleadings had not been framed, added the following issue:—

"Whether the Defendant entered into partnership with Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and the suit is therefore within time on the allegations of Plaintiff?"

On this issue he held the partnership was dissolved in 1905 when the Plaintiff's husband died, and that there was no evidence to establish that the Plaintiff had been admitted into the partnership after her husband's death, and that as the suit had been brought in 1914, i.e., more than six years after her husband's death, it was barred by Art. 106 of the Limitation Act. He therefore made a decree dismissing the Plaintiff's suit with costs.

The Plaintiff appealed from the said decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge to the Chief Court of the Punjab, which delivered judgment on the 24th December 1917 and found the first issue against her, concluding their judgment in the following words:—

"We are of opinion that at the time of his death the Plaintiff's husband was a member of a joint Hindu family of which the other members were the Defendants, and that when he died his undivided share devolved upon the Defendants by right of survivorship. The Plaintiff is not, therefore, entitled to any share in the family property or in the assets of the family business, and her suit must fail. We accordingly maintain the decree of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal with costs."

The Plaintiff thereupon applied for review of the said judgment but the learned Judges of the Chief Court refused her application on the 19th April 1918, and her second application for the same purpose was also rejected.

The Appellant appealed from the said judgment and decree of the Chief Court to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Appellant.—The Subordinate Judge has rightly held that the joint family ceased to exist after the deed of relinquishment of 15th May 1876.

The question of limitation was not put in issue at the trial and there is no direct evidence on the point.

The evidence on the record does, however, suggest that there was a new partnership on the death of Rup Chand and as long as there was no ouster, limitation cannot run.

death of Rup Chand and a suit for an account was barred by limitation.

Art. 106, Indian Limitation Act.

[He was stopped.]

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DUNEDIN.—In 1876 four brothers, Ishar Das, Harbhagwan, Rup Chand and Daya Ram, lived as a joint Hindu family and carried on a family business. In that year a deed was executed by which the assets of the family were described and divided, and Ishar Das was finally paid out. Thereafter the business was carried on, but the profits were carried to separate accounts of the three remaining brothers in equal shares.

In 1905 Rup Chand died, leaving a widow who is the Appellant. In 1911, the widow raised this suit against the remaining brother and the sons of the other who had pre-deceased, claiming accounts and payment of one-third of the partnership assets.

The defence put up was two-fold. It was alleged that though in 1876 Ishar Das separated from this joint family, the other brothers remained joint · that in consequence on the death of Rup Chand, the husband of the Plaintiff, she had only the right of maintenance as a Hindu widow, which maintenance she had duly received. Consequently, it was said that assuming that there was a complete separation, the suit was time-barred under Art. 106 of the 1st Schedule of the Limitation Act. The statement of the Plaintiff as to what happened at her husband's death was not expressed with precision, but might be read as an averment that on her husband's death she was admitted to be a partner, her share being the same as that of her deceased husband. The issues as originally framed were only three in number, one of which, being as to the plaint being adequately stamped, may be disregarded. The remaining two were: (1) On the separation of Ishar Das, did not the remaining male members of the family become separate? (2) Did they convert the joint family business into a partnership? The case went to trial and no evidence was produced by the Plaintiff, except the account books of the firm, which showed that after Ishar Das separated the profits of the business were carried to separate shares in the names of the three brothers, and this continued after Rup Chand's death. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge found first, that the deed executed at the separation of Ishar Das showed separation of the whole brothers: that re-union had not been proved and that the joint family came to an end. But finding in the pleading a clear plea to the effect that the suit was time-barred, he added an issue to that effect and decided it in favour of the Defendants.

The Plaintiff appealed, and on appeal the learned Judges of the Chief Court of the Punjab held that in 1876, though Ishar Das had separated, separation had not taken place among the other brothers, and consequently the Plaintiff had only the rights of a Hindu widow for maintenance and could not maintain the suit. They, therefore, found it unnecessary to consider the question as to limitation. The Plaintiff has appealed to the King in Council.

Their Lordships do not find themselves able to agree with the views of the learned Judges of the Chief Court.

The law is well settled by the cases of Balabux Ladhuram v. Rukhmabai (1) and

(1) L. R. 30 I. A. 130; s. c. I. L. R. 30 Cal. 725; 7 C. W. N. 642 (1903).

Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (2). Lord Davey remarks in the former case: -

"It appears to their Lordships that there is no presumption, when one co-parcener separates from the others, that the latter remain united. . . . . Their Lordships think that an agreement amongst the remaining members of a joint family to remain united or to reunite must be proved like any other fact."

Their Lordships think that the result is well stated by the learned trial Judge, who says:- -

"There is absolutely no material on the file from which it can be inferred that the three brothers continued united or reunited as co-parcenary members of a joint Hindu family, while Defendants' own books show the contrary . . . . I have therefore not the least hesitation in finding that on the separation of Ishar Das the family of the parties ceased to be a joint Hindu family in the strictest sense of the term; or, in other words, its members ceased to be co-parceners. Thus I find the first issue against the Defendants."

There remains, however, the question of limitation. The position here seems clear. Separation having been effected in 1876, and the business being carried on by the three brothers, the business became an ordinary partnership subject to the Partnership (?) Act. On the death of Rup Chand, the Plaintiff's husband, the partnership was dissolved and a right to an accounting arose. But Rup Chand died in 1905, and this suit was not raised until 1911. It is, therefore, time-barred as a suit for such an accounting. If, however, on Rup Chand's death the widow was admitted as a partner to a new partnership, then the date of dissolution would only be the raising of the suit and no limitation could apply. It is possible to read the averments of the Plaintiff as alleging such a, partnership. But the existence of such a partnership was denied. The case went to trial, and not a scrap of evidence directly proving such an agreement was produced. All that the widow got was a mere allowance of Rs. 51 a month. The fact that Rup Chand's share still continued to be dealt with in the books is no evidence of a partnership with his widow.

Their Lordships think that a perfectly correct view was taken by the learned Subordinate Judge. As, however, the result is the same as if the grounds of judgment of the Court of Appeal had been adopted, the form of judgment which will be appropriate will be simply to dismiss the appeal with costs, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER OF OUDH.]

LORD DUNEDIN.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
Heard, 16, March.
Judgment, 17, April.

BISHWA NATH SINGH, Appellant,
v.
JUGAL KISHORE and ors., Respondents.

Hindu law—Mitakshara—Adoption—Widow, when may adopt without husband's authority—Custom.

According to the law of the Mitakshara as interpreted by the School of Benares, an adoption by a widow of a son to her deceased husband would be invalid if made without authority to adopt given to her by her husband unless such an adoption was authorised by a custom of the family.

BISHWA NATH SINGH v. JUGAL KISHORE.

Held, reversing the High Court, that the custom in this case was proved.

This was an appeal from a judgment and decree, dated the 4th July 1919, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed a judgment and decree, dated the 10th April 1917, of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur.

The main question for determination on the present appeal related to the validity of the Appellant's adoption. The Subordinate Judge found on the evidence in favour of the Appellant, but the Appellate Court has held against the adoption on the ground that the evidence upon which the Subordinate Judge relied was not sufficiently strong to establish the family custom alleged by the Appellant.

The facts of the case may be shortly stated as follows :—The litigation relates to a village named Pakauri, which belonged to one Baldeo Bakhsh Singh, who was a Raghubansi by caste, and a zamindar and resident of the village of Bamhnawan in the District of Sitapur. He died in or about 1891 leaving a widow, Musammat Gulab Kuar, who inherited her husband's estate as a Hindu widow and came into possession of the said village of Pakauri. She adopted the Appellant, Bishwa Nath Singh, on the 17th October 1915, as a son to her deceased husband, with the result that the Appellant became the son of his adoptive father from the date of his death.

Long before the adoption the said widow executed a deed of mortgage, dated the 10th September 1891, hypothecating therein the whole of the said village of Pakauri in favour of one Kalka Singh for Rs. 3,000 and interest thereon. The mortgagee obtained a decree for sale of the village on foot of the mortgage, and a proclamation of sale was issued under the provisions of r. 66 of Or. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908. But the proclamation of sale stated that the village of Kundri would be sold by auction, and did not specify that the village Pakauri was to be sold. However, on the date fixed for the auction sale, that is, on the 20th April 1915, bids were made in respect of the village Pakauri in three lots of one-third each. It is obvious that the sale of Mauza Pakauri was a nullity.

The Defendants, namely, Balmakund (Defendant No. 2) purchased one-third share of the village, and Qurban Ali (Defendant No. 3) also purchased an one-third share.

The widow, Musammat Gulab Kuar, impugned the validity of the said sale, but by an order, dated the 11th August 1915, the Deputy Commissioner of Sitapur held that her application was barred by [illegible] and that her remedy lay in the insti[illegible] of a regular suit to set aside the [illegible]. The Deputy Commissioner's order was affirmed on appeal by the Commissioner on the 22nd October 1915.

The Appellant (Plaintiff No. 1) and his adoptive mother, the said Musammat Gulab Kuar (Plaintiff No. 2, since deceased), instituted the present suit on the 13th March 1916, in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur. In their plaint the Plaintiffs stated "that in accordance with the oral Will of Thakur Baldeo Bakhsh Singh, deceased, and the family custom under which a widow has power to make an adoption without her husband's permission, the Plaintiff No. 2 formally adopted the Plaintiff No 1 on the 17th October 1915." It was also alleged that Musammat Gulab Kuar, Plaintiff No. 2, had no legal necessity to justify the execution of the mortgage, dated the 10th September 1891, hereinbefore mentioned, and that the allegation was therefore not binding on the Appellant.

BISHWA NATH SINGH v. JUGAL KISHORE.

The Plaintiffs also alleged that the auction sale of the two-thirds share of Mauza Pakauri was null and void.

Defendant No. 1, Baryar Singh, was the son of the mortgagee, and Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 were the auction-purchasers of the two-thirds share of the village. The Plaintiffs claimed a decree for possession of two-thirds share of the said village with mesne profits and costs from the Defendants.

The principal Defendants, Nos. 2 and 3, filed a joint written statement denying the Plaintiffs' claim. They questioned the factum and validity of the Appellant's adoption and pleaded, among other things, that the said mortgage had been executed by Musammat Gulab Kuar for legal necessity. Defendant No. 1 adopted almost all the pleas of the principal Defendants. The Subordinate Judge framed a number of issues on the pleadings which are not now material.

The controversy was now practically confined to the first issue, viz., whether there was a family custom under which the Plaintiff No. 2 had authority to adopt a son to her late husband without his authority and in order to prove it the Plaintiffs produced (1) a number of wajib-ul-arzes, and (2) oral evidence of members of the family and caste of Baldeo Bakhsh Singh. The most important wajib-ul-arz was that of the village of Bamhnawan which was owned by the said Baldeo Bakhsh Singh. It was dated the 26th December 1871, and was verified on behalf of the said Baldeo Bakhsh Singh and his brother. It recorded the custom of the family in the following terms:—

"The custom of adoption obtains without restriction as to caste and family. A widow has also the power to adopt whether her husband has or has not left a Will or authority (to that effect), provided there is no legitimate son of her husband."

The remaining wajib-ul-arzes furnished evidence to the same effect.

After examining the whole of the documentary evidence the Subordinate Judge delivered judgment on the 10th April 1917. He found that the family custom on which the Appellant relied was fully established by the evidence, and that the mortgage was not executed by the said widow for any legal necessity. His finding on the first issue may be summarised thus:—

"To sum up the custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of all the aforesaid villages, namely, (1) Bamhnawan, (2) Kethura, (3) Ismailpur, (4) Supauli, (5) Deotapur, (6) Kundi, (7) Mandela or Murila, and (8) Rasulpur, is unanimous and invariable so far as the unrestricted power of a Hindu widow to make the adoption is concerned, though there is some variation on some other points relating to the general subject of adoption. This variation on other points cannot affect the custom which validates the adoption by a Hindu widow without the permission of her husband. It will appear from the evidence of the following witnesses of the Plaintiffs that the aforesaid eight villages relate to the family of the Raghubansis to which Thakur Baldeo Bakhsh Singh belonged:—Anrudh Singh, Arjun Singh (P. W. 8), Kokaran Bakhsh, Harpal Singh and Darshan Singh . . . . Arjun Singh (P. W. 8) is a man of the age of 60. His evidence regarding the custom and the wajib-ul-arz is strong and reliable. . . . . . All these (thirteen) witnesses are Raghubansi Thakurs. Guman Singh (P. W. 6), at the beginning of his examination, stated that he could not say if he belonged to the same family of Raghubansis as Baldeo Bakhsh

Bishwa Nath Singh v. Jugal Kishore.

Singh. The rejection of his evidence does not affect the Plaintiffs' case. For there remain other witnesses who belong to that family. They unanimously depose to the custom that a widow among them can make a valid adoption without her husband's permission. Their opinion is admissible under sec. 49 of the Indian Evidence Act. Four instances of the custom are proved from their evidence, namely, (1) Gopal Singh, father of Baldeo Bakhsh Singh, was adopted by the widow of Raghunath Singh, (2) Thakur Parwan Singh's widow (of Kethura) adopted Kedar Singh, who is alive, (3) Umrao Singh's widow (of Rohra) adopted Chandrabhan Singh (P. W. 17), and (4) Thakurain Lachhan Kuar, widow of Sheo Bakhsh Singh (of Supauli) adopted Anrudh Singh (P. W. 5) who is in possession of Sheo Bakhsh Singh's estate to the extent of 9 annas. . . . .

"On the whole, I think the oral and documentary evidence on the record is quite sufficient to prove the custom put forward on the Plaintiffs' side."

In the result the Subordinate Judge made a decree for possession of the two-thirds share of the village in dispute with mesne profits in favour of the present Appellant, and dismissed the claim of Plaintiff No. 2, and from that decree Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.

The appeal was heard by two Additional Judicial Commissioners, who delivered one judgment on the 4th July 1919. They affirmed the view of the Subordinate Judge that the widow Musammat Gulab Kuar had no oral authority from her husband to adopt, but they came to a contrary conclusion on the first issue. They were of opinion that the wajib-ul-arzes of eight villages named by them were irrelevant, and that none of the wajib-ul-arzes could "be relied on as an accurate record of the custom of the family." They agreed with the Subordinate Judge in holding that the principal witnesses called by the Plaintiffs to prove the custom of the family were credible, but they considered that the effect of their evidence fell short of establishing the family custom.

They accordingly allowed the appeal of the Defendants, set aside the decree of the said Subordinate Judge and made a decree dismissing the claim of the present Appellant with costs. The Appellant has now appealed from the said decree of the Additional Judicial Commissioners to His Majesty in Council. The Plaintiff No. 2, Musammat Gulab Kuar, died during the pendency of the appeal in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, and on the application of the Defendants, the former Respondents were brought on the record in her place in spite of the objections of the Appellant as to their being the true legal representatives of the deceased Plaintiff.

Hence the appeal.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Appellant ex parte contended that the family custom was established by the evidence to which their argument was directed.

Their Lordships' Judgment was delivered by

Sir John Edge.—This is an appeal by Bishwa Nath Singh, the surviving Plaintiff against a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which reversed a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Sitapur and dismissed the suit. The suit is for the possession of a two-thirds share of the village Pakauri in the District of Sitapur.

The other Plaintiff in the suit was Musammat Gulab Kuar, who is now dead. She was the widow of Baldeo Bakhsh

Singh, who died sonless in or about 1891. He was a Hindu and by caste a Raghubansi, and lived in the village of Bamhnawan in the District of Sitapur and owned the village of Pakauri. The widow adopted on the 17th October 1915 the Appellant as a son to her deceased husband, who had given her no authority to adopt a son to him. The question which their Lordships have had to consider in this appeal is whether that adoption was valid, and apparently that was the only question as to which there was a contention in the Appellate Court. The learned Judges of the Appellate Court, in their judgment, said:—

"There are thus two points for decision in this appeal, namely, whether Musammat Gulab Kuar had authority from her husband to adopt, and secondly, whether failing such authority she had a right of (by) custom to adopt without authority from her husband."

The fact of the adoption is not now disputed and is beyond dispute. The family to which Baldeo Bakhsh Singh belonged was subject to the law of the Mitakshara as interpreted by the School of Benares, according to which an adoption by a widow of a son to her deceased husband would be invalid if made without an authority to adopt given to her by her husband, unless such an adoption was authorised by a custom of the family.

The evidence that there was such a custom in this family consisted of statements as to the right of widows to adopt sons to their deceased husbands contained in the wajib-ul-arzes of eight villages which had been recorded in the settlement of 1871, that is, about forty-four years before the adoption in question here. One of those villages was the village of Bamhnawan, in which Baldeo Bakhsh Singh had lived; at least two other of the villages were villages in which he or members of his family were interested as proprietors; and the remaining four villages were villages in which members of his caste had been interested, although their relationship to his family was not proved. There was also some oral evidence of witnesses in support of the custom.

In the wajib-ul-arz of Bamhnawan and in some of the other wajib-ul-arzes it was stated that widows could adopt sons to their deceased husbands without having had the authority of their husbands to adopt. In the other wajib-ul-arzes it was simply stated that widows could adopt. In their Lordships' opinion those statements meant the same thing, that is, that widows could adopt sons to their husbands although they had had no authority from their husbands to adopt; it was so that the Subordinate Judge construed the wajib-ul-arzes, and he found that the custom was proved. The Appellate Court was of opinion that the mere statement in a wajib-ul-arz that a widow could adopt meant that a widow, who had the authority of her husband to adopt, could make an adoption to him, and consequently held that the statements as to the custom were not consistent and that the custom was not proved. It did not occur to the learned Judges of the Appellate Court that if the statement that a widow could adopt meant that she could adopt if she had had the authority of her husband to adopt, the statement was not a statement of a special family custom, and was unnecessary, as it would be merely a statement of a right which a Hindu widow of a sonless Hindu enjoys everywhere in India, except possibly in families governed by the law of the Mithila School.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the custom was proved and that the adoption of the Appellant was valid. It may be mentioned that the learned Judges of the

BISHWA NATH SINGH v. JUGAL KISHORE.

Appellate Court did not doubt the credibility of the witnesses as to the custom, whose evidence the Subordinate Judge has accepted as true, but they thought that it had not been proved that these witnesses belonged to the family to which Baldeo Bakhsh Singh had belonged.

This appeal has been heard ex parte, no Respondent having appeared. As the appeal has been heard ex parte the Counsel for the Appellant has drawn their Lordships' attention to the fact that the learned Judicial Commissioners have not in their judgment expressed a finding on the seventh ground of the appeal to their Court, which was as follows :—" 7. That the lower Court should have held that the deed, dated the 10th September 1894, was executed for legal necessity." The deed of the 10th September 1894, was a mortgage of the village Pakauri granted by the widow while she was in possession of a Hindu widow's interest in the estate. On that mortgage a decree for sale was made and at the sale the two-thirds share in the village now claimed by this Appellant was purchased by some of the Defendants to this suit. The Subordinate Judge had found in this suit that the mortgage was not made for necessity. The learned Judicial Commissioners said in their judgment that : " They (the Defendants) denied the adoption and they denied the widow's power to adopt. They also pleaded that even if the adoption was proved, it could not affect the interest acquired by the purchasers before the adoption. On this last pleading no issue was framed and nothing has been said in argument in appeal. It must therefore be taken to have dropped." The question as to whether the mortgage was or was not granted for necessity was involved in the question as to whether the purchasers at the sale under the decree had acquired title by their purchase. In their Lordships' opinion the learned Judicial Commissioners were under the circumstances justified in holding, as they did, that the only question which remained for them to decide in the appeal was the question as to the validity of the adoption.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed with costs, that the decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner should be set aside with costs, and the decree of the Subordinate Judge should be restored and affirmed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 5th of September 1922 against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Bogra, in Zillah Pabna and Bogra (Babu Krishna Kumar Sen), dated the 7th of July 1922.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta for the Appellant.

Babus Bansorilal Sarkar, Gunoda Charan Sen and Someshwar Proshad Mukherji for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

WALMSLEY, J.—The circumstances which have led up to the present appeal are as follows :—A partition suit was instituted on 20th December 1918 against several Defendants, among whom the present Appellant was No. 4. Two of the Defendants contested the suit and on 22nd September 1919 a preliminary decree for partition was made on contest against two of the Defendants and ex parte against the others. The present Appellant did not appear at all in the first Court, and he is one of those against whom the decree was made ex parte. On 17th December 1919 the first Defendant alone preferred an appeal against the decree to this Court, and three days later, on 20th December, the Appellant presented an application to the trial Court under Or. 9, r. 13 of the Civil Procedure Code. This application was kept pending until after the disposal of the appeal preferred by the first Defendant.

The fate of that appeal was this : One of the Respondents died, and as the Appellant did not take proper steps to bring her heirs on the record the appeal was dismissed as against them ; and then as against the others it was held that in the absence of the heirs of the deceased Respondent the appeal could not proceed : it was accordingly dismissed. This was on 5th January 1922.

Then the record was returned to the lower Court, and the Appellant's application came on for hearing. On 8th April 1922 a petition of compromise between the Plaintiff and the Appellant was presented, and in accordance therewith the Court ordered that the suit should be restored to its original number as against Defendant No. 4 in regard to three only of the plots mentioned in the plaint, and Molla's Contract Act, p. [illegible] ec. 251, Indian Contract Act. Russo [illegible]nese Bank v. Liyam Sam (23), The B[illegible]k of Australasia v. Thomas Chaplian Breillat (1) and In re Agriculturist Cattle Insurance Company (24).

RAM CHANDRA SA[illegible] KASEM KHAN.

Babu Mahendra Nath Ray for the Defendant No. 2 contended (1) that money was borrowed by Defendant No. 1 in his personal capacity. See paras. 13 and 14 of the plaint and Plaintiff's evidence, p. 25, line 15. Sec. 251 therefore had no application. The wordings of the section and the illustrations show that the section applies only where loan is taken as a partner: sec. 251 will not for the same reason help the Plaintiff.

(2) Cls. 4 and 6 imposed a restriction on the borrowing power of the Defendant No. 1. The debt was unnecessary. Business could be carried on with moneys received from the Railway Company on bills. Further loan was not required in the usual course of carrying on the business. The Defendant No. 2 was not hence liable.

The Defendant No. 1 was not represented.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the Plaintiffs in a suit for recovery of money. The claim has been decreed against the first Defendant but dismissed against the second. The question in controversy now is, whether the Plaintiffs are entitled to a decree against the second Defendant, and if so, for what amount.

The Plaintiffs are money-lenders. The first Defendant is a contractor. Among various works which he had undertaken, he had in hand a contract under the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company in connection with what is known as the Kharagpur Line Sub-Division. In this business, the second Defendant was his partner under a deed executed on the 28th June 1920, though the partnership had commenced on the 28th March 1920. The partnership was dissolved by a consent decree on the 16th June 1922, in a litigation between the Defendants. The Plaintiffs seek to recover from the Defendants three sums of money for three successive periods. The first period covers the time between the 11th January 1920 and the 28th March 1920, that is, the period immediately antecedent to the formation of the partnership between the Defendants. The second period covers the time between the 3rd April 1920 and the 12th June 1920. The third period covers the time between the 14th June 1921 and the 25th September 1921. The second and the third periods, it will be observed, are subsequent to the formation of the partnership between the Defendants. The Plaintiffs, however, have distinguished between the two periods on the ground that it was not till the 13th June 1921 that they became aware of the existence of the partnership. It is plain that as regards the small amount claimed in respect of the first of these periods, the second Defendant cannot be held liable, because at that time there was no partnership between the two Defendants. We are consequently concerned with the sums claimed in respect of the second and the third periods.

The case for the Plaintiffs is that the contract business already mentioned was carried on by the first Defendant on behalf of the partnership, that in order to enable him to carry it on he took loans from the Plaintiffs on promissory notes and that the sums so borrowed were in fact applied for the partnership concern. These allegations, however, have not been made out; the evidence was not specifically directed to these points, and, it seems, their significance and importance were not fully realised. The accounts which were produced at a very late stage of the proceedings could not be scrutinised in the original, as they were written in characters difficult to decipher, and when the translations were placed in the hands of the Court, it was impossible to deal with the question satisfactorily. Apart from this, the grounds assigned by the Subordinate Judge for dismissal of the suit against the second Defendant are open to criticism and there has consequently been considerable discussion at the Bar as to the liability of a dormant partner.

Sec. 251 of the Indian Contract Act which furnishes the guiding principle applicable to questions of the power of a partner to bind his co-partners, is in these terms: "Each partner who does any act necessary for or usually done in carrying on the business of such a partnership as that of which he is a member, binds his co-partners to the same extent as if he were their agent duly appointed for that purpose." There is an exception to this rule formulated in the following terms: "If it has been agreed between the partners that any restriction shall be placed upon the power of any of them, no act done in contravention of such agreement shall bind the firm with respect to persons having notice of such agreement."

This section enunciates the law substantially in the same way as in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in Bank of Australasia v. Breillat (1).

(1) 6 Moo. P. C. 152 (193); 79 R. R. 24 (1847).

"The general power of partners in ordinary trading partnerships, and the restrictions upon such powers, appear to us to be stated with great accuracy by Mr. Justice Story in his treatises on Partnership, and on Agency, and we willingly adopt his language. In the latter of these works, Chap. VI, secs. 124 and 125, the law is thus stated. Sec. 124—Every partner is, in contemplation of law, the general and accredited agent of the partnership; or, as it is sometimes expressed, each partner is proepositus negotiis societatis; and may, consequently, bind all the other partners by his acts, in all matters which are within the scope and objects of the partnership. Hence, if the partnership be of a general commercial nature, he may pledge or sell the partnership property; he may buy goods on account of the partnership; he may borrow money, contract debts, and pay debts on account of the partnership; he may draw, make, sign, indorse, accept, transfer, negotiate, and procure to be discounted, promissory notes, bills of exchange, cheques and other negotiable paper, in the name and on account of the partnership (sec. 125). The restrictions of this implied authority of partners to bind the partnership are apparent from what has been already stated. Each partner is an agent only in and for the business of the firm; and, therefore, his acts beyond that business will not bind the firm. Neither will his acts done in violation of his duty to the firm, bind it, when the other party to the transaction is cognisant of, or co-operates in, such breach of duty.

"That in ordinary trading partnerships, the power of borrowing money for partnership purposes exists, and that bills or notes given by one of the partners in the partnership firm, for money so borrowed, will bind the firm, is too clear to require any authority. It is treated as clear law from the case of Lane v. Williams (2) to that of Thicknesse v. Bromilow (3)."

It has been argued that the deed of partnership, dated the 28th June 1920, contained clauses which brought the case within the exception to sec. 251 of the Indian Contract Act. Our attention has been specially drawn to cls. 4 and 6. Cl. (4) provides "that the entire capital of the said work is of the first party." Cl. (6) provides "that the first party shall supply all funds required for the purpose of carrying on and completing the work already in hand or any new work in the said Sub-Division that may be given to the second party by the B. N. Ry. Co." We are of opinion that these clauses have not the restrictive effect attributed to them. There are, besides, materials on the record to show that the second Defendant, who had advanced the capital at one stage, declined after a time, to find the necessary funds and thus rendered it necessary for the first Defendant to raise money in order that his obligations to the B. N. Ry. Co. might be fulfilled. We need not consequently rely upon the theory favoured in Paterson v. Gandasequi (4), namely, that the case of "a dormant principal may be assimilated to that of a dormant partner, where, though the party furnishing goods to the ostensible partners intended, at the time, to give credit only to them, yet he may afterwards pursue his remedy against that dormant partner when discovered. A dormant partner is sued on the ground of agency; he is liable on a contract relating to the firm made in the ostensible partner's name alone, because he is taken to have adopted the name of the ostensible partner as his own, for the purpose of such contracts, so that, when the ostensible partner signs his name to such contracts, he signs a word, the meaning of which comprehends not himself alone, but his partner also." This doctrine does not assist us in the solution of the questions involved in this case. Here the problem to be explored is, whether the loans were taken by the first Defendant in his capacity as partner, and the difficulty is increased where, as in the case before us, the borrower who is a partner in one concern has in hand at the same time various other businesses in which he has no partners. The substance of the matter is that the Plaintiffs are not entitled to succeed merely upon proof that the monies taken from them by the first Defendant were in whole or in part applied for the benefit of the partnership concern; the liability of the second Defendant as his partner extends only to sums borrowed by him in his capacity as a member of the firm. We may usefully re-call here passages from two well-known cases.

In Nicholson v. Ricketts (5), Cockburn, C. J., observed as follows: "In order that one member of a partnership may bind another, by drawing or accepting a bill, he must have authority, either express or implied by law, so to do. In ordinary cases of commercial partnership, there is no need of express authority, the law implying an authority from the fact that the drawing and accepting bills is part of the ordinary course of such a partnership. So again, in partnership not strictly commercial, if it is obvious from the nature of the partnership or from the particular purpose to which the bills are to be applied, that the drawing of bills is essential, there, also, the law implies an authority to each partner to draw them."

To the same effect is the observation of Cleasby B. in Holme v. Hammond (6): "In the common case of a partnership, where, by the terms of the partnership, all the capital is supplied by A and the business is to be carried on by B and C in their own names, it being a stipulation in the contract that A shall not appear in the business or interfere in its management, that he shall neither buy, nor sell, nor draw nor accept bills, no one would say that, as among themselves, there was any agency of each one for the others. If, indeed, a mere dormant partner were known to be a partner, and the limitation of his authority were not known, he might be able to draw bills and give orders for goods which would bind his co-partners, but, in the ordinary case this would not be so, and he would not in the slightest degree be in the position of an agent for them."

We are not unmindful of the decision of Wills, J., in Watteau v. Fenwick (7), where it is said that in the case of a dormant partner it is clear that no limitation of authority as between the dormant and active partner will avail the dormant partner as to things within the ordinary authority of a partner. In that case, the Defendants were the undisclosed principals of a hotel manager who had in fact no authority to buy any goods (except a limited class) for the use of the business from any one but the Defendants themselves. The Plaintiff gave credit to the manager alone and supplied goods not within the excepted class. In these the Officiating Second Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta on the 12th June 1923 of an offence under sec. 409, I. P. C., that is to say, of criminal breach of trust as an attorney in respect of certain books and furniture left with notwithstanding that the Plaintiff supposed himself to be dealing with a principal. The objection that in such a case there is no holding out at all and therefore no question of apparent authority was met by the analogy of a dormant partner. But the question remains, is a dormant partner liable merely because he is an undisclosed principal? Is it not rather because he is, by the partnership contract, liable to the same extent as the known partners? The decision in Edmunds v. Bushell (8) is equally open to doubt, and the dictum of Wills, J., in Watteau v. Fenwick (7) was in fact doubted by Lord Lindley in his classical treatise on Partnership. It is further worthy of note that though the case was followed in Kinahan & Co., Limited v. Parry (9), the decision in the latter case was reversed on appeal on the ground that there was no evidence to show the existence of any agency in fact; Kinahan v. Parry (10). It is plain that the view taken by Wills, J., is not in conformity with sec. 5 of the Partnership Act, 1890, which is only declaratory of the previous law. The terms of that section may be usefully re-called here: "Every partner is an agent of the firm and his other partners for the purpose of business of the partnership; and the acts of every partner who does any act for carrying on in the usual way business of the kind carried on by the firm of which will bind the firm, is too clear [illegible] any authority. It is treated as [illegible] from the case of Lane v. Williams [illegible] that of Thicknesse v. Bromilow (3). [illegible]

It has been argued that the deed [illegible] partnership, dated the 28th June 19[illegible] that [illegible] know or believe him to be a partner."

It is thus clear that the ultimate use, by a firm, of money borrowed by a partner individually on his own credit does not make the firm liable for the loan. The circumstance that the firm obtains the benefit of a transaction entered into by one of its members, as pointed out by Rolfe, B. in Beckham v. Drake (11) may show that he entered into the contract as the agent of the firm. But the fact is no more than evidence that this was the case, and the question upon which the liability or non-liability of the firm depends is, not whether the firm obtained the benefit of the contract, but did the firm by one of its partners or otherwise enter into the contract. Illustrations of this doctrine are furnished by the decisions in Emly v. Lye (12), Bevan v. Lewis (13), Smith v. Craven (14), Hawtayne v. Bourne (15), Burmester v. Norris (16), Ricketts v. Bennett (17), Re: Worcester Corn Exchange Co. (18) and Fisher v. Tayler (19). In all these cases, the firm got the benefit of the money borrowed and yet was held not liable to repay it. It was ruled in substance that the firm had not entered into any contract, express or implied, with the person dealing with the partner in question and did not incur any obligation towards that person by reason of the circumstance that it got the benefit of what he had done. The principle was applied by the Supreme Court of Canada in Shaw v. Cadwell (20); there it was ruled that where one member of a partnership borrows money upon his own credit by giving his own promissory note for the sum so borrowed, and he afterwards uses the proceeds of the note in the partnership business, of his own free will, without being under any obligation to or contract with the lender so to do, the partnership is not liable for the loan. This fundamental principle has been overlooked by the Court below. The case has not been approached from the correct standpoint, and it is consequently impossible for us to pronounce judgment on the materials on the record.

The result is that the decree of the Subordinate Judge, in so far as it dismisses the suit against the second Defendant, must be discharged and the case remanded to him for retrial against that Defendant on the lines indicated. The parties will be at liberty to adduce fresh evidence. As the Plaintiffs are in a large measure responsible for the course the trial took, they must pay the second Defendant Rs. 300 on account of costs in this Court. The costs in the lower Court will be in the discretion of that Court.

This judgment will not affect the decree obtained by the Plaintiffs against the first Defendant.

HARRY JONES,
Appellant,
v.
THE KING-EMPEROR,
Respondent.

Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 409, charge under, if lies when the accused still retains dominion over the property—Civil or Criminal Court, matter whether for, where evidence discloses a bona fide claim by the accused to the property.

Usually in a case under sec. 409, I. P. C., the property in question is no longer existent or has passed from the dominion of the accused, but where the accused still retains dominion over the property and has some claim to it, even if it turns out not to be sustainable in law, there is no offence under sec. 409 unless the claim is merely a pretence and not bonâ fide.

In a case like the above the matter is one for the Civil Court and the investigation should not ordinarily be undertaken by a Criminal Court where the accused cannot give evidence and where material witnesses, living far away, cannot be examined on commission as can be done in civil suits.

This was an appeal preferred on the 10th August 1923 against the conviction and sentence passed by the Second Chief Presidency Magistrate (Mr. K. B. Das Gupta) on the 12th June 1923.

The facts will fully appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. N. Chowdhury for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The Appellant before us was convicted by the Officiating Second Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta on the 12th June 1923 of an offence under sec. 409, I. P. C., that is to say, of criminal breach of trust as an attorney in respect of certain books and furniture left with him as the complainant's attorney for safe custody when the complainant left for England in the month of May 1904. The Appellant was sentenced to imprisonment until the rising of the Court and to pay a fine of Rs. 500.

The books and furniture to which the charge relates were seized in the top flat at 9/3 Middleton Row on the 19th November 1922 in pursuance of a search directed by the Magistrate and the books and furniture so seized were directed by the Magistrate to be returned to the complainant. The Magistrate's judgment and the charge contain references to other furniture also handed over in May 1904 by the complainant to the Appellant; this furniture and the books and furniture comprised in the charge are said to have been in the complainant's house No. 85, Upper Circular Road, at the time the complainant left for England and some of the furniture other than that comprised in the charge, is said to have been sold by the complainant but nothing turns on this as there is no charge in respect of this and matters with regard thereto may have been adjusted between the complainant and the Appellant as there were other monetary transactions between them. We are only concerned with the specific books and articles seized at 9/3 Middleton Row referred to in the charge which are set out in Exs. 4 and 5 which were lists attached to the complaint which bears date the 17th November 1922. The case has unfortunately been encumbered with evidence and references with regard to monetary dealings between the complainant and the Appellant extending from 1904 to 1922; we have nothing to do with these matters as they are not included in the charge and we do not propose to go into them.

The charge is somewhat curiously framed. As already stated the petition of complaint bears date the 17th November 1922, by which date the offence complained of must have been complete, yet the charge of criminal breach of trust is placed between the 9th September and the 30th November 1922, that is to say, during a period which ends 13 days after the complaint was laid.

Whether the charge is altogether bad on this account is a matter upon which I feel some doubt. In May 1901 the complainant was about to proceed to England to study medicine. He and the Appellant at that time were close friends as evidenced by the correspondence and there is no doubt that the complainant's affairs were considerably involved. Some arrangement was come to at this time between the complainant and the Appellant whereby in consideration of the assignment by the complainant to the Appellant of certain properties the Appellant was to pay the complainant a certain allowance during his stay in England and thereafter an allowance at a lesser rate during the rest of his life. Whether the arrangement was a device to protect the complainant's properties from his creditors or not it is impossible to say upon the materials before us nor is it necessary for us to decide this in the present case.

Prior to his departure for England, namely, on the 18th May 1904 (which is I think the correct date and not 1902 as appears in my copy), the complainant purported to sell to one Fredrick Palmer absolutely in consideration of a sum of Rs. 3,000 his household furniture, goods and chattels at 85, Circular Road, being everything in the house and compound except horses and carriages which had been already sold. This document is Ex. 8 and it comprises the books and furniture now in dispute. The consideration purports to have been paid by a cheque on Grindlays drawn by the Appellant in favour of the complainant. The Magistrate has accepted the prosecution case that this was merely a paper transaction and that no property passed and he has characterised the defence of the Appellant that this was a genuine sale as false. The defence story is that when Palmer left India in 1909 the Appellant and one Hyam took over this and other investments from Palmer and that they ultimately finally settled up this and other transactions by payment of a lump sum to Palmer. Messrs. Sanderson & Co. acted for Palmer in this settlement and their books show that a settlement was come to and a lump sum paid but there are no details of the settlement to corroborate the story of the Appellant that he paid Palmer for the furniture, books, etc., comprised in Ex. 8. Since we first heard the matter a cable had been produced purporting to come from Palmer in answer to one sent by the Appellant but it does not carry matters any further. The inference which I should draw from the cable is that Palmer either does not know or does not remember anything of the transaction to which Ex. 8 relates and the cable sent by the Appellant is, to say the least, disingenuous, indeed I am almost inclined to call it dishonest.

If the story of the Appellant is true as to the settlement with Palmer he became in 1909 the absolute owner of the books and furniture in dispute.

HARRY JONES v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

In 1914 the complainant returned to India for a short time and apparently as a result of conversations between him and the Appellant a letter was written to him by the Appellant which is Ex. 6. It is dated the 3rd December 1914 and is, omitting formal parts, as follows :—

"I shall let you have whenever you want your furniture, etc., which I am storing for you at Park Row and which I showed you the other day. If anything happens to me they will be handed over to you by my successors."

The complainant finally returned from England in, I think, 1922 and on the 7th February 1922 the Appellant executed in his favour a charge on his outstandings, Ex. 1. Part of the consideration therefor is expressed to be the sale of some of Appellant's furniture.

During 1922 correspondence passed between the complainant's solicitors and the Appellant with regard to the disputes between them in the course of which it transpired that the books and furniture now in dispute were with Mr. C. A. Jones, the brother of the Appellant, and on the 11th October 1922 a letter Ex. 29 was written by Mr. C. A. Jones' legal advisers stating that he had certain books and furniture which were taken over by him from the Appellant and that he had no knowledge as to whether any of them belonged to the complainant but that if the complainant obtained a letter from the Appellant specifying the particular books and furniture which were the Appellant's property and authorising him to make them over he would be glad to do so. On the 24th October, however, (see Ex. 20) Mr. C. A. Jones declined to make them over on the ground that the Appellant did not admit the claimant's claim to any of the articles. On the 30th November after the search the Appellant p[illegible] in a petiti[illegible] Ex. 43 submitting that the complainant ha[illegible] no claim whatever to an[illegible]y of the propert[illegible] seized, all of which the Appellant [illegible]imed. I have tried t[illegible] disentangle from the large number of documents and papers exhi[illegible] in the case many of which have nothing to do with the charge the matters which relate to the charge before us and the facts and documents above set forth are, I think, all the material which is before us relating to the books and documents which are in the issue.

The Magistrate, as I have stated, has found that the Palmer transaction was a mere paper transaction and I think there is a good deal to support this view both from the surrounding circumstances and from the letter of the 3rd December 1914 above referred to. It is not, however, satisfactory to have a [illegible] of this nature decided in criminal proceedings and, with all respect to the Magistrate, as soon as Ex. 8 was produced which on the face of it shows a sale of the books and furniture in issue to Palmer I think the case should have been stopped and the parties referred to the Civil Court which is the proper tribunal to decide a matter of this kind. There is no doubt that the Appellant has been at a great disadvantage in dealing with the matter and furnishing an explanation, if explanation there be. In the first place he could not give evidence on his own behalf and after all an examination by the Magistrate under sec. 342 and the filing of a written statement are very sorry substitutes in a matter of this nature for oral evidence in the witness box by the person primarily concerned. Again in a civil action there would be discovery of documents which naturally assists in bringing to light all letters and documents having any bearing on the question in issue; the

The Magistrate's order with regard to the books and furniture is also set aside as the rights of the claimant and of the Appellant as to these must be decided by a Civil Court which in accordance with the view expressed in this judgment is the proper forum to decide the questions which arise with regard to their ownership.

[APPEAL FROM PATNA.]

LORD SHAW. LORD CARSON. SIR JOHN EDGE. MR. AMEER ALI. SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS. 1923, Heard, 16 and 18, November. 18, December.	RAGHUNATH PRASAD SAHU, Appellant, v. SARJU PRASAD SAHU and ors., Respondents.

Indian Contract Act (IV of 1872), sec. 16—Lender and borrower—Interest stipulated, unconscionable—Undue influence, if to be presumed therefrom—Lender being in a position to dominate borrower's will to be proved first—Construction of statute.

The mere fact that a bargain appears to be unconscionable does not, under sec. 16 of the Contract Act, raise the presumption that the contract was induced by undue influence so as to cast upon the lender the onus of proving that there was no undue influence. The initial fact of the lender being in a position to dominate the will of the borrower must be first established before such a presumption will arise from the unconscionable nature of the bargain.

SAMUEL v. NEWBOLD (5), a decision on the English Moneylenders Act, 1900, is no authority on the construction of the Indian Contract Act.

ABDUL MAJEED v. KHIRODE CHANDRA PAL (4) overruled.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 9th December 1920, of the High Court at Patna which varied a decree, dated the 25th September 1917, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah.

The Defendant-Appellant, a man of considerable property, raised money on mortgage ostensibly for the purpose of defending himself against criminal proceedings which had been instituted against him by his father.

The mortgage was executed on the 27th May 1910 and stipulated for the payment of compound interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem with yearly rests.

The relevant provision in the deed and the circumstances in which it was entered into are fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

The suit was instituted by the mortgagees for the recovery of the full amount due under the mortgage on the 16th August 1916. On the 25th September 1917, the Subordinate Judge passed a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs, but considered that the rate of interest stipulated for in the deed raised a presumption of undue influence. In his opinion the agreement to pay compound interest was harsh and unconscionable and he accordingly allowed only simple interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem. On appeal the High Court (Das and Adami, JJ.) varied the decree and allowed the Plaintiffs interest at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum with yearly rests, the period of redemption to be six months from the date of the High Court decree.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C., H. N. Sen and A. Majid for the Appellant.—The evidence shows that the transaction was unconscionable and the interest exorbitant. The Appellant was in need of ready cash to defend himself against criminal proceedings, but he had a vested interest in the property. The security was large and valuable and the risk negligible.

[SIR L. JENKINS.—The property was owned jointly by the mortgagor and his father. It might [illegible] involved a good deal of litigation [illegible] the mortgagee could get a division by metes and bounds, a point which he was [illegible] to take into consideration.]

The Appellant was in a condition of helplessness and undue influence may be presumed from the mere relationship of the parties to the transaction.

Abdul Majeed v. Khirode Chandra Pal (4).

Once that presumption arises the onus is on the Respondents to rebut it. This they have failed to do.

The Appellant was "dominated" within the meaning of sec. 16 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, as amended by Act VI of 1899.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and S. Hyam for the Respondents were not called upon.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a decree, dated the 9th November 1920, of the High Court of Judicature at Patna, which varied a decree, dated the 25th September 1917, of the Subordinate Judge of Arrah.

The suit is for recovery of the amount of principal and interest due by the Appellant to the Respondents (the Plaintiffs) under a mortgage date the 27th May 1910. The Subordinate Judge gave decree in the mortgage suit but only allowed simple interest. The High Court allowed compound interest.

The substantial question raised on the appeal is whether the Appellant, in the circumstances proved in the case, fell within the protective provisions of sec. 2 of the Indian Contract (Amendment) Act, 1899. It may be convenient to set that section out in full :—

"2. Sec. 16 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, is hereby repealed, and the following is substituted therefor, namely :—

"16.—(1) A contract is said to be induced by 'undue influence' where the relations subsisting between the parties are such that one of the parties is in a position to dominate the will of the other and uses that position to obtain an unfair advantage over the other.

"(2) In particular and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing principle, a person is deemed to be in a position to dominate the will of another—

(a) where he holds a real or apparent authority over the other, or where he stands in a fiduciary relation to the other; or

(b) where he makes a contract with a person whose mental capacity is temporarily or permanently affected by reason of age, illness, or mental or bodily distress.

"(3) Where a person who is in a position to dominate the will of another, enters into a contract with him, and the transaction appears, on the face of it or on the evidence adduced, to be unconscionable, the burden of proving that such contract was not induced by undue influence shall lie upon the person in a position to dominate the will of the other.

"Nothing in this sub-section shall affect the provisions of sec. 3 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872."

It is in the view of the Board by that section that the question arising between these parties falls to be settled, and not by reference to the legislation of other countries, e.g., the English Moneylenders Act. The statute to be here construed is the Indian Contract Act as amended. It is accompanied with danger to invoke as authority in an Indian case expressions which merely connote the principles which underlie a particular English statute, and form a guide to its interpretation. As will be seen this general observation is required by reason of the citation of certain authorities alluded to in the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and referred to in the argument before their Lordships' Board.

The Appellant is a member of a joint undivided family owning a property of considerable value including inter alia 186 villages, assessed to revenue for about Rs. 17,000 annum.

The mortgage is dated the 27th May 1910. It is for the sum of Rs. 9,999 borrowed from the Plaintiffs. The rate of interest is covered by the following provision :—

RAGHUNATH PRASAD SAHU v. SARJU PRASAD SAHU.

"I, the declarant, do promise that I shall pay interest on the said debt at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem on the 30th Jeth of each year. In case of non-payment of the annual interest, the interest will be taken as principal and interest will run thereon at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem, that is, interest will be calculated on the principle of compound interest."

There can be no question that these terms were high: if payment was not made the sum due on the mortgage would speedily mount up. By the decree of the High Court which was pronounced on the 9th November 1920, it is seen that the original debt of Rs. 10,000 had reached, with interest and costs calculated up to the 8th May 1921, more than a lac of rupees, viz., Rs. 1,12,885. In eleven years the stipulation for interest at 24 per cent. compound had magnified the sum covered by the mortgage more than elevenfold. It is upon these facts, coupled with one other about to be mentioned, that the Appellant takes his stand.

The statement in the defence admits that at the time of the execution of the mortgage the Defendant was owner of one half of a valuable joint family property. The owner of the other half was his father. Father and son had quarrelled. Serious allegations are made by the son against the father; whereas it appears that the father had instituted criminal proceedings against the son. Shortly before the date of the mortgage the Defendant had borrowed Rs. 1,000 from the Plaintiffs so as to enable him to defend himself in these criminal proceedings. It is alleged that they caused him great mental distress, and that he required more money to conduct his litigations. That is the story.

Evidence was taken in the case. It is sufficient to say that the Defendant gave no evidence at all. It is quite plain that no Court can accept a story thus unproved by its author as establishing a case either of mental distress or of undue influence under the Indian Contract Act. The only case which the Appellant has is the case derived from the contents of the mortgage itself.

It is argued with force that these are unconscionable, and that it is the duty of the Court in India to step in either to rescind the contract or to rectify the bargain. It was the latter course which was argued for in the present case. In support of this argument much reliance was placed upon the judgment pronounced by Lord Davey in Dhanipal Das v. Raja Maneshar Bakhsh Singh (1).

Before, however, addressing themselves to the authorities cited their Lordships think it desirable to make clear their views upon, in particular, sub-sec. 3 of sec. 16 of the Contract Act as amended. By this sub-section three matters are dealt with. In the first place the relations between the parties to each other must be such that one is in a position to dominate the will of the other. Once that position is substantiated the second stage has been reached, viz., the issue whether the contract has been induced by undue influence. Upon the determination of this issue a third point emerges, which is that of the onus probandi. If the transaction appears to be unconscionable, then the burden of proving that the contract was not induced by undue influence is to lie upon the person who was in a position to dominate the will of the other.

Error is almost sure to arise if the order of these propositions be changed. The unconscionableness of the bargain is not the first thing to be considered. The first thing to be considered is the relations of these parties. Were they such as to put one in a position to dominate the will of the other? Having this distinction and order in view the authorities appear to their Lordships to be easily properly interpreted.

(1) L. R. 33 I. A. 118: s. c. 10 C. W. N. 849 (1906).

In the judgment of this Board in Dhanipal Das v. Raja Maneshar Bakhsh Singh (1) the outstanding effect was that the borrower who mortgaged the estate was actually, at the date of the transaction, under the control of the Court of Wards. He was treated, to use the language of Lord Davey, as "under a peculiar disability" and placed in a position of helplessness, and the lender was proved to have been aware of that and therefore, in a position to dominate the borrower's will. On p. 126 Lord Davey thus expressed the Boards' view :—

"Their Lordships are of opinion that although the Respondent was left free to contract debt, yet he was under a peculiar disability and placed in a position of helplessness by the fact of his estate being under the control of the Court of Wards, and they must assume that Auseri Lal, who had known the Respondent for some fifty years, was aware of it. They are therefore of opinion that the position of the parties was such that Auseri Lal was 'in a position to dominate the will' of the Respondent within the meaning of the amended sec. 16 of the Indian Contract Act. It remains to be seen whether Auseri Lal used that position to obtain an unfair advantage over the Respondent."

This case was followed in terms in the case of Raja Muneshar Bakhsh Singh v. Shadi Lal (2) in which the bond in suit was given by a talukdar in Oudh without the knowledge and consent of the Court of Wards after his estate had been placed under it. In these circumstances the former case was followed, and Lord Collins expressed the opinion of the Board to be that they "are satisfied that in this case also the borrower was placed in such a condition of helplessness that the lender was in a position to dominate his will and that he used that position to obtain an unfair advantage over the Appellant."

It is sufficient to say that the borrower in the present case was sui juris; had the full power of bargaining and of burdening his estate, that his estate was not under the Court of Wards and that he lay under no disability. With regard to his helplessness nothing whatsoever is proved in the case except the bare fact that he being a man of wealth as owner of one-half of certain joint family property wished to obtain and did obtain certain monies on loan. The only relation between the parties that was proved was simply that they were lender and borrower.

It is an entire mistake to represent the decisions of this Board as being wanting in light upon the last mentioned case. For in Sundar Koer v. Sham Krishen (3) the exact point was referred to by Lord Davey in the course of the judgment read by him :—

"There is no evidence of any actual exercise of undue influence by the mortgagees or of any special circumstances from which an inference of undue influence could be legitimately drawn, except that the mortgagor was in urgent need of money. The learned Counsel for the Appellant argued that the mortgagees were thereby placed in a position 'to dominate the will' of the mortgagor, and cited a recent decision of this Board—Dhanipat Das v. Raja Maneshar Bakhsh Singh (1). In that case, however, the borrower was 'a disqualified proprietor' under the Oudh Land Revenue Act, 1876, and his estate was under the management of the Court of Wards, and it was on that ground that their Lordships held that the borrower was under a peculiar disability and the position of the parties was such that the lender was 'in a position to dominate his will.' There is nothing of that kind in the present case, and their Lordships are not prepared to hold that urgent need of money on the part of the borrower will of itself place the parties in that position."

This precisely fits the situation of these parties. It has not been proved—it might be said that it has not even been attempted to be proved—that the lender was in a position to dominate the will of the borrower.

In these circumstances, even though the bargain had been unconscionable (and it has the appearance of being so) a remedy under the Indian Contract Act does not come into view until the initial fact of a position to dominate the will has been established. Once that fact is established, then the unconscionable nature of the bargain and the burden of proof on the issue of undue influence come into operation. In the present case, for the reasons stated these stages are not reached.

Their Lordships think it right to observe that the judgment now pronounced is not in accord with the principles laid down by the Appellate Civil Court of Calcutta in Abdul Majeed v. Khirode Chandra Pal (4) that "where there is ample security, the exaction of excessive and usurious interest in itself raises a presumption of undue influence which it requires very little evidence to substantiate." Their Lordships think this decision to be wrong. There is no such presumption until the question has first been settled as to the lender being in a position to dominate the borrower's will. Their Lordships are further of opinion with reference to the citation of Samuel v. Newbold (5) that that case does not form any authority in the construction of the Indian Contract Act. The case was determined under the Moneylenders Act, 1900, as it expressly bears. The issue was thus stated by Lord Macnaghten :—

"It seems to me that the construction of the Moneylenders Act, 1900, is plain enough, and that the evidence before their Lordships is more than sufficient to show that this case is within the mischief which the Act was designed to remedy."

In the view of the Board cases of that character form no precedent for a decision of the present appeal which is rested on another and very differently worded statute.

Their Lordships are of opinion that the decree of the High Court should be varied by allowing compound interest on the principal at the rate of 2 per cent. per mensem from the date of the execution of the bond until 25th September 1917, and thereafter simple interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum up to the date of realization, and that in other respects the decree of the High Court should be affirmed, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The Appellants will pay the costs of the appeal.

[Appeal from the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh.]

Lord Buckmaster.
Lord Dunedin.
Lord Carson.
Sir John Edge.
Lord Salvesen.
15, May.

Raja Mohammad Mumtaz Ali Khan, Appellant,
v.
Mohan Singh, Respondent.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec 28—Tenant in possession asserting a higher title as against landlord—Prescription—Higher title, if may be acquired by lapse of time—Landlord, if bound to sue for declaration, when possession remained on some footing.

A person who is, in fact, in possession of land under a tenancy or occupancy title cannot, by a mere assertion in a judicial proceeding and the lapse of six or twelve years without that assertion having been successfully challenged (the possession remaining all the while on the same footing), obtain a title as an under-proprietor to the land. Sec. 28 of the Limitation Act has no application to such a case.

Leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council having been granted only upon the footing that the directions as to payment of costs in the Courts below should not be varied in any event, the Judicial Committee reversed the decrees of the Courts below except in so far as they dealt with the payment of costs.

This was a consolidated appeal by special leave from decrees, dated the 30th July 1915, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, Lucknow, affirming decrees of the Court of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 27th October 1913, which affirmed decrees of the Court of the Munsif of Utraula, dated the 31st July 1913.

The suits out of which the appeal arose were instituted by the Respondents against the Appellant for a declaration that the Plaintiff was an under-proprietor of the villages in suit situated in the Appellant's taluqa.

The plaints alleged that after a decision of the Revenue Board in 1893, the Plaintiffs had continued in possession for more than 12 years on the basis of under-proprietary rights and as the Defendant (the Appellant) did not get a declaration made that the Plaintiffs' rights were not under-proprietary but those of a simple tenant, the Plaintiffs had fully acquired under-proprietary rights.

The written statements denied that either of the Respondents was an under-proprietor or that either of them had ever established his claim of under-proprietorship. The Munsif held that the Respondents had no under-proprietary rights but that they had become under-proprietors by prescription, and he passed decrees accordingly. On appeal to the District Judge these decrees were affirmed and appeals to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner were likewise dismissed.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and J. M. Parikh for the Appellant (ex parte) referred to Syke's Taluqdari Law of Oudh and Circular No. 20 of 1863, paras. 4 and 12 and Circular No. 24 of 1863.

The Courts below have held that the Respondents have in fact no under-proprietary right but that such right has been acquired by prescription.

[Lord Dunedin.—Is it not rather limitation than prescription?]

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C.—The Indian Limitation Act gives title at the end of the period.

The payments that were made to the Appellant must have been made as rent relative to simple tenancy, not payment as under-proprietors because no under-proprietary right was recorded.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SALVESEN.—The Appellant in these two appeals which have been consolidated was the Defendant in a separate suit brought by each Plaintiff (Respondent) for a declaration to the effect that he was an under-proprietor of certain land situated in the village of Badhia Farid. This village forms part of the estate called the Bilaspur estate in the Gonda District of Oudh. The Munsif's Court granted to each Plaintiff a declaratory decree in terms of the Plaintiffs' crave; these decrees were affirmed in appeal and the Defendant obtained special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. There is no distinction between the two cases so far as the points in controversy are concerned and they may, therefore, be treated as one.

There has, unfortunately, been a considerable amount of litigation between the Defendant and the Plaintiffs who have the use or occupation of the land described. As far back as the year 1891 the Defendant issued notices of ejectment

It is plain from the considered judgment of the Board of Revenue that they were of opinion that a primâ facie case had been made out by the Plaintiffs. The judgment was based on previous proceedings which had taken place between the Defendant and certain persons in occupation of the land in question in whose right the present Plaintiffs now are. In 1871 these persons had claimed in the Settlement Courts sub-settlement of the village. Their claim was rejected, but in rejecting it the Settlement Court of first instance gave them a proprietary decree in respect of "sir." This decree was appealed to the Commissioner's Court by which the decree was wholly set aside; not, however, on the merits of the title to settlement or to "sir" but on a technical ground. The case was sent back for

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), sec 28—Tenant in possession asserting a higher title as against landlord—Prescription—Higher title, if may be ...n made by lapse of time—Landlord, if bound to ... declaration, when possession remained on ... footing.

A person who is, in fact, in p... of land under a tenancy or ... title cannot, by a ... judicial proceeding ... or twelve ... ars ...

...opped ...favour ...at the ...nce had ... the ...cation ...ment, ... their ...proper ...en made ...itle so ...dence, ...brought ...rgument in ... under-proprietors ... a decree in their favour ...ent Court prior to a given ... must be presumed to have abandoned or lost any rights which they might previously have possessed. This is scarcely to be wondered at in view of the fact that while the Revenue Court was the only one which was competent to deal with a notice of ejectment it had no jurisdiction to determine proprietary rights.

After the decree of cancellation of the notice of ejectment, both parties remained quiescent until 1905, when the Defendant instituted a suit against the Plaintiffs in the Court of the Munsif of Utraula alleging that they were merely tenants and claimed possession of the lands in their occupation. The Plaintiffs resisted the suit, but on 20th September 1905, the Munsif granted a decree in favour of the present Appellant. An appeal was taken to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which on 8th August 1906, held that the suit, being for recovery of possession, would not lie in a Civil Court, and dismissed the same. This proceeding need not be further referred to beyond showing that the Defendant then maintained the same position as he took up when he served notices of ejectment upon the Plaintiffs.'

In 1910, the tenants fell into arrears of the money payment (to use a neutral term) which they had hitherto been making in respect of the lands in question, and the Defendant sued them in the Rent Court for arrears of rent, claiming interest thereon under sec. 141 of the Oudh Rent Act. It may be noted that one of the differences between an under-proprietor and an occupancy tenant having a more or less fixed tenure is, that the former is not liable to pay interest on arrears of rent. The Plaintiffs in the present case took this point and contested their liability to pay interest. On 31st May 1910, however, the Rent Court held that the Plaintiffs were not under-proprietors, and treating them as tenants allowed the claim for interest and decreed the suit.

The decision in this case led to the institution of the present suits which were brought in the beginning of 1913 in the Court of the Munsif of Utraula. In his petition of plaint each Plaintiff narrated the previous proceedings, and prayed that a declaratory decree be passed in his favour to the effect that he was under-proprietor of the lands which he occupied in the village of Badhia Farid. He maintained his suit upon two grounds—first, that he and his ancestors had been throughout under-proprietors and as such had been in possession of the lands for many years; and second, even if he failed to establish this, that he had continued in possession for more than twelve years after the date of the decree cancelling the notice of ejectment and had thus by prescription acquired under-proprietary rights.

The only issue in the suit was: Is the Plaintiff under-proprietor of the plots in suit? The Munsif decided that the Plaintiff had no under-proprietary rights but that he had become under-proprietor by prescriptive possession; he therefore decreed the suit with costs. The Defendant appealed to the Court of the District Judge of Gonda, who agreed with the Court below and dismissed the appeal. The Defendant next appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh who affirmed the judgment on the same grounds and dismissed the appeal.

As all these Courts were of opinion that each Plaintiff had failed to establish the under-proprietary rights which he claimed, and as no appeal has been taken on behalf of either, and he has not appeared before the Board in the present appeal, it is not necessary to consider the grounds upon which the learned Judges reached a result on which they were all agreed. That this result was amply warranted appears, however, from the only document of title that has been produced in the case. That document is the wajib-ul-arz of the village of Badhia Farid, the date of which is stated to be approximately 1873. An extract from this document contains the following "Para. 12 relating to under-proprietary rights" and states categorically "In this village there is no under-proprietor." In view of this document and in the absence of anything evidencing proprietary rights in favour of the Plaintiff the Board think that there cannot be any doubt as to the correctness of the decision arrived at under this heading by the Courts below. This becomes all the clearer when the history and terms of the Oudh Settlement Acts are examined. If this document had been produced in 1893 when the Defendant (Plaintiff?) sought and obtained the cancellation of the ejectment notice it may well be that the Revenue Board would not have reached the conclusion which they did that there was primâ facie evidence on which they were entitled to maintain the state of possession until the rights of the parties had been declared in a competent Court.

There remains, however, the other question on which the Courts below have decided against the Defendant. The essential ground of judgment is contained in a single sentence of the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner where he says: "There has been continuous possession of the land in the assertion of an under-proprietary right which is adverse to the landlord's proprietary title and I agree, therefore, with the lower Court that these Plaintiffs have a good title by prescription."

The assertion relied on is, of course, that contained in the proceedings for the cancellation of the notice of ejectment in 1893, and as there has been no judicial challenge of this assertion by the landlord within twelve years of the date when it was made, it is immaterial to consider from what date prescription would run, and whether the period of limitation applicable be twelve or six years.

The Board are unable to hold that the simple assertion of a proprietary right in a judicial proceeding connected with the land in dispute which ex hypothesi was unfounded at the date when it was made, can, by the mere lapse of six or twelve years, convert what was an occupancy or tenant title into that of an under-proprietor. It is true that the Defendant might, if he had chosen, have at once instituted proceedings for a declaratory decree that the Plaintiff was not an under-proprietor, but such a course was equally open to the Plaintiff. Each party had had his supposed rights judicially challenged by the other, the Plaintiff by the notice of ejectment, of which he had obtained cancellation, the Defendant by the assertion in the proceedings for cancellation of the notice for ejectment that he was not liable to be ejected because of his rights as under-proprietor. The Board, however, do not consider that it was the duty of either party to institute such a suit if they were content that possession should remain on the same footing as before the notice of ejectment was served. They are unable to affirm as a general proposition of law that a person who is, in fact, in possession of land under a tenancy or occupancy title can, by a mere assertion in a judicial proceeding and the lapse of six or twelve years without that assertion having been successfully challenged, obtain a title as an under-proprietor to the lands. Such a judgment might have very far-reaching results and would almost certainly lead to a flood of litigation. It is notorious that in actions for rent or enhancement of rent or for ejectment the persons in possession are prone to maintain rights which they do not possess, and if for any reason, as in the present case, no judicial determination is arrived at, but the parties continue on the original footing, the mere lapse of so short a period as six or twelve years (which might be amply explained upon other grounds) would deprive the landlord of his proprietary rights unless in the meantime he had brought a declaratory suit to settle once and for all the terms on which possession was held. The case might have been different if, in addition to the judicial assertion by the Plaintiff there had been any change in the money payment which he thereafter made to his landlord. There is, however, no suggestion that the same money payment which had been made before the notice of ejectment was not continued thereafter. The possession by the Plaintiff therefore remained on precisely the same footing as at the time when he was held by the Court to have merely an occupancy title, the precise nature of which it is not necessary to consider in this case.

Reference was made to the Limitation Act IX of 1908 and especially to sec. 28 which is as follows:—

"At the determination of the period hereby limited to any person for instituting a suit for possession of any property his right to such property shall be extinguished." This section appears to have no application to the present case, for the Appellant through his Counsel did not maintain that he could institute a suit for possession of the village in question, or treat the Plaintiffs as if they had merely been squatters, and the Board were not referred to and are not aware of any other section which would have the effect of extinguishing a right of property which is vested in one person and transferring it by the mere lapse of time to the person actually in possession.

Special leave to appeal was granted only upon the footing inter alia that the directions as to the payment of costs in the Courts below should not be varied in any event and that the Appellant should pay the Respondents costs. Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decrees be reversed, except in so far as they deal with the payment of costs, and that the suits be dismissed. As the Respondents have not appeared there will be no order as to the costs of the appeals.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 170, cl. (3)—Transferee of whole or part of non-transferable occupancy holding, if has an interest voidable on the sale and if entitled to deposit.

A transferee of the whole or a part of non-transferable occupancy holding not recognised by the landlord is not entitled to make a deposit under sec. 170, cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The interest of such a transferee passes by the sale and is not voidable on the sale.

The Petitioner objected to the deposits. The Munsif, by his orders, dated the 13th June 1923, allowed the deposits.

The following portion of his judgment will be found material :—

"In Bengal the authoritative judicial view seems to be that a purchaser, in part or whole, of a non-transferable occupancy holding is entitled to make a deposit under sec. 170, cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act [Tarak Das Pal v. Harish Chandra Banerjee (1) and Ahamadulla Chowdry v. Prayag Sahu (2)]. There is, however, a ruling recently reported in the note part of the Calcutta Weekly Notes (Vol. 26, p. clxx) which lays down that a purchaser of an entire holding cannot make the deposit. As the case is not fully reported it is not possible to say whether its facts or those of the other two cases mentioned before resemble the facts of the case under consideration. There is nothing in this new ruling as reported to affect the right of a purchaser of a part."

Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur for the Petitioner.—An unrecognised transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding either of the whole or a part is not entitled to make a deposit under sec. 170, cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In Rule No. 886, the entire holding had been sold by the raiyat, and the applicant was a transferee of a part. In the other two Rules Nos. 887 and 888, there was a transfer for a part by the raiyat who was in possession of the other part.

To determine the right of a person who is not a judgment-debtor to make the deposit, the true rule, I submit, is this: If such a person has an interest voidable on the sale, he is entitled to make a deposit. According to sec. 159 a purchaser takes the tenure or holding free from incumbrances. An incumbrance is defined in sec. 161: an incumbrance is to be avoided or annulled under sec. 167. Therefore, I submit, it is only the incumbrance-holders whose interests are voidable on the sale who are entitled to make a deposit. So, in determining the right of a person entitled to make a deposit, it is to be seen whether he has any incumbrance within the meaning of sec. 161. A sale is not an incumbrance [see Abdul Rahman v. Ahmadar Rahman (6) and Tamijuddin v. Khoda Nawaz (7)].

(7) 14 C. W. N. 229 (1909).

The interest of a purchaser of a non-transferable occupancy holding not recognised by the landlord, passes by the sale in execution of the decree obtained by the landlord against the tenant. The auction-purchaser at such a sale gets the holding; the interest of both the tenant transferror and the transferee is extinguished on the sale. The interest of such a transferee, therefore, is not voidable on the sale, and he is not entitled to make the deposit under sec. 170, cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I submit there is no difference between the case of a transferee of the entire holding and that of a portion. The same principle applies to both cases.

I rely upon the following cases:—Nalini Behary Roy v. Fulmani Dasi (3), Mahammad Ismail v. Satyesh Chandra Sirkar (4), Kumar Narendra Nath Mitter v. Abdul Molla (5), Radhabinode Mandal v. Nitai Chand Sant (8) and Mahadeo Lal v. Langat Singh (9).

The cases of Tarak Das Pal Chowdhury v. Harish Chandra Banerjee (1) and Ahamadulla Chowdry v. Prayag Sahu (2) cited by the lower Court no doubt have taken a different view. The case of Sahdeo Singh v. Kuldip Singh (10) fully reported in 27 I. C. 424, which was a case of part transfer is also against me but I ought to point out that this case was decided on the same date and by the same Judges who decided the case of Ahamadulla Chowdry v. Prayag Sahu (2). Further, I ought to

I submit that the cases which lay down that the unrecognised transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding is not entitled to make the deposit have taken the correct view.

Mr. S. C. Maity for the Opposite Party in No. 886.—I submit that the Opposite Parties, as transferees of non-transferable occupancy holdings, have interests in the holdings that are voidable on the sale and are therefore entitled to make the deposits under sec. 170, cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I rely upon the cases in Tarak Das Pal v. Harish Chandra Banerjee (1) and Ahamadulla Chowdry v. Prayag Sahu (2). Having regard to the conflict of decisions on the point I submit that the question should be referred to a Full Bench.

These three Rules were obtained by the landlord who has obtained decrees for rent and put them into execution. Applications were made by purchasers of portions of the holdings for deposit of the decretal amount under sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The decree-holder objected that the applicants had no right to make the deposit under the provisions of that section. The learned Munsif overruled the objection of the decree-holder and directed that the applicants were entitled to make the deposit under the law.

It is contended on behalf of the Petitioners that the interest of the applicants in the holdings is not voidable on the sale and therefore they were not entitled to make the deposit. It is not denied before us that the applicants have an interest in the holdings which are sought to be sold in execution of the rent decree. But the contention is that the interest of the applicants would pass by the sale and it is not such an interest as should be considered as " voidable on the sale." There has been some conflict of decisions in this Court on that point. The learned Munsif relied on the case of Tarak Das Pal v. Harish Chandra Banerjee (1) and the case of Ahamadulla Chowdry v. Prayag Sahu (2) in support of the proposition that these persons were entitled to make the deposit under sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The cases to the contrary which we need refer to are the case of Nalini Behary Roy v. Fulmani Dasi (3), the case of Mahammad Ismail v. Satyes Chandra Sirkar (4) and the case in which judgment was delivered by one of us [Kumar Narendra Nath Mitter v. Abdul Molla (5)]. In the case of Tarak Das Pal v. Harish Chandra Banerjee (1) on which the Counsel for the Opposite Party mainly relies, it is stated that the interest of an unrecognised purchaser of a non-transferable holding is an interest which is voidable on the sale. The contention that was raised on behalf of the landlord in that case is mentioned at p. 165 of the Report and it was that the interest is extinguished on the sale and cannot therefore be described as voidable on the sale. This contention was overruled as it was held that the contrary proposition had been laid down in some of the cases mentioned in the judgment. It would, however, appear on examination of the cases cited that this point has not been considered in any of the cases in the view that has been presented before us. The position is this: After the transferee has been recognised by the landlord a decree obtained against the transferee would not bind the transferee and therefore the interest of the transferee would not be affected by the sale. Such a transferee would not therefore necessarily come within the provisions of sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Where the transferee of a non-transferable holding has not been recognised by the landlord a decree obtained against the tenant transferror would be binding on the unrecognized transferee, and in execution of the decree the interest of the transferee would also pass along with the interest of the transferror and the auction-purchaser gets the interest of both the persons, the transferror and the transferee, who were interested in the holding. It can therefore hardly be said that the interest of the transferee is one which is voidable on the sale and therefore upon the terms of the section it would appear that such transferees are not entitled to make the deposit under sec. 170 (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. It is unnecessary for us to express any opinion whether they would be entitled to make any deposit under the Rules laid down in Or. 21 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We are asked on behalf of the Opposite Party, having regard to the conflict of decisions, that this question should be referred to a Full Bench. But the view we now take has been taken generally in a number of cases and those cases being more recent than the case of Tarak Das Pal v. Harish Chandra Banerjee (1), we do not think that it is necessary to make any reference to a Full Bench. Furthermore both of us agree with the reasoning in the decision of one of us, Kumar Narendra Nath Mitter v. Abdul Molla (5) mentioned above. The case of Ahamadulla Chowdry v. Prayag Sahu (2) merely follows the decision in Tarak Das Pal v. Harish Chandra Banerjee (1).

The Rules are therefore made absolute and the order of the learned Munsif is set aside. Having regard to the circumstances of the case we make no order as to costs.

The record will be sent down at once.

This was a Rule issued against the decision of the Munsif, 3rd Court, Burdwan, exercising Small Cause Court powers, dated the 24th September 1923.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Narendra Nath Chaudhuri for the Petitioner.

Babu Narendra Nath Dalal for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The question which arises in this Rule is whether the Small Cause Court had jurisdiction to try the suit. The Plaintiff instituted the suit for recovery of a sum of Rs. 49 alleged to have been due as price of bhag paddy and straw. The plaint alleged that the land had been settled with the Defendant in the month of Jaistha and the Defendant had stipulated to deliver to the Plaintiff by the month of Falgoon a half share of the paddy and straw that would be grown on the land, and in case of default would be liable to deliver 25 per cent. more as bridhi or interest in accordance with local usage; that the Defendant, in accordance with the aforesaid promise or stipulation, after having taken settlement of the land cultivated the land and grew paddy and straw of which the quantities were also stated and the price of half thereof was claimed together with interest as aforesaid. One of the objections taken in the written statement was that the suit was one for rent and so was not within the cognizance of the Small Cause Court. The Opposite Party in an affidavit filed in this Court has stated that this objection was not pressed at the hearing of this suit. This however is a question affecting the jurisdiction of the Court and there can be no waiver in a matter of this description.

The answer to this question would depend upon the determination of the question as to whether the Petitioner under the terms of the contract with the Opposite Party was a tenant or a servant, and in determining that question, the terms of the agreement and the whole of the circumstances must be taken into consideration.

On behalf of the Petitioner reliance has been placed upon the decisions of this Court in Shoma Mehta v. Rajani Biswas (1) and Lalji Pandey v. Brahmadeo Pandey (2) and upon the allegation in the plaint that the land had been settled with the Defendant and on the Plaintiff's evidence to the effect that it was so settled and on the finding of the Judge that the Defendant held the land. On behalf of the Opposite Party the cases of Kade Mandal v. Ahadali Molla (3) and Shaikh Pokhan v. Rajani Kamal Chuckerbutty (4) were relied upon.

JADAB CHANDRA SANTRA v. GOPAL CHANDRA DEBNATH.

It is unnecessary to refer to earlier cases which deal with this point, as most of them have been elaborately discussed in the judgment of this Court in the case of Lalji Pandey v. Brahmadeo Pandey (2). As observed by Mookerjee, J., in that judgment there is no real conflict in the decisions bearing upon this question and the real question to be determined first is whether the Defendant is a tenant or not. With regard to this matter each case will depend on its own facts.

In the case of Shoma Mehta v. Rajani Biswas (1) the judgment proceeded upon the assumption that the suit is one for recovery of produce rent. In the case of Kade Mandal v. Ahadali Molla (3) the contract alleged in the plaint made the bargadar a servant. In the case of Lalji Pandey v. Brahmadeo Pandey (2) the distinguishing features were that the claim was in respect of crops for 4 years and the claim was explicitly described as the malik's share; and these features enabled the Court to pronounce on the status of the Defendant as that of a tenant. In the case of Shaikh Pokhan v. Rajani Kamal Chuckerbutty (4), the kabuliyat was described as one for agricultural labour for cultivating in partnership the khas khamar land, the executant stipulated that every year before growing crops he would ask the grantor which kind of paddy was to be grown on which land, and shall grow paddy according to the grantor's desire, and further agreed to take the whole of the paddy to the grantor's house for threshing and that he shall get the remaining paddy (after delivery of the grantor's share) as remuneration for cultivation seeds, looking after the labour instead of money in cash. This unmistakeably showed that the executant of the kabuliyat was a servant.

In the present case the distinguishing features of the cases noted above are entirely absent. The plaint on the face of it is for recovery of price of a share of paddy and straw. The expressions "settlement" and "holding the land" may be consistent with either view of the Defendant's status. If it was a tenancy, the period for which it was to last is not stated. The words "promise" and "stipulation" are used, which point more to a mere contract than to a contract of tenancy. On the face of this plaint therefore there was nothing to suggest that the Defendant was a tenant.

If therefore the Petitioner's case was that he was one and on that ground the Court had no jurisdiction, it was for him to bring before the Court materials which would have proved the same. This he has not done. The Rule, therefore, must be discharged with costs, hearing fee one gold mohur.

GREAVES, J. DUVAL, J. 1924, Heard, 9, April. Judgment, 16, April.	DWARKADAS HARIDAS, Petitioner, v. MR. AMBALAL GANPATRAM, Opposite Party.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs 54, 60 and 61—Magistrate giving bail and ordering person arrested by police under sec. 54 to appear in another Court after 10 days, legality and propriety of—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1858), sec 409, proper forum for trial of an offence under — Criminal Court not to try cases of a civil nature.

A commission agent in Calcutta of a limited company in Ahmedabad was charged in a Magistrate's Court in

DWARKADAS HARIDAS v. MR. AMBALAL GAINI

Ahmedabad with having committed the offence of criminal breach of trust in respect of sale proceeds of certain bales of goods, and was arrested in Calcutta on the 5th March 1924 by a C. I. D. Officer of Poona under the provisions of sec. 54, Criminal Procedure Code. On the 6th March the C. I. D. Inspector produced him before the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta, asking he might be forwarded to the Magistrate in Ahmedabad. The Chief Presidency Magistrate granted the accused bail and directed him to appear in Ahmedabad Court on the 16th March:

The complaint then charges dishonest and fraudulent mis- appropriation by the accused of a sum of Rs. 67,017-13-3 admitted by the accused in his accounts to have been received and charges him with an offence under sec. 409 of the Indian Penal Code and with such other offences as might be disclosed in the evidence and asks for seizure of the books of account relating to the sales and of other books and documents bearing on the case, for the arrest of the accused in respect of an offence under sec. 409, I. P. C. and that a Police Officer may be deputed to Calcutta for the purpose.

Ambalal Ganpatram states that in the [illegible] course of the investigation he examined the complainant, Lalbhai Tricumlal and other witnesses at Ahmedabad and the correspondence and accounts. On the 1st March he obtained a search warrant from a first class Magistrate at Ahmedabad for the books, documents, etc., and came to Calcutta and in execution thereof took charge of the books, etc., from the house and office of Dwarkadas after making a search list and arrested Dwarkadas under the provisions of sec. 54, Cr. P. Code, on the 5th March and produced him on the 6th before the Chief Presidency Magis- trate asking that he might be forwarded under proper escort to the 1st class Magistrate, Ahmedabad.

In making the application Ambalal Gan- patram produced a letter in the following terms :—

To

The Chief Presidency Magistrate,

Sir,

I have the honour to report that the accused Dwarkadas Haridas who is wanted in the marginally noted* case of Kalupur Police Station in Ahmedabad City was arrested by me at Nos. 167 and 168, Lower Chitpur Road last night at 9-36 P.M. I therefore produce the accused before your honour and pray that he may be forwarded to the 1st Class Magistrate of Ahmedabad under proper escort.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient servant,

Dwarkadas applied for bail to the Chief Presidency Magistrate who made the following order on the 6th March.

"Accused Dwarkadas Haridas. Petition for bail filed. Grant bail Rs. 50,000 to appear before the 1st class Magistrate, Ahmedabad on 16th March 1924. Sec. 409, Cr. P. C."

I do not think that the Chief Presidency Magistrate was right in making this order. There is no doubt that under sec. 54 of the Criminal Procedure Code a Police Officer may arrest without warrant in the case of a cognizable offence but under sec. 60 he is bound without unnecessary delay to take or send the person arrested before the Magistrate and under sec. 61 this must be done within 24 hours. ants of the Watan lands by adverse possession against the Respondents' father Ramchandra.

That claim was founded on the following facts which had been admitted or concurrently found.

On the 15th March 1853 Venkatrao Narayan Deshpande, the grandfather of the respondents and son of the then Watan... purported to lease the Watan land ... any of these rules.

R. 16 of Part II is, so far ... the ancestor of the ... follows:—"No motor vehicle ... yearly rent ... driven at a greater speed than (2) ten ... hour, if a heavy motor car, and 8 miles ... hour, if the axle weight of any axle of the heavy motor car exceeds six tons, or ... it draws a trailer." ... was ... n the case of The ... death. think, as I have already said, that the order of the Chief Presidency Magistrate was wrong and I think that he should have refused to act upon the mere statement of the investigating Police Officer but required him to produce a warrant from Ahmedabad, releasing Dwarkadas in the meantime on bail to appear when called on before himself. If this course had been adopted it is accompanied by various safeguards, for the Police Officer would have had to satisfy the Court issuing the warrant of the nature of the offence charged and that it could be enquired into and tried in Ahmedabad. The Court would have to so decide bearing in mind the provisions of sec. 117, Cr. P. Code which provides that every offence shall ordinarily be enquired into and tried by a Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction it was committed.

Various other questions were raised before us—notably that the facts show that the whole matter was really a civil dispute and not of a criminal nature. I think there is considerable force in this contention having regard to the previous afterwards apparently allowed Appaji to resume possession pending negotiations for some fresh agreement.

These negotiations, however, failed and on the 16th May 1887 Ramchandra executed a permanent lease in favour of one Sintre and put him in possession of the property. Sintre continued in possession till about December 1890 when one Nana Patil got possession as purchaser of a decree obtained against Ramchandra.

Thereafter there was or purported to be a reference to arbitration between Gundo, Appaji's son Waman (Appaji having died), Sintre and Nana Patil and the arbitrators awarded that possession should be given to Waman Appaji on his making certain payments to Sintre and others. The Respondents' father was not a party to the reference, but was stated to have intimated to the arbitrators that he was willing to accept Waman Appaji as tenant if he agreed to pay the yearly rent of Rs. 36 and a nazarana; and thereafter he appears to have accepted rent from Waman Appaji till his death on the 29th October 1902.

Thereafter his sons, the Respondents, refused to accept rent from Waman and after his death from his sons and on the 22nd October 1914 instituted the present suit for the recovery of the land in question.

The Appellants put in a written statement claiming to be permanent tenants by adverse possession and issues were raised but the only issue material to this appeal is that of adverse possession.

The trial Judge on the 9th September 1916 dismissed the suit with costs. "It is undisputed," he said, "that the land sued for is a Deshpande Watan Inam. There is no doubt that the original grantor had only a life interest in it and had no power to lease it beyond his life-time. Plaintiffs' grandfather who passed the lease of 1853 died in 1864-5 and Plaintiffs' father had 12 years from that time for disputing the lease. Not having done so the Plaintiffs' right of disputing the permanent lease is barred."

In the earlier part of his judgment as to the facts the Subordinate Judge held on the admission of Waman Appaji before the arbitrators that the Appellants' family had been dispossessed by Sintre, but stated that there was no documentary evidence to corroborate the assertion of Respondents that their family was in possession about 12 years before 1887. This had, however, also been admitted by Waman Appaji before the arbitrators and was recorded in their award.

From this decree the Respondents appealed and the High Court allowed their appeal and gave them a decree for possession and for mesne profits to be ascertained in execution.

In their judgment they stated that if as they assumed Gundo stood in the shoes of the Watandar the agreement with him was a fresh agreement which stopped adverse possession from running; they also held that there was actual ouster of Appaji by Ramchandra and a fresh tenancy created between them soon after 1882. Again they found that the Appellants had in 1891 recognised the right of Ramchandra to let the land to Sintre and bought up his rights: they held therefore that no case of adverse possession had been made out.

After this judgment had been delivered the Appellant applied for a review on the ground inter alia that the suit was barred by sec. 4 of the Revenue Jurisdiction Act, X of 1876, by a resolution of Government, but the resolution relied on proved to be merely a resolution approving a recommendation of the Commissioner that an order of the Collector evicting the Appellants under sec. 12 of the Watan Act should be set aside and an order of the District Deputy Collector refusing to interfere as sec. 9 of the Hereditary Offices Act under which his interference was applied for was not imperative. The application was accordingly dismissed on the 17th February 1919.

Hence this appeal.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants. It is admitted that the Appellants have been in possession since 1891 and the onus is on the Respondents to show that they have been in possession within the last 12 years.

Art. 142, Indian Limitation Act, IX of 1908, sec. 28

[LORD PHILLIMORE. It is not clear that possession was adverse.]

From 1861 to 1892 no rent was paid Payments to Gundo were no payments to the Watandar. The payments to Gundo were under an agreement with him that the Appellants were permanent tenants.

No payments were made to Ramchandra except specifically on the claim of permanent tenure.

Adverse possession commenced as soon as there was on the part of a Watandar other than the original grantor an immediate right of possession.

Tekait Ram Chunder Singh v. Sm. Madho Kumari (4). A Watandar represents the whole estate sufficiently for adverse possession to run against each succeeding holder of the Watan.

Radhabai v. Anantrao (3), Rama v. Shamrao (2) and Trimbak Ramchandra v. Shekh Gulam Zilani (5).

The Appellants have in fact been in possession on a customary tenure prior to 1853 and the grant then only ratified a tenure which already existed.

Reference was also made to Padapa Bin Bhujangapa v. Swamirao Shriniwas (1).

Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents. A Watandar cannot create any interest in a Watan estate to endure beyond his life and the Appellants never became permanent tenants.

The receipt of rent by Ramchandra is only referable to a new tenancy created by him and ending at his death.

Except that this is a Watandar and not a shebait this case is on all fours with Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (6).

The Appellants' possession was never adverse.

The decision in Trimbak Ramchandra v. Shekh Gulam Zilani (5) was based on an erroneous interpretation of Radhabai v. Anantrao (3).

The Plaintiffs could not have sued earlier as no suit will lie to set aside a mere assertion.

Nilmony Singh v. Kalee Churn (7).

The evidence shows that the Appellants have been twice evicted so that their possession has not been continuous.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. in reply.—Vidya Varuthi Thirtha v. Balusami Ayyar (6) is on quite a different footing.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE. The suit in which this appeal has arisen was brought on 22nd October 1914, in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge of Belgaum by Watandars for the ejectment of the Defendants from service Watan lands in Mauza Bhivashi in Taluka Chikodi in the District of Belgaum, and for mesne profits. The Defendants are not Watandars, nor is any one of them a Watandar of the Watan. The Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 in their written statement allege that they, from before 1853, acquired adversely to the family of the Plaintiffs a right to the possession of the lands in question as permanent tenants, and enjoyed that right for more than 12 years before suit in the life-time of the father of the Plaintiffs, and that "the cause of action arose in the year 1865, when the Plaintiffs' grandfather died." The title, if any, of the other Defendants depends on the title of the Defendants Nos. 1 to 4.

The facts of the case will be briefly stated presently, but in order to see whether under those facts the defence of adverse possession is maintainable, it is necessary to bear in mind what the law as to the alienation by a Watandar of his service Watan lands was, in 1853, and has been down to the institution of this suit.

Reg. XVI of 1827 was passed by the ... of Bombay in Council on the no power to lea... 1827. Before that Regula- ... a Watandar could, apparently without the sanction of the Government, assign or mortgage his service Watan lands and could grant, to any one a permanent lease of them, but the effect of secs. 19 and 20 of that Regulation was to prohibit, in the interests of the State, all such Watandars from alienating in any way the service Watan lands which they held as Watandars. Secs. 19 and 20 of that Regulation applied to the lands in suit. Secs. 19 and 20 of that Regulation continued in force until they were repealed by Bombay Act III of 1874, but the repeal of those sections by Act III of 1874 did not make valid any alienation of service Watan lands which had been prohibited ... Reg. XVI ... 1827 (Padapa Bin Bhujangapa v. Swamirao Shrinivas (1)). Sec. 5 of Bombay Act, III of 1874, now applies to the lands in question. That section is as follows:—

"V. No Watandar shall, without the sanction of Government, sell, mortgage, or otherwise alienate or assign any Watan or part thereof or interest therein to any person not a Watandar of the same Watan."

That section of Bombay Act, III of 1874, was passed, as was sec. 20 of Reg. XVI of 1827, in the interests of the State and not in the interests of the Watandars only. The granting by a Watandar of a right of permanent tenancy in lands of his Watan would undoubtedly be an alienation within the meaning of sec. 20 of Reg. XVI of 1827.

The facts of the case may be briefly stated as follows. The lands in suit are service Watan lands, and were in the possession of Appaji, who was the grandfather of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the uncle of the Defendants Nos. 3 and 4. In 1853, Appaji held those lands and other service Watan lands of the Watan as a tenant of Venkatrao, the Watandar, at a yearly rent of Rs. 42. Venkatrao was the grandfather of the Plaintiffs. Some of these lands which Appaji held as a yearly tenant were, in or before 1853, taken by the Government for the purpose of making a public road, and consequently Appaji and Venkatrao agreed to re-adjust the rent by reducing it to Rs. 36 a year. That agreement was embodied in a document which was signed by Venkatrao on the 15th March 1853. That document, as translated, is as follows :—

"Shri,

"In the service of Rajashriya Virajit Rajmanya Rajashri Appajipant Appa Saundalgekar residing at Nipani

"Profound salutations of protege Venkatrao Narayan Deshpande, Prant Kagal. Special representation is as follows Further Our Deshpandki land measuring 15 bighas, situate in Mouze Bhiyshi, Prant aforesaid, stands in the name of Ti. So from before the said land has been given you for cultivation for a fixed rent of Rs. 42 forty-two in Panali coin and at the time of survey a road is shown in the said land and in it some land was covered by the road. Therefore Rs 6 six out of the said amount of rent are remitted to you and the said land is given you for cultivation by fixing a rent of Rs. 36 thirty-six in Panali coin per year. At the sale, in execution of his decree, Gundo became the purchaser. It is not necessary to consider whether the Court had any power to order that sale.

On the 17th January 1872, it was agreed between Gundo and Appaji, by registered document, that Appaji, as the permanent tenant of the lands in suit, should pay to Gundo the Rs. 36 rent and for 20 years an additional sum of Rs. 42 a year. The Rs. 36 and Rs. 42 were paid yearly from 1872 to 1890 to Gundo by Appaji and after his death by his son Waman, who was the father of the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2.

that they, from ue to enjoy the lands versely to the tenant. That award right to the 29th March 1894, made a fee of Court. The payments so ordered were made by Waman. From 1895 to 1902 Waman paid the rent of Rs. 36 a year to Ramchandra. In Ramchandra's receipts for those payments he acknowledged that Waman held the lands as a permanent tenant. In the record-of-rights of 1911-12 the Defendant No. 1 was entered as the permanent tenant of the lands. Upon the death of Ramchandra the Defendants tendered to the Plaintiffs the rent of Rs. 36 yearly as their rent as permanent tenants, but the Plaintiffs refused to receive the money so tendered. Ramchandra died on the 29th October 1902, and the Plaintiffs succeeded him as the Watandars. Upon the facts which have briefly been stated being proved the Subordinate Judge found that the evidence in favour of the permanent tenancy alleged by the Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 was overwhelming. He stated in his judgment that :-

"It is undisputed that the land sued for is a Deshpande Vatan (Watan) Inam. There is no doubt that the original grantor (Venkatrao) had only a life interest in it and had no power to lease it beyond his lifetime Plaintiffs' grandfather (Venkatrao), who passed (granted) the lease of 1853, died in 1864 5, and the Plaintiffs' father (Ramchandra) had 12 years from that time for disputing the lease. Not having done so, Plaintiffs' right of disputing the permanent lease and of claiming possession is barred Rama v. Shamrao (2); Radhabai v. Anantrar (3)."

The Subordinate Judge gave the Plaintiffs a decree for six years' rent at the rate of Rs. 36 a year, amounting to Rs. 216, and otherwise dismissed the suit with costs.

From that decree the Plaintiffs appealed to the High Court at Bombay. The appeal was heard by Sir Basil Scott, C. J., and Mr. Justice Hayward. Those learned Judges stated that : "The only question which really arises in this appeal is whether the Defendants can claim to have established a right to a permanent tenancy by adverse possession." They held that adverse possession commenced to run on the death of Venkatrao, but they referred to the agreement of the 17th January 1872, between Gundo and Appaji, and holding that Gundo, after the purchase by him in 1870, represented the Watandar so far as these lands in question are concerned, they decided that it was impossible to hold that adverse possession in favour of the person claiming to be a permanent lessee continued to run after that agreement. If that decision were correct, as to which it is not necessary for their Lordships to express any opinion, Appaji and his son Waman were not holding adversely from January 1872, until 1894. Those learned Judges also held, and their Lordships think rightly, that there had been two breaks in the alleged adverse possession within 12 years of the death of Venkatrao, but they do not base the advice which they will give to His Majesty upon that fact. Those learned Judges, in conclusion, stated in their judgment that: "It appears to us, therefore, that the Defendants cannot, on a review of the occurrences during the life-time of the Plaintiffs' father (Ramchandra), contend that there has been any continuous adverse possession for 12 years until the Plaintiffs' father's death in 1902, which would entitle them to claim to occupy the land in suit as permanent tenants. It is not disputed that since 1902 the Plaintiffs declined to accept rent from the Defendants, and that their suit has been filed within 12 years of their father's death. For these reasons we set aside the decree of the Lower Court and pass a decree in favour of the Plaintiffs for possession and mesne profits of the land in the occupation of the Defendants," with all costs. From that decree this appeal has been brought by the Defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The other Defendants are nominal Respondents to this appeal; they have not appeared.

One of the authorities upon which the Subordinate Judge relied for his decision that the suit of the Plaintiffs was barred by limitation was Radhabai and Ramchandra Konher v. Anantrao Bhagvant Deshpande (3). That was a Full Bench decision of the High Court of Bombay in which Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., delivered the leading judgment. The judgments of the late Sir Charles Sargent always deserve and receive careful consideration by the Board. The material point of that decision, so far as it has a bearing on the present case, is briefly stated in the head-note to the report of that case thus:—

"Held (1), that, in the absence of fraud and collusion, adverse possession for twelve years during the life-time of one holder of service Vatan lands is a bar to succeeding holders"

The lands there in question were service Watan lands, to which sec. 20 of Reg. XVI of 1827 applied. The Plaintiff there sued for the possession of service Watan lands and for mesne profits. The Defendants claimed to be in possession of the lands under a grant of 1838 to them of the lands made by the Plaintiffs' grandfather, who was, at the time of the grant, the Watandar, and they pleaded limitation by adverse possession; the adverse possession relied upon by the Defendants being apparently their having continued in undisturbed possession for a period of 12 years after the death of the grantor. The Plaintiff's case was that his grandfather, the grantor, had no power to make a grant of the lands except for his life-time and that his (the Plaintiff's) father had no authority to allow the lands to continue in the possession of the Defendants. Sargent, C. J., and Mr. Justice Nanabhai Haridas had referred three questions to the Full Bench. It is only necessary to refer to the first of those questions which was: "1. Whether adverse possession for 12 years during the life-time of one holder is a bar to succeeding holders." The Full Bench decided that in the absence of fraud and collusion, the first question should be answered in the affirmative, leaving what is to be considered an adverse possession to be determined in each particular case. The question and answer to it of the Full Bench would, when looked at in ignorance of the facts of the case, appear to be general and not confined to a case of an absolute assignment of service Watan lands by a Watandar to a stranger, who alleged that he had obtained title by 12 years of undisturbed possession. It is necessary to see what that answer to the first question really meant. And for that purpose, it is, in their Lordships' opinion, necessary to see what the alienation then in question really was. It was not an alienation by a lease of a permanent tenancy to a tenant of the Watan; it was a sale and absolute assignment to a stranger to the Watan and to the family of the Watandar, followed by a period of 12 years after the death of the grantor, during which the stranger assignee was allowed by the successors of the Watandar grantor to continue in undisturbed possession of the Watan lands. In either case the grant would be beyond doubt an alienation which was prohibited by sec. 20 of Reg. XVI of 1827, but having regard to the facts of the case which was before Sir Charles Sargent, C. J., and Mr. Justice Nanabhai Haridas, which justified their order of reference to the Full Bench, all that the Full Bench can be taken as having decided was that a stranger to the Watan, who had got possession of service Watan lands by an absolute assignment to him by a grantor, who was at the time of the grant the Watandar, could successfully defend a suit for possession of those lands by a subsequent Watandar by proving that after the death of the grantor he had been in undisturbed possession of the lands for a period of 12 years. A careful consideration of Sir Charles Sargent's judgment, as given in Radhabai v. Anantrav (3), shows that he was considering the question referred to the Full Bench from the point of view of the grantee having been a stranger to the Watan. It is not necessary for their Lordships to decide in this case whether the answer of the Full Bench, limited as it must have been to the case of a stranger to the Watan, setting up as a defence, 12 years' adverse possession, was or was not correct, although they are constrained to say that it is somewhat difficult to see how a stranger to a Watan can acquire a title by adverse possession for 12 years of lands, the alienation of which was, in the interests of the State, prohibited. Their Lordships may say, further, that if it was necessary for them to decide whether the answer of the Full Bench to the first question referred to that Bench was or was not correct it would be necessary for them to consider whether the Secretary of State for India in Council, as representing the interests and rights of the Crown in service Watan lands, was not a necessary party to a suit in which a stranger claimed that he was entitled to those lands by a right of adverse possession.

In the present case the defence of 12 years' adverse possession as permanent tenants is set up by persons who and their predecessors-in-title, always claimed to be and were tenants of service Watan lands, and in the opinion of their Lordships neither the Defendants nor their predecessors-in-title could have acquired any title to a permanent tenancy in the lands by adverse possession as against the Watandars from whom they held the lands.

Their Lordships will humbly advise

The Bengal Tenancy Act has taken away an under-raiyat's right of acquiring a right of occupancy under any condition except by local usage or custom, and he is no better than a tenant-at-will with no tangible interest in the land except that of holding it till the end of the agricultural year.

There is ample authority for the view that the right of an under-raiyat is not transferable.

The ...y to amend its decree wer to it of ...ought to its notice that the when loc[...] ...oes not agree with the judgment. facts ...e only exception to this general rule is where owing to third parties being affected it may be inequitable to order an amendment.

This was a Rule issued on the 20th November 1923, calling on the Opposite Party, the Plaintiff and the Defendants Nos. 1 to 7, to show cause why the decree passed by the first Court should not be amended in the manner proposed in the petition.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta for the Petitioner.

Babu Nripendra Chandra Das for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SUHRAWARDY, J. This Rule was issued on the Opposite Party to show cause why the decree passed in suit No. 41 of 1919 in the Court of the first Subordinate Judge of Dacca should not be amended as prayed in the petition. The suit was a partition suit and on the 10th April 1919 the Subordinate Judge of Dacca passed a decree in it. There was an appeal to the District Judge by a party other than the Petitioner and the Defendant No. 7. The decree of the first Court was affirmed on the 7th August 1920. There was a second appeal to this Court which was dismissed under Or. 41, r. 11 on the 14th March 1921. The decree was executed and possession was delivered to the different parties on the 8th February 1922. It is stated that the Petitioner at that time discovered the mistake, namely, the omission of a certain direction in the decree and he applied on the 18th July 1922 to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Dacca for its amendment. That application remained pending till the 9th June 1923, when it was dismissed on the ground that the application should have been made to this Court, the original decree having merged in the decree of this Court in the second appeal. Hence the Petitioner moved this Court and obtained the present Rule. The defect in the decree complained of is this. The Petitioner was the Defendant No. 8 in the Court below. In the partition suit a Commissioner was appointed: and the parties by mutual consent agreed to the allotments made by him. The real dispute in the present matter lies between Defendant No. 8 who is the Petitioner and the Defendant No. 7 who is the contesting Opposite Party. The two plots allotted to these two Defendants are contiguous. It was agreed that Defendant No. 8 (the Petitioner) should give a road over his plot No. 8 to Defendant No. 7 and in exchange get a two feet wide strip of land from east to west being the northern portions of Plot No. 7 which was allotted to Defendant No. 7. All these terms are embodied in the judgment. The decree, however, though it mentions that a way will be kept over Plot No. 8 for access to Plot No. 7 from the north, does not mention of the 2 cubits wide strip of land to be allotted to Defendant No 8. The Defendant No. 8 has accordingly applied to have that clause inserted in the decree and thus make it conform to the judgment.

It is not seriously disputed that there has been this omission: but it is argued by Defendant No. 7 that the amendment shall not be allowed at this stage, first, because it is not proved that he had consented to the giving up of this strip of land and secondly, because his right to appeal from the amended decree will now be barred. I do not think that these considerations ought to prevail against a plain duty of the Court. The real question that arises in this case is that, conceding that the decree is at variance with the judgment, whether it is in the discretion of the Court, considering the length of time after which the application for amendment is made and the other circumstances, to refuse to bring it into conformity with the judgment. The learned vakil for the Petitioner contends that when it is discovered that the decree does not agree with the judgment, it is the duty of the Court to amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment. In my judgment that is the true view of the law. A decree has been defined in sec. 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure as the formal expression of an adjudication which completely determines the right of the parties with regard to the matter in controversy in the suit. This formal expression of adjudication means that the decree is a concise statement of the adjudication of the rights of the parties by the Court as expressed in the judgment. A decree, therefore, does not and cannot travel beyond or short of the judgment and must follow it. The law with regard to amendment of decree was expressed in sec. 206 of the Code of 1882. That section was in these terms: "If the decree is found to be at variance with the judgment or if any clerical or arithmetical error be found in the decree, the Court shall of its own motion or on that of any of the parties amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment or to correct such error." It made it obligatory on the Court, if there is any variance between judgment and decree, to bring them into conformity. That section in the old Code was split up and its several parts embodied in different sections of the new Code. The first portion of the section made it obligatory that the decree should conform to the judgment and is reproduced in r. 6, Or. 20. The latter portions of the old section is re-enacted in sec. 152 of the present Code. The power of the Court to amend the decree is not confined to provisions of Or. 20, r. 6 or to sec. 152, for it is a matter within the inherent jurisdiction of the Court and it may be exercised under sec. 151 which, however, does not restrict the illimitable inherent jurisdiction of the Court as is observed in the cases of Brijratan v. Jaynarain (1) and Harmange Singh v. Ram Gopal Achari (2).

It is, however, urged that sec. 152 gives the Court a discretion to allow or not an application for amendment of a decree. In my opinion, this is not the correct reading of the section. It no doubt says that when a clerical or arithmetical mistake is discovered in the decree, the Court may at any time correct it. The word "may" in the section does not make it discretionary with the Court to order the correction but merely enlarges the power of the Court by providing that such correction can be done "at any time;" or in other words, the section simply emphasises that no lapse of time would disentitle the Court to make the correction. As has been observed, the intention of the law is to make it obligatory upon the Court whenever any such mistake is discovered to correct it and sec. 152 merely emphasises that duty of the Court by saying that it may be done at any time without limitation. This view, namely, that it is the duty of the Court to amend the decree when it is brought to its notice that it does not agree with the judgment, is supported by a number of cases of which reference may be made to the cases of Shivapa v. Shivapa Lingapa (3), Kalu v. Latu (4), Menat Ali v. Amdar Ali (5), Basanta Kumar Bose v. Khulna Loan Co. (6) and Surendra Nath v. Girija Nath (7). The only exception to this general rule is that the Court will refuse to make the amendment where it offends against the principles of equity; for instance, it may not be desirable to amend the decree where the interest of a third party (who may be a bonâ fide transferee for valuable consideration) may be jeopardised. Henry William Halton v. Hugh Harris (8). A reference to the reported cases on this point shows that amendment has been allowed even long after the passing of the decree without limit of time. I am therefore of opinion that the decree should be amended by inserting the following words: "Defendant No. 8 will get a space of 2 cubits road throughout the entire length of Plot No. 7 and contiguous to Plot No. 8 in consideration of the space that he shall have to keep open for ingress and egress to and from Plot No. 7 over the land of Plot No. 8."

Both parties further pray that another omission in the decree should also be supplied by inserting the words: "The eastern boundary of Plot No. 8 may fluctuate but the way must always be 2 cubits broad from its eastern limit whatever that may be" after the direction about the keeping of a road 2 cubits broad from Plot No. 7 northwards over the eastern limit of Plot No. 8. These words should also be inserted.

This Rule is accordingly made absolute. In the circumstances of this case we make no order as to costs.

GRAHAM, J.—I agree with my learned brother that this Rule should be made absolute. It has not been disputed that the decree is not in conformity with the judgment. Under Or. 20, r. 6 of the Code the decree must be in conformity with the judgment and it is the duty of the Court to see that there is such agreement. No question of limitation arises and under sec. 152, C. P. C., an omission of this nature in the decree can be corrected by the Court at any time. There are reported cases in England where such amendment has been made after the lapse of many years. Where property has changed hands subsequent to the passing of the decree and delivery of possession, other considerations arise. But this is not a case of that nature. I agree that the omission ought to be rectified by amending the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment.

JURY REF. No. 2 OF 1924.

GREAVES, J. DUVAL, J. 1924, 20, March.	THE KING-EMPEROR v. GOLAM KADER and ors., Accused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 307, when High Court will interfere with the verdict of the jury in a reference under—"Verdict of the jury, if patently unreasonable," is the real test to be applied

In a reference under sec. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code against the verdict of the jury, the High Court has to consider the evidence that was before the jury and the view of the Sessions Judge and also the view of the jury and arrive at its own conclusion upon the case. The real test to be applied is to see whether it can be said that the verdict was so unreasonable that the jurors could not have arrived at that verdict. The High Court will not interfere against the verdict of the jury unless it can be said that it was not possible for the jury to have arrived at the verdict at which they arrived.

This was a Reference by the Sessions Judge of Chittagong, under sec. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, against an unanimous verdict of the jury.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. Langford James, Babus Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee, Charu Chandra Sen, Debendra Chandra Pal and Krishta Kisore Basak for the Accused.

Babus Panchanan Ghose and Jyotish Ch. Guha for the Complainant.

Mr. Khundkar, Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GREAVES, J.—This is a Reference by the Sessions Judge of Chittagong. Twenty persons were charged with offences under sec. 147 of the Indian Penal Code. Four of them 1, 2, 17 and 18 were further charged with offences under sec. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and there was a further charge under sec. 149 read with sec. 302 against all the 20 persons. The trial took place before a jury between the 10th and the 19th of December last year, and the jury by an unanimous verdict found the accused not guilty on the 19th December, giving them, so we understand, the benefit of the doubt. Under the circumstances the Sessions Judge who has disagreed with the unanimous verdict of the jury has made this Reference to us under the provisions of sec. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is necessary, therefore, for us to consider the evidence that was before the jury and the view of the Sessions Judge and also the view of the jury and after having done so to arrive at our own conclusion upon the case. The facts of the case are succinctly set forth both in the second paragraph of the letter of Reference and also in the charge to the jury under the heading "prosecution case." I need only deal very shortly with the facts. The prosecution case is that on the 8th of July last year, one Bangshi Dey, a tenant of Prasanna and two other persons, labourers of Prasanna, were transplanting paddy in a large char lying to the west of the village Gahira which was in the possession of Prasanna, and his brother, Hara Kumar and Nishi, brothers of Prasanna, were watching the transplanting of the paddy. Then it is said that a large number of men armed with lathis came from the east and that the five men, Hara Kumar, Nishi, Bangshi and the two labourers ran away towards the west. It is said that near the darga of one Har Chundra Das, who was also a tenant of Prasanna, the five persons who were flying were intercepted by a party of men who were coming from the north-west. The two labourers effected their escape and it is said that the other three were surrounded and that Hara Kumar was struck on the head with a lathi by two of the accused, Azizar Rahaman and Golam Kader. According to the prosecution case Hara Kumar fell down as the result of the blows and Bangshi tried to protect him by interposing his body and received a number of blows. The prosecution evidence states that despite this, various other blows were aimed by various members of the attacking party upon the prostrate body of Hara Kumar. Nishi is also said to have been beaten by the rioters and three other persons who arrived to see what was happening are said to have received injuries and another brother of Prasanna, Nabin, is said to have been struck by the rioters as they were dispersing. Hara Kumar was carried home. The occurrence took place in the evening and at about 9 o'clock in the night Hara Kumar and Nishi were taken in a sampan and information was sent to Prasanna who was in Chittagong where he was employed as a pleader's clerk. Prasanna left Chittagong on the following morning, that is, on the 9th of July. On his way he met his brothers in the sampan and he took them to a ghat near the thana which is at a place called Anwara. At 2 P.M. next day the 9th July the first information was lodged by Prasanna. All the accused were named in that information. On Prasanna lodging the first information a Sub-Inspector went from the thana to the ghat and inspected the injuries of Hara Kumar and Nishi. After this was done Hara Kumar and Nishi were taken to Chittagong where Hara Kumar died of the injuries early in the morning of the 10th. The post mortem examination of Hara Kumar disclosed two wounds on the top of his head and a fracture of the frontal bone in five segments and the view of the Civil Surgeon was that the injuries on the head were sufficient by themselves to cause death. The dispute in respect of which the rioting is said to have taken place arose about the possession of this char. Prasanna and his brothers claimed it and Prasanna had recently obtained a decree with regard to certain plots in the char in sec. 145 proceedings to which Azizar Rahaman, one of the accused, was a party. Azizar Rahaman had started a title suit in respect of two of these plots and a kabuliyat had been executed by Azizar and his co-sharers in favour of one Umed Ali and ten others of the accused are said to have executed kabuliyats in favour of Umed Ali in respect of the disputed land. The prosecution's suggestion is that behind Umed Ali was one Khan Sahed Abdul Rahaman Dovasha, a well-known merchant of Chittagong and this person is said to have instigated the attack. The defence story is not very clear and apparently the suggestion was that Nishi and Hara Kumar and others, when they were going to break down a hut which had been erected by Umed Ali or Abdul Rahaman on the southern extremity of the char, were driven off and beaten by Umed Ali's men. No evidence was called on behalf of the defence and the defence story can only be gathered from the line of cross-examination that was followed with regard to some of the witnesses. A very large body of witnesses were called on behalf of the prosecution, many of whom purported to be eye-witnesses of the occurrence. Amongst them are prosecution witness No. 2, Bacha Mia, prosecution witnesses Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7. The other eye-witnesses are prosecution witnesses Nos. 9, 10, 11, 13 and 16 and in addition to these there are other witnesses who speak to having seen some occurrence from a distance. Most, if not all, of the eye-witnesses identified all the accused though it is true that prosecution witness No. 8 says in the Sessions Court that Azizar and Golam were not present on the occasion although before the Magistrate he stated that Azizar and Golam gave the blows. Prosecution witness No. 7 also says that Azizar was not present. As the learned Judge pointed out to the jury the majority of the prosecution witnesses were either relatives or tenants or labourers of Prasanna and his brothers. There are one or two or possibly more persons who may be said to be entirely independent but it is not unnatural that a greater number of the prosecution witnesses are connected with Prasanna in one or other of the ways I have mentioned. There is no doubt that reading the evidence as it has been read to us there does seem an almost overwhelming case made out on the part of the prosecution against these accused. What therefore we have got to consider is whether the jury were entirely unreasonable in giving the benefit of the doubt, as they did to the accused and whether it was impossible for the jury to arrive at any other conclusion reasonable than that the guilt of the accused had been brought home to them. Various points were urged by the learned Counsel who appeared on behalf of the accused in support of the view that the verdict of the jury was not an unreasonable verdict and that accordingly we should not interfere with it.

First, he refers to the fact that according to the evidence the assault on Hara Kumar was made by at least 15 people and that yet according to the medical evidence only two blows were found on Hara Kumar's head and one slight abrasion on another portion of his body. Certainly we think that this is a fair comment because on reading the evidence we find that many blows are said to have been rained upon Hara Kumar by some of the accused after he had fallen down as a result of the first two blows. The evidence is that Azizar and Golam struck him first and that after that no less than 13 persons struck him and yet according to the medical evidence as we have already stated there were only three actual blows, according to the Doctor's view, that can be traced on the person of Hara Kumar. Then again so far as Nishi is concerned it is stated in the evidence that he was struck by no less than 11 people. But if you consider the evidence of the Doctor, so far as Nishi is concerned, you will find that he says that Nishi had a bruise on the eye-lid of the right eye and a contusion on the left fore-arm and further injuries, all of which were slight except the one on the head.

Then it is further urged that there was evidence before the jury that other persons, as I have already indicated, were injured in the affray and that yet the injuries of none of them were of sufficient gravity to demand examination by a Doctor.

Then it is urged that a certain number of witnesses, five I think it is said, went back to some extent in the Sessions Court upon the evidence that they had given before the Magistrate and emphasis was laid on the fact that prosecution witness No. 25, who had given a long and a coherent story as to the connection of Abdul Rahaman Dovasha with the attack before the Magistrate, stated nothing whatsoever with regard to this in his evidence in the Sessions Court.

Then stress is laid on the fact that although there were other brothers of the two injured men who were at the place of the occurrence at the time it happened no information was given at the thana until nearly 24 hours after the occurrence, although the thana was only 10 miles away and could be easily reached by a sampan by the river Sangu.

Then some point was made with regard to the exaggerations that are said to have appeared in the evidence with regard to the fact that the accused were armed with daos and kirchis. It is said that reference to this appears in the first information and that it is not borne out by the evidence of the witnesses and reference was also made to the picturesque figure who is said to have appeared with a lathi in one hand and a dao on the other.

Then some point was made with regard to the scene of the occurrence which was placed by the prosecution on Plot No. 2775 which is said to have been a plot which was not claimed by any of the accused.

Further stress is laid on the fact that I have already mentioned that the witnesses were tenants or labourers of Prasanna and that the Judge himself in his letter of reference says that the prosecution witnesses are not free from the charge that some of their evidence was tutored evidence.

Lastly, stress was laid on the point that a considerable number of witnesses were named in the first information including the names of the two Chowkidars, none of whom were called at the trial of the case.

It is necessary to see in the light of these suggestions whether we can say that the verdict of the jury was so unreasonable that seven reasonable men could not have arrived at that verdict, for it seems to us that that is the real test that we have got to apply We are not able to say that it was not possible for the jury to have arrived at the verdict at which they have arrived. We have read the evidence and considered it in the light of the criticisms that have been directed against it and we are of opinion that it is full of exaggerations and that it may well be that the jury taking this view may have said to themselves that it was not safe to convict the accused upon the evidence which was clearly exaggerated and therefore untrustworthy. This being so, it seems to us that we should not be justified in accepting the reference and interfering with the verdict of not guilty at which the jury have arrived. The accused are acquitted.

[CRIMINAL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APP. No. 696 OF 1923.

GREAVES, J. PANTON, J. 1924, 20, February	BAHERUDDY SIKDAR, Appellant, v. THE KING-EMPEROR, Respondent.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 476, 467A—Forged document produced in Court—Person not party to the proceeding and not producing the document, complaint by Court against, if maintainable—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 193.

A person who possibly forged a document which was produced in Court cannot be proceeded against under sec. 467A, Cr. P. C., if there be no grounds for supposing that he did so for the purpose of using it in Court and there is nothing to show that it was he who used the document in Court.

This was an appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge of Bakarganj making a complaint against the Appellant Baheruddy Sikdar under sec. 193, I. P. C. and other appropriate sections in exercise of his powers under sec. 476A of the Amended Criminal Procedure Code.

The facts of the case were briefly these :—

Sheikh Salimuddi and Sheikh Alimuddi, brothers of the present Appellant, were tried before the Assistant Sessions Judge of Barisal for forcibly cutting and taking away paddy from the field of the complainant Sheikh Iasin and causing grievous hurt. The defence was that the disputed land belonged to the Appellant Baheruddy, and one kabuliyat and one mortgage bond purported to have been executed by Baheruddy in favour of the complainant, and two dakhilas purported to have been granted by the complainant in favour of the Appellant Baheruddy were exhibited. The prosecution challenged these documents as forgeries. The jury found the accused guilty and they were convicted.

Complainant applied for the prosecution of the Appellant Baheruddy for forgery but the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate held that the case could not proceed without sanction. Thereupon the Complainant applied for sanction against the Appellant Baheruddy before the learned Assistant Sessions Judge who issued notice but in the meantime the learned Assistant Sessions Judge having been transferred the learned Sessions Judge granted sanction and made the complaint under sec. 476A of the New Criminal Procedure Code. The Appellant was neither a party nor a witness in the case tried by the learned Assistant Sessions Judge.

Babu Jatindra Nath Sanyal for the Appellant.

Mr. Khondkar for the Crown.

Babus Suresh Chandra Talukdar and Mahendra Kumar Ghose for the Complainant.

Babu Jatindra Nath Sanyal for the Appellant argued that the learned District Judge had no jurisdiction to make complaint against the Appellant who was neither a party nor a witness in the case before the learned Assistant Sessions Judge. Whatever might have been the law under the old Code, under the new Code the law was quite clear and the Appellant could not be said to have committed any offence in or in relation to a proceeding before the learned Assistant Sessions Judge as contemplated by sec. 476, Criminal Procedure Code. Under the old Code also complaint could not be made against any person who was neither a party nor witness, Re : Kalluru Ramalingam (1) though there might be some cases in which a contrary view was taken. The section should be strictly construed, Jadunandan v. Emperor (2). Again the offence alleged to have been committed will not come within sec. 193, I. P. C. for it cannot be said that the Appellant fabricated these documents for the purpose of using them in a Court of law.

Mr. Khondkar for the Crown argued that it is not necessary that the person against whom a complaint is made under sec. 476 should be either a party or a witness to the proceeding in relation to which the offence is committed. The requirements of the law will be satisfied if the commission of the offence is brought to the notice of the Court in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court. Cites Akhil Chandra v. Queen-Empress (3).

The Appellant fabricated these documents for the purpose of using them in a Court of law to prove his title and the documents were actually used before a Court of law. Therefore sec. 193, I. P. Code will apply.

Babu Jatindra Nath Sanyal was not called upon to reply.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

PANTON, J.—This is an appeal under

(1) I. L. R. 40 Mad. 100 (1916).
(2) I. L. R. 37 Cal. 250 : s. c. 14 C. W. N. 330 (1909).
(3) I. L. R. 22 Cal. 1004 (1895).

BAHERUDDY SIKDAR v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

sec. 476B of the Code of Criminal Procedure against an order of the learned Sessions Judge of Bakarganj, dated the 24th of September 1923 in which he made a complaint to the District Magistrate of an offence under sec. 193 of the Indian Penal Code, and any other appropriate sections, alleged to have been committed by the present Petitioner Baheruddy Sikdar in relation to a trial before the Assistant Sessions Judge of Bakarganj. These offences are said to have been committed in respect of certain documents which were filed by the defence in the trial before the Assistant Sessions Judge. They are a kabuliyat, a mortgage bond and some other documents.

Various grounds have been urged before us for holding that the order of the learned Sessions Judge was not in accordance with law. It is, however, unnecessary to go into all the points raised by the learned vakil for the Appellant because we think that the appeal must succeed upon one single ground and that is that there is no ground for supposing that Baheruddy committed any offence of the nature referred to in sec. 476 in or in relation to a proceeding in any Court. It may possibly be the case, but as to this we express no opinion, that Baheruddy forged these documents, but there is nothing at present before us nor was there anything before the learned Judge, so far as I can see, to suggest that he did so for the purpose of using them in the Court of the Assistant Sessions Judge, nor is there anything to show that it was he who used these documents in that Court. In these circumstances we think that the appeal must succeed and that the order of the learned Sessions Judge must be set aside and his complaint withdrawn.

PRIVY COUNCIL

[APPEAL FROM BOMBAY.]

VISCOUNT HALDANE.
LORD BUCKMASTER.
LORD PARMOOR.
1923,
Heard, 8, June.
Judgment, 28, June.

PHIROZSHAW BOMANJEE PETIT, Appellant,
v.
BAI GOOLBAI and ors., Respondents.

Apportionment of income from immoveable property, shares, securities and debts—Whether such income accrues de die in diem—Law applicable

The settlor conveyed properties, consisting of land and immoveable properties, shares, bonds and securities and outstanding debts due to the settlor to trustees on trust inter alia, to receive the rents and profits and after making certain other payments, to make over the balance of income to the settlor himself during his life and after the settlor's death to other beneficiaries. After the testator's death, the question arose between the executors of the testator's Will and the beneficiaries under the trust deed, whether or not the income should be treated as accruing de die in diem, continuously, and be apportioned as such:

Held—That the English Apportionment Act of 1870 not being applicable, the older English law as it stood apart from the statute governed the case, according to which the income from the properties other than the debts was primâ facie only apportionable if an intention to make it so was clearly discoverable in the trust deed, while the income arising from the debts was apportionable.

In order to have the result of varying the rights defined by the general law, such directions would have to be clear and unambiguous.

This appeal was from a decree of the High Court, dated the 31st March 1919, passed in an appeal from a decree of that Court in its Original Jurisdiction, dated the 1st July 1918 and which so far as is material for this appeal, affirmed that decree.

Those decrees were made on the hearing of an originating summons taken out for the determination of the construction of a certain settlement, dated the 1st August 1913, by the Respondents Nos. 1-4 as the trustees thereof.

That settlement was made by one Bomanjee Dinshaw Petit (who had since died on the 17th December 1915) and it affected property of great value. The Respondents Nos. 5-8 were the executors of the settlor and had proved his Will and the 9th Respondent was his widow.

Respondents Nos. 10 and 11 were beneficiaries under the said settlement. The Appellant was one of the executors and one of the residuary legatees under the Will.

By the settlement in question the settlor in effect reserved to or settled on himself a life interest in the settled properties, and gave the income thereof for 13 months after his death to certain persons, and disposed of the subsequent income to certain other persons. The settled properties were (a) immoveable properties specified in Sch. I of the settlement, (b) shares with a few securities specified in Sch. II thereof and (c) outstandings due to the settlor specified in Sch. III thereof.

The questions arising in this appeal were—

(1) Whether the rents of the settled immoveable properties for the month of December 1915, and the dividends of the settled shares subsequently declared for the last six months of 1915 were apportionable between the executors of his Will and the beneficiaries under the settlements so that the former took the proportion of such renfment the settlor had conaccrued before the 17tnt of property to the when the settlor died : alia, and so far as

And (2) whether the rèses of the questtled immoveable propertiive the rents month of January 1917, and thg certain dends declared for the first six montbalance the year 1917 were apportionable betweuring the persons entitled to the income accru- es ing during the first thirteen months after the settlor's death and those entitled to the income accruing thereafter.

The determination of the questions involved the construction of cls. 1 and 4B of the settlement.

Cl. 1 of the settlement after providing that the trustees should get in the rents, dividends, interest and other income of the settled properties—thereinafter called the said income—and make certain payments thereout proceeded as follows: "And" (the trustees) "shall in the next place pay the balance of the income to the settlor for and during the remainder of his life and down to his death."

The material part of cl. 4B of the settlement was as follows: "Within thirteen months after the settlor's death the said trustees shall from and out of the said income accruing within the first thirteen months after the settlor's death (which would have been paid to the settlor if alive) pay to the said Bai Goolbai if she shall survive the settlor from time to time in such sums as the said Bai Goolbai may reasonably require and the state of the said income in the hands of the said trustees shall permit the total sum of Rs. 80,000 in order to enable her to carry on all the household expenses for that period (which expenses were specified in some detail) provided also that the trustees shall divide the remainder of the said balance of the said income arising or accruing during the first thirteen months

sec. 476B of the Cod'which shall be left dure against an_rcout of the said sum Sessions Judgamongst the said Bai Gool-24th of Septgir Bomanjee Petit, Dhunji-a complhanjee Petit and Phirozshaw an offjee Petit in equal shares."

Doubts having arisen as to the construction of the settlement the trustees on the 17th July 1917 took out the originating summons in which this appeal is made making the executors of the Will and all the beneficiaries under the settlement parties. The first two questions on the summons raised the two points already stated.

The summons was heard by a single Judge of the High Court who by his decree of 1st July 1918 decided that the settlor's estate was not entitled to any portion of the rents of the settled properties for December 1915 or of the dividends on the settled shares for the last six months of 1915 and that the trust estate was entitled to the whole of such dividends. In the same way he decided that no part of the rents of the settled properties for January 1917 and of the dividends on the settled shares for the first six months of the year 1917 was payable to Bai Goolbai and the other persons who were named at the end of cl. 4B of the settlement. The learned Judge did not deliver any formal judgment or give any reasons for this decision.

The Appellant appealed from this decree and the Respondents Nos. 5-9 supported the appeal on the two points in which they were interested but the Division Bench which heard the appeal confirmed the decree on both points on the 31st March 1919.

Their judgment on these points was as follows:—"We are of opinion that the decision was right. Under cl. 1 the settlor is to receive the balance of income represented by rents, profits and produce dividends, interest and income, whether arising from the lands or the shares, securities and sums mentioned in the schedules or the investments for the time being representing the same respectively or any of them or any part thereof, all which rents, profits, produce dividends, interest and income are hereafter briefly called the said income . . . . . . during the remainder of his life and down to his death. In cl. 4B the balance is referred to as of the said income accruing within the first thirteen months after the settlor's death (which would have been paid to the settlor if alive) and the trustees are to pay within thirteen months of the settlor's death to Goolbai from time to time in such sums as the state of the income in the hands of the trustees shall permit the total sum of Rs. 80,000 and divide the remainder of the balance of the said income arising or accruing during the thirteen months which shall be left after payment of the Rs. 80,000 to certain named beneficiaries. The rents, dividends and income are thereafter available as they arise. The income arising during thirteen months is to be paid as income from time to time in the hands of the trustees within the thirteen months. It cannot be paid before it arises and comes in the hands of the trustees, and such rents and dividends only as are received within thirteen months can be paid within that period. The beneficiaries under cl. 4B have no right to claim anything received by or payable to the trustees after that period, and we infer that for calculating income due to the settlor's estate the same process must be applied. Nothing is to be paid after his death. On the words of the deeds therefore all right to apportionment is by implication excluded. The case of Lysaght v. Lysaght (2) relied upon for the Appellant was an instance of a stipulation intended to exclude from the operation of the English Apportionment Act certain dividends which otherwise might have been apportionable. We do not think that either the cessation of the settlor's interest on his death or the expiration of the thirteen months' period after his death can be treated as effecting transfers within the meaning of sec. 36 of the Transfer of Property Act. If they can properly be so treated the provisions of the deed exclude the operation of the section. They exclude similarly recourse to the equitable rules of Chancery practice in England."

From this decree the Appellant appealed to His Majesty in Council and the Respondents Nos. 5-9 supported his appeal on the points above stated.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., Tomlin, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents Nos. 5-8 and 9 who supported the Appellant.

Messrs. Clauson, K. C. and R. J. T. Gibson for the Respondents Nos. 10 and 11.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—This is an appeal from the High Court at Bombay, which had affirmed a decree of the same Court in its Original Jurisdiction. The questions decided had been raised by originating summons, taken out by certain of the present Respondents, who were trustees of an inter vivos settlement, dated 1st August 1913, and made by a wealthy Parsee inhabitant of Bombay one Bomanjee Dinshaw Petit, who died on the 17th December 1915.

(2) [1898] 1 Ch. 115.

By this settlement the settlor had conveyed a large amount of property to the trustees on trust, inter alia, and so far as is material for the purposes of the questions in this appeal, to receive the rents and profits, and, after making certain other payments, to make over the balance of income to the settlor himself during his life. After his death the trustees were to realise, by sale, conversion or otherwise, of the trust premises, certain sums, and, within thirteen months after the settlor's death, out of the balance of income from what remained, accruing within the first thirteen months, to pay to his widow, the first Respondent, from time to time and in such sums as she should reasonably require and the state of the income should permit, the total sum of rupees 80,000 for purposes mentioned. The trustees were then to divide the remainder of the balance of such income arising or accruing during the first thirteen months after the settlor's death, among the Respondent, Bai Goolbai, the widow, the Respondents, Jehangir and Dhunjibhoy, and the Appellant, Phirozshaw, the settlor's son, in equal shares; the capital and income, after the thirteen months, were, subject to the trusts stated, to go to other beneficiaries under the trust deed as therein provided.

The settled property consisted of land and immoveables specified in the first schedule to the trust deed; shares, bonds, and securities specified in the second schedule; and outstanding debts due to the settlor specified in the third schedule.

Questions arose as to the interpretation of the deed, and an originating summons was taken out by the trustees to which the beneficiaries under the trust deed and the executors of a subsequent Will made by the settlor were Defendants. This summons raised a number of questions, of which two only are now raised on the appeal to His Majesty in Council. The first of these two questions arose between the settlor's executors and beneficiaries under the trust deed. It was whether an apportionment of the income of the settled properties, or any of them, should be made, as if the title to such income had accrued continuously, up to the 17th December 1915, the date of the testator's death. It was contended for the executors that the whole income should be treated as accruing de die in diem, continuously, so that although instalments, such as rents or interest, were not actually payable until after that date, the executors of the settlor who was to take during his life-time should be held entitled to so much of what was not actually payable until after his death as was to be attributed on this footing to his title down to the date of his death.

The second question was an analogous one. It was whether, as between those who took beneficially the income for thirteen months after the settlor's death, and those beneficially entitled to the income subsequently, a similar apportionment should be made as on the 17th January 1917, being the date of termination of the thirteen months' period.

The summons was heard by Kajiji, J., who decided against the application of any principle of apportionment, excepting as to interest on the debts due to the settlor specified in the third schedule and such of the securities specified in the second schedule as bore interest. As to these, it was not disputed by the Respondents that his view was right. He gave no reasons for his judgment.

The case was heard on appeal by Scott, C. J., and Hayward, J., and these learned Judges affirmed the decision of Kajiji, J. The only question which now arises is whether there is applicable, under Indian law, any principle of apportionment which applies to rents and periodical payments, such as rents and profits from land, and the dividends and income arising from shares carrying income periodically payable, such as are specified in the second schedule.

The point is raised on this appeal by one of the beneficiaries whose interest it might have been to contend that the principle of apportionment did not apply to the property in the first two schedules. He has, however, severed from his co-beneficiaries, and contends that the principle does apply, having regard to the terms in which the settlement is expressed, and this is the question which their Lordships have to decide.

The English Apportionment Act of 1870 provides that after its passing, all rents, annuities, and other periodical payments in the nature of income are, unless it is expressly stipulated that no apportionment is to take place, to be considered as, like interest on money lent, accruing from day to day, and shall be apportionable in respect of time accordingly. But this Act does not apply in India, nor do any of the earlier English Apportionment Acts. It is common ground that the principle which applies in the present case is that of the original English law as it stood apart from statute. The older English law on the subject was stated by Lord Eldon in Ex Parte Smyth (1) and is amplified in the learned note appended to the report of that case by Mr. Swanston. The latter traces it to the two propositions, that an entire contract cannot be apportioned, and that under such an instrument as, for instance, a lease with a reservation of periodically payable rent, the contract for each portion is distinct and entire. The rule, however, while applicable to periodical payments becoming due at fixed intervals, did not apply to sums accruing de die in diem. It did not, for example, apply to annuities or to debts. The distinctions drawn were often fine. But it is not necessary for their Lordships to discuss them, because it is plain that, however clear the principle which governed the character of proprietary and contractual rights, it was always open to a testator or settlor, with full power of disposition, to exclude its practical consequences. He had only to say that it was his intention that the person entitled to the fixed sum, payable only after the determination of the intermediate title, should account to those in whom that intermediate title was vested or their representatives. Such an expression of intention had, at least, the effect of creating a trust in equity, and might, in certain cases, be operative at law by giving a special character to the title to the periodical payments. It had the effect of making the question, in most instances, one merely of construction of the instrument.

(1) 1 Swanston 337 (1818).

It is common ground that the old law in England, as referred to in 1818 by Lord Eldon in Ex Parte Smyth (1), was the law applicable in India to the present case, and that under it the income from the property specified in the first two schedules was primâ facie only apportionable if an intention to make it so was clearly discoverable in the trust deed and while the income arising from the debts specified in the third schedule was apportionable. The only question which now arises is as to the former, and as to this there is no question of difficulty as to the general principle of law. The real controversy is as to whether there is not in the trust deed language which, b[illegible] case will appear from [illegible] Court (28 C. [illegible] that apportionment was di[illegible] the judg[illegible] settlor to take place.

In order to answer this question their Lordships, therefore, turn to the provisions of the instrument.

Under the first trust in the settlement the trustees are to get in the income of the whole of the property settled, from whatever the sources specified in the schedules "arising," and to pay the balance to the settlor for and during the remainder of his life, "and down to his death." The subsequent direction is contained in the trust in the deed numbered 4B. This is to pay to the widow within thirteen months of the settlor's death out of the balance of the "income accruing within the first thirteen months" the rupees 80,000 already referred to. The trustees are further directed to divide the remaining balance of the income "arising or accruing" during the first thirteen months after the settlor's death among four beneficiaries named in equal shares. The direction in the deed operates under the form of a trust for sale. The balance of the proceeds of sale and the income to be derived from it, are to be held as subsequently directed, "except the income arising or accruing due for and within the first thirteen months after the settlor's death," as to which there is reference back to the direction already quoted.

It was argued for the Appellant that the juxtaposition of the expressions "arising" and "accruing," and the employment of them in the language of the deed as if interchangeable, indicated that the income was intended to be treated as one, the title to which was contemplated as accruing continuously. Moreover, it was said, if the trustees were to alter the character of the investments, they might from time to time vary the rights of

of which two only entitled at their pleasure, appeal to His the settlor could not have first contemplated. But their Lordships do not think that reliance can properly be placed on these arguments. The character of payments such as those directed is primâ facie discontinuous at common law. No doubt, the settlor could have given directions which would have modified this character, or at least, have deprived it of the consequences arising from its discontinuity. But such directions would have had to be clear and unambiguous in order to have had the result of varying the rights defined by the general law. Their Lordships can find no such distinctness in direction in the deed before them as would have been required to have this effect.

They will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal should be dismissed. The trust estate is very large and the trustees found it necessary to have the questions which have arisen decided by the Courts below. There the costs were allowed out of the estate. As regards the present appeal, their Lordships think that justice will be done if the Appellant has no costs and the 10th and 11th Respondents who contested the appeal have their costs, as between party and party, out of the estate. The trustees do not appear separately on the appeal. They will be entitled to have reimbursed to them any expenses to which they have been put by it.

Award—Reasons given by arbitrators in the award, if erroneous on a point of law—Arbitration clause, stipulation for survey of goods before award is made—Award, if valid when made before such survey—Buyer's duty to prove that goods are of contract quality, when arises.

In a contract for the sale and purchase of goods, it was agreed that "in the event of any dispute arising as to inferiority of quality, defects or differences in the goods, the same shall be referred . . . to the Bengal Chamber of Commerce." A dispute having arisen as regards the quality of the goods, the parties referred the same to arbitration. The buyers' statement before the Chamber concluded as follows: "The combined defectiveness in the out-turn has thus made the goods too much unqualified and ought to be cancelled, but we leave the matter to the hands of the learned arbitrators either to award cancelment or any other relief as they would deem fit." The arbitrators made their award against the buyers in these terms: "We have considered the papers and as buyers . . . . . are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld and we award that they pay for and take delivery in terms of the contract." A suit by the buyers to set aside the award was decreed. The sellers appealed:

Held (reversing the decision of the lower Court)—That there was no error on the face of the award inasmuch as (1) the buyers having themselves complained of the inferior quality of the goods and having failed to produce them for inspection when called upon to do so by the arbitrators, could not legitimately complain of the arbitrators coming to the conclusion that the buyers did not prove their case; and, (2) having regard to the statement in the award, " we have considered the papers," it was not a legitimate inference from the terms of the award that the arbitrators had decided against the buyers relying upon the mere fact that the latter were unwilling to produce the goods.

CHAMPSEY BHARA & CO. v. JIVRAJ BALLOO SPINNING AND WEAVING CO., LTD. (2) referred to.

Where the arbitration clause provided that " the Chamber shall arrange for survey in accordance with its rules," and the arbitrators made their award without having made such survey:

Held—That one method of deciding as to the quality of the goods was contemplated by the parties to be a survey, but it was not contemplated that that should be the only means of arriving at a decision and therefore the arbitrators, although they had not made a survey of the goods, had not acted without jurisdiction.

Held also—That the arbitrators, having come to the conclusion that the buyers had failed to satisfy them that the goods were not in accordance with the contract quality, acted within their jurisdiction in awarding that the buyers should pay for and take delivery of the goods.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment of the lower Court (28 C. W. N. p. 261) as well as from the judgment of the Chief Justice.

Messrs. S. R. Das, A. N. Chaudhuri, B. C. Bonnerjee and J. N. Sinha, Counsel appeared for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. N. Sirkar and A. K. Roy, Counsel appeared for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Defendants S. & C. Nordlinger against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Buckland.

The suit was brought by the Plaintiffs Chandmull Mulchand against the Defendants for a declaration that a certain award, dated the 3rd of September 1921, made by the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, was invalid and inoperative; and the two grounds upon which the claim was based at the trial in this Court are first, that the award was bad on the face of it and secondly, that the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to make the award.

The learned Judge held in favour of the Plaintiffs on both the points and declared that the award was invalid and inoperative. Against that decision the Defendants have appealed.

The award was in the following terms :—

" Contract No. Nil. Dated 7th December 1920.

Goods covered by contract. Finished Dhooties.

Basis of Sale No. 2226.

Packages available for inspection B/S 116/20, 141/5.

Packages examined.

Complaint—inferior quality and other defects as per buyers' statement, dated

S. & C. NORDLINGER v. CHANDMULL MULCHAND.

1st March 1921. Award :—We have considered the papers and as buyers Messrs. Chandmull Mulchand are unwilling to produce the bales reqvired for inspection their claim cannot be upheld and we award that they pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of contract.

Buyers to pay cost of this reference, amounting to Rs. 101."

The learned Judge on the first point, namely, whether there was an error of law on the face of the award, said this: "The contract related to 60 bales. There was a dispute as to quality. The mere fact that the buyers are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection is not by itself a sufficient reason for making an award against them. I do not desire to go further than I should having regard to the strict limitation laid down by the authorities as to what may be considered in a case such as this; but ordinarily, where there is a dispute between a buyer and a seller with reference to quality, it would be the duty of the seller to prove that the goods were of the quality contracted for."

It is not necessary for me to refer to the authorities because they were fully considered by this Court in the case of U. M. Chowdhury & Co. v. Jiban Krishna Ghose & Bros. (1) and because the learned Judge has himself drawn attention to the decision of the Judicial Committee in the Privy Council in Champsey Bhara & Co. v. Jivraj Balloo Spinning and Weaving Co., Ltd. (2) and the narrow limits within which a matter like this has to be considered. The first question which I have to ask myself is whether I am satisfied that the award does show upon the face of it an error in law, and, for the purpose of coming to that conclusion, one is entitled to consider the award itself and any documents incorporated in the award.

It is, therefore, legitimate to consider, in the first place, the buyers' statement dated the 1st of March 1921. That is referred to in the award as the "complaint." That statement sets out the reasons why the buyers alleged that the goods were inferior in quality to the contract quality. I need not refer to them in detail and the statement concludes in this manner:

"The combined defectiveness in the out-turn has thus made the goods too much unqualified and ought to be cancelled but we leave the matter to the hands of the learned arbitrators either to award cancelment or any other relief as they would deem fit."

Therefore, it is clear, in my judgment, that the buyers were contending that the goods were not in accordance with the contract by reason of their inferior quality and that they left the decision of the question as to quality to the arbitrators and they further left it to them to say whether the contract should be cancelled or whether any allowance should be made to the buyers in respect of the inferiority in the quality.

It appears to me that it was for the buyers to prove the case which they were alleging before the arbitrators.

The arbitrators said in their award: "We have considered the papers and as buyers Messrs. Chandmull Mulchand are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld." The learned Counsel for the Respondents, as I understood his argument, did not find fault with that part of the award because it must be obvious that when the buyers were the complainants and were alleging the inferior quality of the goods and they were asked by the arbitrators to produce the goods so that they might be inspected by the arbitrators, and when they failed to produce any of the goods in question, the buyers cannot now complain of the arbitrators coming to the conclusion that the buyers did not prove their case.

The learned Judge seems to have thought that the arbitrators had decided against the buyers relying upon the mere fact that the buyers were unwilling to produce the bales. In my judgment, with great respect to the learned Judge, that is not a legitimate inference to be drawn from the terms of the award. The arbitrators said that they had certain papers. I am not in a position to say what those papers were or to speculate what their contents were. They certainly had some materials before them which were contained in the papers referred to in the award.

But the learned Counsel for the Respondents presented a further argument and contended that the second part of the award should not be upheld even though the first part, to which I have already referred, was held to be correct. The second part of the award, to which the learned Counsel referred, was that the buyers should pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of the contract.

The argument was that the only question that the arbitrators had to decide was whether the goods were of the contract quality or not; and, if they did not decide that, then they ought not to have made the award. I cannot accept that contention. In the first place, the buyers' statement, to which I have referred, makes it clear that the question as to what was to be done with regard to the dhooties was left to the arbitration of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. The arbitrators were to say whether the goods were in accordance with the contract. If they found that they were not, then they were to say whether the contract was to be cancelled or whether any allowance should be made. It seems to me that when the arbitrators, as they obviously did, came to the conclusion that the complainants did not satisfy them that the goods were not in accordance with the contract quality it follows, as a matter of course, that they should award that the buyers should pay for and take delivery of the goods. In my judgment it was within their jurisdiction so to do. In short, on this part of the case, on the materials which we are entitled to consider upon the question as to whether there was an error of law on the face of the contract, I am by no means satisfied that the arbitrators have been guilty of an error of law.

The second point depends upon the question of survey. The learned Counsel for the Respondents argued that it was a part of the submission that there should be a survey by the arbitrators and that if no survey took place, there should be no award.

The learned Advocate-General, who appeared for the Appellants, on the other hand, argued that no doubt it was contemplated by both parties that there should be a survey and that if there was a survey it should be carried out in a particular manner which was specified by the sellers but that it was not agreed upon by the parties and was not contemplated by the parties that a survey should be the only method of obtaining evidence as regards the quality of the goods. I think that the learned Advocate-General's argument in this respect is correct. The arbitrators were not merely surveyors. We do not know the names of the gentlemen who acted in this case. I believe that it is the practice of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce not to disclose the names of gentlemen who acted as arbitrators. But it is clear on a reference to the arbitration and the statement of the buyers that it was intended that the gentlemen, who would act in accordance with the Rules of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce, should act as arbitrators and should finally decide the question in dispute between the parties.

One method of deciding as to the quality of the goods was contemplated to be a survey, but in my judgment, it was not contemplated that that should be the only means of arriving at a decision.

I am by no means satisfied that the parties agreed that there should be a survey, and that if a survey were not held, there should be no award. It seems to me that the argument of the learned Advocate-General on behalf of the Appellants must be adopted. The result is that in this respect also, with great respect to the learned Judge, I am constrained to come to the conclusion that the arbitrators acted within their jurisdiction.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the appeal must be allowed, the learned Judge's judgment and decree will be set aside and the suit dismissed with costs in both the Courts, except such costs as have been directed to be paid by the Defendants with regard to the amendment of the written statement.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1994 OF 1921.

NEWBOULD, J.
B. B. GHOSE, J.
1923,
15, November.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE HOWRAH MUNICIPALITY and ors., Defendants, Appellants,
v.
HARIPADA ROY CHOWDHURY, Plaintiff, Respondent.

Municipal Act (III of 1884, B. C.)—Candidate for election, right of, to be present at the recording of votes—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), sec. 42, if a bar.

The right to be present at the recording of votes, not being given by the statute (Act III of 1884, B. C.), a candidate for election as Commissioner of a Municipality has no such right under natural law.

CLEMENTSON v. MASON (1) explained.

The rule forbidding his presence in that part of the polling station where votes are actually recorded is not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act:

Held—That sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act was no bar to the suit, as there was a prayer for an injunction as further relief.

This was an appeal preferred on the 21st of September 1921 against the decree of the 1st Subordinate Judge of Zillah Howrah (Babu Banwari Lal Banerjee), dated the 30th of June 1921, affirming the decree of the 2nd Munsif of Howrah (Babu Nato Behari Ghose), dated the 15th of March 1920.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Panchanan Ghose (for Babu Manmatha Nath Roy) for the Appellants.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Kanaidhan Dutt for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal from the decision of the 1st Subordinate Judge of Howrah affirming the decision of the Munsif, 2nd Court, Howrah. The Plaintiff in this case was a candidate for election as Commissioner of the Howrah Municipality. The Defendants are the Chairman of the Municipal Commissioners of Howrah, the Vice-Chairman and the Presiding Officer appointed to hold the Municipal General Election which was to take place shortly after the suit was instituted. The Plaintiff asked for a declaration of his right to be present at the place and time when and where the votes of the voters would be recorded and also that the Defendants or any of them have no right to prevent the Plaintiff from being present at that place. He further asked that the Defendants be restrained from prohibiting the Plaintiff to be present at that place.

The Municipal Act applicable in Howrah is Act III of 1881, B. C. Sec. 15 of that Act gives the Local Government power to lay down rules not inconsistent with the provisions of the Act, amongst other matters in respect of the mode of election. Such rules are published in Notification No. 4345-M, dated the 21st November 1896. Also instructions to the Presiding Officer have been drawn up, and this case really turns on the legality of r. 14 of those instructions which is to the following effect : "After getting his ticket the voter will enter the second enclosure where candidates or their agents shall not be permitted to enter this enclosure except to get their own votes recorded." In order to understand the point it is necessary to state the provisions made for the recording of votes. The polling station is divided into three separate enclosures. There is the first general enclosure in which the voters are to be assembled. There is then the further enclosure which is entered through gates and there are Municipal employees sitting at separate tables where tickets with serial numbers of the voters are given to the voters as they apply for them. Under the rules it is the duty of any one objecting on the ground of false personation to do so when the voters applies for his ticket in the enclosure. After the voter has obtained his ticket he enters into the third enclosure and there his vote is recorded by one of the members of the Committee who sit at separate tables.

The whole question is whether the candidate is entitled to be present in that part of the polling station where votes are actually recorded. Both the lower Courts have decided this point in the Plaintiff's favour. The first Court based its decision on the ruling in the English case of Clementson v. Mason (1). As the learned Subordinate Judge has rightly pointed out the decision of this English case has no application to the facts of the present case. That decision was based on the construction of certain sections of the Ballot Act which is not in force in this country. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, supported the decree on the ground that every person interested like the candidate has a natural right to be present where votes are recorded under the ordinary law. With this we are unable to agree. We cannot agree that the rights of candidates or electors which are rights expressly given by statute carry with them any rights under natural law not given by statutory law. In order to succeed in this case it is necessary for the Plaintiff to show that he has the statutory right to be present at the place where votes are recorded or that the rule forbidding his presence in that particular place is inconsistent with the provisions of the Bengal Municipal Act, III of 1884, B. C. The learned vakil for the Respondent has been unable to satisfy us on either of these points. The candidate as such has a right to be present to take objection where there has been wrongful personation. Also as an elector he has the right to enter the enclosure where votes are recorded in order that his vote may be recorded. But we can find nothing in the Act which suggests that the candidate has the right of himself supervising the recording of the votes. The recording of the votes is supervised by the Presiding Officer and the committee and there is no reason why the candidates themselves or their agents should necessarily be present to see that the votes are properly recorded. As regards the right of the candidate to object in case of wrongful personation that is fully provided by the rules which have been drawn up as regards the issue of tickets in the second of the enclosures to which the candidate and his agent are not only allowed but specially invited to be present.

We therefore hold that the Plaintiff has failed in establishing his case and the suit must fail on that ground.

It was also contended that sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act is a bar to this suit. But we hold that as the Plaintiff asked for further relief in the form of an injunction that section is no bar.

The result is that the appeal is decreed with costs in all Courts.

of the Munsif, 4th Court at that place (Babu Upendra Nath Chatterji), dated the 29th September 1921.

The pro formâ Defendant (Respondent No. 2) sold two mouzas to the Plaintiff (Respondent No. 1) with all his rights to get from the (Appellant) Defendant No. 1 his Gomasta the accounts and papers relating to the properties and to recover from him the sums which would be found due upon taking accounts by a conveyance, dated the 5th Falgun 1327 A. S. The Defendant No. 1 (Appellant) executed a security kabuliyat in favour of the pro formâ Defendant (Respondent No. 2) mortgaging his properties on 7th Kartik 1306 A. S. for due performance of his work. Plaintiff as transferee brought an action for accounts and papers and for recovery of the sum which may be found due to him upon taking accounts making his transferror a pro formâ Defendant. The primary Court upon a construction of the above conveyance, held that the Plaintiff (Appellant) having purchased merely the Defendant No. 2's right to sue the Defendant No. 1 for accounts his suit was not maintainable under sec. 6 (e), Transfer of Property Act. The lower Appellate Court determined that the transfer was of all rights including the transferror's lien on the properties under the security kabuliyat and his right to recover money which would be found due upon taking account and the present suit for account was thus maintainable. The question in the appeal was as to the maintainability of the suit.

Babu Samarendra Kumar Dutt for the Appellants.—I submit the lower Appellate Court is wrong in holding that the present suit is one for recovery of moneys realised on behalf of the Respondent No. 2 and embezzled: it is a suit for account and the transfer is of a mere right to call for account and such transfer is prohibited by sec. 6 (e), Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). The primary Court is right in saying that upon a proper construction of the conveyance, dated the 5th Falgun 1327 A. S., the Plaintiff purchased merely the Defendant No. 2's right to sue for accounts from the Defendant No. 1 and this is surely unassignable within the meaning of sec. 6 (e).

This is in the nature of a transfer of claim to an unascertained damage, past mesne profit—and thus of a mere right to sue. Abu Mahomed v. S. C. Chunder (1). An actionable claim is transferable but not a mere right to sue.

Right to sue for mesne profits cannot be transferred—Sham Chand Kundu v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India, Ltd. (3).

Claim for damages against an agent for his negligence to collect rent is not transferable. See P. Varahaswami v. M. Rama Chandra Raju (2).

And the case of misappropriation by the Gomasta Appellant after realisation has not been made in the plaint. On the other hand the allegation was that the amount ought to have been realised but not actually realised.

Right to sue for damages on account of breach of contract is not assignable, though the case is otherwise where a liquidated sum is mentioned in the contract as the measure of damage in the event of its breach. The case of County Hotel and Wine Co., Ld. v. London and North-Western Railway Company (6) supports my contention.

(1) I. L. R. 36 Cal. 345, 351: s. c. 13 C. W. N. 384 (F. B.) (1909).
(2) I. L. R. 38 Mad. 138 (1913).
(3) I. L. R. 9 Cal. 695 (1883).
(6) [1918] 2 K. B. 251, 260.

Babu Joges Chunder Ray (with Babu Santosh Kumar Pal) for the Respondent. I submit though the right to sue for account is not transferable, the right to recover money found due on taking accounts is transferable. Sec. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act applies to damages arising from torts, they are incapable of transfer. Rights and obligations arising out of some contracts are transferable and sec. 6 (e) has no application to those cases. In this case the transfer is of money which will be found to be actually due from the Defendant after taking accounts. The Appellate Court is right in holding that the transfer in this case is one of the right to recover moneys which will be ascertained as actually embezzled upon accounts being taken, and this is no transfer of a mere right to sue and the transaction is not prohibited by sec. 6 (e).

This is the transfer of a debt, an actionable claim, as defined in sec. 3, Transfer of Property Act and this is assignable. (Sec. 130, Transfer of Property Act). Ibu Mahomed v. S. C. Chunder (1).

The right to sue for damages for breach of contract is assignable. This is the case of a failure to pay the rent collected and is assignable.

County Hotel and Wine Co., Ld. v. London and North-Western Railway Company (6) and Dawson v. Great Northern and City Railway (7) rather help my case. The appeal should be dismissed

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SUHRAWARDY, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for accounts and is directed against an order of remand made by the learned Additional District Judge of Midnapur.

The facts of the case have been shortly stated as follows in the judgment of the Court of first instance :-

"This is a suit for accounts. The Plaintiff's case is that the Defendant No. 1 was Gomostha under the pro formâ Defendant No. 2 in Mouzas Barkola and Mirzapore and that he executed a security kabuliyat for his work in favour of the pro formâ Defendant on the 7th Kartik 1306 A. S., mortgaging the plaint schedule properties and on the strength of that kabuliyat he did the Gomostha work from Kartik 1306 to Magh 1327 A. S., that on 5th Falgun 1327 A. S., the pro formâ Defendant No. 2 sold off to Plaintiff all his rights in the two mouzas together with his rights to get accounts and papers from Defendant No. 1 and to recover from him the sums due thereon, by a registered kobala taking due and proper consideration thereof, that on the basis of the security kabuliyat this Defendant No. 1 was to submit all collection papers and explain those and pay off all sums found due thereon and he was to be liable for all rents and decretal dues barred by limitation owing to his default and to get 1 rupee 4 annas monthly pay for his work, that the Defendant No. 1 submitted and explained his accounts and papers till 1309 A. S. to pro formâ Defendant No. 2 and from 1310 A. S., he submitted no accounts and papers to him except a Thoka only of 1327 A. S. and as per hisab given in Schedule "ka" of the plaint the Plaintiff, on the basis of the kobala in his favour, asks for such accounts and papers provisionally valuing his claim at Rs. 937 15 annas 18¾ gandas. It is also stated in the plaint that after the Plaintiff's kobala such accounts and papers were demanded from Defendant No. 1 on 11th Falgun 1327 A. S. but no such accounts were submitted."

The learned Munsif, on a construction of the deed of sale, held (i) that the Plaintiff did not purchase the rights of Defendant No. 2 under the mortgage kabuliyat executed by Defendant No. 1 in favour of Defendant No. 2; and (ii) that the Plaintiff, if he purchased anything at all, purchased the right to sue for accounts, which is unassignable under sec. 6 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act. In the result he dismissed the suit. On appeal the learned Additional District Judge reversed both these findings and remanded the case for determination on the merits which, in the circumstances of this case, must mean for taking accounts from the Defendant No. 1.

When the Courts below have differed on the construction of the deed of sale executed by the Defendant No. 2 in favour of the Plaintiff, it becomes necessary to closely examine the terms thereof. In the heading of the document it is stated that the sale is in respect of the mouzas belonging to Defendant No. 2 together with back rents from tenants for a sum of Rs. 720 which is the full consideration for the transfer. In para. 2 after a description of the mouzahs sold and their appurtenances the following passage appears :—

"And Tahbil (cash) due to me and my dues from the Gomostha together with the right of taking accounts from the Gomostha and the right of taking the papers from him."

Para. 6 runs thus :—"If the Thoka or the Karcha of the year 1327 filed by the Gomostha be not correct, you will make enquiries yourself and will ascertain the correct amount; you will be entitled to

In view of the allegation that the Respondent has submitted no accounts, it is not possible for the Plaintiff to say what precise sum is due, until an account is taken. Although the Plaintiff has been compelled to sue for accounts his claim is really one for a sum of money received on behalf of Defendant No. 2 and misappropriated by Defendant No. 1." He further observes that the transfer was not of a mere right to sue but of a right to a specific sum of money which has been embezzled. It seems to me, however, that the transfer was not of a right to a specific sum but of a right to call for accounts, and to recover

This is not an altogether correct view of the law. Rights arising out of torts are undoubtedly unassignable but there may also be rights arising out of contract which offend against the rules as formulated in the section. Abu Mahomed v. S. C. Chunder (1). This is indicated by the alteration in sec. 6 (e) in 1900 by eliminating the words "for compensation for a harm illegally caused" which formed part of the clause before the amendment.

On a proper construction of the document and regard being had to the frame of the suit it seems to me that the Plain- ʟ is not entitled to maintain the suit since he has purchased, if anything, a mere right to sue for accounts. A number of cases, English and Indian, have been cited by the learned vakils on both sides but I do not consider it necessary to refer to them, as none of them is exactly in point and every case must be decided with reference to its own particular facts. Some of the reported cases may, however, be briefly referred to. In Varahaswami v. Rama Chandra Raju (2), it was held that a mere right to recover damages for the negligence of an agent in failing to collect rent is not assignable. There does not seem to be much difference in principle between failure to collect rent and failure to pay rent collected. A claim for mesne profits is not transferable. Sham Chand Kundu v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India, Ltd. (3) and Seetamma v. Venkataramanayya (4). The principle followed in these cases is applicable in the present case. The learned Additional District Judge has relied on the case of Madho Das v. Ramji Patak (5). There a sum of money was in the hands of the agent on his principal's account to be spent for certain purpose. It was held that that sum or so much of it as had not been actually spent could be attached in execution of a decree. That case, having regard to its particular facts, is no authority for the view which found favour with the learned Judge. The learned vakil for the Respondent has laid great stress on the case of County Hotel and Wine Co., Ld. v. London and North-Western Ry. Co. (6). If anything, that case supports the view that we have adopted. There the subject of transfer was an option under a lease and McCardie, J., held that a mere right of litigation cannot be transferred.

In view of the conclusion at which I have arrived above the question whether the Plaintiff purchased the rights of the Defendant No. 2 under the security kabuliyat ceases to be of any importance. I may state, however, that I am unable to agree with the view of the learned Additional District Judge on this point also. The kobala does not mention the transfer of Defendant No. 2's right as mortgagee, nor does it contain any description of the properties covered by the kabuliyat. The only mention thereof is to be found in a schedule at the end of the document. The learned Judge held on two grounds that the Defendant No. 2 transferred his lien on the property mortgaged to him by the Defendant No. 1, (1) that that was the intention of the parties and (2) that the mortgage kabuliyat was delivered by Defendant No. 2 to the Plaintiff at the time of the execution of the kobala. I am unable to accept the learned Judge's reasoning. Where the document is not itself ambiguous, the intention of the parties should not be taken into consideration and the mere delivery of a document of title does not constitute a transfer of the right to the property. There are certain well recognised rules relating to the mode of transfer of interest in immoveable properties and transfer of such interest can be effected in no other way.

In the above view of the matter the appeal succeeds. The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside and those of the first Court restored with costs 3 gold mohurs.

GRAHAM, J.—I agree.

RULE No. 802 OF 1923.

SUHRAWARDY, J. PAGE, J. 1924, Heard, 10 and 11, January. Judgment, 11, January.	DHIRENDRA NATH ROY and ors., Petitioners, v. KAMINI KUMAR PAL and ors., Opposite Party.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 90—Application to set aside sale, if maintainable by attaching decree-holder—"Interests" in r. 90, if restricted to proprietary or possessory title or includes pecuniary interest.

An attaching decree-holder is a person "whose interests are affected by the sale" within the meaning of Or. 21, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code, and as such is entitled to maintain an application under that Rule to set aside a sale.

The expression "interests" in r. 90 is not restricted to proprietary or possessory title but includes other interests such as pecuniary interest.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SUHRAWARDY, J.—This Rule raises an important question, viz., whether an attaching creditor, as such, is entitled to maintain an application under Or. 21, r. 90, of the Code of Civil Procedure. The facts of this case are that the Opposite Party and the Petitioners are two rival decree-holders having obtained decrees against the same judgment-debtor. The Petitioner at first attached the judgment-debtor's property in execution of his own decree. Thereafter the Opposite Party executed his decree, attached the property and brought it to sale. Thereupon the Petitioner applied to the Munsif in whose Court the decree was being executed to have the property re-sold on the ground that it was sold for a very inadequate price. He further applied to have the assets distributed rateably under sec. 73 and also for such distribution of the assets after the re-sale. The Court having rejected his application, he withdrew it. The effect of this withdrawal was that he gave up his right to the rateable distribution. He subsequently proceeded to execute his decree and brought this property to sale and purchased it himself. He now applied to have the sale by the Opposite Party set aside under Or. 21, r. 90, on the ground of material irregularity. The Courts have proceeded upon an examination of one question, whether he is a person who is still entitled to a share in the rateable distribution of the assets, having withdrawn his application in which he prayed for rateable distribution, and the Courts held that he is not a person entitled to make an application under Or. 21, r. 90. It has been argued before us that the view taken by the lower Court is wrong; and further that though the Petitioner has lost his right to share in the rateable distribution of the assets, he is a person whose interests are affected by the sale and, therefore, he is entitled to maintain this application. In my opinion, this contention has great force. The corresponding words in sec. 311 of the Code of 1882 were "any person whose immoveable property has been sold." The change of wording in the new Act indicates that the Legislature thought it proper in view of the decision in Asmutunnessa Begum v. Ashruff Ali (1) to widen the scope of the section. It may be profitable to note that the words that occur in r. 90, namely, "a person whose interests are affected by the sale" are even wider than the words that are to be found in r. 89, namely, "any person either owning such property or holding an interest therein by virtue of a title acquired before such sale." This clearly shows that the person who has got a vestige of title in the property sold may apply under r. 89 to have the sale set aside, may be a person whose interests are such (not necessarily in the property) as may be affected by the sale. It cannot be said that an attaching creditor has no interest in the sale of the property, or, if I may go further, in the property itself. There is no authority directly in point, but from the observations made in several cases, some support may be found to the view I have adopted. Reference may be made to the case of Jogendra Nath Chatterjee v. Monmatha Nath Ghose (2). There the question was whether the Plaintiff who had attached immoveable property before judgment had such interest as would entitle him to apply under Or. 21, r. 90, to set aside the sale of the property in execution of another person's decree. The learned Judges held that he had not. But in coming to that conclusion, they drew a distinction between a person who had obtained attachment before judgment and a decree-holder who had attached the property sold in execution of his decree. Reference may also be usefully made to the case of Sankaralinga Redda v. Kundasami Tevan (3). There it has been held that an attaching creditor does not acquire any such charge on the attached property which will give him priority over another creditor, but he acquired a right to have the property kept in custodia legis for the satisfaction of his debt, and an intentional interference without justification with any such right is an actionable wrong for which an action would lie. In that case a moveable property was attached in execution of a decree. It was removed by a third party. It was held that the attaching decree-holder may maintain a suit for the recovery of that property from the third party. If he had no interest in the property, it is difficult to see how he can maintain a suit for recovery of the same. It is argued on behalf of the Opposite Party that if the attaching creditor is a person whose interests are affected by the sale, then the expression "any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of the assets" in the sale is superfluous. On the face of it, this argument assumes some importance. But it is arguable that the first clause has reference to a particular class of persons, while the latter is of general application. Now, what are the interests which the Petitioner has which are affected by the sale of the property by the Opposite Party. His case is that the property is liable to be re-sold, because there was material irregularity and that the sale was brought about in collusion with the judgment-debtor. I cannot say that such contention is groundless. It appears that this property was previously sold in execution of the decree of the Petitioner for a higher price than that fetched at the present sale. The judgment-debtor applied under Or. 21, r. 90, and had that sale set aside. The present sale is for a much lesser amount, but the judgment-debtor has not taken any step to challenge it. It is further submitted to us on behalf of the Opposite Party that the effect of allowing the Petitioner to contest the present sale is that in the event of his success in setting aside the present sale, his own sale would stand and the Opposite Party would have no further remedy. I am not concerned with what may be the effect of having the sale set aside. The only question with which we have to deal at present is whether the Petitioner is a person who can maintain an application under Or. 21, r. 90. It has also been urged with great deal of emphasis that the word "interest" in r. 90, must be interest in property; that is, interest which must be some sort of proprietary or possessory title. I am not prepared to restrict the meaning of a plain word so as to exclude all other interests, such as "pecuniary interest." In my opinion, the present Petitioner is a person whose right to the property, however insignificant it may be, is affected by the sale. In this view of the law, I am of opinion that the Rule ought to succeed.

The result is that this Rule is made absolute and the case sent back to the Court of first instance for disposal on merits. Costs will abide the result. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

PAGE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The issue in this case is whether the applicant was entitled to apply to the Court to set [illegible] brought about by the Opposite Party. It is conceded having regard to the facts of this case, that the applicant was entitled to share in a rateable distribution of the assets realized by the sale under Or. 21, r. 90, but it is said that he has lost his right to share in a rateable distribution of the assets because he applied that the assets which resulted from the sale should be rateably distributed and then withdrew that application. If that were so, I should be disposed to think that his right to share in the rateable distribution of the assets has gone. But I am not satisfied that this was what really happened. What happened was that when the sale took place the applicant applied to the Court that the bid of the execution creditor No. 1 should not be accepted and that the sale should go on, in which case, he stated that, he would be willing to offer Rs. 700 for the property, the bid of the execution creditor No. 1 being only Rs. 145. He, further applied that if an order was made that the sale should proceed on the terms suggested the assets realized by the sale should be rateably distributed, and that in that distribution the applicant should be entitled to share. The first application was refused and the applicant then withdrew the second one and thereafter proceeded to purchase the property at the subsequent sale which was brought about at his instance. If that was what happened, in my opinion, the applicant never did make or withdrew an application for a share in the rateable distribution of the proceeds of a sale in which the execution creditor No. 1's bid was accepted. All that he withdrew was an application to share in the proceeds of the sale made on the assumption that he was entitled though [illegible] the property was put up for [illegible] eafter arises, it may be, if the proceedings to set aside the sale are dismissed, that it will still be open to the applicant to apply to share in a rateable distribution of the assets; as to that I express no opinion.

But there is another ground upon which the applicant contends that he is entitled to apply to set aside the sale under Or. 21, r. 90, namely, that the sale being an irregular or fraudulent one, his interests were thereby affected. The Opposite Party contends that an execution creditor who has obtained a writ of attachment is not a person whose interests are affected by the sale because in his contention the only persons connoted by the words "those whose interests are affected by the sale" are persons who possess proprietary or possessory title to the property which forms the subject-matter of the sale which title will be destroyed if the sale is allowed to remain effective. In support of that contention the learned Vakil for the Opposite Party cited certain cases which had been decided under corresponding provisions in the old Code (sec. 311). But it is to be observed that the words in sec. 311 were "any person whose immovable property has been sold," and that in r. 90 there have been substituted the following words, viz., "any person whose interests are affected by the sale." The intention of the Legislature, in my opinion, when making this amendment of the language of the Rule, was to enlarge the class of persons who would be entitled to apply under r. 90. In my opinion "persons whose interests are affected by the sale" is an expression which is not limited to persons whose proprietary or possessory title is affected by the sale. Now, is an execution creditor who has attached immoveable property a person whose interests are affected by a fraudulent or irregular sale? In my opinion, he is. It may well be that a decree in itself does not create a charge or a lien in favour of the decree-holder in the property of the judgment-debtor and it also may be a sound contention that the attachment of property in execution of a decree does not itself create in the decree-holder any title to such property; but, in my opinion, it gives him an interest in the property; and a very real interest, because the effect of obtaining a decree is that the decree-holder becomes entitled to enforce the right which he has obtained under his decree against that property. Now, if the sale by another decree-holder is in fact collusive, it affects the right of the execution-creditor who has attached the property: at any rate, to this extent that if he is entitled to a share in the rateable distribution of the proceeds of the sale, he will receive a lesser amount than he would have obtained if the property had been sold for a fair and proper price, or again, if he is not entitled to a share in the rateable distribution of the sale, there will be a less sum available after payment of the decree-holder's judgment-debt for the purpose of liquidating the decretal amount to obtain which he has attached the property. In my opinion, the interests of the applicant were or might be seriously affected by the sale; and in my judgment, he is entitled to have his application under r. 90 heard upon the merits. For these reasons, I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother.

This was a Rule granted on the 4th February 1924 against an order, dated the 30th January 1924, of the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta (Mr. T. Roxburgh) withdrawing the case from the file of the 4th Presidency Magistrate and transferring same to his own file.

MOHINI MOHAN ROY v. PUNAM CHAND SETHIA.

The facts are briefly as follows :—A complaint of criminal breach of trust was laid before the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate who, after police enquiry, transferred the case for disposal to the Fourth Presidency Magistrate. This Magistrate after examining witnesses ordered the issue of summons against the accused who applied to the Chief Presidency Magistrate asking, on the ground of jurisdiction, that the case should be recalled to his file and tried by him. The Chief Presidency Magistrate thereupon withdrew the case from the file of the 4th Presidency Magistrate and transferred it to his own file under sec. 528, Cr. P. C. Hence the present Rule was obtained by the Complainant.

Mr. Langford James and Babu Satindra Nath Mukerji for the Petitioner.

Mr. B. C. Chatterjee, Babus Tarakeshwar Pal Chowdhry and Phanindra Nath Mukerjee for the Opposite Party.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GREAVES, J.—On the 13th November last the Secretary of the Nawab of Murshidabad complained to the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate of criminal breach of trust by one Punam Chand Sethia in respect of certain jewellery.

The Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate took cognizance of the offence and after examining the Complainant directed the Police to enquire and report.

On the matter coming back to the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate a judicial enquiry was asked for by the Complainant and the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate thereupon transferred the case for disposal to the Fourth Presidency Magistrate. This Magistrate after examining witnesses ordered the issue of summons against Punam Chand Sethia on the 19th January 1924. On the 28th January Punam Chand applied to the Chief Presidency Magistrate asking, on the ground of jurisdiction, that the case should be re-called to his file and that the trial should take place in his Court. The Chief Presidency Magistrate, having ascertained that the 4th Presidency Magistrate had no objection, on the 30th January withdrew the case from the file of the 4th Presidency Magistrate and transferred it to his own file under sec. 528 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. It is said that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had no power to make this order and hence this Rule.

Sec. 18 (4) of the Criminal Procedure Code empowers the Local Government to appoint an Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate and provides that he shall have, all or any of the powers of a Chief Presidency Magistrate under the Criminal Procedure Code as the Local Government may direct. Sec. 21 (2) of the same Code empowers the Local Government to declare and define his subordination to the Chief Presidency Magistrate and the extent thereof.

By a Notification No. 6786-J, dated the 23rd October 1923 the Local Government appointed Mr. Das Gupta as Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate and authorised him to exercise the powers of a Chief Presidency Magistrate therein mentioned including the powers under sec. 528 to withdraw cases. He was not given the powers of recalling cases.

By a notification No. 6787-J of the same date the Local Government in exercise of the powers conferred by sec. 21 (2) of the Criminal Procedure Code declared the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate to be subordinate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate. On behalf of the Petitioner it is said that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order as the case had been transferred by the Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate and that inasmuch as he had not been given the power to recall a case to his own file, which he had once transferred, the order could only have been made by this Court. On behalf of the accused it is said that the Chief Presidency Magistrate has made an order withdrawing the case to his own file and that he has power to make such order. We were referred to sec. 17 of the Code of Criminal Procedure which makes Magistrates subordinate to the District Magistrate and to sec. 25 of the same Code which by sub-sec. (d) confers on the Chief Presidency Magistrate the same powers given to a District Magistrate by sec. 17.

It is said that a District Magistrate could have made the order in question and that therefore the Chief Presidency Magistrate can make the order, and we were referred to Raghunatha v. Emperor (1). It was there held by Mr. Justice Bashyam Ayyangar that a District Magistrate had no power to cancel an order made by a Sub-Divisional Magistrate directing the transfer under sec. 528, Criminal Procedure Code of a case from the file of one Sub-Divisional Magistrate to that of another Sub-Divisional Magistrate and to direct the re-transfer of the case to the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate from whom it was transferred, as in the matter of transfer under sec. 528, Criminal Procedure Code, the District Magistrate and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had co-ordinate authority over Magistrates subordinate to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and that his order cannot be appealed against to the District Magistrate. The learned Judge at p. 132, however, adds this remark : "It may be that under sec. 528 a case once transferred from one Magistrate to another may be withdrawn from the latter by the District Magistrate or even by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and that he may enquire into or try such case himself or refer it for enquiry or trial to some other competent Magistrate on a substantive application that it is inexpedient that the Magistrate to whom it had been transferred should enquire into or try the case."

(1) I. L. R. 26 Mad. 130 at p. 132 (1902).

The case of Raghunatha v. Emperor (1) was dissented from by a Division Bench of the Madras High Court in Santhappa Sethurau v. Govindaswamy (2) who followed and approved Thaman Chetti v. Alagiri Chetti (3), where it was held that a Magistrate who is subordinate to a Sub-Divisional Magistrate is also subordinate to the District Magistrate within the meaning of sec. 528 and that sec. 17, Cr. P. Code, which declares such Magistrate to be subject only to the general control of the District Magistrate, cannot be so construed as to take away the special power conferred by sec. 528.

In that case a Joint Magistrate transferred a complaint from a second class Magistrate to a Taluk Magistrate and the District Magistrate transferred it back.

I think the principles of this case with which I respectfully agree apply to the case before us.

The Additional Chief Presidency Magistrate is subordinate to the Chief Presidency Magistrate and I think the Chief Presidency Magistrate has power under sec. 528, Cr. P. Code to make the order which he did withdrawing the case to his file.

We have not considered the order on its merits as the matter was not argued

PRIVY COUNCIL

[APPEAL FROM BOMBAY.]

THE LORD CHANCELLOR. VISCOUNT HALDANE. LORD PARMOOR. LORD PHILLIMORE. 1923, Heard, 8 and 10, May. Judgment, 12, June.	THE MAHARAJA OF KOLHAPUR, Appellant, v. SHRI BALA MAHARAJ and ors., Respondents.

Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X Bom. of 1876), secs. 4, 12—Claim against Government of tenure being held as saranjam or jagir—Power of Government to refer to High Court—Jurisdiction—Grant as inam dharmadaya, if religious or political—Summary Settlement Act (II Bom. of 1863), sec 16.

A dispute as to succession to a tenure held under the Maharajah of Kolhapur was fought up to the Privy Council between two persons each claiming to be the adopted son of the last holder in proceedings to which the Maharajah was no party. The Maharajah took exception to these proceedings and made representations to the Government of Bombay that the adoption of the party who succeeded before the Judicial Committee conferred no title as the same had not received the approval of the Maharajah, whereupon the Bombay Government referred the claim under sec. 12 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act of 1876 to the High Court:

Held—That the claim of the Maharajah being that the lands were held under treaty or as saranjam or other political tenure, the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts was excluded by sec. 4 of the Act of 1876. The claim was therefore referable to the High Court under sec. 12 of the Act.

That the grant which was made to the original grantee as inam dharmadaya and was to be hereditary was made on religious and not on political grounds.

That the mere fact that in occasional correspondence the grant was referred to as "jahagir" or "saranjam," could not derogate from the effect of the language of the grant itself.

That the question whether the tenure was political was one which was for determination by the Government under the provisions of the Interpretation sec. (16) of the Summary Settlement Act, II of 1863, and that by treating the title as one to which the Act applied, the Government must be taken to have determined that the tenure was not political.

These were consolidated appeals from a decision of the High Court at Bombay, dated the 21st July 1920, in a matter referred to it by the Government of Bombay under sec. 12 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876).

The question for the decision of the Court was "whether the application in or about the year 1863 of the Summary Settlement under Bombay Acts II and VII of 1863 to certain lands then held by Shri Tatya Maharaj, which subsequently devolved upon the late Baba Maharaj, was valid and legal."

The High Court decided this question in the affirmative. Against that decision the Appellants appealed to His Majesty in Council.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment of their Lordships.

The judgment of the High Court is reported at I. L. R. 45 Bom. 463.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., Sir George

THE MAHARAJA OF KOLHAPUR v. SHRI BALA MAHARAJ.

Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the first Appellant.

Mr. T. R. Ramsay for the second Appellant contended that the question should have been decided in the negative as the lands in suit were held under treaty and had been granted, and were held, as jagir, or on similar political tenure, and because the title of the holders had been formally adjudicated as so held and granted before the application of the settlement, and because the consent of the Appellant (who was a party to the treaties in question, and interested in their provisions being observed) was not obtained to the application of the Summary Settlement to the lands in question.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., Luxmoore, K. C. and Parikh for the first Respondent.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

VISCOUNT HALDANE.—These are consolidated appeals from a decision of the High Court at Bombay on a question referred to it by the Government of Bombay, under sec. 12 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act (X of 1876). The question referred was whether the application in or about the year 1864 of the Summary Settlement under Bombay Acts II and VII of 1863 to certain lands then held by Shri Tatya Maharaj, which subsequently devolved on the late Baba Maharaj, was valid and legal. These Acts provided for the settlement of claims to exemption from payment of land revenue and for the guarantee of a title in perpetuity to the holder of the land, his heirs and assigns, without restriction by Government as to adoption, succession or transfer. The Acts applied to holders of land the freedom of which from payment of land revenue had not been the subject of formal adjudication, where the holders hd consented to submit the terms and coditions of holding to summary settlemen. But the Acts were not to apply where the land was held under treaty or was g nted or held as a jagir or saranjam, or similar political tenure, which was defi d to mean tenure created from or depen t on political considerations, the existe of which was to be determined by t Government.

Sec. 12 o e Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act o 876 gave the Government a general pow o refer questions arising in the investig n of claims which, but for the passing that Act, could have been tried by a Court to the High Court at Bombay ision.

The circumstances nder which the question which has was referred to the High Court were Baba Maharaj died in 1897. In dispute arose between the second App t in the present appeals, Shri Ba Maharaj, as claimant to the lands the to which is in controversy, and the Respondent, Shri Jagannath M as to which of them was the vali dopted son of the late Baba Mahar agannath, who was then a minor, t a suit in the Court of the First Subordinate Judge of Poona again ala, who claimed to be the properly son, to establish his own title special purpose of the suit was to have determined that Jagannath had been validly adopted by Baba's widow, and that it was consequently impossible for her to make, as she had endeavoured to do, a second adoption of Bala less than two months later. A point relied on by the latter in his written statement was that the approval of His Highness the Maharajah of Kolhapur was necessary to such an adoption, and that such approval not having been given, the earlier adoption was void. In July 1906, the Subordinate Judge decided in favour of Jagannath, holding that he had been validly adopted as the son of Baba. It was held, as the consequence, that no title or interest in the property of Baba had passed to Bala, and he was restrained by injunction from interfering with Baba's property. The High Court at Bombay reversed this, but the Privy Council, differing, restored the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

To these proceedings the Maharajah, who was no party to them, finally took exception, and he and Bala made representations to the Government of Bombay to the effect that, the adoption of Jagannath had not received the approval of His Highness, no adoption could have conferred title to the property of Baba, and that it must go to Bala, whose adoption the Maharajah had approved.

The point raised by this claim the Bombay Government thereupon referred under sec. 12 of the Bombay Revenue Jurisdiction Act of 1876. This section provides, as already stated, that if in the trial or investigation of any suit, claim or objection which but for the passing of the Act might have been entertained by a Civil Court, there arises any question on which the Government desires the decision of the High Court, it may cause a statement to be prepared and refer the question for such decision. But by sec. 4 it is provided that no Civil Court is to exercise jurisdiction inter alia in the matter of any claim against the Government relating to lands held under treaty, or to lands granted or held as jagir or saranjam or on other political tenure, or to lands declared by Government, or by any officer duly authorised in that behalf, to be held for service. Unless, therefore, the claim in the case before their Lordships falls within these words, it is said that, as a Civil Court might have exercised jurisdiction, the Government had no power to refer the question which arose to the High Court.

Passing for the moment from the consideration of the point as to jurisdiction which arises under this section, it will be convenient to refer in the first place to the history of the dispute. This is explained with sufficient accuracy in the statement submitted to the High Court by the Government of Bombay when defining the question referred. The history of the events which led to the reference to the High Court appears from the following abridgment of that statement :—

Shri Tatya Maharaj was a grandson of Shri Sidheshwar Maharaj, a learned and saintly man who at some date previous to 1800 was appointed by Chhatrapati Shivaji Maharaj III, the then ruler of Kolhapur, to be his spiritual preceptor. For the maintenance and dignity of the family of Shri Sidheshwar Maharaj hereditary grants of land had been made and hereditary honours, including the hereditary title of "Maharaj," conferred upon him by the said Maharaja of Kolhapur.

Upon the death of Shri Sidheshwar Maharaj in 1800, his property originally acquired from the Maharaja of Kolhapur was divided amongst his three sons, Baba, Nana and Bhau.

Between 1813 and 1821 Bhau Maharaj (Sidheshwar's youngest son) took an active part in Kolhapur politics, being then the Prime Minister of Kolhapur, and rendered valuable services to both the British Government and the Maharaja.

Upon the downfall of the Peshwa, Sir Thomas Munro, in 1818, when settling the Southern Mahratha Country which had fallen into the hands of the British Government, returned to Baba Maharaj (Sidheshwar's eldest son) three villages in

THE MAHARAJA OF KOLHAPUR v. SHRI MAHARAJ.

Chikodi, which were previously held by him, and by sanad, dated the 2nd August 1818, granted to Bhau Maharaj, as "inam dharmadaya," hereditarily three villages and one hamlet. The sanad stated that he was "great, worthy and a well-wisher of the Company's Government." The villages and hamlet so granted were Kerur, Hebal, Kadapur and Kochari, in the Talukas of Chikodi and Manowlee. This grant was subsequently confirmed on the 24th October 1819, by a sanad in the same terms signed by the Honourable Mountstuart Elphinstone.

In a letter dated the 28th June 1818, addressed to the Honourable Mountstuart Elphinstone, Sir Thomas Munro referred to the above grant (which he was then proposing to make) as "the new jahagir," and in his subsequent report to the same officer on the state of the Southern Mahratha country, dated the 28th August 1818, Sir Thomas Munro stated that the villages were given to Bhau Maharaj as a "jahagir."

By a private letter dated the 2nd August 1818, Sir Thomas Munro informed His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur that Bhau Maharaj being a particular friend of the Honourable Company, it had been deemed necessary to make him the above grant.

On the 2nd August 1818, Sir Thomas Munro wrote an official letter to His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur referring to the above grant and the assistance given by Bhau Maharaj, and in a letter dated the 15th August 1818, and also addressed to His Highness the Maharaja, the Collector of Dharwar also referred to the services of Bhau Maharaj and characterised him as "a very worthy man indeed."

On the 25th October 1818, His Highness the Maharaja rewarded Bhau Maharaj lakh of included in the Summary Settle- Bombay Act

In 1818 Governed by Mr. Baber, and the and Manowlee Collector at Dharwar, Thomas Munro to the Schedules of Maharaja of Kolhapur subjedule to him. to the grants made as above sta after-

In 1821 His Highness the Maharaped Kolhapur granted to Bhau Maharaj ten villages, several of which were within the said Talukas of Chikodi and Manowlee.

On the 24th January 1826, a treaty was concluded between the British Government and His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur which, after reciting that a treaty had been concluded in 1812 and that certain misunderstandings had arisen, declared, with a view to the removal of such misunderstandings and to the confirmation of the alliance, that the British Government acknowledged that the Districts of Chikodi, and Manowlee, which had been transferred to His Highness by a sanad under the signature of Sir Thomas Munro, were ceded to His Highness in full sovereignty, His Highness the Maharaja engaging on his part to respect the rights and privileges of the jamindars, inamdars and watandars of those Districts. The treaty further declared by Art. 7 as follows:—

"The Raja of Kolhapur promises to continue to Bhau Maharaj and Baba Maharaj their respective lands and rights agreeably to the Schedule annexed. The guarantee of the British Government to the enjoyment of the above lands and rights shall only continue during the life-time of the above-mentioned persons, but the rights of their descendants as founded on sanad or custom shall not be prejudiced by the cessation of the said guarantee."

This treaty was ratified by the Governor-General in Council on the 10th March 1826. The Schedules, a copy of which was sent to Bhau Maharaj, includwas void. In July 1906, the villages Judge decided in favo'ghness the holding that he ha...n 1821. as the son of [the second son of conseo... had died without issue in th... ving a widow. By order dated 1st January 1826, the Sir Collector and Political Agent, Dharwar, dealt with the succession to the share of Sidheshwar's property which came to Nana upon partition after the death of the former. The order laid down that the widow was entitled to enjoy the property during her life but that she had no right to deal with it by way of gift, sale or mortgage: that she was not to make any adoption, and that after her death the property was to go to Baba Maharaj and Bhau Maharaj and their sons. This property was included in the Schedule to the treaty of 1826

A further treaty between the British Government and the Maharaja of Kolhapur was signed on the 23rd October 1827. The treaty recited the treaty of 1826 and stated that His Highness had uniformly evinced a total disregard of the friendship of the British Government and in violation of the conditions contained in Art. 4 of the treaty of 1826 had repeatedly infringed the rights of the inamdars and watandars of the Talukas of Chikodi and Manowlee, and that it therefore became necessary that His Highness should give back to the British Government the said Talukas "in the same state in which he received them," and that His Highness thereby agreed so to do. Art. 3 provided as follows:—

"In the 7th Article of the said Treaty the possessions of Bhau Maharaj and Baba Maharaj were guaranteed to them for the terms of their respective lives only (provisions being made that the rights of their descendants, as founded on sanad or custom, should not be prejudiced by the cessation of the said guarantee). As, however, His Highness has never ceased to annoy and distress these persons by seizing their villages and other property, it has been deemed necessary to extend the guarantee of the British Government to their descendants, and His Highness accordingly engages never to molest them."

The Talukas of Chikodi and Manowlee accordingly passed into the possession of the British Government, but the Political Agent raised the question whether Government should retain the whole benefit of Art. 2 of the treaty of 1827, which provided that the two Talukas should be given back to the British Government in the same state in which His Highness received them, or whether subsequent grants were to be considered valid, and he submitted a list of inams which according to the strict letter of the treaty might have been resumed, but which he had allowed to remain in the possession of the proprietors. That list included the villages granted to Bhau Maharaj and Baba Maharaj by the Maharaja between 1818 and 1827, while the Talukas were under his sovereignty, and it stated that they were given up "as being included in the Schedule of their possessions guaranteed by the Honourable Company," i.e., the Schedule to the treaty of 1826. The Government of Bombay, by letter dated the 23rd May 1828, approved of the Political Agent's proposals and authorised him to carry them into effect.

Bhau Maharaj died in 1837, and on the 4th January 1838, Government inquired of the Agent for Sardars whether the deceased held any possessions resumable at his death. The Agent replied, on the 3rd March 1838, that all the possessions held by Bhau Maharaj were guaranteed by the 3rd ... the treaty of 1827, and that from ... the sanads and other documents which he had examined it appeared that all such possessions were hereditary and not resumable at his death. The Agent further reported that Bhau Maharaj left two sons, Huree Hur Pandit (alias Tatya Maharaj) and Vishwumbhur Pandit (alias Dada Maharaj).

In 1828 Bhau Maharaj had petitioned Government to be allowed to exchange one of the villages granted to him by Sir Thomas Munro (supra) for others situated near Poona, where he usually lived. The exchange was effected (after Bhau Maharaj's death) by sanad dated the 7th February 1838, signed by the Principal Collector of Poona, whereby the villages of Vadgaum, Koarlee, Pimpulgaum and Kassgaum (together with other lands) in the Poona District, were granted to Bhau's sons in exchange for Keyroor, one of the villages granted by Sir Thomas Munro.

In 1844 the widow of Nana Maharaj, in spite of the order referred to (supra), purported to adopt one Appa, a grandson of Baba Maharaj, but the Government ruled in 1857 that "the consent of the Kolhapur Government not having been obtained to the adoption, and the difficulty of proof as to the consent of Tatya Maharaj to the arrangement are facts which are fatal to the claim of Appa Maharaj."

During the years 1851 to 1864, which covered the period of inquiry into the titles to Inam Estates in the Districts in question, Raoji Maharaj was the representative of the elder branch of the family of Shri Sidheshwar Maharaj and Tatya Maharaj, the representative of the younger branch. In 1851 Tatya Maharaj submitted his kaifiat, or written

On the 11th June 1857, Tatya Maharaj wrote to the Assistant Inam Commissioner, Belgaum, who had called for the sanads, stating that they had been sent to him. The letter went on to point out that the grants had been enjoyed under the guarantee of the Company's Government and that inquiries had already been held about them many times.

In 1859 an enquiry was held as to the succession to the villages in the Poona District which had been exchanged for the villages of Keyroor, in 1838 (supra), and the Sub-Assistant Inam Commissioner reported that Tatya Maharaj's (Hurree Hur Pandit's) claim appeared to be firmly based on the recognised competency of the grantor and the guarantee of the British Government under the treaties above referred to. Acting upon such report, the Acting Inam Commissioner decreed that the property "be continued in Inam for so long as there may be in existence any male lineal descendant of Wasudeo Pandit alias Bhau Maharaj."

In 1861 Summary Settlement was being proposed and Tatya Maharaj objected to its application to his possessions on the ground that they were held "under treaty." The Revenue Commissioner, Southern Division, on the 1st February 1862, referred to the Government of Bombay for decision under the Summary Settlement Rules XX (cl. C), the question whether Tatya Maharaj held any of his was void. To July 1906, the villag[...] reply by letter in favo[...] March 1862, that His Excel[...] Council

His Excellency in Council accordingly directs that the terms of the Summary Settlement be offered to Tatya Maharaj. If he refuses to accept the unassailable title thus offered it will remain for further consideration whether any and what inquiry should be instituted into the title on which he holds the lands."

On the 28th March 1862, the Collector of Poona wrote to Tatya Maharaj requesting him to state in writing whether he agreed to the Summary Settlement being applied to his Inam holdings in British territory. He replied on the 29th March 1862, that since the time of his father the villages and lands had been continued to him through the friendship and favour of Government and this had been communicated in detail to the Agent for Sardars and the Revenue Commissioner, and continued: "In spite of it Government are passing the order and it cannot be helped. I therefore agree to the Summary Settlement being applied to the Inam villages and lands, etc. . . ."

In June 1862, Raoji Maharaj and Tatya Maharaj were served jointly by the Collector of Belgaum with formal notice giving them the option of either having the titles to their properties in the Belgaum District inquired into and adjudicated upon or of paying quit rent and nazarana and getting an absolute property in the holdings.

By letters dated, respectively the 14th and 25th August 1862, Raoji Maharaj objected to paying quit rent and nazarana on the grounds that the titles had been already investigated by Government officers and that the holdings were guaranteed by treaty. He asked that the notice might be withdrawn.

The Summary Settlement Act (Bombay Act II of 1863) was passed on the 9th April 1863.

On the 10th April 1863, the Collector of Belgaum informed Raoji that the Government had ruled that the Inams were not of such a nature as to preclude the application to them of the Summary Settlement Act (supra) and that it would therefore be applied.

By his reply dated the 10th June 1863, Raoji referred to the objections already put forward and stated that he was about to make a submission to Government in the matter.

On the 19th June 1863, the Collector of Belgaum again wrote to Raoji referring to the decision of Government that the Summary Settlement was applicable to his Inam holdings and informing him that notice had been served and that if he was unwilling to accept the Summary Settlement and desired an investigation into title under Act XI of 1852 he would have to furnish due security.

Raoji then, on the 6th July 1863, wrote setting out in detail his grounds of objection and submitting a prayer to Government that as the villages were guaranteed the title should not be investigated.

On the 2nd November 1863, the Revenue Commissioner, Southern Division, requested Colonel Etheridge, the Settlement Officer, Southern Division, "to prepare for submission to Government a comprehensive report indicating all the villages held by the family affected by the Order contained in para. 3 of Government letter No. 860, dated 6th March 1862, and stating how the offer of Summary Settlement had been received by the holders:"

Colonel Etheridge accordingly wrote to Raoji Maharaj on the 30th November 1863, and to Tatya Maharaj on the 2nd December 1863. As the result of his letters both Raoji and Tatya agreed to accept a Summary Settlement.

The Summary Settlement was accordingly applied to all the possessions of Raoji Maharaj and Tatya Maharaj in British India.

The settlement was so applied without reference to or the consent or approval of His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur.

In 1866 Tatya Maharaj died, and there were various claimants to his estate, one of whom was Baba Maharaj, who claimed to be an adopted son. The then Maharajah of Kolhapur was a minor and the British Government had assumed the administration of the State. The various claimants submitted their claims to British Government and the matter was referred to the Political Agent to report. Upon receipt of his report the Government of Bombay in the Political Department passed a Resolution No. 2105, dated the 24th June 1867, of which the following are the material paragraphs:—

"(12) The main question being whether the adoption should be recognised by Government, it is necessary first to obtain a clear idea as to the meaning and effect of its recognition by Government."

"(13) The recognition of the adoption can have effect merely as regards the right of the adopted son to succeed to the Inam lands, and here it must be mentioned that these lands are situated partly in British territory and partly in Kolhapur territory.

"(14) Now the lands in British territory have been included in the Summary Settlement under Bombay Act II of 1863 and the recognition by Government of the heir of the deceased Sirdar can, as regards these lands, have no meaning beyond a determination to whom the Government should primarily look for the payment of the nazarana commutation and quit rent due to Government under that Summary Settlement. As for the rights of any persons to succeed to these lands, whether by adoption or otherwise, their recognition by Government can have no effect whatever."

"(15) But as regards the holdings within the Kolhapur State, the recognition of the adoption by Government would have a distinct legal effect, inasmuch as under the laws of that Principality the recognition by the Raja is essential to the validity of the adoption as entitling to continuance of the Inam holdings, and the Government is now in the place of the Raja."

The Resolution proceeded to order that the matter should be sent back to the Political Agent for a further report.

After receipt of the further report the Government of Bombay passed a final Resolution (No. 3619, dated the 21st November 1867), the material parts of which are as follows:—"The Governor in Council considers that the objections put forward by the various Petitioners to the adoption of Wassoodeo Pandit (Baba Maharaj) by the late Tatya Maharaj have been satisfactorily disposed of. The adoption should therefore now be recognised on the part of the Kolhapur State. . . ." "With reference to para. 26 of the Political Agent's report, care should be taken not to sanction any adoptions save from lineal male descendants of Shideshwar Maharaj." (Para. 26 of that report dealt with a claim by the widow of a nephew of Tatya Maharaj that the right to adopt an heir rested with her.) This Resolution received the approval of the Secretary of State for

THE MAHARAJA OF KOLHAPUR v. SHRI BALA MAHARAJ.

India in Council in a despatch dated the 14th May 1868.

The acknowledged representatives of the family of Shri Sidheshwar Maharaj still bear the honorific title of "Maharaj" and are held in high reverence and esteem by His Highness the Maharaja of Kolhapur.

Baba Maharaj died in 1897 possessed of villages and lands both in British India and in Kolhapur, being those mentioned in the Schedule aforesaid, the villages and lands in British India being part of those to which Summary Settlement was applied, as before stated. He left a Will whereby he appointed five trustees (one of whom declined to act) and directed his widow, Tai Maharaj, in certain events, which happened, to adopt a son. On the 28th June 1901, the widow purported to adopt Jagannath, whose adoption was supported by the four trustees who acted but did not receive the approval and sanction of His Highness the Maharajah of Kolhapur On the 19th August 1901, the widow purported to adopt Bala Maharaj. His Highness the Maharajah approved of the latter adoption and sanctioned and recognised it. Jagannath filed a suit for a declaration that his adoption was valid, and it was ultimately decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 1914, as already stated, that Jagannath was the validly adopted son of Baba Maharaj.

It was stated to the High Court in the present reference that His Highness the Maharajah and Bala Maharaj contended that no adoption which had not received the sanction and approval of His Highness could confer a title to the property in question, and that succession to the same would have to be determined in accordance with the terms of the guarantee in the treaties and the orders of Government based thereon, i.e., the property in question should have to go to Bala Maharaj, whose adoption was sanctioned by His Highness.

The High Court held that it had jurisdiction to entertain the reference, and the question referred was accordingly dealt with by Macleod, C. J., and Pratt and Fawcett, JJ. These learned Judges decided that the lands in question were not held either under treaty or on political tenure, and that the application of the Summary Settlement to the lands in question had been valid.

Reverting to the point as to jurisdiction under the Act of 1876, to which their Lordships have made reference earlier, they think that the High Court held rightly that it had jurisdiction to decide the question referred. This in substance turned on whether there was actually a claim against the Government relating to lands held under treaty, or as saranjam or on other political tenure. The Maharaja of Kolhapur had himself, in their Lordships' opinion, a claim coming within the language of the Act. He was seeking to have it declared that the lands in question were not subject to the Summary Settlement and should therefore go to Bala, whose adoption he had sanctioned. There was accordingly a claim against the Government, jurisdiction as to which under the Act of 1876 was excluded by sec. 4, this claim being that the lands were held under treaty or as saranjam or on other political tenure; and as the Maharaja's position and rights on the question of adoption were not affected by the result of the proceedings which were disposed of by the decision of the Privy Council, for to those proceedings he had not been a party, the real question is whether power to answer the question referred to by the Government did not come to the High Court because the case was one of the cases excluded by sec. 4. Their Lordships agree with the High Court of Bombay in thinking that the claim in question was one of those excluded by sec. 4, and was therefore referable to that Court. They agree also with the conclusion at which the High Court arrived upon the merits.

They are of opinion that the nature of the title of Bhau Maharaj was really defined by the sanad of the 2nd August 1818, and the later confirmatory sanad of 24th October 1819, referred to in the statement of the question laid before the High Court. In the first of these sanads Sir Thomas Munro, when settling the Southern Mahratha country, which had fallen into the hands of the British Government, granted to Bhau three villages and a hamlet, forming the bulk of the lands in question. The grant was made to Bhau as inam dharmadaya and was to be hereditary. The signification of such a grant is that it was made on grounds of religion, and not on political grounds. Their Lordships agree with the learned Judges of the High Court that the mere fact that in occasional correspondence the grant is referred to as "jagir" or "saranjam," i.e., political, cannot derogate from the effect of the language of the grant itself. They also think that the question whether the tenure was political was one which was for determination by the Government under the provisions of the Interpretation sec. (16) of the Summary Settlement Act II of 1863, and that, by treating the title as one to which the Act applied, the Government must be taken to have determined that the tenure was not political. It appears, moreover, from a formal letter, which was before the High Court, that on the 6th March 1862, just before the Summary Settlement Acts were passed, the Governor in Council had determined that no primâ facie case had been made out for the exclusion of the lands from the settlement on the ground of their being held on political tenure.

Nor do their Lordships think that the lands can be properly said to have been held "under treaty." It is true that the treaty of 1827 referred to in the statement extended the guarantee of Bhau's title by the British Government to his descendants. But the correspondence with the Government at the time, also referred to in the statement, shows that Bhau's original title was not disturbed when action was taken against the Maharajah by the Government. Bhau therefore remained entitled under the terms of the original grant. Their Lordships agree on this point with the view taken of the effect of the treaty of 1827 by the learned Judges of the High Court.

As the result of the lands being thus brought under the Act of 1863 they became under sec. 2 the "heritable and transferable property of the holders, their heirs and assigns, without restriction as to adoption, collateral succession or transfer" in perpetuity.

It was therefore not only competent to the Bombay Government to refer the question they did to the High Court, but the decision given on that question was well founded.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals should be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION No. 16 OF 1924.

SANDERSON, C. J.

UDOY CHAND PANNALAL
v.
KHETSIDAS TILOKCHAND.

Calcutta High Court Original Side Rules, Ch X, r. 36, if ultra vires—High Court's power to make rules to regulate its procedure on the Original Side considered—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) and Letters Patent, 1865, cl. 37—Order dismissing suit under r. 36, if a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of Letters Patent, 1865, and appealable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 129, if refers to Letters Patent of 1865 or 1862.

A suit instituted on the Original Side of the High Court of Calcutta was placed on the "special list" under r. 36 of Chap. X, High Court Original Side Rules, and was dismissed for want of prosecution. It was contended that the Rule was ultra vires, and that the Court was not competent to dismiss the suit:

Held—That r. 36, Chap. X of the High Court Original Side Rules is not ultra vires, the Court having jurisdiction to make it under cl. 37 of the Letters Patent of 1865 as well as sec. 129 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908.

An order dismissing a suit for want of prosecution under the above Rule is a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of 1865 and is appealable.

Sec. 129 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908, may legitimately be read as referring to the Letters Patent of 1865 which were in force at the time of the passing of the Code.

This was an appeal preferred against the judgment delivered by Mr. Justice Buckland, on the 21st December 1923, in the exercise of Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. S. M. Bose for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. B. Guha and S. C. Maity for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Buckland which was delivered on the 21st of December 1923.

The judgment was delivered in respect of a notice, which was issued by the Assistant Registrar of this Court on the 13th of December 1923 and addressed to the attorney for the Plaintiff in the following terms: "Under r. 36, Chap. X of the Rules of the High Court, Original Side, 1914, notice is hereby given that the above suit will be set down in a list to be taken in chambers on Wednesday, the 19th day of December instant before the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Buckland and will be dismissed for default unless, on that day, good cause is shown to the contrary, or be otherwise dealt with as the Judge may think proper." That was a notice which was in terms of r. 36, Chap. X of the Original Side, High Court Rules, which in its present form runs as follows: "Suits and proceedings which have not appeared in the Prospective List within six months from the date of institution, may be placed before a Judge in chambers, on notice to the parties or their attorneys, to be dismissed for default unless good cause is shown to the contrary or be otherwise dealt with as the Judge may think proper." The learned Judge dismissed the suit for want of prosecution and made no order as to costs of the suit.

The first point, with which it is necessary for me to deal, was taken by the learned Counsel for the Defendant-Respondent, namely, that there was no right of appeal to this Court from the decision of my learned brother. His main argument was based upon sec. 104 of the Civil Procedure Code which provides: "An appeal shall lie from the following orders, and save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any law for the time being in force from no other orders." The learned Counsel pointed out that neither sec. 104 nor Or. 43, r. 1 provided for an appeal from the order of a learned Judge dismissing a suit for want of prosecution.

The learned Counsel for the Plaintiff-Appellant relied upon the following words in sec. 104: "Save as otherwise expressly provided in the body of this Code or by any law for the time being in force," and, he argued that the Letters Patent of 1865 of this Court are "a law for the time being in force"; and, that under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent an appeal would lie because the decision of the learned Judge was a "judgment" within the meaning of that clause.

I am of opinion that the argument of the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff so far as it extended to the meaning of the words "or by any law for the time being in force" is correct; and, that is made clear by the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Sabitri Thakurain v. Savi (1). Lord Sumner in giving the judgment, dealt with this point at page 488 and said: "In order to appreciate the full effect of sec. 104 it should be compared with the corresponding section of the Act of 1882, sec. 588. The earlier section enacted that appeals should lie in certain cases which it enumerated, 'and from no

Sec. 15 of the Letters Patent is such a law, and what it expressly provides, namely, an appeal to the High Court's Appellate Jurisdiction from a decree of the High Court in its Original Ordinary Jurisdiction, is thereby saved.

The question, therefore, arises whether the decision of the learned Judge is a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

In my opinion, there is no doubt that the learned Judge's decision was a "judgment." The effect of it was that the suit should not proceed and the Plaintiff's right to have his claim adjudicated upon by the Court, so far as this suit was concerned, was at an end; and, in my opinion, it would be impossible under those circumstances to hold that the learned Judge's decision, which was a judicial decision after hearing the arguments and considering the facts, which were before him, that the Plaintiff's suit should be dismissed was not a "judgment." In my opinion, therefore there is a right of appeal.

The next point, with which I must deal, was raised by the learned Counsel for the Appellant, namely, that the learned Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order because r. 36, Chap. X of the Original Side Rules was beyond the powers of this Court and was ultra vires.

The learned Judge referred to the various meanings of the word "establish" in his judgment. It is not necessary for me to deal with this matter at any length. It is sufficient for me to say that I am of opinion that it is not unreasonable to assume that sec. 129 was intended to refer to the Letters Patent which were then in force, dealing with the establishment and continuance of the High Court.

But, apart from that, I am of opinion that the Court had jurisdiction to make the Rule in question under cl. 37 of the Letters Patent of 1865 which provides that—"It shall be lawful for the said High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal from time to time to make rules and orders for the purpose of regulating all proceedings in civil cases which may be brought before the said High Court. . . . . Provided always that the said High Court shall be guided

Th... making such rules and orders, as far as possible, by the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure." In my opinion, the rule is one of procedure and for the purpose of regulating proceedings in civil cases which are brought before the High Court. To my mind it is unreasonable to suppose that the Court would have power to make rules regulating proceedings in civil cases and at the same time would have no power to attach any sanction in respect of the breach of such rules.

The result is that I agree with the learned Judge's decision that the Rule is not ultra vires and that he had jurisdiction to dismiss the suit for default after considering the facts and the arguments which were put before him, if in his discretion he thought it right to dismiss the suit.

I will now deal with the merits of the matter as presented by the learned Counsel.

In this respect it is to be noticed that this case was marked as a commercial suit and was brought to recover damages, which were alleged to be about Rs. 3,796 for an alleged breach of contract by the Defendants to take delivery of certain goods. As far as I understand the nature of the case from the materials before me, it was the kind of case, which is tried frequently on the Original Side, and was of a simple nature. Nothing has been put before the Court to show that this case could not have been got ready for trial within a few months from the date of its institution. Cases are entered in the commercial list not only because of the nature of the cases but also in order that they may have a more speedy trial than other cases; and, yet I find in this case a delay which I am bound to say is very serious indeed.

This is an instance of the delays which do take place, I regret to say, even now on the Original Side, in respect of which the Court is in no way responsible. It cannot be denied that in this case the Plaintiff or his attorney were solely responsible for the delay which took place.

I will now mention the material dates. The suit was instituted on the 2nd of June 1922 as a commercial suit; the summons were issued on the 16th of June and it was served on the Defendants on the 24th of June. The Defendant entered an appearance on the 28th of June and it is to be noticed that the Defendants were bound under the Rules of the Court to file their written statement within fourteen days from the date on which the summons was served upon them. Therefore, the Defendants ought to have filed their written statement on or before the 8th of July 1922. When they did not file their written statement on or before the 8th July 1922, the Plaintiff could have made an application in chambers to have the case put in the undefended list and if he had taken the ordinary and proper steps, one of two things would have happened: either the case would have been placed in the undefended list or there would have been a peremptory order upon the Defendants to file their written statement within a reasonable time and in all probability the Defendants would have been made to pay the costs of such application. But no such step was taken by the Plaintiff or the Plaintiff's attorney. They did nothing until the 20th of November 1922. Then apparently, the Plaintiff's attorney called upon the Defendants for a copy of their written statement but the written statement was not filed until the 12th of December 1922.

The delay to which I have already referred is inexcusable, so far as the Plaintiff and his attorney are concerned.

After that another serious delay took place, because after the written statement was filed, the Plaintiff and his attorney did nothing until the 24th of July 1923. Then the Plaintiff called upon the Defendants for their affidavit of documents, and, on the 28th of August 1923, a peremptory order was made upon the Defendants that they should file their affidavit of documents within fourteen days. That affidavit of documents was filed within fourteen days, viz., on the 11th of September. It is said that the Plaintiff and his attorney received no notice that the affidavit had been filed. But it is to be noticed that it was not until the 12th of December 1923 that the Plaintiff's attorney obtained a copy of the Defendants' affidavit of documents. On the 13th of December the notice to which I have already referred was given and the case was placed on the learned Judge's special list on the 19th of December, and, he gave his judgment on the 21st of December 1923.

It has been stated by the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff that the Plaintiff is a man who cannot speak English. The learned Counsel for the Defendants has agreed that that is the case. If so, it is probable that the Plaintiff himself was not conversant with the rules and procedure of the Court.

We asked the learned Counsel for the Plaintiff in the course of the argument to give an explanation for this delay. The learned Counsel frankly admitted that at all events for a part of this delay the attorney was responsible. I desire to say nothing more than is necessary about this. I am however convinced that it must have been to a large extent the fault of the attorney that this inordinate delay took place. I do not say it is certain, but it may be that the Plaintiff himself was not in any way responsible for the delay and, if it be the case that the attorney is solely responsible for the delay and the Plaintiff himself is not responsible, that is a matte which may be taken into consideration in considering whether the Plaintiff should be deprived of the opportunity of having his case tried. Having regard to the above-mentioned matters and in view of the fact that when this application was heard the Plaintiff was ready and anxious to have his case tried, my learned brother and I are of opinion that the learned Judge's order may be varied to the following extent :—

The Plaintiff must pay to the Defendants' attorney the costs of the application before the learned Judge and the costs of this appeal, which we for the present assess at the sum of rupees one thousand, on or before Monday, the 21th instant, as a condition precedent to having his suit entered in the Prospective List for the purpose of being tried. Upon payment of the amount of Rs. 1,000 within the time fixed, his suit will be entered in the Prospective List and come on for trial in due course. If the above-mentioned sum is not paid as directed, this appeal will stand dismissed with costs.

The above-mentioned costs will be subject to taxation and, if the amount on taxation turns out to be more than the sum of Rs. 1,000 then the Plaintiff will pay the balance, and if it be less, then the Defendants' attorney will refund the amount overpaid. The above-mentioned costs are to be payable by the Plaintiff in any event.

S. borrowed money from P. on hand-note in 1909 and in 1911 borrowed money from B. on a mortgage in English form, whereby she transferred the property absolutely to B. with a covenant for re-transfer if the debt was paid on a certain date. P. sued S. for his money, got a decree and in 1915 purchased the mortgaged property in execution of his money decree and got possession through Court in April 1918. B. in the meantime sued S. on the mortgage and in execution of his mortgage decree purchased the mortgaged property and got possession through Court in August 1918 ousting P. After the preliminary decree but before the final mortgage decree, S. had died and the final decree was passed against her without any substitution of heirs. P. after dispossession by B. sued B. for recovery of possession on the ground that the final decree being against a dead person the sale thereunder was void, that the whole suit had abated and the preliminary decree too went with it. Further, that the mortgage security had merged in the preliminary decree and had been extinguished with it and that therefore P. was entitled to recover possession free from the mortgage lien:

the ab. H. D. Bose for the Appellant.— direct final decree and the sale were mis nullities because the mortgagor died before the final decree and there was no sub- je stitution of heirs. Therefore no interest t passed to the mortgagee by the sale. There is no question that the whole suit abated as there was no substitution within six months of Sushila's death.

The whole difficulty in the lower Courts arose from a misapprehension of the term "English mortgage." The law in India with regard to mortgage is that whether we call it a simple mortgage or a mortgage by conditional sale or an English mortgage, they are all securities for re-payment of the money and we are to be guided by Or. 34 of the Civil Procedure Code. The decisions prior to the passing of the Transfer of Property Act not only do not assist but rather embarrass. Sec. 58 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act defines what the framers of the Code understood by "English mortgage" and not "mortgage in English form." An English mortgage transfers the mortgaged property absolutely. That does not necessarily mean that the mortgagee is entitled to possession—that is confused with the English mortgage as defined here. Reads sec. 68. The mere fact that possession is referred to does not show that the Legislature was referring only to English mortgage—may refer to usufructuary mortgage, English mortgage or mortgage by conditional sale. Sec. 69 is the only section which deals with English mortgage. The expression in cl. (a) is "English mortgage" and not "mortgage in English form." There is a material difference between a mortgage in English form in England and an English mortgage under sec. 58 (e).

Having regard to sec. 69, the power of sale could not be exercised because the parties were Hindus and the property was not in Calcutta. There is no section which allows the mortgagee right to claim possession, because the only other section is sec. 58, and in the deed itself there is no clause giving right of entry. Refers to Prideaux, Vol. I, 7th Edition, p. 471. Precedents are guided by statutory forms since 1882. The form gives a clause for entry after default. Reads Williams on Real Property, p. 563. The mortgagee in consequence of that covenant acquires at law the fee simple. He gets the right of possession not in consequence of its being an English mortgage, but in consequence of that covenant. Reads sec. 58 (a). It is only a security for the debt—no distinction between legal estate and equitable estate. Refers to Gokul Doss v. Eastern Mortgage and Agency Co., Ltd. (2). On breach of the covenant there is a right of suit to the mortgagee, and there being no distinction between an equitable estate and a legal estate, he is entitled to a sale. Sec. 68 (a) allows the mortgagee to exercise his power of sale if the property be in Calcutta. In this case he cannot exercise the right because the property is outside Calcutta and the parties are Hindus.

Refers to Surnomoyee v. Srinath (3) and Srinath Das v. Khetter Mohun Singh (4).

A mortgage in the English form was understood as a mortgage by conditional sale outside Calcutta, etc. There was a conflict for 40 years between the Calcutta and the Madras Courts, Calcutta giving rights as mortgage by conditional sale and Madras giving rights strictly as an English mortgage.

Refers to Khelut Chundra v. Tara Charan (5).

The covenant for possession is not implied, but there must be a distinct covenant.

The above case went in appeal to Privy Council, vide Brojo Nath v. Khelut Chundra (6).

The English mortgage does not predicate that there is immediate right of entry unless postponed by a clause to that effect.

Next, what is the effect of the preliminary decree? The rights under the mortgage merge in the preliminary decree. There was the usual mortgage decree for accounts and for sale; assuming that it was an English mortgage and that he was entitled to possession, as he did not ask for that relief and as the Court did not grant that relief, he could not claim to be in possession under the mortgage decree. The possession he got was not under the decree but outside the decree and outside it he had no right. Reads Or. 2, r. 2, C. P. Code. If he had right of possession, he ought to have claimed that right in the suit, and not having done so, he is to be deemed to have abandoned that right.

Refers to Muhammad Hafiz v. Muhammad Zakariya (7) and Kishan Narain v. Pala Mal (8).

If you have a cause of action and do not claim all the rights, you cannot afterwards claim it. If he had the right to enter and did not claim it, he cannot now fall back upon that right to have possession. Whatever his rights were, were merged in the preliminary decree.

As there was no substitution of heirs of the mortgagor Defendant, the whole suit had abated. More than three years have elapsed since the date which was fixed by the preliminary decree for payment. Having regard to Art. 181 of the Limitation Act, the decree is extinguished.

Refers to Munna Lal Parruck v. Sarat Chandra Mukherjee (9).

under sec. 58 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act. But sec. 58 (e) does not transfer plus possession, whereas an usufructuary mortgage delivers possession. The legislature could not have overlooked this. Sec. 58, cl. (d) speaks of delivery of possession but in cl. (e) there is no mention of possession. In England possession goes because the mortgagee is the holder or the transferee of the legal estate. Assuming that it was a mortgage with the covenant for entry, yet having regard to the preliminary decree and Or. 2, r. 2 and sec. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, he will be deemed to have abandoned the right to sue or take possession. If his suit is barred, can he have an independent right to take possession? He having elected to litigate under the mortgage, can he have an independent right? If he had, that independent right is also gone. He sued for sale and foreclosure. He was bound to include this in his suit. After the preliminary decree, he could enter into possession only ostensibly by virtue of his right as purchaser. There is no evidence that he entered except by virtue of his power as a purchaser. Therefore his possession is now that of a trespasser.

Refers to Lachmiput Singh v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India (1).

The question is not whether the mortgage lien was not discharged. The question is whether the mortgagee is entitled to be in possession. If he sues and does not ask for possession, he is to be deemed to have abandoned this right. The right to possession was barred as soon as the suit was instituted.

As to applying the decision in Lachmiput Singh v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India (1) to this case, construction of one document cannot afford any basis for construction of another document. You cannot come to any decision as to the rights of a party by a reference to another document. The whole reasoning of the Judges is fallacious. The Judges overlooked sec. 43 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 and also the res judicata section.

Refers to Het Ram v. Shadi Ram (10).

The mortgagee did not take the plea that he entered into possession as mortgagee, but as a purchaser.

It was an unlawful ouster, so it does not make any difference whether a suit for possession under the Specific Relief Act or a suit like the present suit is brought, if I sue within 12 years. Does it take away my rights?

Their rights merged in the preliminary decree.

Refers to Muhammad Hafiz v. Muhammad Zakariya (7).

Finally, the equities are against the Defendant, who in his mortgage suit, obtained decree against a dead person, suppressing the real state of things.

Mr. S. N. Bannerjee for the Respondent submitted that the point to be decided lay within a very brief compass. He could not appreciate any difference between an English mortgage or a mortgage in English form. Reads sec. 58 (e). All the three essential conditions of an English mortgage as required by the section are present in the present deed and my friend finally admitted that in form it comes under sec. 58 (e). Now the only question is whether the mortgagee was entitled to be in possession as an English mortgagee. In an English mortgage, there is an out and out conveyance, there is an absolute transfer, which gives the mortgagee (transferee) right of immediate possession. The covenant for entry, upon default is intended to be in derogation or curtailment of this right of immediate entry, and unless there is any postponement of this right by such an express covenant, an English mortgagee has the right to enter whenever he pleases.

Reads Ghose's Mortgage, 5th Edition, Vol. I, pp. 326 and 328 and Gour's Law of Transfer, Vol. II, p. 860.

Therefore even if I admit that the whole suit abated, that any fresh claim for possession by suit is barred, the only effect is that I cannot bring a suit, i.e., I cannot figure as a Plaintiff, but I need not. I am already in possession by virtue of my right as English mortgagee, and it makes no difference that I stepped in in some other right which afterwards failed.

I take my stand on Lachmiput Singh v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India (1) and unless your Lordships hold that that case was wrongly decided, I am entitled to continue in possession unless and until the mortgage debt is satisfied. But in respect of that too, the Plaintiff has declined to redeem.

As regards merger, the mortgage security cannot merge in the decree until it is made productive in satisfaction of the debt. And even if there was merger, the security revived as soon as the decree became ineffectual.

Reads Ghose's Mortgage, Vol. I, pp. 472, 473, 474, 475 and 476.

As regards the equities, the Appellant for Rs. 500 purchased the property which was mortgaged to me for Rs. 18,000; besides his purchase was subject to my mortgage and it was distinctly stated in the sale-proclamation and that enabled him to get the property so cheap. Therefore, in equity, when his purchase was subject to my mortgage, he cannot be allowed to claim possession without redeeming my mortgage as decided in Lachmiput Singh v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India (1).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The litigation, which has culminated in this appeal, relates to a property known as 20, Gorachand Road, Alipore, situate within the jurisdiction of the District Court of the 24-Perganas. The facts, out of which it has arisen, may be briefly stated.

The property in question belonged to a Hindu lady named Sushila Sundari Chowdhurani, who appears to have been in financial straits in the year 1902 and to have borrowed various sums of money from an attorney named Mohini Mohan Chatterjee. One of these promissory notes for Rs. 4,000 was endorsed by Mohini Mohan in favour of the Plaintiff, the present Appellant Rukmini Kanta Chakravarti, who brought a suit on it in the Original Side of the High Court and obtained a decree. The decree was transferred to Alipore and the Plaintiff executed it, attached the disputed property, and purchased it at auction sale on the 12th August 1915. The sale was in due course confirmed on the 30th March 1916, and the Plaintiff obtained delivery of possession on the 9th April 1918.

In the meanwhile, however, nearly seven years previous to this, viz., on the 4th August 1911, Sushila Sundari had mortgaged the property in suit to the Defendant, now Respondent Baldeo Das Binani, for a sum of Rs. 18,000 and as she failed to pay within the time stipulated, Baldeo Das brought a suit against her in the year 1913 and obtained a preliminary decree on the 10th January 1916 followed by a final decree which was passed on the 2nd July 1917. It appears, however, that in the interval between the passing of the preliminary and final decrees Sushila Sundari had died on the 22nd April 1916, i.e., some fifteen months before the making of the final decree, the mortgagee being apparently unaware of her death. Notwithstanding this the mortgagee put his decree into execution, purchased the property on the 12th June 1918, and on the 26th August 1918 was put into possession by the Court ousting the Plaintiff, who thereupon instituted the present suit to recover possession of the property from the mortgagee.

(1) I. L. R. 14 Cal. 464 (1887).

RUKMINI KANTA CHAKRAVARTI v. BALDEO DAS BINANI.

Before the trial Court some of the facts were disputed and issues were framed inter alia as to the genuineness and validity of the Plaintiff's decree and purchase, and of the Defendants' mortgage. The Subordinate Judge found that both transactions were valid and genuine. He held, however, that the omission to bring the legal representatives of Sushila Sundari on the record rendered the mortgage sale void and inoperative as against them, and that as the Plaintiff had purchased the interest of Sushila in the disputed property on the 12th August 1915, the mortgage sale held on the 12th June 1918 did not affect the interest of the Plaintiff. He then went on to consider whether the Plaintiff's interest in the property was subject to the Defendant's mortgage lien, and relying mainly on the case of Lachmiput Singh v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India (1) held that the Plaintiff could not get possession without redeeming the mortgage debt, and that, as he had declined to exercise his right of redemption the suit failed.

On appeal by the Plaintiff the learned District Judge relying upon the same authority affirmed the decision of the Subordinate Judge holding that the mortgage decree and the sale thereunder were nullities, but that, as the mortgage lien of the Defendant was still subsisting, the Plaintiff was not entitled to get possession of the disputed property without paying off the mortgage debt. The appeal was accordingly dismissed with costs. The Plaintiff then filed this second appeal.

The facts are not now in dispute, and the sole question for consideration is what the legal rights of the parties are. Learned Counsel for the Appellant has challenged the conclusion arrived at in the Courts below upon various grounds. In the first place he raised the question, whether the deed in question (Ex. B) is an English mortgage at all. We do not think having regard to the terms of that document that there is really any room for contention. The three essentials of an English mortgage are—

(1) That the mortgagor binds himself to repay the mortgage money on a certain day:

(2) That the property mortgaged is transferred absolutely to the mortgagee: and

(3) That such absolute transfer is made subject to a proviso that the mortgagee will reconvey the property to the mortgagor upon payment by him of the mortgage money on the day on which the mortgagor bound himself to repay the same.

All these essentials are to be found in the Defendant's mortgage deed so that there can be little doubt that it has been rightly held to be an English mortgage.

(1) I. L. R. 14 Cal. 464 (1887).

RUKMINI KANTA CHAKRAVARTI v. BALDEO DAS BINANI.

It was next argued, however, that, even assuming it to be an English mortgage, or mortgage in English form, the Plaintiff's claim to possession on the basis thereof is untenable inasmuch as there is a material difference between a mortgage in English form, as it obtains in England, and an English mortgage as defined in sec. 58 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgagee in England being entitled to immediate possession of the mortgaged property, unless there is a special covenant excluding or suspending such right, whereas in India there is no mention in sec. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act of possession of the mortgagee immediately upon execution of the deed, and an English mortgagee in this country is, it is argued, entitled to possession only under a special covenant for such possession. In the present case there was no such covenant. Therefore it is urged the possession of the Defendant is wrongful, and the Plaintiff is entitled to have him ousted and to get possession of the property.

We do not think there is any substance in this argument. Though the deed in question does not contain in so many words a covenant for possession, it is plain that it gave a right of entry, and that that right could be exercised at any time. The fact that the mortgagee obtained possession by proceedings, which subsequently proved to be a nullity, cannot we think stand in his way.

It is then contended that, even assuming the mortgage to be an English mortgage with a covenant for entry, still having regard to the provisions of Or. 2, r. 2 and sec. 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Defendant not having elected to put his right to litigation in the mortgage suit, the mortgage merged in the preliminary decree, which subsequently abated, with the result that the mortgagee lost the right, if he ever had it, and that there is now nothing left to redeem. Admittedly he entered into possession by virtue of his purchase at the mortgage sale, and as that sale fails, he must, it is argued, be regarded as a mere trespasser. The mortgage deed in fact becomes a mere scrap of paper which cannot be enforced and is valueless for all practical purposes.

We do not think this contention is well-founded. The mere fact that a judgment had been obtained on the mortgage could not operate to extinguish the debt, and the mortgage debt must, we think, be held to continue as a lien until it has been satisfied. The suit no doubt failed, but that cannot debar the mortgagee from falling back on his subsisting right under the mortgage deed, and, the fact that he came into possession not in the exercise of that right but in some other way, cannot alter the position. He had undoubtedly a right of entry under the deed, and is now in de facto possession. The Plaintiff in order to succeed must succeed by virtue of his own right.

In our opinion the Courts below have rightly decided the question of law involved, and we are not prepared to hold that the case of Roy Lachmiput Singh v. The Land Mortgage Bank of India (1), upon which they have relied, was wrongly decided. The following passage which occurs in the judgment in that case is to the point and may be quoted.

"Upon these considerations we hold that the mortgagees are now entitled notwithstanding the decree and sale to insist upon the covenant of entry into possession stipulated in the mortgage deed. They might have enforced such a covenant by suit in Court. But it does not follow that, because such a suit was not brought and the mortgagees entered into possession under a sale which has now fallen through, the mortgagor is entitled to obtain an unconditional decree for possession without redeeming the property."

So in the same way here it does not follow because the mortgagee did not choose to litigate upon his right of entry in the mortgage suit, he is thereby debarred from falling back upon the rights conferred upon him under the mortgage deed, and from retaining possession of the property until such time as his mortgage debt has been satisfied.

It is true that in the case referred to above there was an express covenant of entry in the mortgage deed, but that does not materially alter the position, since by implication the mortgage deed in suit included such a covenant.

Finally it is urged on behalf of the Appellant that the Courts below have been influenced by a false sense of sympathy with the mortgagee, that this ought not to be allowed to weigh at all in the decision of the case, inasmuch as the point involved is purely one of law, and that the equities, so far from being on the side of the mortgagee, are against him having regard to the careless manner in which the mortgage suit was conducted.

We are not favourably impressed by this argument. Looked at apart from the legal aspect of the matter, we think that there can be no doubt that the equities are entirely on the side of the Defendant, and the persistent manner in which the Plaintiff has pressed his claim seems to us to be questionable to say the least. The property in suit appears to have been valued in the trial Court (vide judgment of the Subordinate Judge) at Rs. 4,000, and in the year 1911 it was considered sufficiently valuable to justify the advance of a sum of Rs. 18,000 on the security thereof. The Plaintiff seeks to obtain possession of this property for the wholly inadequate price of Rs. 500, and that notwithstanding the fact that the sale certificate clearly stated that the sale was subject to the mortgage lien. The Plaintiff declined to exercise his right of redemption, and it is plain that he has throughout been trading upon the accidental circumstance that the representatives of Sushila Sundari were not brought on the record in the mortgage suit with the legal consequences (fatal, as he no doubt hoped, to the mortgagee) which that omission involved. There are certainly no merits in the Plaintiff's case, and he is deserving of no sympathy.

In the result the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs, and the decree of the District Judge affirmed.

PROBHAS KUMAR GANGULI and anr., Plaintiffs, Petitioners, NITHAR LAL GANGULI and ors., Defendants, Opposite Party.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), sec 15, conditions requisite for refund of court-fees under—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908); Or. 47, r. 1 and sec. 151, application for review under both but granted under sec. 151—Right to refund of court-fees—Inherent powers of the Court, it can be invoked where provision in the Code clear.

An application for review was headed as one under Or. 47, r. 1 and sec. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Court, however, allowed it under sec. 151, and on the re-hearing of the suit the previous decree was modified. Petitioner then applied for refund of court-fees under sec. 15 of the Court Fees Act, but the application was refused on the ground that the Court having acted under sec. 151 the Petitioner was not entitled to the refund:

Held—That the case came clearly under Or. 47, r. 1, C. P. C. and the conditions requisite for bringing it within the purview of sec. 15 of the Court Fees Act were fulfilled, and that the Petitioner was entitled to the refund.

No application on the part of the Petitioner, far less any with court-fees as on an application for review, need have been filed under sec. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code.

PEARY CHOWDHURY v. SONOO DAS (1) referred to.

Where the power is granted by the Code itself it is not necessary to invoke the inherent powers of the Court under sec. 151, C. P. C.

This was a Rule issued upon the Opposite Party and the Collector of Nadia to shew cause why the order of Babu B. L. Biswas, Munsif of Chuadanga, dated the 13th July 1923, refusing an application for refund of court-fees under sec. 15 of the Court Fees Act should not be set aside.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Babu Mrityunjay Chatterjee for the Petitioners.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha for the Opposite Party.

THE JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Petitioners applied for review of an order passed by the Munsif of Chuadanga dismissing their suit on the ground that the said order had been passed on overlooking the fact that the Defendants had admitted a portion of their claim. The application was headed as one under Or. 47, r. 1 and sec. 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The learned Munsif passed an order, the material portion of which ran as follows :—" I am satisfied that the application comes more properly under sec. 151 than under Or. 47, r. 1. I must note here that the application in question has been filed under both provisions of law. I therefore allow it and restore the case for re-hearing under sec. 151, C. P. C." The suit was proceeded with and the previous decree modified. The Petitioners then applied for refund of court-fees under sec. 15 of the Court Fees Act. The learned Munsif refused the application, being of opinion that he had acted under sec. 151, C. P. C. and therefore the Petitioners were not entitled to the refund.

On the application of the Petitioners for revision of the said order the present Rule was issued upon the Collector of the District of Nadia to show cause why the said order should not be set aside. The Collector has sent a letter in answer to the Rule, supporting the order in question and the learned junior Government Pleader has appeared and also supported the same.

Now, " in order to attract the operation of sec. 15 of the Court Fees Act, the conditions requisite are that there should be an application for review of judgment, that it should have been admitted, that on the re-hearing the Court should have reversed or modified its former decision on the ground of mistake in law or fact and that such reversal or modification was not due to fresh evidence which might have been produced at the original hearing." All these conditions seem to have been satisfied in the present case. The only objection put forward is that the Court purported to act under sec. 151, C. P. C. and not under Or. 47, r. 1. It is difficult to see why the provisions of Or. 47, r. 1, C. P. C. would not apply to the case, for the review was sought for on the ground of a mistake or error apparent on the face of the record. Where the power is granted by the Code itself it is not necessary to invoke the inherent powers of the Court under sec. 151, C. P. C. The powers exercisable under these respective provisions are not mutually exclusive. It is unnecessary, however, to discuss whether the Court was right in holding that it should proceed under sec. 151, C. P. C. rather than under Or. 47, r. 1 for the simple reason that it is difficult to see how the Petitioners can be said to have been in a worse position if the Court chose to proceed under sec. 151, C. P. C. : it being remembered, that no application on the part of the Petitioners, far less any with court-fees as on an application for review, need have been filed [Peary Chowdhury v. Sonoo Das (1)]. As the case came clearly under Or. 47, r. 1, C. P. C. and as the conditions requisite for bringing the case within the purview of sec. 15 of the Court Fees Act are clearly present the Rule is made absolute and the order complained of is set aside. The Munsif is directed to grant the certificate for refund which the Petitioners applied for. No order is made as to costs.

(1) 19 C. W. N. 419 (1914).

PROBHAS KUMAR GANGULI v. NITHAR LAL GANGULI.

H. C. S. Rule made absolute.

Judgment, 21, June.

SETH KEVALDAS TRIBHOVANDAS, Appellant,
v.
SAKERLAL BULAKHIDAS and anr., Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 23, r. 3—Suit for accounts by shareholder of Company against managing director—Resolution passed at shareholders' meeting subsequent to preliminary decree settling terms with Defendant without examination of accounts or ascertainment of facts, if bona fide adjustment—Application to record adjustment and pass decree thereon, necessity of.

The Plaintiff, a shareholder of a Company, sued the Defendant who was the Chairman of the Board of Directors and the manager of the Company for an account of the funds of the Company used by the Defendant for his own purposes and for a declaration that a weaving factory erected and worked by him was the property of the Company. A preliminary decree was passed in the suit, and pending Defendant's appeal to the District Judge, Defendant convened a meeting of the shareholders at which a resolution was passed to the effect that the Defendant should transfer the weaving shed to the Company upon payment by the latter of three lacs odd rupees and ' the Defendant and his heirs and representatives were to get Rs. 8,000 a year for his trouble "after debiting the same to the account of expenses." The appeal against the preliminary decree to the District Judge and a further appeal to the High Court were dismissed without the attention of either Court being drawn to the resolution, but it was put forward in the subsequent proceedings as an adjustment of the suit within Or. 23, r. 3 of the Civil Procedure Code:

Held—That the adjustment not being a real adjustment after an examination of accounts or ascertainment of facts was not a bonâ fide adjustment within the meaning of the Rule, and further the Defendant never having asked the Court to record satisfaction and pass a decree in accordance with the alleged adjustment, no action could be taken upon it.

This was an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Bombay, dated the 22nd August 1916, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Ahmedabad, dated the 24th April 1914.

The suit in which the said decrees were passed was brought by the 1st Respondent against the Appellant, (1) for a declaration that the Bharatkhand Cotton Mills Co. was the owner of a factory started by the Appellant for weaving yarn and that the Appellant was in possession of the same on behalf of the Company and (2) for an order that the Appellant should pay to the Company all such profits as might be found to have been made by the factory.

The Appellant was the Chairman of the Board of Directors and manager of the Company. As such manager he from time to time drew, against the surplus funds of the Company, monies which he employed in the business of his factory.

There was no authority under the memorandum or articles of the Company to justify such drawings, and by a special resolution of the 4th November 1900, it had been resolved that monies of the Company should not be advanced on personal security.

The suit was instituted by a shareholder on the 5th January 1909, and on the 26th January 1910 the Subordinate Judge passed a preliminary decree directing accounts against the Appellant.

The latter appealed and pending the appeal a meeting of the shareholders was convened which passed a resolution on the 15th May 1910 to the effect that the Company should take possession of the weaving factory and credit the Appellant's account with the sum of Rs. 3,51,000.

The appeal was dismissed by the District Judge on the 8th February 1911 and a further appeal to the High Court was dismissed on the 18th September 1912.

Thereafter the accounts were taken by the Commissioner and a final decree was passed by the Subordinate Judge on the 24th April 1914, by which he dismissed the suit and held that the Company was not entitled to recover anything from the Respondent.

From this decree the Plaintiff and the Company appealed to the High Court who reversed the judgment of the Subordinate Judge and passed a decree in favour of the Company for over Rs. 1,46,000.

An application for review of the judgment was rejected, and the present appeal was brought before His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.—There was no fraud on the part of the Appellant, who openly made use of the Company's surplus funds with the consent of the Company. The resolution of the 15th May 1910 was an effectual compromise of the dispute which the Company was empowered to make.

In their judgment on the 10th December 1919, the High Court held that the special resolution confirmed on the 15th May 1910 was binding on the Company. That is a final judgment which has never been questioned and operates as res judicata.

[LORD SUMNER.—It is a judgment three years after the judgment appealed from and could not have been considered by the Judges deciding the judgment appealed from.]

It could not have formed a portion of the original record but may be taken into consideration by the Board.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 41, r. 33.

Tarini Charan Sarkar v. Bishun Chand (1).

Reference was also made to Burland v. Earle (2).

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondents.—The resolution of 15th May 1910 was not a real adjustment within the provisions of Or. 3, r. 23 of the Civil Procedure Code and no application was made to the Court to have satisfaction recorded.

The Appellant's contention based on that resolution was in substance dealt with and decided against him by the High Court on 18th September 1912 and cannot be raised now. He is bound by the preliminary decree affirmed by two Appellate Courts and is not entitled to raise any point which would disturb that decree.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C., replied.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

MR. AMEER ALI.—The Plaintiff (Respondent) is a shareholder in the Bharatkhand Cotton Mills Company, Limited, carrying on business in the City of Ahmedabad, Bombay Presidency. He brought this suit, the nature of which will be explained presently, so long ago as the 5th January 1909. The first five Defendants are managing agents and directors of the Company; the sixth is a retired director; the seventh Defendant is the Company itself, having been added as a party to the suit later in the course of the proceedings. The first Defendant (the present Appellant before the Board), Kevaldas Tribhovandas acted as Chairman of the Board of Directors and is the manager of the Company. The Plaintiff seeks in the suit an account of the funds belonging to the Company used by the Appellant for his own purposes, and for a declaration that a weaving factory erected and worked by him is the property of the Company. The Company appears to have been established sometime in the year 1896. The evidence shows that in 1905 the Defendant Kevaldas Tribhovandas started the weaving factory which he claimed as his own property. The Plaintiff charges that that factory was built and erected by the Defendant with money belonging to the Company, and that he has worked the same for his own benefit. He seeks an account of the profits made by the Defendant therefrom and a declaration that such profits also belong to the Company.

The date for filing the defence was originally the 12th February 1909, but the Appellant applied for time which was extended to the 14th April 1909, when the written statement was filed. It is unnecessary to refer in detail to the contentions raised by him against the Plaintiff's claim. It is enough to say that on the 23rd December of the same year the Subordinate Judge delivered a judgment in which he overruled the Defendant's technical objections to the suit; and that on the 26th January 1910,

(1) 22 C. W. N. 505 (P. C.) (1917).
(2) [1902] A. C. 83.

he made a preliminary decree directing accounts against the Defendant and appointing a Commissioner to take the same. The Defendant preferred an appeal from this preliminary judgment to the District Judge. Whilst this appeal was pending he convened a meeting of the shareholders which was held on the 29th April 1910. At this meeting a resolution was adopted which the Plaintiff charges was at the instance of the Defendant. This resolution was subsequently on the 15th May affirmed, it is charged, under similar circumstances. It runs as follows :—

"On reading the application received from some shareholders and the 'scheme' which has been submitted thereupon by Pari. Kevaldas Tribhowandas (it appears that) Pari. Kevaldas Tribhowandas has asked for Rs. 4,00,000, (in words four lacs) as the price of the weaving factory erected by himself (sic). But on a consideration of the said (matter, it appears that) as he has worked the same up to this day depreciation had been caused and profit had been made (or) loss had been sustained. After deducting a lump of Rs 49,000, (in words forty-nine thousand) for both the items Rs. 3,51,000, (in words three lacs and fifty-one thousand) in the lump be brought to account with reference to him and possession of the said weaving-factory be taken by us and as owing to this the work of 'Vahiwat' (management) (to be done) by Pari. Kevaldas Tribhowandas would increase Rs. 8,000, (in words eight thousand) be continued to be paid every year to him and his heirs and representatives for his trouble after debiting the same to the account of expenses"

It is necessary to mention here that on the 4th November 1900, at a meeting of the shareholders a resolution had been adopted, which is extremely material in the consideration of this case. It is as follows :—

"The moneys of the Company shall not be lent to any one on personal security. And the Vahivatdar (the Manager) shall not keep the account of the Company in his own shop; so also the Vahivatdar shall not withdraw by debiting in his own name, any amount whatever, except his own dues."

After the institution of the present suit, several meetings were held on the Defendant's motion or at his instance, for the purpose of rescinding the resolution of the 4th November 1900, which certainly clogged his free handling of the Company's funds. There is an allusion to this alleged rescission in the resolution affirmed on the 15th May 1910, in these terms :—

"As to the special resolution which we passed on the 4th November, 1900, clause 6 thereof was cancelled on the 10th April, 1909, and the whole of the special resolution besides that be cancelled. Moreover, we do not consider the suit which has been filed by Sakarlal Bulakhidas in the Court of the First Class Subordinate Judge (at) Ahmedabad as a bona fide one and that on account of the said suit having been filed the company's credit has suffered to a very great extent. This meeting is therefore of opinion that the Agents should seek remedy by taking proper steps for the said loss of credit to the company. This meeting therefore resolves that if the Agents think proper, proper steps be taken against Sakarlal Bulakhidas accordingly. Shah Nagindas Girdhardas seconded the said (proposal)."

Although the resolution, which the Defendant now contends was an adjustment between the Company and himself, was affirmed on the 15th May 1910, no reference to it was made in the appeal to the District Judge, which was dismissed on the 8th February 1911. The Defendant appealed from the decree of the District Judge to the High Court, which appeal was dismissed on the 18th September 1912. No reference was made to this so-called adjustment in the appeal to the High Court. No appeal was preferred from the dismissal by the High Court of the appeal from the preliminary decree of the Subordinate Judge holding him accountable for his dealings with the Company's funds and directing accounts. It is suggested before this Board by counsel for the Defendant that on the appeal from the final decree by the High Court, he is entitled at this stage to question the preliminary decree. The certificate granted by the High Court to enable the Defendant to come to His Majesty in Council does not cover any appeal from the preliminary decree. But even if it was open to the Defendant to question in the present appeal the findings arrived at by the three Courts in India on the accountability of the Defendant relative to his dealings with the Company's funds, their Lordships do not find any material on which his contention may be said to be legitimately based.

To proceed with the history of the case, on the dismissal of the appeal by the High Court on the 18th September 1912, the Commissioner proceeded with the taking of the accounts. It was only on the 21st October 1912, after the dismissal of his appeal, from the preliminary decree, by the High Court, that the Defendant first applied to the Subordinate Judge stating that :—

"during the pendency of our appeals, the Company settled this suit with us, and the Company has taken from us the possession of the weaving shed, which we had built with our own money, agreeing to pay us Rs. 3,51,000 as price of the said weaving shed, after taking into consideration the wear and tear (i.e, depreciation) on account of the conducting of the work of the said weaving shed till this day and the profit and loss which had occurred; and a registered sale-deed has also been taken from us in the matter."

and he then proceeded to urge :—

"The Company having agreed with us—the Defendant—in this way, with regard to this suit, this suit cannot now proceed further. Therefore a note should be taken of this settlement, and after holding that this suit has been settled, this suit should be dismissed."

On the 1st November 1912, the Plaintiff filed an affidavit in contradiction of the Defendant's statement as set forth in his petition of the 21st October 1912, charging the Defendant with having manipulated the shareholders' meetings ever since he was called upon to answer the charges made in the suit. He also alleged that the meetings of the 29th April 1910, or the 15th May 1910, were equally worked by Kevaldas for the purpose of getting the resolution affirmed. The Plaintiff further stated in his affidavit that on the 23rd December 1911, whilst the appeal from the preliminary decree was still pending in the High Court certain arbitrators had been appointed with the object of settling the matter in dispute after examining the Company's account books and the Defendant's private books of account, but the Defendant having failed to produce the necessary books, the reference to arbitration proved ineffectual and the arbitration failed. There appears to have been no mention in the application to refer the matter in dispute to arbitrators of the alleged settlement arrived at on the 15th May 1910. The Company were added as Defendants, apparently soon after the settlement of the issues, and new agents had been appointed for carrying on the work of the Company. These agents, on the 21st November 1912, filed an affidavit in answer to the Defendant's allegations, in which they stated as follows :—

tion with the suit is entirely untrue. It appears from the records of the Company that no settlement has at all been effected in connection with the present suit. Subsequent to a 'preliminary decree' for taking accounts being passed by the Court of first instance in this suit the Defendant Kevaldas filed an appeal, being Appeal No. 85 of 1910 in the District Court. It appears that prior to the hearing of the appeal Mr. Kevaldas, as Chairman of the Board of Directors, called an extraordinary meeting of the Company on an application of some shareholders and got some resolutions passed improperly at the said meeting. One of the resolutions got passed is to the effect that the weaving shed Karkhana (factory) should be purchased from Mr. Kevaldas for Rs. 3,51,000, in words three lacs and fifty-one thousand, and that as he would be required to take more trouble for its Vahivat (management) he should be paid every year Rs. 8,000, in words, eight thousand, for that trouble. Before this resolution was got passed valuation of the machinery and premises of the weaving shed was not got made by any experienced man. . . . As a resolution to the above effect has been got passed simply on the strength of Mr. Kevaldas holding a large number of shares, a great fraud has been committed on the Defendant Company, and the Company has thereby sustained a very great loss."

It is clear that after this affidavit, which challenged the validity and bonâ fides of the resolutions adopted after the institution of the suit, the Defendant abandoned, so far as the records show, proceeding with his contention that there had been a settlement on the 15th May 1910.

No order, however, appears to have been recorded in the order-sheet in respect of the Defendant's petition of the 21st October 1912. The Commissioner submitted his report on the 11th July 1913, and on the 24th April 1914, the Subordinate Judge made his final decree in which he held that the Company was not entitled to recover anything from the Defendant. The judgment also contains no reference to the question of settlement. The final order of the Subordinate Judge is in these terms :—

"Defendant 1 is thus entitled to Rs. 1,08,703-10-8. At this rate Plaintiff or the Company is entitled to recover nothing as profit. The Plaintiff has brought suit No. 408 of 1910 against the Defendant and the Company for getting the resolution under which the Company agreed to purchase the factory from Plaintiff set aside on the ground that the said resolution is illegally passed. That suit has been all along kept with this suit after settling issues. Under the resolution the sale has taken place and the Defendant Company is actually in possession and enjoyment of the factory since May, 1910. The profit and loss of the sale transaction has been considered in this suit as shown above. So practically speaking that suit has been disposed of by itself.

"For the above reasons, I dismiss this suit. Plaintiff has succeeded in the preliminary decree but the final result is in Defendant's favour. Under these circumstances, I order that each party should bear his or their own costs of this suit."

The Plaintiff and the Company appealed from this decree of the Subordinate Judge to the High Court of Bombay, and the learned Judges disposed of the appeal on the 22nd August 1916. They criticised, not without reason, the view of the Subordinate Judge absolving the Defendant from all liability in connection with his dealings with the Company's funds and with the profits made by him from the weaving factory with the funds of the Company. They held, in fact, that the Defendant Kevaldas Tribhovandas had misappropriated the money of the Appellant Company to his own use and then, being called upon to account and restore what he had appropriated, claimed a very large salary for "the time and skill" he had spent on the employment of that money; and they justly ridiculed the idea of the Subordinate Judge giving him remuneration for his work. In the result they made a decree against the Defendant for a considerable sum of money. There was an application for review of judgment on the question of the alleged settlement of the 15th May 1910, which was rejected. The present appeal to His Majesty in Council is from this decree of the High Court and the order on review.

The main contention on which the appeal is based relates to the orders of the High Court with regard to the alleged adjustment. In their main judgment the learned Judges had said as follows :—

"When the dispute arose, negotiations appear to have been entered into, and on the 29th of April, 1910, upon a representation by the Defendant that he had spent some three lacs and 66 thousand rupees upon building and stocking the factory, the Appellant-company agreed by a majority resolution, which was confirmed on the 15th of May, to take over this factory at a price of Rs. 3,51,000 in part payment of the Defendant's total indebtedness to them."

After stating that :—

"There was a clear misrepresentation by one who was under a very special obligation to make full and true disclosure, and that being so, it follows without the need of pursuing the argument through the somewhat nice and difficult case-law of England that the Appellant-company was entitled to a refund of so much of this money as has been overpaid."

and dealing with the specific plea of adjustment, they state their views in the following terms :—

"On the 29th of April 1910, after the preliminary decree had been passed, a resolution was passed, which was confirmed on the 15th of May at a General Extraordinary Meeting, and it was contended on behalf of the Respondent that that was a lawful adjustment of the suit which put an end to all further proceeding. This matter appears to have been brought before the Lower Court and issues were raised upon it on the 21st November 1912, but the Respondent or whoever was taking sides with him at the time pressed the matter no further. We cannot discover that any evidence whatever was offered to the Court in substantiation of this contention. The onus clearly lay upon the Defendant-Respondent and inasmuch as he failed to discharge it or even to attempt to discharge it, we are not now in a position to express any opinion upon this last contention and to afford relief on that ground."

On the review application they deal with the contention more fully.

Their Lordships entirely concur with the views of the High Court on this point. They consider in the first place that there is absolutely no reality in the plea of adjustment; that it was not a real adjustment after an examination of the accounts or ascertainment of the facts; that it was never brought to the notice of the District Judge or of the High Court when the preliminary decree was under appeal; that it was never mentioned before the arbitrators and that soon after the Defendant Company filed its affidavit the allegation was dropped. Besides, on a reference to r. 3 of Or. 23 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is abundantly clear that whatever might have taken place at the shareholders' meeting it was not an adjustment within the provisions of the Code. R. 3 provides as follows :—

"Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by any lawful agreement or compromise, or where the Defendant satisfies the Plaintiff in respect of the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the suit, the Court shall order such agreement, compromise or satisfaction to be recorded, and shall pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit."

In this case there is not the smallest proof of a bonâ fide adjustment, nor did the Defendant ever ask the Court to record satisfaction and pass a decree made in accordance with the alleged adjustment.

On the whole their Lordships are of opinion that the judgment of the High Court is correct and that this appeal should be dismissed with costs. They will, therefore, humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

Held, upon the interpretation of the grant in question in this case, that it was not a wakf but was a grant sub conditione, the conditions being that the expenses of the Imambara should be defrayed from the revenue and a report submitted to Government for sanction.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 10th January 1920 of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Central Provinces, reversing a decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge of Nagpur, dated the 18th December 1918.

In 1840 the then ruler of the Bhonsla raj granted three villages in the Nagpur District "to Hakim Yadgar Hussein," the Court physician, "for the Imambara of Pir Hussein."

The terms of the grant are set out in the judgment of the Privy Council. Yadgar Hussain remained in possession until 1850 when he died.

In 1852 a grant was continued in the name of his son Hakim Bunyad Hussain. On the death of Bunyad Hussain in 1913 his eldest son, the Appellant, professed to succeed him as mutwalli of the villages, the subject-matter of the original grant.

In the settlement operations, 1913-16, the name of the 1st Respondent (amongst others) who was a cousin of the Appellant was entered on the register as a co-sharer in the villages in suit. The Appellant thereupon brought the suit now under appeal for the cancellation of entries on the register of the names of his co-sharers. He contended that a "wakf" had been established by the grants of 1840 and 1852 of which he had become the sole mutwalli.

The District Judge held that the original grant was in the form of a religious charitable trust, as was also the re-grant in 1852, and that the Plaintiff was mutwalli, and he accordingly passed the decree prayed for.

On appeal Drake, Brockman and Kotval, J. J. C. decided that the grant had never been treated as a "wakf" but only as a personal grant with a condition attached and that the villages had been treated as the subject of temporal ownership. In the result they reversed the decree of the District Court and dismissed the suit.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and A. Majid for the Appellant (ex parte).—The lower Appellate Court held that there was no wakf and so did not decide the question as to whether a "wakf" could be created by a non-Mahomedan.

It is submitted that even a man who does not hold the Mussalman faith may create a wakf.

Shastri's Hindu Law, 4th Ed., p. 480.

That a wakf was intended is clearly indicated by the manner in which the proceeds of the property have been applied where a grant is made to an individual for an institution, the individual represents the institution.

Jewun Doss Sahoo v. Kubeer-ood-deen (1) and Muhammad Hamid v. Mian Mahmud (2).

The permanent appropriation of property for pious purposes is sufficient to constitute a "wakf." It is unnecessary for the word "wakf" to be used specifically.

A grant with a condition is invalid in Mahommedan law except as a "wakf." This cannot be a gift with a condition attached, because in that case there would be no mutwalli, for the property would be divisible on the death of the grantee and there would be no successor entitled to be trustee.

The fact that Bunyad appointed a mutwalli was a clear indication that he considered the grant as a wakf.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD SHAW.—This is an appeal from a decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces, dated 10th January 1920, reversing a decree of the Court of the Additional District Judge of Nagpur, dated 18th December 1918. The case was argued before the Board ex parte.

The point of the appeal as presented was whether in the year 1840 Raja Raghoji Bhonsla, a Hindu ruler, created a wakf of three villages, namely, Gorewara, Sonkham and Nankapar, to Hakim Yadgar Hussain, the royal physician. The document so said to create a wakf is as follows :—

"From

"Raghoji Bhonsle, Sena Saheb Subha.

"The village of Mouza Gorewada in this pergana is given as mokasa in the Arabic year 1241/1840 (Fasli year 1250) to Hakim Yadgar Hussein for the Imambara of Pir Hussein, with all income of Land Revenue, Pandhari extra income, Kalali and mango groves, for ever from the commencement of the current year. It is assessed to a rental of Rs. 401-12-0. You may therefore continue the mokasa from year to year and generation to generation. Don't expect a fresh Sanad every year. Keep a copy of this Sanad and return the original to the grantee dated 16th Jamadilawal." 16th July, 1840.

The argument is that this grant constituted a wakf for the Imambara of Pir Hussain. It was maintained that the use of the words "for ever"—manifestly applicable to the income of land revenue, etc.—together with the further use of the words "you may therefore continue the mokasa from year to year and generation to generation," signifies the creation of a wakf, although a wakf was not stated by name, nor is there any nomination of the grantee as mutwalli. The case was supported in argument by various decisions, the leading one of which is Jewun Doss Sahoo v. Kubeer-ood-deen (1). It can hardly be denied that according to the Mahommedan law it is not necessary in order constitute a wakf that the term "wakf" be used, "if from the general nature of the grant itself that tenure can be inferred."

This state of the law makes the present case one of difficulty on the facts and history elicited in these proceedings. In all such cases the actings or statements of the grantee or his successor may be relevantly taken into account as to their interpretation of the original grant: while the method in which the property has been treated on the administrative records may also throw light on the same problem. These things are not conclusive, but are circumstances worthy of consideration. The following narrative is accordingly given :—

The grantee Yadgar Hussain continued in possession of the temple until 1850, when he died. The mokasa village was then resumed. On 15th May 1852, a grant was ..ted by substi...reer Chur Raninna-Hakim Bunya.. full 16 annas ... Judge conti-

"Proprietary right in Mouza Sonkham is hereby conferred on Boonyad Husain and Thoofeyl Husain."

On the 4th May of the same year (1867), however, an order was passed by the Settlement Officer of Nagpur, Mr. Ross, in these terms :—

"Claim by Bunyad Hussain to hold in Mokasa the village of Sonkham. This village together with the villages of Gorewara, and Nonkapar were granted by Takeed

While on the 19th May the Chief Commissioner passed an order, the terms of which are of great importance. They are as follows:—

"The Mouza of Gorewara may remain revenue free as long as the Imambara is in existence, on this condtion that the income arising from the muafi s properly spent and a report submitted o Government for sanction."

The three orders, one applicable to each village, are in the same terms.

It appears to their Lordships difficult to predicate that these transactions of 1867 establish that a wakf with Yadgar Hussain as its mutwalli is established as having been instituted or continued as such.

If a statement made by Hakim Bunyad Hussain in the Court of the Settlement Officer on the 27th October 1865, be referred to, their difficulty grows greater. He is asked the question, "Have you got a co-sharer?," to which the answer is: "There is no co-sharer. My real younger brother Syed Tufail Hussain has got an equal share. We both live together." And in a further stage in his evidence he declares "I myself and my brother are in possession."

From a consideration of these documents and the evidence it appears to the Board to be fairly plain that Bunyad Hussain's own position was not that of an exclusive claim to the mutwalliship of this property and endowment as a wakf, but an allegation of joint ownership and possession with his brother, subject, it may be, to respecting the conditions of the grant.

Hakim Bunyad Hussain died on 3rd April 1913, and the recent settlement known as Mr. Dyer's settlement was made. From the papers it appears that a careful examination of the history of the property and its ownership and possession was then made. The decision of the Settlement Officer was to enter the Defendant No. 1's name with other Defendants Nos. 2 and 4 as co-sharers along with the Plaintiff of the remaining 8 annas share. This administrative action was also of course quite inconsistent with the idea of a wakf having been constituted or there being any right in the deceased to have nominated his successor as mutwalli.

Their Lordships have carefully considered all the relevant documents and evidence in this case and they are of opinion that the judgment reached by the Judicial Commissioner is correct.

There are one or two matters, however, which the Board wishes to make clear. In the first place, in their Lordships' judgment the nature of the grant in this case, whether that term be applied to the document issuing from the Raja in 1840 or to the orders and records issuing from the Settlement Offices in 1867, was not a wakf but was a grant sub conditione. That condition was two-fold. In the first place the expenses of the temple should be defrayed from the revenue. The grant was for that purpose expressly, namely, "that the income arising from the muafi is properly spent," and secondly that a report was to be submitted to the Government for sanction, or to use the language of the Chief Commissioner's order of 10th July 1867, with regard to Sonkham :—

MUHAMMAD RAZA v. SYED YADGAR HUSSAIN.

"The village of Mouza Sonkham may remain revenue free for ever on this condition that the object for which was given muafi should be properly maintained and the Imambara be kept in good repairs and a report submitted to Government for sanction."

In the next place the Board desires to make it clear that the interests of the Imambara are paramount and that no administration by the persons claiming either under the title of grantee, or of mutwalli or of manager could be legally sanctioned which was in violation or betrayal of the interests of the Imambara as safeguarded by the imposition of the condition which attached, throughout to the grant.

The rights which would emerge or the course of procedure which would have to be followed in the event of such mal-administration are not before the Board. The sole question arising is that defined by the plaint itself and is to the following effect :—

"That a decree be passed under sec. 83 of the Central Provinces Land Revenue Act for setting aside the decisions of the Settlement Officer and cancelling the entries showing Defendant No. 1's name as an 8 annas co-sharer and those of Defendants Nos. 2 to 4 as co-sharers along with Plaintiff of the remaining 8 annas share in the record-of-rights and other papers relating to the new settlement of the mouzas :—

1. Gorewara } More fully described in the schedule herewith attached and by substituting the name of Plaintiff alone, as the full 16 annas mokasdar and mutwalli of the said villages."
2. Sonkham }

The true point of the proceeding is that the Plaintiff in the present case, Muhammad Raza, desires these entries to be deleted by substi... alone "as the full 16 annas ... mutwalli." His averment is ... "in pursuance of the wishes of his ... succeeded him in the office of mutwalli and the aforesaid Imambara, and has since been managing the aforesaid wakf property exclusively in his own sole and exclusive right as such mutwalli and is in possession of the same in that capacity."

His object of course cannot be accomplished unless he can establish his position as mutwalli, and that position cannot be established unless the grant sub conditione as before described can be considered to be a wakf. An additional negative distinction must be made. The Board makes no pronouncement whatsoever on a question mooted, namely, whether a grant by a Hindu to a Mahomedan community was incompetent as the foundation of a wakf. The grant in the present instance has been dealt with on its own terms and conditions, and the issue has been settled against it being the constitution of a wakf. Further questions mooted only confuse that issue.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be dismissed. The petition for further documents will also be dismissed.

The Appellant will pay to the first Respondent such costs as he has incurred.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

RICHARDSON, J.—This is an appeal from the Appellate judgment of the Additional District Judge of Pabna, dated the 31st May 1921. The questions which the learned Additional Judge had to consider are thus stated by him :

"(1) Was Mouza Chur Raninagar included within the putni held by the Plaintiffs and other pro formâ Defendants under the malik Defendants? Was Mehal No. 2159 created out of the lands of that putni?

(2) Are the Plaintiffs entitled to a refund of the amount claimed?"

Some short explanation is necessary to the nature of the dispute in connection with which these questions arose.

The Plaintiffs and those Defendants in the suit who are described as pro formâ Defendants are the proprietors of a putni tenure within the estate of the principal Defendants Nos. 1 to 7. The tenure is bounded on one side by the river Ganges and in the year 1912-1913, a survey was made by the Government with the result that certain lands were formed into a separate estate No. 2159 known as Mouza Chur Raninagar, on the footing that the lands were an accretion to the parent estate, Raninagar, the estate that is of the principal Defendants. On that footing a settlement was made under which the putnidars were to pay rent for these lands at the rate of Rs. 189 a year in addition to the rent payable for the original putni. It is stated in the judgments of the Courts below that in the settlement the Government were recorded as tahasildars of the proprietors of the estate. No suggestion appears to have been made that the putnidars were party to or bound by the proceedings. In the result, however, they were compelled to pay this additional rent for four years and they then brought the present suit to retrieve the amount so paid. Their case is that the original putni, the putni as originally created, for which rent was payable under their engagement with the proprietors, included the lands of the new estate No. 2159 and they contend accordingly that in respect of this area rent has been recovered from them twice over. They succeeded in the Courts below and three of the principal Defendants (Nos. 1 to 3) have preferred this appeal.

Now it is conceded by Dr. Mitter, the learned Vakil who has argued the case on behalf of the Appellants, that the questions above set out were essentially questions of fact. The main burden of Dr. Mitter's argument has been that in deciding those questions of fact, the Courts below have committed an error of law in respect of the use which they have made of a certain judgment of the year 1874. The principal Defendants, the proprietors, were not parties to the litigation or bound by the result. The judgment, it seems, decided a suit or suits between the putnidars as Plaintiffs and the Secretary of State as Defendant, in which the putnidars successfully asserted their title to Chur Raninagar as part of this putni. The learned Additional Judge says: "It appears, that the Plaintiffs in those cases obtained decree for lands of Raninagar and Mouza Chur Raninagar as appertaining to their putni tatuk, and the entire lands were made into one new mouza named Decreer Chur Raninagar." Then the learned Judge continues: "It is contended for the Appellants that they were not parties to those suits, and therefore, the judgment and decree in those cases are not admissible against them. The argument is against established case-law, and I have no doubt that they are admissible in evidence. The decree and judgment prove that the predecessors of the Plaintiffs claimed in 1874 lands of Mouza Chur Raninagar as appertaining to the putni taluk; their claim was upheld, and they remained in possession as before."

Dr. Mitter has not, I think, disputed that the proceedings of 1874 and their result were relevant under sec. 13 of the Evidence Act. Nor could he have successfully taken this position. In the judgment of a Full Bench of this Court in Tepu Khan v. Rajani Mohan Das (1) the following passage occurs:—"It is clear from the decisions in the Privy Council that under certain circumstances and in certain cases, the judgment in a previous suit to which one of the parties in the subsequent suit was not a party may be admissible in evidence for certain purposes and with certain objects in the subsequent suit." In a later case which came before the Privy Council [Dinomoni Chaudhurani v. Brojo Mohini Chaudhurani (2)] Lord Lindley delivering their Lordships' judgment observed that the words of sec. 13 of the Evidence Act were very wide. I have no doubt that the litigation of 1874 was within the meaning of sec. 13, a transaction or instance in which the right of the Plaintiffs to hold the disputed lands as part of their putni was successfully asserted and this transaction or instance was relevant or admissible in evidence in the present suit. So far, I think, Dr. Mitter would not disagree. His objection, as I understand it, is that the learned Additional Judge in some way gave judicial force to the judgment as against the Petitioners who are not bound by it. Of course if the learned Judge had expressed himself to the effect that the judgment was in law conclusive against the proprietors, he would have been guilty of serious error. As I read his words, however, I do not think that the learned Judge has attributed to the judgment any judicial force as against the proprietors. He treats the judgment or the transaction which it discloses, as an item of fact in the history of the disputed lands. This clearly appears from what he says later in his own judgment which must be read as a whole. Two or three paragraphs further down after referring to other matters, he says " all these go to prove," meaning each of the different events or items in the history of the land to which he had referred together went to show, the title of the putnidars.

In the circumstances it seems to me merely hypercritical to find fault with the learned Additional Judge's statement that the judgment proves " that the predecessor of the Plaintiff claimed in 1874 lands of Mouza Chur Raninagar as appertaining to the putni taluk, their claim was upheld, and they remained in possession as before." The relevancy of the previous suit and its result necessarily gave access to the judgment in that suit, and in my opinion the learned Judge was right in saying that the judgment proved the nature of the claim made and the legal effect or result that the claim was upheld. He was at liberty to use the judgment for that purpose and to that extent. The legal effect of the judgment as between the parties to the previous suit had to be determined from the judgment itself and, when determined, it became not conclusive as between the parties to the present suit but a fact to be weighed in the balance like any other fact. Its probative force or weight in the circumstances was matter for a Court of fact to decide.

The point that this judgment of 1874 does not prove the previous or subsequent state of the possession is really a very small one. In the first place the learned Judge may have expressed himself badly. The subsequent state of the possession must clearly have depended on other evidence and there may have been other evidence also as to the previous state of the possession. But in any case, the judgment of 1874 declares the right of the putnidars to possession and as to subsequent possession there appears to be no dispute at all.

As to the case of Kashi Nath Pal v. Raja Jagat Kishore Acharyya Chaudhuri (3) to which Dr. Mitter referred, in my opinion, the learned Additional Judge has not committed the error which was there condemned. Apart from the negligible point as to the previous state of the possession, the learned Judge had not treated recitals in the judgment of 1874 as substantive proof in the present case of the truth of the facts recited. His treatment of the judgment of 1874 is within the principle that where a judgment is admissible, it is "conclusive evidence for or against all persons, whether parties, privies or strangers, of its own existence, date and legal effect as distinguished from the accuracy of the decision rendered."

The result is that in my opinion, the learned Vakil's main contention is not substantiated.

(3) 20 C. W. N. 643: s. c. 23 C. L. J. 583 (1916).

GOPI SUNDARI DASI v. KHEROD GOBINDA CHOWDHURY.

The learned Vakil raised another point in connection with a document described as a document of the year 1287 which is exhibit A on the record. This point, however, was not seriously pressed and no more need be said about it.

The last contention of the learned Vakil is that the Secretary of State should have been a party to this suit. As to this point, it appears, that a complaint made in the trial Court that the Secretary of State was not a party was overruled by the learned Munsif. The complaint, however, does not appear to have been repeated in the lower Appellate Court, and there is no decision of the learned Additional Judge upon it. It would seem that if this objection was ever seriously put forward it was afterwards abandoned. Moreover, the position of the Government in respect of the disputed lands is not very clear. I have referred to the statement in the judgments of the Courts below that the Government is recorded in the settlement proceedings as the tahasildar of the proprietors. Before we could say that the Secretary of State should or should not be a party, some further enquiry would be necessary as to the facts. That being so, I think this point fails in second appeal.

For the reasons I have stated I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

It is conceded that this judgment will govern appeal No. 2546 of 1921, which should accordingly be also dismissed with costs.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

In this appeal the question raised is whether the Plaintiffs' suit is barred by limitation under Art. 3 of Sch. III of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Both the Courts below decreed the Plaintiffs' suit for recovery of possession of the property in dispute and the Defendants have preferred the present appeal. The decree passed by the lower Appellate Court is supported by the finding arrived at by that Court to the effect that the tenancy was neither an occupancy nor an under-raiyati one. The learned Judge therefore finds that Art. 3, Sch. III, Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply in this case. This finding virtually makes the status of the Defendants that of a tenure-holder. The controversy between the parties centred round the question whether the Defendants' interest in the land was that of an occupancy raiyat or of a tenure-holder. The Plaintiffs are the tenants of the Defendants' tenant. Their case is that the Defendants are the landlords of their landlord. The questions, therefore, that arise are, first, whether as the Defendants are the landlords of the Plaintiff's landlord, Art. 3 of Sch. III applies to this case; secondly, whether the Defendants are raiyats within the meaning of that article. The first question was not determined by the lower Appellate Court and the Defendants' appeal to that Court was dismissed on the finding that they were neither occupancy nor under-raiyats. With reference to this question the learned Vakil for the Appellants contends that the finding of the lower Appellate Court is not based on legal evidence. It appears that under the Talukdars, Gumani and Nakari held a non-transferable occupancy and under them Tilak Saha—the predecessor-in-title of the Defendants—held a bekayemi jama. Gumani and Nakari surrendered their holding and the learned Judge says that Tilak then became a tenant under the Talukdars of the village. He does not say how Tilak on the surrender of the tenancy by the superior landlord became a tenant directly under the Talukdars—whether there was a fresh settlement with Tilak or whether by virtue of the surrender by the superior landlord he became a tenant directly under the Talukdars. The learned Judge further does not state the circumstances under which Tilak who had a bekayemi jama under the raiyat of a non-transferable occupancy holding obtained a kayemi maurashi jama under the landlords. These are no doubt omissions in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. But on a consideration of the evidence before him the learned Judge has come to the conclusion that the tenancy is neither an occupancy nor an under-raiyati one. We are not justified in second appeal in disturbing that finding of fact.

The Appellants have, however, raised another point.

They say that the record-of-rights which has been prepared with reference to the land in dispute could not be produced in time before the lower Appellate Court and that the case should, therefore, be re-tried in the light of the record-of-rights which raises a presumption in favour of the Appellants. It appears that the record-of-rights was published after the decision of the suit by the first Court but before the lower Appellate Court pronounced its judgment. The Appellants have filed an affidavit to show that with all diligence they were not in a position to produce the record-of-rights in the lower Appellate Court before the hearing of the appeal and we are satisfied that they were unable to produce it through no laches on their part. That is an important piece of evidence which should be taken into account in determining the present question. As this evidence could not be produced before the lower Appellate Court, we are of opinion that it should be considered in determining the status of the Defendants by the Courts which are entitled to deal with facts. We therefore propose to admit the record-of-rights in evidence under Or. 41, r. 27 on the application of the Appellants. The course which we propose to adopt is justified by the observations made by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Raja Indrajit Pratap Bahadur Sahi v. Amar Singh (1). A similar course was followed in the case of Bhairab Chandra Dutt v. Kali Kumar Dutt (2). The order that we make in this case is that this case should be remitted to the Court of first instance in order that that Court may try the question of the status of the Defendants after admitting the record-of-rights as evidence in the case. The Defendants will be entitled to adduce such evidence, if any, as is necessary to prove the record-of-rights. The Plaintiffs will be entitled to adduce such evidence as they consider necessary to rebut the presumption arising from the record-of-rights. It is not intended that there should be a de novo trial or that fresh evidence in respect of other points involved in this litigation should be adduced. The Court of first instance will then dispose of the case according to law.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decrees of the lower Courts are set aside and the case sent back to the Court of first instance to be re-tried according to the observations made above. The costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 307—Powers of High Court in a reference against jury's verdict—Misdirection—Verdict, reasonableness of, the test.

In a reference under sec. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code against the verdict of the jury, the High Court is to give due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and of the jury after considering the entire evidence and then to acquit or convict the accused. It does not require the High Court to attempt to reconstruct the verdict of the jury when there is misdirection in the charge to the jury. In giving due weight to the opinion of the jury the High Court always hesitates to reverse a unanimous verdict unless it holds it to be unreasonable.

This was a Reference by Mr. R. E. Jack, Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley Districts, under sec. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code, against a unanimous verdict of the jury.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

THE KING-EMPEROR v. SAGARMAL AGARWALLA.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The accused Sagarmal was tried before the Sessions Judge of the Assam Valley Districts on two charges, firstly, with having forged an Ekrarnama, Ex. 2, a valuable security purporting to have been executed by Kanai Lal on 21st January 1905, and secondly, with having fraudulently and dishonestly used as genuine by filing in the Court of the Extra-Assistant Commissioner Mr. S. Goswami in a sec. 145, Cr. P. C. proceeding in 1922 the Ekrarnama Ex. 2 purporting to have been executed by Kanai Lal on 21st January 1905 which he knew or had reason to believe at the time of filing to be a forged document. The jury returned a unanimous verdict of not guilty. The learned Sessions Judge disagreeing with the jury's verdict on the second charge has thought it necessary to refer this case to this Court under the provisions of sec. 307 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

The main facts of the case are as follows :—On the 21st November 1904 Kanai Lal purchased a piece of land from Ram Chandra Brahmin for Rs. 1,000. On the 9th March 1905 Kanai Lal died leaving a widow Musstt. Gigi. Kanai Lal left several debts and Gigi executed a deed of sale in respect of this land to one Joy Narain. It appears that though the document executed was a valid deed of sale there was some contemporaneous verbal arrangement between the widow and Joy Narain that Joy Narain should hold the property as trustee for Kanai Lal's creditors and after paying off Kanai Lal's debts out of the profits from the property should restore it to the widow. Effect was given to this arrangement and on the 24th April 1917 Joy Narain re-transferred the land to her. The land was in three plots occupied by different tenants. On one of those plots the tenant Ghanesyam had erected a mill. On the 18th August 1920 the accused Sagarmal purchased the mill and Ghanesyam's interest in this plot. On the 1st March 1921 Sagarmal sold to Nagarmal, the complainant, the property purchased from Ghanesyam. Nagarmal was given possession of the mill and it was arranged that possession of some other buildings in the property should not be delivered for three months. Sagarmal failed to keep his promise and on the 10th June 1921 Nagarmal instituted a suit against Sagarmal for possession. On the 30th July 1921 Sagarmal dispossessed Nagarmal from the mill by locking it up. Nagarmal then instituted proceedings under sec. 145, Cr. P. C. and got possession of the mill and the other houses in this plot of land through the Court. Then on the 6th July 1922 Sagarmal instituted fresh proceedings under sec. 145, Cr. P. C. in respect of the land on which the mill stood and in the course of these proceedings on the 18th October 1922 he filed a document Ex. 2 which is the document alleged to be forged on which the present prosecution is based.

This document is an Ekrarnama which purports to be executed by Kanai Lal on the 21st January 1905. In it Kanai Lal acknowledges that Sagarmal has bought the land benami in his name and that it will be returned to Sagarmal after 20 years and during that period Kanai Lal would enjoy the land but would have no right to transfer the same by sale or otherwise. It also provides for re-entry by Sagarmal in the case of transfer. In the meantime Nagarmal had brought two civil suits against Sagarmal, one on the 10th June 1921 which was decreed in Nagarmal's favour on the 10th May 1922 after reference to arbitration. Then on the 15th November 1922 he brought a second suit on the basis of a lease which he had obtained from the widow Gigi and that suit was decreed ex parte on the 4th January 1923. When the document Ex. 2 was filed in the sec. 145 case, a few days later on the 24th October 1922 a petition was filed on behalf of Nagarmal stating that there were good grounds for believing the Ekrarnama to be a forgery and asking the Court to put its signature on both its sheets and to note the letters appearing in the water-mark of the cartridge paper of the second sheet.

The case for the prosecution rests on evidence which can be classified under three heads. The first is the direct evidence that the signatures on the document purporting to be those of Kanai Lal are not Kanai Lal's signatures. The second class of evidence relates to circumstances which make it improbable that the document was executed by Kanai Lal. The third class of evidence is evidence that from the water-mark on the second sheet of Ex. 2 it appears that that piece of paper could not have been in existence in 1905.

As regards the first class of evidence we think that the learned Sessions Judge did not direct the jury properly. Three witnesses have definitely deposed that they were acquainted with the signature of Kanai Lal and that the two signatures on Ex. 2 which purported to be his are not in his handwriting. The first of these is Nagarmal, the complainant, who deposed that Kanai Lal was his uncle and that he often received letters from him and knows his signature and that the two signatures marked "2 (1) and 2 (2)" are neither of them his signatures. The second of these witnesses is Bholaram who deposed that Kanai Lal was his sister's husband and that he was his gomastha for 1. also deposed that ...ther of th... tures 2 (1) and 2 (2) were Kanai ...and. signatures. The third of the witnesses is Ram Protap who had business dealings with Kanai Lal and has deposed that he knows the signature of Kanai Lal and that Exs. 2 (1) and 2 (2) are not his signatures. In dealing with this evidence the learned Sessions Judge has only referred to that of Bholaram's and has said to the jury: "In any case I do not suppose that you will regard this part of the evidence as conclusive." It has been argued before us that this means that both the learned Sessions Judge and the jury have rejected the evidence entirely. This is certainly not the correct interpretation of the learned Sessions Judge's remarks giving them their ordinary meaning. We think, it would have been better if he had told the jury that they should consider this evidence and attach such weight to it as they thought fit and not suggested to them that it was not of much importance. In our opinion it is of considerable importance, though we agree to this extent with the Sessions Judge that a conviction of forgery could seldom be based solely on non-resemblance of handwriting. But when this evidence is considered with the other evidence in the case it strongly supports the case for the prosecution. In connection with this evidence there is also the evidence to prove the only specimen of Kanai Lal's handwriting which has been produced on either side, Ex. 15 (1); that is an entry in the Khata produced by Ram Protap, and although on behalf of the defence it has been attacked as a spurious entry we see no sufficient ground for doubting its genuineness. Our attention has been drawn to certain facts, which are said to be suspicious, such as the fact that Kanai

THE KING-EMPEROR v. SAKRMAL AGARWALLA.

The JUDGMENT OF T Agarwalla to his follows, that the ... of the entry of ...ch the signature is part is different to that of the entry of the account in the Khata, that the stamp appears to have been regummed and that other persons had signed acknowledgments in the Khata by signing right across the page. In our opinion none of these are sufficient reasons for rejecting this evidence, when there appears no other sufficient reason for doubting the genuineness of the account book in which the entry is made. Explanations have been given as regards the form of the signature and the difference of the inks which to us appear satisfactory and the other objections seem to us trivial. We hold therefore that there is very strong evidence on the record that the signatures on this document are not those of Kanai Lal.

As regards the circumstances of the case the document in itself is one which it seems highly improbable that Kanai Lal should have executed. We have never in our experience known a case of benami sale in which he had no right for a period of 20 years. The property was of considerable value being situated in the town of Gauhati and no satisfactory reason has been given why Kanai Lal should have been allowed the benefit of this land for 20 years. It is suggested that the consideration was that he was to improve the land and induct tenants. But this, having regard to the nature of land, would not be a sufficient consideration for the benefit to be enjoyed. Further it was not proved that the accused at that time was in such pecuniary difficulty that it was necessary for him to resort to benami transactions. The facts show that Kanai Lal himself was in difficulties and this makes it extremely improbable that the accused should have chosen him as his benamdar at that time. It is further urged on behalf of the prosecution that had this document been genuine the accused could have asserted his right to possession at the time of the transfer to Joy Narain. We think there is some force in the contention on behalf of the accused that if this document were genuine it is possible that the accused might have been a consenting party to the arrangement with Joy Narain and therefore took no action in the matter. But this does not remove the initial improbability that such a document would have been executed. Another suspicious point is the conduct of the accused in allowing the second case instituted by Nagarmal to be decreed against him ex parte after he had taken adjournments for the purpose of filing a written statement. Had he really believed this document to be genuine he would surely have defended that suit.

We now come to the evidence as to the water-mark in the second page of the document. This sheet of paper is what is known as cartridge paper which is sold by Government to the public. There is evidence that the water-mark letters A, Z were not in existence at the time in 1905 when the document is alleged to have been executed. The case for the prosecution is that since 1907 secret marks have been introduced in the water-marks on this paper and they have been varied from time to time so that the officers of the Controller of Stationery can say from an examination of the document the period when the paper of the document was issued. It has been proved by Mr. Coster, Deputy Controller of Stationery, that mark Z was first used in 1920. In support of this statement also the letter of the Controller, dated 19th December 1919, to the paper manufacturers directing the use of this letter on water-marked papers manufactured during the year 1920 has been proved. The evidence of Mr. Coster has been attacked on two grounds, firstly on the ground that he has made contradictory statements, and secondly that a good deal of his evidence is irrelevant as he is not speaking from personal knowledge. We have been taken through the whole of Mr. Coster's evidence and we think that the attitude he adopted in the witness-box was unfortunate. He seems at first to have insisted on claiming privilege of not replying to questions and was not willing to give the assistance to the Court which he should have done. But his attitude was certainly not one which was unfavourable to the defence and we can see nothing that would justify us in thinking that he was not telling the truth in the definite statement which he did make.

As regards the second point it would appear that it is difficult to bring within the provisions of the Evidence Act certain portions of his evidence. But so far as the introduction of the letter Z from the commencement of 1920 is concerned the letter of the Controller to which we have referred is sufficient to establish the fact. Then Mr. Coster has definitely stated that secret marks were first introduced in 1907. That statement, he says, is based on a presumption from the letter Ex. 33 which was produced in original. In that letter the Controller asked the manufacturers of the paper to make arrangement that each sheet of paper shall bear a secret mark, that the mark for preference should be a letter and the letter should be changed at intervals of six months and his office informed confidentially. It is urged that as this letter is one accepting tender of the manufacturers it does not necessarily follow that secret marks had not been in use beforehand. But the inference drawn by Mr. Coster is supported by other evidence on the record. The cartridge papers that were used for other documents in 1906 and 1907 were proved Exs. 18 and 17 and on these no letter was found in water-marks. These were taken out at random from a large number of records produced from the Sessions Judge's record room and it has not been shown that on any cartridge paper used before 1907 was there any letter or other secret mark in the water-mark whereas in papers filed in 1908 a letter water-mark appears, it having been the letter B in that year. It would have been easy for the accused to have shown that a letter-mark if it had been in existence previously was to be found in some of these documents. But no attempt was made to do this. We hold on the evidence of Mr. Coster which is admissible that there can be no reasonable doubt that the second sheet of Ex. 2 was not in existence in 1905.

We think the jury were probably confused and did not properly appreciate the cumulative effect of the different classes of evidence. After taking their verdict the learned Sessions Judge asked them a further question as he intended to refer this case. He asked them to give their reasons for their doubt and their reply was: "To our mind the only part of the evidence that seems to bear on the question is the circumstantial part of it and that does not seem conclusive." It would appear therefore that the jury entirely overlooked the direct evidence to which we have already referred.

On behalf of the accused considerable reliance was placed on the fact that the endorsement on the back of the stamp which constitutes the first sheet of Ex. 2 indicates that the stamp was sold to Kanai

Lal. It seems very doubtful whether this entry is any evidence of that fact. But it is unnecessary to discuss this point as it appears at the trial not to have been disputed that this stamp may have been actually sold to Kanai Lal. What is pointed out by the prosecution is that the stamp of five rupees is not the proper stamp for the Ekrarnama written on it. It is further suggested that such a stamp might have been among Kanai Lal's papers unused and that the accused had access to those papers. This appears to have been so having regard to the contention that the accused was a party to the arrangement with Joy Narain and there is direct evidence that the accused's brother actually took some interest in the widow's affairs. We think that it is extremely probable that this stamp was found by the accused and the finding of this stamp had suggested to him the idea of forging this document.

It is further contended that there is no evidence that the accused used the document knowing it to be forged. It was not to be expected that the prosecution should give direct evidence on this point. But it is impossible to conceive that the accused could have received this document acknowledging a benami transaction in his favour believing it to be genuine if in fact there never had been such a benami transaction. It is also contended that if we hold that the accused used the document we should hold that he is liable for the offence punishable under sec. 471 read with sec. 465 and not for an offence punishable under sec. 471 read with sec. 467. It is said that he did not use the documents relying on it as a valuable security. Whether he did so or not, the nature of the offence does not depend on the use to which the document was put. If it was used fraudulently or dishonestly and if it purported to be a valuable security the punishment provided by sec. 467 and not that provided by sec 465 would be that to which the accused would be liable under sec. 471.

It is further contended that having regard to the unanimous verdict of the jury and to the fact that we have held that there has been some misdirection by the learned Sessions Judge we should put ourselves in the place of the jury and find as to what their verdict would have been if they had been rightly directed. This argument is based on a misconception of the provisions of sec. 307, Cr. P. C. That section requires us to give due weight to the opinion of the Sessions Judge and of the jury after considering the entire evidence and then to acquit or convict the accused. It does not require us to attempt to reconstruct the verdict of the jury. In giving due weight to the opinion of the jury we should always hesitate to reverse a unanimous verdict unless we hold it to be unreasonable. In the present case we hold that that verdict having regard to the cumulative effect of the evidence is not a reasonable one and that there cannot be any doubt as to the accused's guilt.

We accordingly accept this reference. The accused Sagarmal is acquitted of the first charge that of having committed the offence of forging the Ekrarnama Ex. 2 punishable under sec. 467, I. P. C. We convict him of the offence of fraudulently and dishonestly using as genuine the Ekrarnama Ex. 2 knowing or having reason to believe it to be a forged document, and under sec. 471 read with sec. 467, I. P. C. we sentence him to four years' rigorous imprisonment.

The accused must surrender to his bail and serve out this sentence.

A separation and partition between brothers constituting a joint Mitakshara Hindu family does not, by implication of law, effect a separation as between a brother and his descendants amongst themselves, so as to make it necessary to prove that the latter agreed to continue to be a joint Hindu family.

To understand and apply the decision of any Court, it is necessary to see what were the facts of the case in which the decision was given and what was the point which had to be decided.

Admissions made by a father in the course of a dispute in which as an interested party he affirmed that he and his coparceners had separated and in which he took a position adverse to his son are not admissible in evidence against the son.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 2nd July 1917, of the Chief Court of the Punjab, which reversed a decree, dated the 15th May 1914, of the District Judge of Delhi.

The question at issue in the appeal was whether the parties, who are Hindus governed by the Mitakshara, are joint or separate members of a family.

The District Judge found that the parties were joint. The Chief Court on appeal took the opposite view and dismissed the suit, but on review varied the decree in Plaintiff's favour.

The facts and findings thereon of the lower Courts are fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR JOHN EDGE.—This is an appeal by the Plaintiff from a decree, dated the 2nd July 1917, of the Chief Court of the Punjab, which reversed a decree, dated the 15th May 1914, of the District Judge of Delhi, and dismissed the suit. The suit is for the partition of property alleged by the Plaintiff to be joint property of the parties.

The parties are Hindus of the Bakkal Aggarwall caste, and are subject to the law of the Mitakshara. The following pedigree shows how the parties are related to each other :—

HARI BAKHSH v. BABU LAL.

Jai Narain and Bishan Dayal had daughters, to whom it is not necessary to refer.

The plaint in this suit, dated the 21st November 1910, was presented to the Court of the District Judge of Delhi by Hari Bakhsh, a minor, by his guardian and next friend, Musammat Basanti, who is his mother. The Defendants to the suit are Babu Lal and his son, Chait Ram.

The case of the Plaintiff was that he and the Defendants are the surviving male members of a joint Hindu family possessed of joint property, to a half-share of which he claimed to be entitled on partition, and he claimed to be entitled to a decree for partition and for accounts, and other reliefs. The District Judge of Delhi gave the Plaintiff the decree which he claimed. The Chief Court of the Punjab, on the 2nd July 1917, in appeal, dismissed the suit. On an application for review the Chief Court varied its decree dismissing the suit by granting the Plaintiff a decree for partition of the Maliwara house and a declaration that the Katra Ashrafi house at Delhi is the property of the family, and that the Plaintiff has equal rights in it with the Defendant, Babu Lal. To the application for review the two Defendants were Respondents, and it does not appear why the declaration was not made against Chait Ram as well as against Babu Lal.

The case of the Defendants was a denial that they and the Plaintiff were members of a joint family, and a denial that the property which the Plaintiff claimed to have partitioned was joint family property. Several defences were set up. The Defendants alleged that Bishan Dayal and his sons formed a separate joint family, and that they, after 1903, had separated from each other and had partitioned the property to which they were entitled; they further alleged that Sri Ram had adopted Chait Ram as his son. Their Lordships will at once deal with these allegations before proceeding to consider what was the main and substantial defence, if proved, to the suit, which was that in a separation and partition of 1903, in which Jai Narain and his branch had separated from Sanahi Ram and his branch, Jai Narain and his sons had between themselves separated, and he had partitioned between his son Bishan Dayal on the one side and his sons Sri Ram and Babu Lal on the other side the property which had fallen to him Jai Narain and his branch in the partition with Sanahi Lal.

The District Judge found that there was absolutely no proof of the alleged partition between Bishan Dayal and his sons after 1903. It was the fourth issue framed by the District Judge. It is not clear that that issue was discussed or considered in the appeal to the Chief Court, but in this appeal nothing was said to suggest that the finding of the District Judge on the fourth issue was wrong, and their Lordships consider that the finding of the District Judge may be accepted as conclusive that there was no separation or partition between Bishan Dayal and his sons after 1903 or at any time.

The object of alleging that Chait Ram had been adopted by Sri Ram is obvious. If that adoption had been proved the Plaintiff could not in any event have been entitled on a partition to one-half of the property in question in this suit, or to more than one-third of it, and the Defendants would between them have been entitled to two-thirds of it. The District Judge and the Chief Court concurred in finding that the alleged adoption was not proved. Such an adoption by a brother of the only son of his brother would be most unusual, and their Lordships accept that concurrent finding as correct.

The first common ancestor of the parties shown in the pedigree is Devi Dutt. He, with his son, Jodh Raj, carried on business as merchants at Basan, in the State of Jaipur. Jodh Raj removed from Basan to Delhi, and at Delhi he and his sons carried on business as cloth merchants. They had also branch shops at Calcutta and at Cawnpore. In 1903 the shops which belonged to the joint family, then consisting of Jodh Raj, his sons and grandsons, were known as: (1) Jodh Raj Narain, at Delhi; (2) Jai Narain Khemka, at Delhi; (3) Sri Ram-Ram Lal, in which a stranger was a partner, at Delhi; (4) Murli Dhar Deoki Nandan, in which strangers were partners, at Delhi; (5) Jodh Raj Sanahi Ram, at Calcutta; and (6) Jai Narain Sanahi Ram, at Cawnpore.

It is an admitted fact that at the time when Jodh Raj died, in 1903, Jodh Raj, his sons Jai Narain and Sanahi Ram, and their respective descendants constituted a joint Hindu family possessed of the joint property already mentioned. It is also an admitted fact that in 1903, after Jodh Raj had died, Sanahi Ram and his son separated from Jai Narain and his descendants, and that on that separation the then joint property of the family at Delhi, Calcutta, and Cawnpore was partitioned between the two branches into which the joint family had separated, and that in that partition, which will hereafter be referred to as the partition of 1903, the shops (1), (2) and (3) above mentioned fell to Sanahi Ram and his branch, and the shops (4), (5) and (6) fell to Jai Narain and his branch.

The case of the Defendants is that in the partition of 1903 Jai Narain and his sons also separated from each other and ceased to constitute a joint family. The District Judge held that the onus of proving that Jai Narain and his sons had separated from each other was upon the Defendants, who alleged it. It has been argued on behalf of the Defendants before their Lordships in this appeal that the onus of proving that Jai Narain and his sons had separated was not upon the Defendants, and that it was for the Plaintiff to prove that they had not separated. Their Lordships will presently express their opinion on that question, but they will first consider whether the evidence which was before the District Judge and the Chief Court proves or does not prove that Jai Narain and his sons separated, and for that purpose it is necessary to state some facts which have not so far been referred to by them.

Bishan Dayal lived in Cawnpore and had been in charge of and had managed the shop there. Bishan Dayal married twice, and after his second marriage he and his daughter-in-law, Musammat Basanti, had quarrelled, and he offered, through her brother, Rs. 30,000 as an inducement to her to hand over to him the custody of his grandson, Hari Bakhsh, the Plaintiff. That offer was refused, and Bishan Dayal determined to oppose a claim which Musammat Basanti was making on behalf of her son, Hari Bakhsh, for the partition of the property now in question in this suit. On the 7th August 1909, a suit was instituted in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore on behalf of Hari Bakhsh by his mother, Musammat Basanti, against Babu Lal, his son Chait Ram, and Bishan Dayal for the partition of the property now in question in this suit. Subsequently Musammat Basanti was added as a Plaintiff in that suit, and Musammat Sarasuti, the widow of Sri Ram, and Musammat Indri, the widow of Brij Mohan, were added as Defendants. The Additional Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore, before whom that suit was, on the 15th April 1910, framed the issues for trial and ordered that the parties should file all their documents on that day. The Additional Subordinate Judge probably considered the evidence which the parties had brought before him, and having come to a conclusion that the Court of the Subordinate Judge had not jurisdiction to hear and determine that suit for partition, he, on the 29th August 1910, returned the plaint to be presented in the proper Court. It is not now necessary for their Lordships to consider whether the Additional Subordinate Judge had or had not jurisdiction to hear and determine that suit. They refer to it with an object which will presently appear.

As has been already mentioned, Bishan Dayal was a Defendant to the suit for partition which was brought in the Court of Cawnpore on the 7th August 1909. He made his Will on the 26th November 1909, and in it stated that in Sambat 1960, his step-brothers, Sri Ram and Babu Lal, had separated from him. In that suit of 1909 Bishan Dayal filed a written statement on the 30th November 1909, in which he alleged that Jai Narain in the partition of 1903 had divided the property which had fallen to his share between him, Bishan Dayal, on the one side and Sri Ram and Babu Lal on the other side. Bishan Dayal died on the 5th December 1909. On the part of the Defendants, it has been contended in this appeal that the statements of Bishan Dayal in his Will and written statement, above mentioned, are admissible in evidence in this suit as against the Plaintiff, and prove that Sri Ram and Babu Lal had separated in 1903 from Bishan Dayal, that the family then ceased to be a joint family, and that the share of the joint family which fell to Jai Narain and his descendants in the partition of 1903 was partitioned between Bishan Dayal on the one side and Sri Ram and Babu Lal on the other. It appears to their Lordships that these statements of Babu Lal, who was then an interested party in the disputes and was then taking a position adverse to Hari Bakhsh, cannot be regarded as evidence in this suit and are inadmissible.

Excluding from consideration the statements of Bishan Dayal in his Will and written statement, the only admissible evidence not open to objection and not ambiguous and inconclusive is, if genuine, a letter which purports to have been written by Bishan Dayal to his brother Babu Lal, dated "Phagan Sudi 2, Sambat 1965" (22nd February 1909), which was for the first time produced by the Defendant Babu Lal on the 14th October 1911. That letter (Ex. D. 14) as translated is as follows :—

"Compliments from Bishan Dial to Sri Ram-Babu Lal.

"Jai Narain in your presence separated us, the three brothers, on Asarh Badi 10, Sambat 1960. The whole work of Delhi remained with you, the two brothers, and the work at Cawnpore fell to my lot. This partition was effected by Jai Narain. We, the three brothers, agreed to his settlement and do not object to it. But the account of Sambat 1960 is not yet settled. Whatever is due under that account will be paid by you, the two brothers. I have nothing to do with it. The property situate at Basan and the houses in Delhi will remain joint. We of our own accord have written this. No one can object to it

Their Lordships are informed by Counsel engaged in this appeal that Asarh Badi 10, Sambat 1960, was the 20th June 1903.

The only witness at the trial who said that the letter was in the writing of Bishan Dayal was the Defendant, Babu Lal. The only witnesses of the five to the letter who spoke to it at the trial were Chota Lal, Hari Ram and Sheo Narain, and not one of them said that it was written or executed in his presence. Sheo Narain in his evidence at the trial said that Bishan Dayal told him that it was a farkhati—that is, a release. At the trial before the District Judge Babu Lal said as to it (Ex. D. 14):—

"The release to which (I) certified yesterday was with me. I have given (I gave it) it to my Pleader, Anand Sarup, for production (at the trial at Cawnpore). They said they would produce it when necessary. I cannot say if they produced it or not. After the close of the case I got back the release from my pleader."

Anand Sarup was the Defendants' pleader at the hearing of the suit before the Additional Subordinate Judge at Cawnpore. Ex. D. 14 was, if a genuine letter, one which should have been filed on behalf of the Defendants in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cawnpore on the 15th April 1910, in obedience to his order of that date. It was, if genuine, a most important document—in fact, the most important document for their case. It never was filed or produced at the trial before the Additional Subordinate Judge. If it was in the possession of Anand Sarup at any time, he should have been called as a witness at the trial before the District Judge of Delhi to speak to the fact and to explain why it was not filed or produced in the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge. He was not called as a witness before the District Judge of Delhi and no explanation of his absence was offered. The District Judge found, as a fact that Ex. D. 14 was a forgery. The Chief Court, on the contrary, held that Ex. D. 14 was a genuine document executed by Bishan Dayal. Their Lordships, after a careful consideration, find that Ex. D. 14 is not a genuine document, and was manufactured for the purpose of being used in evidence at the trial before the District Judge of Delhi.

Excluding Ex. D. 14 and the statements in the Will and written statement of Bishan Dayal, which have been already mentioned, from evidence which can be considered in this suit, there is no documentary evidence which proves either that Bishan Dayal and his brothers, Sri Ram and Babu Lal, had or had not separated. The learned and able Counsel engaged in this appeal have been compelled to admit that fact, and that all the other evidence in the suit is as consistent with the brothers never having separated as with the brothers having separated. The District Judge found that the brothers had not separated; the Chief Court, which treated Ex. D. 14 as evidence, found that they had separated. Their Lordships agree with the District Judge that it is not proved that the brothers ever did separate.

It remains to be considered whether on the separation and partition between Jai Narain and his brother, Sanahi Ram, in 1903, it is to be presumed, unless the contrary is proved by the Plaintiff, that Jai Narain and his sons, Bishan Dayal, Sri Ram and Babu Lal, and Jai Narain's grandsons, Brij Mohan and Murli Dhar, all of whom had then been born and were then living, ceased to be amongst themselves members of a Hindu joint family consisting of Jai Narain and his descendants then living. It must be remembered that they were Hindus governed by the law of the Mitakshara, and that each of them had on his birth become a co-parcener in any ancestral property which had come to Jai Narain. The share which Jai Narain took as the share of him and his branch on his separation from his brother, Sanahi Ram, was ancestral property.

It has been contended in this case on behalf of the Defendants that the effect of the separation and partition between Jai Narain and his brother, Sanahi Ram, in 1903, after the death of their father, Jodh Raj, was to cause, by implication of law, a separation between Jai Narain and his descendants and to make them cease to constitute amongst themselves a joint family unless it was proved that they had agreed to continue to be a joint Hindu family, and it was contended on behalf of the Defendants that that proposition is to be inferred from the decisions of the Board in Balabux Ladhuram v. Rukhmabai (1), Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (2) and Musstt. Jatti v. Banwari Lal (3). It appears to their Lordships that the proposition contended for is a proposition which cannot reasonably be inferred from the decisions of the Board or any of them which have been cited. To understand and apply a decision of the Board or of any Court it is necessary to see what were the facts of the case in which the decision was given, and what was the point which had to be decided. In Balabux Ladhuram v. Rukhmabai (1), it appears that three Hindu brothers, Girdhari Lahl, Kunyaram and Ladhuram, owned a shop which had been founded by their father, and that in 1869 or 1870 Kunyaram separated from his brothers, took out his share, amounting to about Rs. 11,000 and started a shop of his own. In that case Lord Davey, in delivering the judgment of the Board, said :—

"It appears to their Lordships that there is no presumption, when one co-parcener separates from the others, that the latter remain united. . . . Their Lordships think that an agreement amongst the remaining members of a joint family to remain united or to re-unite must be proved like any other fact."

The remaining members of the joint family in that case were the brothers, Girdhari Lahl and Ladhuram. The Board was not considering, and had not to consider, whether, if Girdhari Lahl, for example, had sons living when Kunyaram separated from his brothers, Girdhari Lahl and his sons would cease to be as between themselves a joint family. That was not the case and did not arise in the case before the Board.

In Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (2) the four members of a Hindu joint family, who were cousins, entered into an ikrarnama which stated that defined shares in the whole estate of the joint family had been allotted to the several co-parceners. It was there held that the agreement defining the shares effected a separation in estate, and that evidence of some of the co-parceners having continued to enjoy their shares in common would not affect their tenure of their property or their interest in it.

In Musst. Jatti v. Banwari Lal (3) four Hindu brothers who were living as a joint Hindu family executed a deed by which the assets of the family were described and divided between them, and one of the four brothers, Ishar Das, was finally paid out, and thereafter the business was carried on by the three remaining brothers, to whose separate accounts the profits of the business were carried in equal shares. In that case Lord Dunedin in delivering the judgment of the Board, after quoting the passage above set out from Lord Davey's judgment, approved of and adopted the statement of the trial Judge in the suit, who said :—

"There is absolutely no material on the file from which it can be inferred that the three brothers continued united or reunited as co-parcenary members of a joint Hindu family, while Defendant's own books show the contrary. . . . . I have therefore not the least hesitation in finding that on the separation of Ishar Das the family of the parties ceased to be a joint Hindu family in the strictest sense of the term; or, in other words, its members ceased to be co-parceners."

The members ceased to be co-parceners of each other, but it is not suggested that if one of those members happened to have had sons who were his co-parceners when Ishar Das separated from his brothers, such sons and their father would cease to be co-parceners constituting together a joint and undivided family.

If their Lordships were to hold in this case that it is to be presumed in law that the separation and partition effected in 1903 by Jai Narain and his brother, Sanahi Ram, involved necessarily a separation between Jai Narain and his sons, their Lordships would, it appears to them, be introducing a novel principle into the law of joint Hindu families governed by the law of the Mitakshara, for which no authority has been brought to the attention of their Lordships.

In conclusion, their Lordships find that Jai Narain and his sons did not separate, that no separation between Bishan Dayal and his brothers, Sri Ram and Babu Lal, or between any of them, has been proved, and they will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the Chief Court of the Punjab should be set aside, and the decree of the District Judge of Delhi of the 15th May 1914, should be restored and affirmed. The Defendants (Respondents) must pay the costs of this appeal and of the appeal to the Chief Court.

LORD DUNEDIN.
LORD SHAW.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
1923,
Heard, 10 and 11, December.
1924,
Judgment, 29, January.

MUSAMMAT LAJWANTI and ors., Appellants,
v.
SAFA CHAND, since deceased, and ors., Respondents.

Hindu law—Adverse possession of property by Hindu widow as such—Title acquired, if stridhan or widow's estate—Widow's estate, not a life-estate.

A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life but has a widow's estate in her deceased husband's estate, and if possessing as a widow she possesses adversely to anyone as to certain parcels, she does not acquire the parcels as stridhan but she makes them good to her husband's estate.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 23rd March 1917, of the Chief Court of the Punjab, which reversed a decree, dated the 28th November 1912, of the District Judge of Gurdaspur.

This litigation referred to the estate of Jawahara Mal who died in 1852 leaving three widows.

The Plaintiff-Appellant was a posthumous daughter of the deceased by his second wife and she claimed the property as his daughter and heir after the death of the last surviving widow Jai Devi.

The relationship of the parties appears from the following pedigree :—

Bhim Sen. — Ram Bhuj. — Jawahara Mal. — Gowhur Sen.

Bhim Sen: Hem Raj. Jamiat Raj.
Ram Bhuj: Safa Chand and other sons and grandsons (Defendants).
Gowhur Sen: Sons and grandsons.

Jawahara Mal:
1st wife Mt. Bhagbari, d. 1862. — Hira Nand, (alleged posthumous son).
2nd wife Mt. Lachmi, d. 1900. — Mt. Lajwanti, (posthumous daughter), Plaintiff Appellant.
3rd wife Mt. Jai Devi, d. 1910.

At the commencement of the suit by Musammat Lajwanti the Respondents were in possession of the property, mutation having been effected in their names by the revenue authorities after Jai Devi's death, and they claimed to be rightly entitled thereto as the nearest reversionary heirs of Hira Nand, an alleged posthumous son of Jawahara Mal who had died in infancy.

The District Judge made a decree for possession of half the property in favour of the Appellant and from that decree both parties appealed to the Chief Court of the Punjab, which reversed the decree of the lower Court and dismissed the suit.

The learned Judges held that the birth and death of Hira Nand were established and that consequently the Respondents as his reversionary heirs were entitled to the property.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Wallach for the Appellants contended that even if Hira Nand did exist the Respondents' title had been destroyed by the adverse possession of the widows.

They referred to sec. 28 of the Limitation Act, IX of 1908; Krishna Behari Roy v. Brojeswari Chowdhranee (1) and Sham Koer v. Dah Koer (2).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD DUNEDIN.—Jawahara Mal, a Datt Brahmin, living in the Punjab, died in 1852. He was survived by three wives, but at the time of his death had no children. Shortly after his death, as alleged, his eldest wife had a posthumous son named Hira Nand, who died after a few months. He undoubtedly had a posthumous daughter by his second wife, who is Plaintiff in this action. He had three brothers, the eldest Bhim Sen, who in turn had two sons Hem Raj and Jamiat Raj. The other two brothers were Ram Bhuj and Gowhur Sen, who both had sons and grandsons who are some of the Respondents in this case. He and his brothers were possessed of considerable property, ancestral and otherwise. After his death his widows were entered in the settlement records as proprietors of a fourth share of certain Mouzahs. In 1865 a new settlement was being made, and in furtherance of the entries to be made therein an action was commenced by Hem Raj in 1867 asking that the entries of all parties except himself should be deleted in respect of certain Mouzahs. Hem Raj instituted the action in two capacities. He was sole heir of his father Bhim Sen, his brother Jamiat Raj having renounced all his rights in his favour, and he was also, he alleged, the adopted son of Jawahara Mal and as such his heir. He cited all the members of the joint family and the two widows of Jawahara Mal, the eldest widow having died in 1862. The first question that had to be determined was whether the Mouzahs, as to which he made exclusive claim, were the separate property of Bhim Sen and Jawahara Mal, or whether they were family property. As to certain of the Mouzahs it was determined that they were the separate property acquired by Bhim Sen and Jawahara Mal. That being so he was entitled to one-half as sole heir of his father. His claim to the exclusive possession of the other half depended upon whether he could establish his adoption and this was found against him. Appeals were taken as to different Mouzahs by all the parties concerned. The case went to the Chief Court and the Chief Court finally decided as follows :—

His claim to the one-half was confirmed. As regards his claim to the other half it was said that he had abandoned his claim in virtue of adoption, and it was pointed out that his uncles, on Jawahara Mal's death, would always be preferable to him. That disposed of his claim, but the judgment then went on to deal with the questions that had arisen on the various appeals between the different Defendants. The judgment continued thus :—

"The only other question for decision with regard to these Mouzahs is whether the widows are entitled to hold the half-share left by Jawahara Mal for their lives. They clearly are so entitled as, according to the facts as found above, the fathers of the Appellants who took the inheritance were separate in food and estate from Jawahara Mal at the time of his death."

This final judgment was given in 1869 and the widows were duly entered as proprietors of certain Mouzahs in respect of their widows' estate of the estate of their late husband Jawahara Mal. They entered into possession. The elder of the two—that is to say, the original second widow—lived till 1900, when she died. The Mouzahs were then possessed by the third and surviving widow till her death in 1910. On her death the daughter of the second wife commenced the present suit to have declared her right to the Mouzahs as heir of her father Jawahara Mal. Her claim is opposed by various descendants of Jawahara Mal's brothers who claim as heirs of Hira Nand, to whom the property went on his birth after his father's death, they alleging that the long possession of the widows was only by reason of an arrangement that they should hold the Mouzahs as maintenance. Certain persons who might have been Respondents backed up the Plaintiff and were added as Plaintiffs, a very unnecessary proceeding, as no decree could pass in their favour. As already stated, the Plaintiff denied that Hira Nand ever existed. The District Judge held that Hira Nand never had existed. He then decreed half the property to the Plaintiff and half to certain of the Respondents on grounds which no one supports and which need not here be specified. Both parties appealed. The learned Judges of the Chief Court reversed that judgment and found that Hira Nand did exist, and that in consequence the Respondents are entitled as heirs to his estate. They mention a question as arising on adverse possession of the widows, but they did not really deal with the argument that arises thereon. Appeal has been taken from that decree.

Their Lordships will assume that the judgment is right in saying that Hira Nand did exist, but if he existed, then, in the litigation which arose in 1867 and was finished in 1869, his heirs who either are, or are represented by, the various Respondents in this case, were entitled totally to extrude the widows from the Mouzahs in question. All that the widows were entitled to was maintenance. The allegation that they were allowed to possess the Mouzahs in name of maintenance was not admitted to be proved and further it is straight in the teeth of the judgment of the High Court of 1869 already quoted. It is clear, therefore, that though the judgment may have been wrong there has been adverse possession by the widows from 1869 to 1910 and the Respondents' title is destroyed by sec. 28 of the Limitation Act. It was then argued that the widows could only possess for themselves; that the last widow Devi would then acquire a personal title; and that the Respondents and not the Plaintiff were the heirs of Devi. This is quite to misunderstand the nature of the widows' possession. The Hindu widow, as often pointed out, is not a tenant for life but has a widow's estate—that is to say, a widow's estate in her deceased husband's estate. If possessing as widow she possesses adversely to anyone as to certain parcels, she does not acquire the parcels as stridhan but she makes them good to her husband's estate. The result is the Mouzahs are Jawahara Mal's estate, the Respondents having no title to attack them, and as such the Plaintiff is entitled as heir to her father to take them.

An attempt was made to say that the result as above being founded on the Mitakshara law a different result should be arrived at because of a custom in the Punjab. Their Lordships are not able to consider any such plea because the record was void of averment and of proof of the precise custom which would lead to a different result from that obtained under the Mitakshara law. The result is that the appeal must be allowed and judgment pronounced, in favour of the Plaintiff, with costs here and in the Courts below, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM ORDER

No. 341 OF 1922.

NEWBOULD, J. B. B. GHOSE, J. 1924, Heard, 9 and 10, April. Judgment, 10, April.	KHAJEH SALAUDDIN and ors., Judgment-debtors, Appellants, v. MUSST. AFZAL BEGUM, Decree-holder, Respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 32, r. 4 (2), guardian ad litem, appointment of—Guardian ad litem in the suit, if and when continues as such in execution proceedings—Court of Wards Act (IX, B. C., of 1879), secs. 4, 51, 56—Manager, Court of Wards, when competent to be appointed guardian ad litem for minor judgment-debtors in proceedings to execute decrees of the Original Side—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 183—Revivor extending the period of limitation, order for transmission of decree, if constitutes.

In cases of decrees merely for payment of money, the guardian ad litem appointed in the suit does not continue as such without fresh appointment in the execution proceedings; the litigation having terminated by a final decree, there is no longer any lis pendens.

KINSMAN v. KINSMAN (1) followed.

KRISHNA PROSAD SINGH v. GOSTHA BEHARI KUNDU (2) distinguished.

As soon as proceedings are started in the Mofusil to execute a decree of the Original Side of the High Court, which has been transferred to a Mofusil Court, sec. 51 of the Court of Wards Act becomes applicable, and the Court of Wards' manager is the only person to be appointed guardian ad litem of the minor judgment-debtors in such a proceeding.

The order of the Master on the Original Side for transmission of a decree for execution, with a certificate of non-satisfaction, upon an application for transmission and not for execution, not being a judicial determination that the right to execute the decree still subsisted does not constitute revivor so as to extend the period of limitation under Art. 183 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

CHATTRAPAT SINGH v. SAIT SWAMI MAL (3) followed.

This was an appeal preferred on the 11th September 1922 against an order of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court, Zilla Dacca (Babu Probodh Chandra Basu), dated the 5th June 1922.

The Respondent No. 1 is the transferee by assignment in writing, dated the 10th May 1918, of a decree for dower money which her daughter, since deceased, obtained in the Original Side of the High Court on 24th February 1909 against the Appellants who are minors and the Respondent No. 2 who attained majority before the filing of the execution petition. The transferee applied on 30th April 1920 for transfer of the said decree of High Court for execution to the Court of the District Judge, Dacca. The Master on the Original Side passed an order on 17th May 1920 for such transfer and a copy of the decree together with a certificate of non-satisfaction was sent to the Court of the District Judge for execution. The decree was then transferred to the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court for execution.

KHAJEH SALAUDDIN v. MUSST. AFZAL BEGUM.

The estate and persons of the minor judgment-debtors were under Court of Wards, Dacca. Application for execution was filed on 2nd December 1921 and this was beyond twelve years from the date of decree of the Original Side. In this application for execution the minor judgment-debtors were described as represented by Babu Anil Nath Basu, Solicitor, High Court, who was appointed their guardian ad litem by the High Court in the suit, and the decree was sought to be executed by attachment of the minor judgment-debtors' money in the hands of Mr. H. C. F. Meyer (manager, Dacca Nawab's estate under the Court of Wards). The latter thereupon appeared and preferred objections to the execution under secs. 47 and 151 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that he might be appointed the minors' guardian in the execution case, that the execution could not proceed with Babu Anil Nath as their guardian ad litem and that the application for execution was time-barred under Art. 183 of the 1st Schedule of the Limitation Act. The third judgment-debtor who had attained majority appeared and stated he had no objection to the decree being executed as against him. The execution Court determined that the application for execution was not barred and that Mr. Meyer had no locus standi.

Mr. B. L. Mitter and Babu Surendra Nath Guha for the Appellants.

Babus Probodh Kumar Das and Radhika Ranjan Guha for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

On the 24th February 1909 one Mussammat Johena Begum obtained a decree for Rs. 25,000 and costs against her two minor children and her minor step-son. On the 8th October 1920 an application was made to this Court on the Original Side for an order that the certified copy of this decree together with a certificate of non-satisfaction be transmitted to the Court of the District Judge of Dacca for execution. This application was made by one Afzal Begum who alleged that she was the assignee of the decree. On the 7th May 1920, the Master on the Original Side of this Court transferred the decree to the Dacca Court for execution. With the copy of the decree was forwarded a certificate signed by a Judge of this Court under Or. 21, r. 6. The District Judge of Dacca transferred the execution case to the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court. On the 2nd December 1921 an application for execution of this decree was filed in that Court and that is Execution Case No. 120 of 1920. In that application three judgment-debtors were named and were described as represented by H. C. F. Meyer, manager, Court of Wards, Dacca. The Court of Wards' manager objected to the execution of the decree and his objection was dealt with as Miscellaneous Case No. 42 of 1921. The execution case was kept pending until the disposal of the miscellaneous case. But in the end the assignee of the decree-holder allowed the execution case to be dismissed on the allegation that there was some mistake in the application for execution. On that execution case being dismissed the miscellaneous case was also dismissed. Then on the 2nd December 1921 a second application for execution was made and in this application the minors were described as "being represented by Babu Anil Nath Basu, Vakil, High Court, who has been appointed guardian ad litem by the High Court." This gentleman is a solicitor who had been appointed guardian ad litem of the minors in the Original Side. In this application the assignee of the decree-holder asked for attachment of the money of the minor judgment-debtors in the hands of H. C. F. Meyer, manager of the Court of Wards, Dacca. In this execution case also the manager filed a petition objecting to the execution of the decree which was numbered Miscellaneous Case No. 20 of 1922. Objection was taken on several grounds with most of which we are not concerned in the present appeal. The learned Subordinate Judge held that the manager had no locus standi to represent the minors in this case but he nevertheless went into the merits of his objection and decided amongst others the issue of limitation against him.

This appeal is preferred on behalf of two of the minor judgment-debtors by Mr. Meyer. The third judgment-debtor had attained majority before this appeal was filed. As the appeal has been argued before us the main point that arises is whether the lower Court was right in holding that the applications for execution are proceedings in suit and the guardian ad litem appointed in the original suit would be guardian ad litem in the execution proceeding unless he be removed by an order of the Court and a new guardian ad litem appointed. We are unable to agree that the guardian ad litem appointed in the suit continues as such without a fresh appointment during the execution proceeding. As was observed by Lord Lyndhurst in Kinsman v. Kinsman (1) in order to constitute litis pendentia there must be a continuance of litis contestatio, and therefore if the suit is ended by decree there is no longer any lis pendens. The learned Vakil who appeared for the Respondent was unable to show us any authority to support the proposition that the guardianship by the guardian ad litem appointed during the suit continued after the litigation had been terminated by the final decree. He drew our attention to certain rulings in which it had been held that the guardian for the suit continued during subsequent appeals from the decree. But this is irrelevant to the question whether he continued as such during the execution proceedings. We are speaking now of simple decrees as the decree in this suit for the payment of money and not with relation to mortgage decrees or decrees for delivery of accounts. The only case out of those cited which appears at all relevant on this point is the case of Krishna Prosad Singh v. Gostha Behari Kundu (2). It was there held that where a person is named as the uardian ad litem in the application for execution and notice under sec. 248, C. P. C. is issued upon him as such guardian it must be presumed that he has been appointed guardian by implication by the Court. But to hold that a person who has been named in the execution proceeding as guardian ad litem may under certain circumstances be presumed to have been appointed is a very different matter from holding that the guardian during suit continues to be the guardian without fresh appointment in the execution proceeding. However, this case is clearly distinguishable on the ground that it was decided under the Civil Procedure Code of 1882. Under the Code now in force of 1908 a guardian ad litem of a minor cannot be appointed without his consent and there can therefore now be no presumption of appointment from the mere issue of notice.

We must hold therefore that the appointment by the High Court of Babu Anil Nath Basu as guardian ad litem during suit was no bar to the appointment of the Court of Wards' manager as guardian ad litem in the execution proceeding. We are also of opinion that when the Court of Wards' manager peared and asked to be appointed as guardian ad litem he should have at once been so appointed under the provisions of sec. 51 of the Court of Wards Act. Though this section was not applicable to the original suit in consequence of the provisions of sec. 56 it became applicable as soon as the execution proceedings were started at Dacca. In spite of its finding that the manager had no locus standi, the Court did determine the issue treatin him as a party to the suit; so we can determine whether his findin on this contested issue of limitation was a correct finding. Obviously the second application for execution would be time-barred on the face of it. The Respondent relied on the proceeding resulting from the petition filed by Afzal Begum on the 30th April 1920 as a revivor to extend the period of limitation under Art. 183 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act. We hold that the Full Bench decision in Chattrapat Singh v. Sait Swami Mal (3) is authority for holding that this application was not a revivor. We have called for the original petition from the Original Side of this Court and we find that it contains no prayer for execution of the decree. The only prayer contained in the petition has been set out above. On this petition the order passed was first: - "Let notice issue." Then on the 17th May 1920 there was the following order:- "Upon reading the notice and affidavit of service and upon hearing the attorney for the applicant (the other parties not appearing and no cause being shown) the usual order is made for transmission. Leave granted to proceed with execution." It is contended that this was a judicial determination that the right to execute the see how there could have been any such determination.

The only questions which arose were whether there had been a valid assignment of the decree and whether there had been any recorded satisfaction of the decree. Until the application for execution was made there was no need for the judgment-debtors, even if notice had been served on them, to appear and contest the application. They could well wait until the assignee sought to execute the decree. Further it does not appear that any guardian ad litem was appointed for the minors who could have opposed this application on their behalf if it had been thought necessary to do so. Though the judgment-debtors Appellants are described as infants in the petition no guardian ad litem is named in the petition, and it is clear that no such guardian was appointed by the Court. If as we hold there was no revivor the application for execution was barred by limitation and should have been rejected on that ground.

It is contended that Khajeh Nuruddin who has since attained majority has filed an application in the Lower Court consenting to the decree being executed as against him. No order was passed on that petition and we must hold under r. 4, Or. 41, C. P. C., that the order should be set aside in his favour also.

The result is that this appeal is decreed. The order of the Lower Court is set aside and the application for exe-

The Appellants will get their costs from the decree-holder Respondent in this and in the lower Court. We assess the hearing fee at ten gold mohurs.

A simple suit for rent, if can be converted into one for apportionment of rent—Apportionment suit, necessary parties for.

A co-sharer landlord is not entitled to sue for his own share of the rent without making the other co-sharers parties or without proving separate collection or praying for apportionment of rent, and a simple suit for rent cannot be converted into a suit for apportionment of rent.

A suit for apportionment of rent should be properly framed so as to implead all the co-sharers and the tenants who are necessary parties.

ISSUR CHANDRA v. RAM KRISHNA (1) and SATYES CHANDRA v. HAJI JILFAR RAHMAN (2) referred to and followed.

These were appeals preferred on the 11th of November 1921 against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan (Babu Gopal Das Ghosh), dated the 30th June 1921, affirming a decree of the Additional Munsif at Kalna (Babu Rupamay Chatterjee), dated the 1st of May 1920.

The facts and circumstances of the case will appear from the following judgment of the lower Appellate Court:—

"Plaintiffs say that they are co-sharer landlords having 11/18th share. They allege that on partition, in a civil suit, amongst the co-sharers, the Plaintiffs' claimed share has been established and that they are hence entitled to get the said share of the Defendants' rent. They sue for their own share of the rent in these two suits, alleging that the Defendants hold these lands in suit under these Plaintiffs and their co-sharers and have not paid the rent for 1322 to 1325 Pous.

The defence is that the Plaintiffs are not the landlords of the Defendants. That the co-sharer, who is not a party to this suit, is the landlord. That the suits are barred by res judicata. There was a plea of payment and objection under secs 12 and 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The learned Munsif found from the evidence all these points in favour of the Plaintiffs. But he dismissed these suits because the Plaintiffs are co-sharer landlords and have sued for their own share of rent, without making the other co-sharer party and without proving separate collection of rent or praying for an apportionment of rent.

The partition decree is dated the 13th October 1917. The years in suit are 1322 to 1325. By this decree the Plaintiffs have got 11/18th share of the Defendants' rent and the other co-sharers have got the rest. The allegations in the plaint clearly show that the Plaintiffs are fractional landlords and sue for their own share in these jamas. Of course there is no objection that these suits are not maintainable for the defects for which they have been dismissed. But the defence is an absolute denial of relation of landlord and tenant. There is absolutely no evidence of separate collection or for the matter of that any collection at all by the Plaintiffs. On these facts the case of Protap v. Kamala (3) has no application to these suits. So in my opinion the learned Munsif has rightly dismissed these suits for these defects."

Babus Satya Charan Sinha, Indu Bhusan Roy and Promotho Nath Mukerjee for the Appellants.

Babu D. N. Bagchi for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

These appeals arise out of suits brought by the Plaintiffs for realization of rent from the Defendants to the extent of 11/18th share on the allegation that such share was allotted to them by partition. The defence was that the Plaintiffs were not entitled to recover a share of the rent as there was no separate collection. Both the Courts have found that the Plaintiffs are not entitled to recover rent on the ground that a co-sharer landlord cannot sue for his own share of the rent without making the other co-sharers parties or without proving separate collection or praying for apportionment of rent. The learned vakil who appears for the Appellants contends that these cases may be treated as cases for apportionment of rents. He bases his argument on the partition decree among the owners of the land in which the Plaintiffs' share is found to be

(3) 10 C. W. N. 818 (1906).

11/18ths. We are of opinion that we cannot convert a simple suit for rent into a suit for apportionment of rent. A suit for apportionment of rent should be properly framed so as to implead all the co-sharers and the tenants who are necessary parties. The law with regard to such suit has been laid down in the case of Issur Chandra v. Ram Krishna (1) which has been explained in the case of Satyes Chandra v. Haji Jilfar Rahman (2). The view expressed in the last case is thus stated: "A co-sharer cannot as a matter of right, claim from the tenants what he estimates to be his proportionate share of the rent."

The result is that the view taken by the Courts below is correct and that these appeals are dismissed with costs.

Witness—Omission to read over deposition to witness in presence of accused—Illegality vitiating the trial—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), sec. 360—Defect not cured by sec. 537.

The omission to read over his deposition to a witness, in the presence of the accused or of his pleader, is not an irregularity curable under sec. 537 of the Criminal Procedure Code, but an illegality vitiating the trial.

This was a Rule granted on the 18th March 1924 against the conviction under sec. 161, I. P. C. and s . passed upon the Petitioner by the Magistrate, Alipore (Mr. Abdul Gafiar), dated the 14th December 1923, which order was confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge of Alipore (Mr. G. N. Roy) on the 11th February 1924.

The accused was one of the jurors assisting the Assistant Sessions Judge in trying a case under sec. 304, I. P. C. These proceedings were started at the instance of the senior defence pleader engaged in the case. The latter, Babu Hit Lal Guha, declared that the accused went to his house on the 3rd day of the trial, and asked for a bribe, suggesting that the bribe was for the foreman. A petition was directed to be placed before the trial Judge (Assistant Sessions Judge), and thereafter there was an enquiry by the Assistant Sessions Judge who found that a primâ facie case had been made out. The case was then taken up by the Police Magistrate, Alipore, and resulted in conviction.

It appeared that the depositions of five witnesses had been signed by them, but there were no certificates that the depositions of these witnesses had been read over to them in the presence of the accused or his pleador. The depositions of the remaining two witnesses bore neither their signatures nor any such certificates.

An appeal from the said conviction was dismissed by the Sessions Judge.

Against this the Petitioner moved this Court and obtained the present Rule on the ground, amongst others—that the mandatory provisions of sec. 360, Cr. P. C. not having been complied with, the conviction is bad in law and should be set aside.

.HOSH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Khondkar, Deputy Legal Remem-.ncer, for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

NEWBOULD, J.—The question we have to decide is whether an omission by a Court to comply with the provisions of sec. 360, Cr. P. C. vitiates the trial. The provisions of the section are mandatory, and in the case of two witnesses these provisions were totally disregarded. The test to be applied in deciding "whether mandatory enactments shall be considered directory only or obligatory with an implied nullification for disobedience" is to be found in the judgment of Lord Penzance in the case of Howard v. Bodington (1), following the conclusion expressed by Lord Campbell when sitting as Lord Chancellor in the case of the Liverpool Borough Bank v. Turner (2) to which reference was made by the learned Chief Justice of this Court in Government of Assam v. Sahebulla (3). "In each case you must look to the subject-matter, consider the importance of the provision that has been disregarded, and the relation of that provision to the general object intended to be secured by the Act; and upon a review of the case in that aspect decide whether the matter is what is called imperative or only directory." The general object to be secured by Chap. XXV of the Code, which includes sec. 360, is to ensure the accuracy of the record, and also that the accused should know and understand what evidence is given at the trial. The reading over the evidence to the witness is so essential to the framing of an accurate record that I feel bound to hold that the direction in sec. 360 that the evidence shall be read over to the witness is imperative and not only directory. It follows, therefore, that the omission to read over their evidence to these two witnesses was an illegality which vitiated the trial. It is not necessary to consider whether this omission has in fact caused a failure of justice, since sec. 537 can have no application.

We have reason to believe that the practice which was condemned by Jenkins, C. J., in 1909, when delivering his judgment in Jyotish Chandra Mukerjee v. Emperor (4), still continues. We anticipate that the result of our decision in this case may have serious consequences, but that is no reason why we should fail in our duty to insist that the subordinate Criminal Courts should hold their trials in accordance with the clear provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

Before the last amendment of this Code, in the Statement of Objects and Reasons attached to the first Draft Bill (III of 1914), the following passage occurs—" At present it is believed that sec. 360, which requires the Court to read over the evidence of each witness to him in the presence of the accused or his pleader, is not always observed in practice and occasions unnecessary inconvenience. The amendment " (i.e., cl. 83 of the Bill) provides accordingly for a witness reading over his deposition himself, and further that the deposition need only be read in the presence of the accused if the accused so desires." In the Bill introduced in the Imperial Legislative Assembly on 20th September 1917 this clause was omitted. This Court, when consulted on the Bill, strongly urged that sec. 360 of the Code be amended as was suggested by cl. 83 of the Bill as originally framed.

HIRA LAL GHOSH v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

The Legislature having deliberately decided that the inconvenience caused by the provisions of this section did not justify an alteration of the law on this point is a further reason, if any is necessary, why we should insist on a strict observance of this clear provision of the law.

I have had the advantage of reading the judgment my learned brother is about to deliver. As I am in agreement with the views expressed by him, I have thought it unnecessary to refer in my judgment to other points that were argued before us.

The Rule is made absolute. The conviction of the Petitioner and the sentence passed on him are set aside, and we direct that he be re-tried according to law.

MUKERJI, J.—Provisions corresponding to those contained in sec. 360 of Act V of 1898 have been on the Statute Book ever since the Code of Criminal Procedure came into existence in 1861. The section corresponds to the section bearing the same number in Act X of 1882 and to sec. 339 of Act X of 1872 and appeared in Act XXV of 1861 as sec. 198. In the last mentioned Act there was a provision contained in sec. 199 for attaching a memorandum to the evidence of each witness, signed by the Magistrate and stating that the evidence was read over to the witness in a language which he understood, naming the language in which it was explained, and if the fact was so, that the witness had acknowledged the evidence to be correct; and when the evidence had not been taken down by the Magistrate with his own hand, the memorandum was to further state that the evidence was taken down in the presence and hearing of the Magistrate and under his personal direction and superintendence. This provision was subsequently repealed, and a memorandum is no longer necessary. Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872 the evidence was to be read over, when the personal attendance of the accused was dispensed with, in the presence of his agent, while later on the word "agent" was substituted by the word "pleader." Under the Codes of 1861 and 1872, if the evidence was taken down in a language different from that in which it was given, and the witness did not understand the language in which it was taken down, the witness might require the evidence to be interpreted to him in the language in which it was given or in a language which he understood; by the Act of 1882 it was enacted that the evidence so taken as aforesaid was to be interpreted in that way, and the necessity of a request on the part of the witness was done away with. Inspite of a proposed amendment the law has undergone no alteration in the amendments effected by Act XXIII of 1923.

Sub-sec. (1) of sec. 360 provides that the evidence shall be read over to the accused or his pleader and shall, if necessary, be corrected. Evidently such correction may be made at the instance of the Court itself or of the accused or his pleader or anybody else; there is no restriction on that score. Sub-sec. (2) deals with corrections or memorandum to be made where the witness denies the correctness of the record. Sub-sec. (3) makes a provision so that the witness may understand what has been recorded. If the provisions of this section, as well as of sec. 361 are strictly observed, the accused as well as the witness will understand exactly what the evidence has been, and will be in a position to see that a correct record has been made of it. Apart from omissions or inaccuracies that may occur in making the record, a witness, when the evidence is read over to him, may sometimes desire to supplement his answer or modify it or explain the sense of it. Before a deposition is closed a witness should be given an opportunity of explaining and correcting any contradictions it may contain, and only the statement which the witness finally declares to be the true one must be taken to be the statement he intended to make. The accused should not be deprived of the benefit of this opportunity being given to the witness. Moreover, if any corrections or alterations or additions are to be made, it is only fair that they should be made to the knowledge of the accused, for it may sometimes happen that he may have something to say as to why they should or should not be made. These considerations lead me to dissent from the view that has sometimes been taken to the effect that sec. 360, Cr. P. C. was enacted only for the protection of the witness. That undoubtedly was one of the objects: but the other object, namely, to safeguard the interests of the accused is equally clear from the wording of the section itself.

The wording of the section is mandatory. The object of the provision being to ensure the accuracy of the record, and also that the accused should know and understand the evidence that is given at the trial, the provisions must be held to be obligatory and not merely directory. In the case of Jyotish Chandra Mukerjee v. Emperor (4) a Sessions Judge refused to follow the provisions of the section on the ground that it would involve a great waste of time and observed: "The section seems to me directory and not obligatory. If the witness detects a mistake he can come back and say so. This is the universal practice in Sessions Courts, my experience extending to about six such Courts." Optima est legum interpres consuetudo. Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C. J. observed that he did not agree with the view, for the custom indicated by the learned Judge could not alter the plain words of the Act.

The failure to comply with the provisions of the section affects both the witness and the accused, as indicated above: and the effect of such failure or non-compliance may be judged from two distinct points of view, viz., as affecting the witness himself and as affecting the accused.

So far as it affects the witness in a subsequent trial of the witness himself, arising out of the deposition so recorded, there is some conflict of judicial opinion as regards the effect of a failure to observe the strict provisions of this section. A tendency is seen in some of the rulings to disregard an informality or irregularity, which, however patent, is not calculated to throw doubt upon the authenticity of the deposition, especially where the witness has admitted its correctness and has not been prejudiced by the omission to comply strictly with the provisions. In cases, however, where all the guarantees of authenticity, which the law prescribes, have been violated, there is a consensus of opinion that the deposition will not be admitted in evidence. As instances of the former class may be quoted the cases of Rakhal Chandra Laha v. Emperor (5) and Bogra v. Emperor (6). As instances of the latter class may be cited the cases of Emperor v. Jogendra Nath Ghose (7) and Mohendra Nath Misser v. Emperor (8). So far as the witness himself is concerned the considerations which arise are of a wholly different character from those which arise in the case of the accused, and they need not be referred to here. Nor again is it profitable to refer to the authorities which deal with the effect of non-compliance with the provisions of Or. 18, r. 5, C. P. C.

Turning now to the effect of the non-compliance of the proceedings as against the accused, it is obvious in the first place that such non-compliance deprives the accused of a very valuable right which the law secures for him. In requiring that the reading over shall be done in the presence of the accused or his pleader the legislature obviously intended to give the accused or his pleader an opportunity of checking the correctness of the deposition. That this was the intention has been held by this Court in the case of Emperor v. Jogendra Nath Ghose (7). In that case the record had been handed over to a witness to read the deposition after it had been recorded, and this Court observed as follows: "We are of opinion that this is not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of sec. 360, sub-sec. (1) of the Criminal Procedure Code, inasmuch as that sub-section requires that the evidence should be read over in the presence, that is to say, in the hearing of the accused, in order that the accused should have an opportunity of correcting any mistake in it." That being so, failure to comply with the provisions may deprive the accused of advantages which may accrue to him by the observance thereof. In the case of Queen v. Issur Raut (9), where, under the Code of 1861, the Magistrate had recorded in English the depositions of witnesses given in the vernacular, the witnesses not understanding English, and there was no memorandum such as was required by sec. 199 of the Act that the depositions had been explained to the witnesses in a language which they understood, this Court (Kemp and Glover, JJ.) observed as follows:—"Such being the case the evidence was not recorded as the law directs. We are also unable to understand how the prisoners could cross-examine witnesses whose evidence-in-chief was taken down in a language foreign to the accused, and of which no attempt at explanation was made. There has therefore been an error in law in the procedure of the case by which the accused have been materially prejudiced, and this Court acting as a Court of Revision quashes the trial and sentence and directs the prisoners to be discharged. We also direct the Sessions Judge to call the attention of the Cantonment Magistrate to the provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure which relate to the examination of witnesses and accused parties and to enjoin upon him a strict observation of these provisions which are the only guarantee this Court can have that the examination is conducted fairly and properly." In In the matter of Mahesh Chandra Banerjee (10), Norman, J., refrained from expressing any opinion as to the correctness or otherwise of the above decision observing as follows:—"I may say, however, that I should require to re-consider the case further before I can fully assent to the ruling on this subject in Queen v. Issur Raut (9)." In the case of In re Okhoy Kumar (11), Garth, C. J. and Maclean, J., held that sec. 339 of Act X of 1872 being for the protection of witnesses only, the fact that witnesses did not understand their deposition when read over, although they may not have required them at the time to be interpreted, affords no grounds for an application by the accused to set aside a conviction. The case of Queen v. Issur Raut (9) does not appear to have been brought to the notice of the learned Judges who decided the case of In re Okhoy Kumar (11). Moreover, it would appear that in that case the depositions were in point of fact read over in English, and the pleader for the prisoners, and one of the prisoners himself understood English. There was, therefore, a compliance with a portion of sec. 339 while the last part of it, which enabled the witnesses to require the depositions to be translated in a language which they understood, was not complied with; but in fact, there was no such requisition by the witnesses. The language of this part of the section which corresponded to sub-sec. (3) of sec. 360 of Act V of 1898 was widely different, as has already been pointed out. The Madras High Court (Collins, C. J. and Parker, J.) in the case of Re: Singiri Eradu (12) set aside the acquittal of an accused on the ground that the trial was vitiated by a material irregularity when the deposition of each witness was read over to him while the examination of the next witness was proceeding, it being held that under the circumstances the accused could not pay attention to the evidence so read over. This decision was referred to by Miller, J., in the case of Bogra v. Emperor (6) and it was observed as follows:—"It was held by Collins, C. J. and Parker, J., in Re: Singiri Eradu (12) that procedure identical with that adopted by the Sessions Judge in the present case is materially irregular. The deposition taken in the Sessions Court was irregularly taken, and it may be that the conviction based upon such evidence could not be sustained." In the case of Rakhal Chandra Laha v. Emperor (5), where the deposition of a witness was read over in the presence of one out of several accused persons, Jenkins, C. J. and Mookerjee, J., observed as follows:—"In the case before us, so far at least as one of the original accused persons was concerned, the deposition was read over in the presence of his pleader, and was undoubtedly admissible in evidence as against that accused." In the case of Jyotish Chandra Mukerjee v. Emperor (4), Jenkins, C. J., held that the omission to read over the depositions under sec. 360, Cr. P. C., under the special circumstances of that case, was not fatal. It does not appear from the report what those special circumstances were; but it is evident from the judgment itself that objection on the ground of non-compliance was taken on behalf of the Crown and it does not appear that the accused relied upon it as a ground of their appeal.

There is, therefore, abundant support for the proposition that the accused is vitally interested in the due compliance with the provisions of sec. 360, Cr. P. C., and a failure in that respect amounts to a material irregularity which ordinarily must be taken as causing him prejudice. Such a material irregularity proceeding from the disregard of the express provision of the law, is, in my judgment, nothing short of an illegality, and, as such, not curable under sec. 537, Cr. P. C. The same view has been taken in the case of Haro Nath Malo v. Sonai Mia (13), where the depositions were not read over to the witnesses at all on the ground that it was not the practice to do so except in "Sessions triable cases."

In the case before us the evidence was not read over to the witnesses at all. The depositions of five of the prosecution witnesses bear at their foot the signatures of the witnesses and we are asked to presume from those signatures alone that the witnesses had actually read the depositions before they put their signatures down; and as regards two of the prosecution witnesses their signatures even do not appear, and it is admitted that, so far as their depositions are concerned, there was no attempt made to comply even with the spirit of the section. There is, therefore, no escape in the present case, from the conclusion that the whole trial was conducted in utter disregard of the imperative provisions of the law as contained in sec. 360, Cr. P. C. and was, therefore, a nullity.

I accordingly agree in the order passed by my learned brother that the Rule should be made absolute, the conviction of and the sentence passed on the Petitioner set aside and the Petitioner tried again in accordance with law.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. NO. 333 OF 1924.

NEWBOULD, J. CHAKRAVARTI, J. 1924, 26, June

BISSESWAR, Accused, Petitioner, v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), secs. 239, 181 and 182—Place of trial—Jurisdiction—Magistrate, if has power to try offences committed outside his jurisdiction in pursuance of conspiracy entered into within his jurisdiction—Joinder of such offences with those committed within jurisdiction, if permissible.

If a conspiracy is entered into in District A and acts are committed in pursuance of that conspiracy in District B, the Magistrate of District A can try the offence of conspiracy but cannot try the accused in the same trial for offences committed outside his District.

Sec. 239, Cr. P. C. cannot give jurisdiction to a Magistrate who has not jurisdiction under the provisions of any of the sections in Chap. XV of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The mere fact that the offences could have been tried jointly under sec. 239, Cr. P. C., if committed within the jurisdiction of a Magistrate, will not give him jurisdiction to try the offences committed outside his jurisdiction.

ABDUL SALIM v. KING-EMPEROR (1) referred to.

This was a Rule granted on the 28th April 1924 against the conviction of the Petitioner and the sentence passed on him by the Police Magistrate of Alipore (A. Gaffur, Esq.), on the 6th February 1924, which order had been confirmed on appeal by the Sessions Judge of Alipore (G. N. Roy, Esq.), on the 31st March 1924.

The facts are briefly as follows:—One Bisseswar along with others were charged with conspiracy to commit theft and of receiving stolen property and assisting in concealment thereof and were tried jointly by the Police Magistrate of Alipore. The conspiracy was alleged to have been entered into at Kidderpore and Behala within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Magistrate and the latter offences were committed in respect of some goods in transit from the Howrah Station to Calcutta and so within the jurisdiction of the Howrah Magistrate or the Chief Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta. Ultimately all the accused were acquitted except Bisseswar, who was convicted of receiving stolen property and assisting in concealment thereof under secs. 411 and 414, I. P. C. Against this conviction Bisseswar obtained the present Rule.

Mr. Camell and Babu Satindra Nath Mukerjee for the Petitioner.

Mr. Khundkar, Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This Rule raises an interesting point on the question of jurisdiction. The facts as found so far as they are necessary for dealing with this point are as follows :—The Petitioner and others were charged with conspiracy to commit theft and also offences punishable under secs. 411 and 414, I. P. C. They were also charged with specific offences punishable under the two last sections. Ultimately all the accused except the Petitioner were acquitted. The Petitioner was also acquitted on the charge of conspiracy but convicted of the offences punishable under secs. 411 and 414. The property which was found to be stolen property was abstracted from a consignment of goods on their way from the Howrah Station to the business premises of Messrs. Allen Brothers and Company. The important point in this connection is that during this transit the goods were always in the jurisdiction of either the Howrah Magistrate or the Chief Presidency Magistrate of Calcutta. The conspiracy between the accused was alleged to have been entered into at Kidderpore and Behala and other places. Kidderpore and Behala are within the jurisdiction of Alipore and the case w[illegible] tried by the Alipore Police Magistrate and the appeal heard by the Sessions Judge of Alipore. The lower Courts relying on the decision of this Court to which one of us was a party in Abdul Salim v. King-Emperor (1) have held that the conspiracy charge although not established rendered the joint trial of all the accused on these charges legal. But the lower Courts have overlooked the important point of difference between the facts of this case and the present case. It is not now disputed that on the authority of this ruling the accused in this case could have been jointly tried if all the offences with which they were charged had been alleged to have been committed within the territorial jurisdiction of the Magistrate who tried the case. But what is urged is that sec. 239 cannot give jurisdiction to a Magistrate who has not jurisdiction under the provisions of any of the sections in Chap. XV of the Code of Criminal Procedure; in other words, the point may be put in this way :—If a conspiracy is entered into in District A and acts are committed in pursuance of that conspiracy in District B, the Magistrate of District A can try the conspiracy but cannot try the accused in the same trial for acts committed outside his District. We think that the proposition is correct and that unless there is something to be found in Chap. XV which would enable the Magistrate in Alipore to try the accused for offences committed outside his jurisdiction the mere fact that the offences could have been tried jointly under sec. 239, Cr. P. C., if committed within his jurisdiction, will not give him jurisdiction to try them. It is suggested that sec. 182 would give the Magistrate jurisdiction, but we are unable to hold that it can be applied to the facts of the present case. The only clause which it is suggested might make them triable is the clause which runs thus:—Where the offence consists of several acts done in different local areas it may be inquired into or tried by a Court having jurisdiction over any of such local areas. But none of the offences charged consisted of several acts of which some were done in the local area over which the trying Magistrate had jurisdiction. The conspiracy was complete on the agreement and the acts done in other local areas over which the trying Magistrate had no jurisdiction, were not part of the conspiracy. Also the acts of receiving or retaining stolen property charged against this Petitioner were not acts done within the jurisdiction of the Alipore Magistrate. Cl. (3) of sec. 181 has also been referred to. But this is of no assistance to the prosecution, since although now the offences of theft and the possession of stolen property may be enquired into by a Court having jurisdiction either where the offence of theft was committed or where the property was possessed, in the present case the allegation is that both the theft and the possession by the Petitioner were outside the Alipore jurisdiction.

(1) 26 C. W. N. 680 (1921).

BISSESWAR v. THE KING-EMPEROR.

Taking this view we must make this Rule absolute and set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the Petitioner on the ground that the trying Court had no jurisdiction. His bail-bond will be discharged. This order will be no bar to the authorities taking further steps for the prosecution of the Petitioner on charges under secs. 411 and 414, I. P. C., in a Court having jurisdiction if they think it necessary to do so.

[APPEAL FROM THE JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER, CENTRAL PROVINCES.]

LORD DUNEDIN.
LORD PHILLIMORE.
SIR JOHN EDGE.
MR. AMEER ALI.
SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.
1923,
Heard, 23 and 25, October.
Judgment, 10, December.

RAMLAL HARGOPAL, Appellant,
v.
KISANCHANDRA and ors., Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs 104 (2), 109 and Sch II, para. 20—Award of arbitrator concerning matters outside the Court's jurisdiction—Court, if may entertain application to file the award—Proceedings void—High Court's order on appeal from decision of first Court filing or refusing to file award—Privy Council, appeal to, if lies—Jurisdiction, objection to, entertained and given effect to by Judicial Committee though not urged in India.

Sec. 104 (2) of the Civil Procedure Code which precludes a second appeal from an order passed in appeal from a decision filing or refusing to file an arbitrator's award deals with internal appeals within the limits of British India. There is nothing in sec. 104 to take away the general right of appealing to the Crown given by sec. 109 of the Code.

Held—That as there was no substantial question decided by the award which affected property within the jurisdiction of the Court in which application was made to file the award, the proceedings before it and of the High Court on appeal were liable to be set aside as incompetent.

Though the objection was not urged in the Courts in India, the Judicial Committee felt bound to take notice of it as it was an objection to the jurisdiction and to give effect to it when it was manifest on the facts admitted and proved that there was defect of jurisdiction.

RAMLAL HARGOPAL v. KISANCHANDRA.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 13th January 1919, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces (Berar jurisdiction) which reversed a decree, dated the 22nd December 1917, of the second Additional District Judge of Amraoti.

The appeal arose out of an application, under sec. 525 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882 (sec. 20 of Sch. II of the Civil Procedure Code, 1908), made by the contesting Respondents, that an award made in a matter referred to arbitration without the intervention of the Court be filed.

The facts leading up to the application may be stated shortly as follows.

The ancestor of the parties, Mahanandram Puranmal, founded a temple in Hyderabad, Deccan.

In 1897 Government made grants in favour of the temple of three villages, two of them in Berar and the third in Hyderabad State.

In 1907 the 1st and 2nd Respondents and a deceased brother filed a suit for a declaration that they were co-trustees of the temple with the Appellant and for an account.

That suit was dismissed by the District Judge on the ground that the sanction of the Commissioner had not been obtained for its institution. The members of the family thereafter submitted their differences to arbitration.

The arbitrator made his award on the 22nd April 1907, and it was signed by all the parties to the dispute.

On the 25th September 1907 the Respondents applied under sec. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, to the Court of the Additional District Judge, East Berar, Amraoti, praying for the award to be filed in Court.

The application was opposed by the Appellant who contended inter alia that the jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the arbitration meant jurisdiction over the whole of the property comprised in the award, and as the property in respect of which the award was made was situated partly within, and partly without, the territorial jurisdiction of the Court, there was no jurisdiction in the Court to entertain the application; and that the suit related to a public charitable trust and could not be maintained as it had been instituted without the previous sanction of the Commissioner.

The District Judge decided both these contentions against the Appellant, but he held that the award as originally made had been superseded and should not be allowed to be filed and he dismissed the application.

On appeal the Court of the Judicial Commissioner held that the villages in suit formed trust properties created for purposes of a religious or charitable nature but that sec. 539 of the Civil Procedure Code, 1882, was "no bar to a suit asking for joint management of endowed property by the descendants of the founder, and that there could be a valid reference to arbitration in such a case." They accordingly allowed the appeal and directed that "the award with the exception of the portion which has been admitted to be ultra vires should be filed."

The facts of the case, the course of the litigation in the Indian Courts and the arguments of Counsel before the Board are fully set out in the judgment of the Judicial Committee.

RAMLAL HARGOPAL v. KISANCHANDRA.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PHILLIMORE.—One Mahanandram Puranmal, many years ago, opened a shop in Hyderabad in the dominions of the Nizam and carried on a considerable business, which has been continued to this day by his descendants under his name as the name of the firm. He also founded two temples within the dominions of the Nizam, and a third in British India, not however—and this is important—within the District of Berar. Three jagir villages, one within the Nizam dominions and two within British India and the District of Berar, were subsequently granted by Government for the support of the worship in these temples.

Puranmal was succeeded by his son Premsukh, who had three sons, Ramgopal, Hargopal and Chimanram. The family, however, has remained undivided, and the business and landed property have remained in common.

Hargopal seems to have died before his father Premsukh; and on the death of the latter, Hargopal's son, Ramlal, the present Appellant, took up the management of the temples, the three villages granted for their support and the family property and business, and his name was entered in the various registers accordingly.

In 1907, the representatives of the other two families brought a suit against Ramlal claiming, that they might be declared co-trustees of one of the temples and entitled to exercise control of the income and expenditure of the two jagir villages in Berar. The District Judge of East Berar in whose Court the suit was brought, dismissed it, holding that he had no jurisdiction to try it. An appeal was threatened, and then the parties came together and agreed to refer all their disputes to the award of their family priest. He heard the parties, and finally on the 22nd April 1907, made his award which was countersigned by all the parties to the dispute. It is a long document, comprising 57 paragraphs, some narrative, some dispositive. He classified the disputes under four heads :—

(1) Relating to the management of the three jagir villages.

(2) To the management of the three religious institutions.

(3) The estate or family property descended from the ancestor Puranmal.

(4) "Monthly alllowances and other miscellaneous matters."

This last head included questions relating to a field bought by the son of Ramlal, payment of arrears of allowances, and sums to be given for the expenses of marriages and funerals.

The general tenor of the award was the recognition of the equal rights of the three families and the institution of committees of three, comprising a representative of each family, giving in each case precedence to some one named member, making Ramlal the principal or managing member of the committee for the jagir villages, and a representative of one of the other branches, managing member of the committee for the religious institutions and provisions of a similar nature with regard to the family property: the effect being to establish the rights of all the branches with certain advantages of precedence and priority given to Ramlal.

Notwithstanding that Ramlal had submitted all matters in dispute to the arbitrator and had signed the award in apparent consent to its provisions, he refused to carry it out, and thereupon the application which is the subject of this appeal, was made in the Court of the District Judge of East Berar.

It was an application on behalf of the Respondents under sec. 525 of the Code of Civil Procedure that the award should be filed in Court, and it was resisted by the present Appellant on a great number of grounds. Upon this there followed a litigation which by reason both of its complexity and its length, is open to very serious criticism as it carefully avoided a question which lay in limine, and which if decided as it ought to have been would have saved all further proceedings. In a matter which ought to be of a short and summary nature, no less than seven separate orders or decrees have been made and judgments have been delivered and read to their Lordships.

The application for an award having under the section to be treated as a suit, pleadings were delivered by both parties and issues were raised. Some of the objections to the filing of the award have been finally disposed of, a remarkable one being the contention that the family priest was not the real arbitrator, but a name put in as a cloak for or benami for that of a Judge of a Hyderabad Court, and that the Judge did not actually take part, as according to the real agreement of the parties it was intended that he should.

The other serious issues were that as the matter concerned a public charity, there could be no reference to arbitration; that the District Court of Berar had not jurisdiction over the matter to which the award related and was therefore the wrong Court to which to make application under sec. 525; that the previous decision of the District Court of Berar had already determined these two points in favour of the present Appellant and thus had made each of them res judicata as between the parties; that the previous consent of the Commissioner of Berar was necessary, and lastly that the arbitrator had exceeded his powers by having made orders for which he had no warranty given to him by the submission to arbitration.

The District Judge in his first judgment delivered on the 31st May 1910, confined himself to deciding certain issues, of which the material ones were number 2, the question of jurisdiction. and number 15, the question of the necessity of the sanction of the Commissioner before the suit, as being a suit relating to a charity, could be maintained. On issue number 2, he decided that he had jurisdiction, and as regards issue number 15, he said that the point had not been up to that date properly raised.

The matter then came before another District Judge to determine whether, as contended, there could be no award as the property constituted a public charitable trust, and as an additional point whether this question had not already been determined adversely to the applicant by the decision in the previous suit and, therefore, must be deemed res judicata. Some other issues also came before the Judge, but the only one he deemed it necessary to decide was that concerning res judicata. This point he decided adversely to the applicant, and therefore he dismissed the suit. His decree is dated the 30th April 1913.

There was then an appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of the Central Provinces. The learned Judges said that there were many pleas in defence, but that they were at present only concerned with the reasons which led the Judge of the Court below to dismiss the suit. They even declined to determine whether the trust was or was not a public charitable trust, saying that the only thing they were going to decide was whether the District Judge was right in holding the question to be res judicata. They held that he was wrong and remanded the suit to the District Court. This was on the 30th June 1915.

When the case next came on before another District Judge, he addressed himself to the question of the jurisdiction of the Court, and as on the previous occasion, as to whether this point had been already decided in the former suit and had become res judicata. These points he decided in favour of the Appellant on the 3rd December 1915.

The next stage of the case seems to have been reached on the 2nd September 1917, when another District Judge decided that the trust was not one for public purposes, and that in any case the awarded that the trust was not one for public right in respect of such a trust; but he held that the arbitrator had exceeded his powers, and that a subsequent agreement between the parties, or the subsequent action of the arbitrator, had superseded or vitiated the award, and therefore the suit was dismissed again.

From this judgment there was another appeal, and the Court of the Judicial Commissioner gave its decision on the 13th January 1919.

The first point dealt with in this judgment was the question whether the arbitrator had exceeded his powers. It is here necessary to state that the arbitrator, when dealing with the management of the three religious institutions, did not confine himself to settling the disputes between the three branches of the family, but proceeded to express his opinion that the business of such institutions does not go on well as long as they are not placed in the hand of a public committee, and that it seemed to him proper that they should be made over to a public committee after four years' time, namely, in 1911; and he accordingly directed that in 1911 a public committee should be appointed, and that the management of the temple should be entrusted to it, and the movable and the immovable property made over to it.

As to this direction, the Appeal Judges said that the parties were agreed that this clause, meant to secure the rights of the public, was ultra vires, inasmuch as the object of the reference was to settle which members of the family should have the management, and the parties did not intend to surrender their rights to a public body. But they proceeded to hold that these clauses were separable from the rest, and that under the new Code of Civil Procedure of 1908 the Court could separate them and enforce the rest.

As to the point that the award was vitiated or superseded by the action of the arbitrator or the agreement of the parties, they held that in substance the parties had agreed to an amended or additional reference upon which the amended award followed, and that therefore it was not bad.

The Judges next held that a suit to remedy a particular infringement of an individual private right in regard to trust property did not fall under sec. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 and therefore did not require the sanction of the Commissioner of Berar before it was begun. They then dealt with some minor points and with the extraordinary objection that the family priest was not the true arbitrator intended by the parties —points which have not been relied upon before their Lordships. They said that these were all the matters which had been argued before them, and they therefore thought that the award—with the exception of the portion admitted to be ultra vires— should be filed, and they allowed the appeal.

Even then, the matter was not ended, because the parties objecting to the award presented an application for a review of the judgment, urging first that the award so far as it was binding, dealt only with the management of the temples up to 1911, and as this year had long since been past, the award was now fruitless; secondly, that at any rate the award left undetermined the question of management after 1911 and was therefore incomplete; and thirdly, that the arbitrator had exceeded his powers because he was only authorised to deal with the management and not with the legal transfer of the property, and he had ordered mutation of names upon the revenue register.

As to these matters, the Appeal Court said that their view of the award was that while intending to provide for a public committee which should have begun in 1911, the arbitrator had also provided for the management of the institutions by divers members of the family until that committee should be appointed, and that if the provision for the appointment of a public committee was ultra vires, the management would remain with the family in the manner directed by the award. They also held that the arbitrator had implied authority to direct the mutation of names, and they dismissed the appeal.

In the application for review which contained also other matters which the Court seems to have passed by as futile—as they probably were—there occurs the following paragraph 8 :—

"That the pleas of absence of jurisdiction and maintainability of the suit in the absence of the sanction of the Advocate-General should have been decided in favour of the applicant."

This paragraph is not noticed in the judgment upon review which was given on the 3rd September 1919.

As regards the maintainability of the suit in the absence of the sanction of the Advocate-General, whose place for this purpose is taken by the Commissioner for Berar, that matter had been in substance already determined by the High Court in its first judgment, though it is true that technically the Court only applied itself to the contention that this point was already determined as between the parties and had become res judicata.

As to the plea of absence of jurisdiction, it seems very uncertain what the applicants for review intended to convey by this phrase. They may have meant that the Court at Berar was not the Court which had jurisdiction to file the award. They may have meant that there would be no jurisdiction unless the Commissioner for Berar gave his previous sanction. They may have meant that the Court had no jurisdiction because the award dealt with a public charity. At any rate, their advocate apparently failed, among the mass of points which he must have presented on review, to bring the question of jurisdiction as such before the Court on this last occasion; and accordingly there is no pronouncement upon it, and their Lordships are left in this respect without assistance. From this final order the present appeal was brought.

For the Respondents, a preliminary objection was taken. It was said that by virtue of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908, no appeal lay from this particular order or decree to His Majesty in Council, unless special leave should be given by virtue of His Majesty's general prerogative. Under sec. 104 of the Code, no appeal is to lie from any order passed in appeal on the question of filing or refusing to file an award, and it was said that the order of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner was an order passed in appeal from the decision of the District Judge refusing to file the award. To this it was replied that under sec. 109, an appeal lies to His Majesty in Council from any decree or final order passed on appeal by any Court of final Appellate jurisdiction, such as the Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

It was contended for the Respondents that if these two clauses were in seeming variance, the particular would supersede the general, and that sec. 104 dealt with particular cases.

Their Lordships think that the objection fails. They construe the provision in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 104 as dealing with internal appeals within the limits of British India. The application to file an award may be made in the Court of the Subordinate Judge. If any dispute arises, and the amount at stake is below a certain figure, the appeal would lie from him to the District Judge. If it were above that figure, it would lie to the High Court. The provision is intended to prevent any appeal beyond the District Judge where the sum in dispute is small. In this respect it runs parallel with sec. 100, which limits second appeals from Appellate decrees by District Judges. That section deals with decrees only while the decisions on these arbitration questions are styled orders. There is therefore nothing in sec. 104 to take away the general right of appealing to the Crown given by sec. 109, and the preliminary objection taken on behalf of the Respondents fails.

The points urged before their Lordships were as follows :—

(1) The District Judge of Berar had no jurisdiction to deal with the award, this point being sub-divided into two branches —absence of local territorial jurisdiction and absence of previous sanction by the Commissioner.

(2) As supplementary to 1, that no argument to the contrary could be listened to by their Lordships because the points had previously been determined between the parties and were res judicata.

(3) That the management of a public religious trust could not be referred to arbitration.

(4) That the arbitrator had exceeded his powers.

(5) That the subsequent variations vitiated the award.

It is clear that if the objection that the Court of the District Judge of Berar had no jurisdiction over the subject-matter of the award, as required by para. 20 of the 2nd Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure, is good, no further points can arise. This point was taken on behalf of the present Appellant at the outset, but seems nevertheless never to have been directly insisted upon during the numerous subsequent proceedings. No doubt it was urged that the point must be deemed to have been already decided in favour of the Appellant in the previous suit. But their Lordships have not been referred to any place in these lengthy proceedings where they might find an argument in favour of the Appellant's contention, if it were to be decided upon as res integra. It seems clear to their Lordships that the Judges in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner never imagined that they had to deal with the point, and it is not—except in the indirect and derivative way already mentioned—taken in the printed case lodged on behalf of the Appellant before this Board.

RAMLAL HARGOPAL v. KISANCHANDRA.

If it was any other point except a point of jurisdiction, their Lordships would pay no attention to it; but they are bound to take notice of an objection to the jurisdiction, however late in the day it may be raised, if it be that on the facts admitted or proved it is manifest that there is a defect of jurisdiction; and their Lordships find this defect in the present case.

It was contended on behalf of the Appellant that if an award relates to more than one subject-matter and only one is within the jurisdiction of the Court, it cannot be filed in that Court; in fact, that it can be filed in no Court, because no one Court would have jurisdiction over the whole subject-matter. Their Lordships deem it unnecessary to rest their judgment on any such general proposition. In their view there is no substantial question decided by the award which affects property within the jurisdiction of the Berar Court. No one of the three temples is within that jurisdiction, and two of them are within the dominions of the Nizam and outside British India. A large part of the award relates to family questions and money payments to be made by members of the family; and all the members of the family are within the Nizam's dominions. It was urged that two of the villages which form the principal endowments of the temples are situated in Berar. But their Lordships cannot find that there was any dispute concerning the ownership or management of the villages nor any denial that the revenues must be appropriated to the three temples.

It can hardly be said that there was any dispute as to the application of the revenues, but if there were any, it was a dispute as to their application after they had reached Hyderabad.

It is the duty of the Court in which an award has been filed, to proceed to pronounce judgment according to the award, and upon that a decree is to follow.' Their Lordships cannot see that any decree could be framed upon this award which would affect any person or property within the jurisdiction. The result is that on this ground the appeal succeeds, and the judgment of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner must be reversed, and the suit must be dismissed; but inasmuch as this point was never properly insisted upon in the Courts below, or, indeed, in the Appellant's printed case here, their Lordships are of opinion that there should be no costs either of this appeal or in the Courts below, and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

That the tenant could be ejected only after a notice as contemplated in sec. 49 (b) and in execution of a decree.

Held further—That the stipulation in the compromise for ejectment on default of payment of the premium was of no avail, because in view of the provisions of sec. 178, sub-sec. (1), cl. (c), it was not open to the landlord and the tenant to contract themselves out of the provision of sec. 49.

A compromise, followed by a consent decree, is none the less a contract between the parties and subject to the incidents of a contract because there is superadded the command of the Judge.

This principle is in essence recognised in sec. 147A, Bengal Tenancy Act, providing for a compromise of suits between landlords and tenants.

This was an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from a judgment of the Hon'ble Mr. Justice Newbould, dated the 14th May 1923, in Appeal from Appellate Decree No. 1172 of 1921 against the decision of Babu Lalbehari Chatterjee, Subordinate Judge, Hughli, dated the 17th February 1921, confirming that of Babu S. P. Bose, Munsif, Serampore, dated the 17th June 1920.

The judgment of Newbould, J., was as follows :—

NEWBOULD, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment. The Plaintiff's case is that he is a raiyat and the principal Defendants held under him as under-raiyats. In 1907 the Plaintiff brought a suit for the ejectment of the Defendants after notice under sec. 49 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That suit ended in a compromise.

The only question in this appeal is what is the proper interpretation of the decree passed embodying that compromise. Admittedly the Plaintiff has served no fresh notice on the Defendants before the institution of this suit. He can only eject the Defendants if cl. (a) of sec. 49 is applicable, that is to say, on the expiration of the term of a lease. In other words, the Plaintiff's case depends on whether the effect of the solenamah decree was that of a written lease for a term of years. The main provisions of the solenamah are that the Defendant No. 1 shall pay at the end of each 9 years a selami of Rs. 44 if he cultivates pan by other people and a selami of Rs. 22 if he or his sons or grandsons, etc., cultivate pan themselves. It further stipulates that if the Defendant does not comply with the stipulation, that is, if he makes default in the payment of selami the Plaintiff will be entitled to eject the Defendant from the jote and to get khas possession of the lands in suit. In the deed of compromise itself there is no reference to any renewal of lease.

On behalf of the Plaintiff-Appellant reliance is placed on the words "and on payment of such money shall enjoy the lands." I am unable to accept the contention that the effect of this solenamah decree was that of a written lease for a term within the meaning of cl. (a) of sec. 49. It is true, as it has been contended, that the parties might have compromised the former suit legally by arranging that the Defendant should have a lease as an under-raiyat for a term of 9 years with the option of renewal at the end thereof on payment of selami. But I am unable to hold that that was the actual effect of the compromise into which they entered. That being so since the Defendant did not hold under a lease the term of which has expired and as there has been no notice to quit served upon him he is not liable to be ejected.

I accordingly dismiss this appeal with costs.

[Against this judgment the present appeal under the Letters Patent was filed.]

Babus Surendra Chandra Sen and Nandalal Dey for the Appellant.

Babu Sib Chandra Palit for the Respondent

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent from the judgment of Mr. Justice Newbould in a suit for ejectment.

In 1897, the first Defendant took the land from the Plaintiff, a raiyat, and thus became an under-raiyat. In 1907, the Plaintiff sued to eject the Defendant after service of notice under sec. 49, Bengal Tenancy Act. On the 13th June 1908 a decree was made in that suit by consent of parties. On the 20th November 1919, the Plaintiff instituted the present suit for ejectment on the theory that the Defendant had, in accordance with the provisions of the consent decree, forfeited the tenancy and was a trespasser in occupation. The trial Court dismissed the suit. That decision has been affirmed successively by the Subordinate Judge and by Mr. Justice Newbould. We are of opinion that the decree of dismissal must be maintained.

In 1907, when the Plaintiff sued to eject the Defendant after notice under sec 49, Bengal Tenancy Act, the Defendant was an under-raiyat. The tenancy was for an unlimited time and there was no written lease. The under-raiyat could, consequently, be ejected only in accordance with sec. 49. That section provides that an under-raiyat shall not be liable to be ejected by his landlord except (a) on the expiration of the term of a written lease and (b) when holding otherwise than under a written lease, at the end of the agricultural year next following the year in which a notice to quit is served upon him by his landlord. This section was interpreted by a Full Bench of this Court in Rajkumari Debi v. Barakatulla Mondal (1). The Full Bench ruled that cls. (a) and (b) must be read together and that when cl. (b) mentions a written lease, reference is made by implication to cl. (a) which speaks of a written lease for a term. In the case before us, there was no written lease for a term at the inception of the tenancy. The question thus arises whether the Defendant, at the commencement of this suit, held under a lease for a term. If the answer be in the affirmative, he is liable under sec. 89 read with sec. 19 (a) to be ejected by his landlord in execution of a decree made in a suit instituted on the expiration of the term of such written lease. The Plaintiff urges that by virtue of what happened in the suit of 1907, the Defendant holds under a written lease for a term. This contention must be tested by reference to the terms of the compromise which formed the foundation of the consent decree, dated the 13th June 1908. The compromise, as incorporated in the decree, provides that the Defendant shall pay to the Plaintiff for the past period a sum of Rs. 20 as premium in addition to the annual rent of Rs. 12-8 as. and shall thereafter pay, at the end of each nine years, Rs. 11 as premium if he should cultivate the land other persons, but only Rs. 22 if he himself or his sons or grandsons should carry on the cultivation by themselves. This did not, in our opinion, transform what was a tenancy for an unlimited time, held without a written lease, into a tenancy for a term held under a written lease. This is not a case, where as in Ali v. Nayan (2), Abdul Karim v. Abdul Rahaman (3) and Aminuddi v. Ananda (4), the lease is for a term of nine years with a covenant for renewal.

We are not unmindful that the compromise provides that if the Defendant should default in the payment of the same sum in accordance with its stipulation, the Plaintiff would be entitled to eject him from the land of the tenancy. But this is of no avail. Under sec. 89 a tenant can be ejected only in execution of a decree and this must be read with the provisions of sec. 178, sub-sec. (1), cl. (c), which ordains that nothing in any contract between a landlord and a tenant, made before or after the passing of the Bengal Tenancy Act, shall entitle a landlord to eject a tenant otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the statute. It is consequently not open to a landlord and a tenant, whose mutual relation is governed by the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, to contract themselves out of the provisions of sec. 19. We have been pressed, however, to hold that the position is different, where, as here, a decree has been made by consent on the basis of a petition of compromise. This contention is clearly untenable. As Sir James Parke, J., observed in Wentworth v. Bullen (5), the contract of the parties is not the less a contract and subject to the incidents of a contract, because there is superadded the command of the Judge. To the same effect is the principle enunciated in Huddersfield Banking Co. v. Lister (6), namely, that a consent order is a mere creature of the parties and if greater sanctity were attributed to it than to the original agreement itself, it would be giving to the branch an existence which is independent of the tree, for the consent order is only the order of the Court carrying out the agreement between the parties. This principle is in essence recognised in sec. 117A, Bengal Tenancy Act, which deals with the compromise of suits between landlords and tenants and provides that a decree passed in accordance with any lawful agreement, compromise or satisfaction shall be final so far as it relates to so much of the subject-matter of the suit as is dealt with by such agreement, compromise or satisfaction. In our opinion, an agreement to contract out of the requirements of sec. 49, Bengal Tenancy Act, if in reality there was such an agreement in the present case, would not operate to entitle the Plaintiff to eject the Defendant contrary to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The result is that the decree made by Mr. Justice Newbould is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs.

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE ORDER No. 133 OF 1923.

CHATTERJEA, J. PANTON, J. 1923, 27, July.	ADWAITA CHANDRA SAHA, Appellant, Petitioner, v. THE CHITTAGONG CO., LD. AT SIRAJGANJ and anr., Opposite Party, Respondents.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 2 (2), 144—Decree in suit and decree in proceeding under sec. 144, if different—Sec 49 and Or. 21, r. 18, assignee under, attaching creditor if—Set-off—Court's inherent power.

A obtained against B a mortgage decree, in execution whereof B's properties were purchased by A. The sale was, upon B's application under sec. 144, C. P. C., set aside and the properties restored to him with an order in his favour for mesne profits for Rs. 614 odd. C, who also obtained a decree for Rs. 1,635 against B, after having attached B's decree against A got himself substituted as attaching creditor and applied for execution of the decree against A who in his turn applied for execution of a money decree obtained by him against B for Rs. 1,129 odd and prayed for a set-off. It was contended that the decree for mesne profits being made under sec. 144 and not in a suit and C not being an assignee of one of the decrees, Or. 21, r. 18 was not applicable:

Held—That as the determination of any question under sec. 144, C. P. C. comes within the definition of decree under sec. 2, C. P. C., there is no distinction between a decree in a suit and a decree in a proceeding under sec. 144; that C as attaching decree-holder was an assignee within the meaning of Or. 21, r. 18 and under sec. 49, C. P. C., subject to the same equities as B was; in any case the Court was not powerless to direct a set-off in this case under its inherent powers.

This was an appeal preferred on the 7th of March 1923, against the order of Krishna K. Sen, Esq., Additional District Judge of Pabna in Zillah Pabna and Bogra, dated the 17th of February 1923, modifying the order of Babu Sarada Prosad Banerjee, Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court at Pabna, dated the 12th of December 1921.

The facts are as follows:—

One Adwaita Chandra Saha obtained a money decree for Rs. 1,129-12-6 pies against one Azgarali on 21st August 1912. He also obtained a mortgage decree against Azgarali. Subsequent to the money decree Adwaita executed his mortgage decree and Azgarali's properties were put up to sale and were purchased by him. Azgarali then applied for setting aside the sale and as a result thereof his properties were restored and an order, dated the 29th

August 1919, for the payment by Adwaita to Azgarali of the mesne profits amounting to Rs. 614 and odd sum was passed. Adwaita, however, in execution of his money decree attached the decree passed against him for mesne profits. This decree for mesne profits was also attached by a Limited Company called the Chittagong Company, Ltd. in execution of a money decree for Rs. 1,635, dated the 12th April 1920, obtained by the Company against Azgarali, the Company having not themselves substituted as attaching decree-holders. This was followed by an application of the Company, dated the 25th July 1921, for the execution against Adwaita of the decree of mesne profits obtained by Azgarali. On 26th July 1921, Adwaita applied for execution of his own decree and prayed for a set-off. Both the Courts below disallowed Adwaita's prayer. Adwaita then appealed to this Court.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das for the Appellant.—The real point in the case is whether an order passed for mesne profits under sec. 144, C. P. C. can be set off against a money decree passed in a suit. I submit that it can be so set off because under sec. 2, cl. 2, C. P. C., an order passed under sec. 144, C. P. C. is a decree. It makes no difference whether such a decree is passed in a suit or in a proceeding. The procedure applicable to suits has been made applicable to proceedings under sec. 144, C. P. C. Moreover the provisions as to set-off in the Civil Procedure Code are not exhaustive. It makes no difference that the decree has been attached by the Chittagong Company. [Vide Bhujhawan Lal v. Sukhraj Rai (1)]. The position of the attaching decree-holder is that of a representative of the decree-holder of the attached decree [vide Or. 21, r. 53, cl. (3) C. P. C.]. The re[illegible] the ap-presentative is subject to the same equities and liabilities as that [illegible] Mohan v. Bishnupada (2)]. [illegible] Madan [illegible] highly inequitable not to allow the[illegible] be[illegible]lant to set off the decree of his judgment-debtor against his own decree against the latter.

Babu Upendra Kumar Ray for the Respondents.—Or. 21, r. 18 does not apply to the facts of the case for three reasons:—(1) The cross-decrees are not in separate suits. The decree of Azgarali is in a proceeding under sec. 144 and not in a suit. (2) The attaching creditor is not an assignee within the meaning of Or. 21, r. 18, cl. 2. He is a representative for the purpose of execution only and his rights have been defined by the statute in Or. 21, r. 53, cl. (3).

(3) As both the Appellant and the Company have attached the decree of Azgarali, they are entitled to rateable distribution under sec. 73, C. P. C. No question of prejudice arises.

Babu Gopal Chandra Das was not heard in reply.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The question involved in this appeal is whether the decree obtained by the Appellant against one Azgarali and the decree obtained by Azgarali against the Appellant can be set off against each other.

It appears that the Appellant obtained a money decree for Rs. 1,129-12-6 pies against Azgarali on the 21st August 1912. Subsequently, in execution of a decree obtained by the Appellant against Azgarali upon a mortgage, the properties of the latter were put up to sale and purchased by the Appellant. Azgarali applied for deal[illegible] the sale and it was set aside [illegible] for restoration of the pro- [illegible] or Azgarali and for mesne profits [illegible] by the Appellant to Azgarali, [illegible]mely, Rs. 614-12-9 was passed on the 29th August 1919. In execution of his decree the Appellant attached the decree obtained by Azgarali against him. Subsequently on the 12th April 1920, the Chittagong Company, Ltd. obtained a decree for Rs. 1,635 against Azgarali and they attached Azgarali's decree against the Appellant and got themselves substituted as attaching decree-holders. The Company then applied for execution of Azgarali's decree against the Appellant on the 25th July 1921. The next day the Appellant applied for execution of his own decree and prayed for a set-off. This was disallowed by the Courts below and the decree-holder has appealed to this Court.

It appears that the main ground upon which the Courts below have disallowed the set-off is that the decree for mesne profits obtained by Azgarali against the Appellant was in a miscellaneous proceeding under sec. 144 of the Civil Procedure Code, and not in a suit. But the determination of any question under sec. 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure comes within the definition of a 'decree' under sec. 2 of the Code. That being so, we do not see that there is any distinction between a decree in a suit and a decree in a proceeding under sec. 144.

The learned Vakil for the Respondents has contended that the provisions of Or. 21, r. 18, C. P. C., do not apply because the decrees were not made in separate suits. But the observations made above apply to this contention also.

The second ground is that the Chittagang Company are not assignees of one of the decrees. But the Company as attaching decree-holders are assignees within the meaning of Or. 21, r. 18, and they are subject to the same equities as Azgarali was having regard to the provisions of sec. 49 of the Code.

Thirdly, it has been contended that sub-r. 3 of r. 18, Or. 21, C. P. C., does not apply to the present case, as the decree-holder in one of the cases is not the judgment-debtor in the other. But leaving aside the distinction between a suit and a proceeding under sec. 144, C. P. C., which we have already dealt with, the Appellant was the decree-holder in one suit and was the judgment-debtor in the proceedings under sec. 144, taken by Azgarali against him. Even if the case does not come within the purview of Or. 21, r. 18 as contended by the learned Vakil for the Respondents, we do not think that the Court is powerless to direct a set-off in this case under the inherent powers of the Court. The Appellant has got a decree for Rs. 1,129-12-6 against Azgarali and Azgarali obtained a decree for mesne profits though under sec. 144, against the Appellant for a lesser sum, namely, Rs. 614-2-9. There is no reason why Azgarali should be allowed to execute his decree against the Appellant while the latter has a much larger sum due to him under his decree, and if the decrees could be set off, had Azgarali applied for execution of his decree, we do not see why the Chittagong Company as attaching decree-holders and standing in his shoes, should be allowed to execute the decree.

The learned Vakil for the Respondents has argued that in any case there ought to be a rateable distribution as the Chittagong Company have obtained a decree for a larger sum, namely, Rs. 1,600 odd against the Appellant, but no assets have yet been realised and we do not think that we should be justified in making an order for rateable distribution in anticipation of assets being realised.

In these circumstances we set aside the orders of the Courts below and send the case back to the Court of first instance for adjustment of the rights of the parties under the decrees in accordance with the observations we have made in our judgment.

The Appellant is entitled to his costs in this Court. We assess the hearing fee at one gold mohur.

GRAHAM, J.—We are invited in this Rule to set aside an order of the Subordinate Judge, 5th Court at Dacca, refusing to expunge two issues which have been framed in an account suit brought by the Petitioners Srimati Sarajubala Debi and others through Mr. F. W. Needham, representing the Court of Wards, against the Opposite Party (Defendant No. 1) Mohini Mohan Ghosh and others.

The facts which have given rise to the application, as stated therein, are as follows:—

The claim made in the suit covered the period from Ashar 1311, when the Defendant Mohini Mohan was appointed Naib of Delhi Kuromitola of the Bhawal Estate, up to the time when he was suspended in Ashar 1325 B. S. At the date when he was appointed, Kumar Ranendra Narayan Rai, Kumar Romendra Narayan Rai and Kumar Robindra Narayan Rai were the proprietors of the Bhawal Estate in equal shares. On the 15th Jaist 1314 the Defendant No. 1 executed a jamminnama or service security bond in favour of the three Kumars stating therein that, as he had no immoveable property, his father would execute another bond as his surety and would pledge some immoveable property. That bond was in due course executed on the 19th Jaista 1315 and, as there was a mistake in it, and as the second Kumar Romendra Narayan Rai died on the 8th May 1909 (Bysack 1316), a rectified deed was executed on the 29th Ashar 1316 in favour of the two surviving Kumars and the widow of the second Kumar as his heir.

The first and third Kumars died on the 11th September 1910 and 13th September 1913 respectively leaving their widows, the Plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 4, as heirs, and subsequent thereto the Court of Wards declared all the three widows to be disqualified proprietors, and assumed charge of the properties.

In the year 1920 an individual dressed in the garb of a sanyasi appeared on the scene and claimed to be the second Kumar, but the Board of Revenue after making an enquiry found that the second Kumar was dead and that the claimant was an impostor. In the meanwhile the Defendant No. 1 had been dismissed from his post and had been called upon to explain and adjust his accounts, and on his failing to do so, the suit out of which the present application has arisen was filed on the 25th June 1921.

In his written statement filed on the 18th November 1922 the Defendant No. 1 raised inter alia the plea that, as the second Kumar was alive, his widow the Plaintiff No. 2 had no right or title in the estate, and that therefore neither she nor the Court of Wards on her behalf could sue for accounts in respect of those properties, and an issue (No. 3) was accordingly framed in these terms :—

"Can Plaintiff No. 2 maintain this suit? Is her husband alive?"

Upon the Plaintiff's raising objection the Subordinate Judge held that, as the suit was based on kabuliyats executed by the Defendant No. 1 in favour of Plaintiff No. 2 and the Court of Wards, and as the validity of the kabuliyats was not questioned, the issue suggested did not arise, and it was accordingly struck off. The Defendant No. 1 then on the 14th July 1921 filed an additional written statement alleging that he had been induced to execute the kabuliyats on misrepresentation as to the death of the second Kumar, and in consequence of coercion and threats that he would be dismissed it he did not execute them. They were not therefore, it was urged, binding upon him, and he asked that issues might be framed upon his additional written statement. The Plaintiffs objected, but the Court yielding to the Defendant's prayer accepted the additional written statement and framed thereon issues Nos. 9 and 10 in the following terms :—

"9. Were the documents mentioned in the plaint executed under undue influence, misrepresentation, and a mistake of facts as alleged in the written statement?

10. Is the second Kumar Romendra Narayan Rai alive? If so, is the suit maintainable at the instance of Plaintiff No. 2?"

The Plaintiffs then filed a petition stating that the suit was maintainable even assuming that the second Kumar was alive, and praying that issue No. 10 might be tried on that supposition, and the Court on the 13th January 1923 held that, if the Kumar was alive, the suit was not maintainable and refused to expunge issue No. 10.

Subsequently the Plaintiffs by another petition gave up so much of the claim as related to the Defendant's service prior to the death of the second Kumar on the 8th May 1909, and prayed that in the circumstances issues Nos. 9 and 10 might be expunged, but the Court by its order of the 25th September 1923 refused to expunge them, and the Plaintiffs thereupon moved this Court and obtained the present Rule.

A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the Opposite Party to the hearing of the Rule on the ground that the application was not properly stamped, and it was submitted that upon the affidavit filed by the Petitioners no case has been made out for the exercise of the discretion vested in us to allow the court-fee to be put in after the due time. We do not think there is any substance in this objection, and on the facts stated in the affidavit we are of opinion that the explanation ought to be accepted and the court-fee allowed to be put in, and we order accordingly.

Coming to the merits it is urged on behalf of the Petitioners that the two issues referred to above are unnecessary for the decision of the suit, which is based upon a contract for service and in which no question of title to immoveable property is involved; that, if the question of title is allowed to be raised, the scope of the suit will be unnecessarily widened resulting in serious delay and expense out of all proportion to the real issue involved and that in fact the entire character of the suit will be changed. It was further suggested that the Defendant No. 1 having made common cause with the sanyasi claimant has sought to raise these issues with the ulterior object of helping him in his campaign against the Plaintiffs, it being pointed out that any finding arrived at in this case would not be binding upon the claimant, who is not a party to the litigation, though it would be upon the Plaintiffs.

On behalf of the Opposite Party it is urged that the long established practice of this Court has been not to interfere in the exercise of its Revisional Jurisdiction with interlocutory orders where another and an adequate remedy is open to the applicant that that remedy will be available by means of an appeal after the suit has been decided, and that no case has been made out for our interference.

We are not much impressed with this non possumus argument. No doubt it has been the settled practice of this Court to interfere as little as possible with interlocutory orders where an alternative remedy exists. It cannot however be laid down as a hard and fast rule that the Court will under no circumstances interfere. On the contrary there is ample authority for the view that this Court can and will interfere with such orders where they may lead to a failure of justice, or to irreparable injury, see Dhapi v. Ram Pershad (1), Gobinda Mohon Das v. Kunjo Behary Das (2), Amjad Ali v. Ali Hussain Johar (3) and Sira Prosad Ram v. Tricomdas Coverji Bhoja (4). The question is whether the conditions referred to above are present here so as to justify us in interfering. The decision of the matter appears to depend upon two considerations, viz., first, whether the proposed additional issues are relevant and necessary; and secondly, whether, if they are not so, the trying of them is

(2) 14 C. W. N. 147 (1909).
(3) 15 C. W. N. 353 (1910).
(4) I. L. R. 42 Cal. 926 (1915).

likely to lead to a failure of justice, or to irreparable injury to the Petitioners. The first of these is the really crucial point because, if the issues are necessary and proper, it could hardly be urged with logic or propriety that they may involve a failure of justice, or irreparable injury, since, if they are material and necessary issues, the Defendant is entitled to go to trial upon them, however great the expenditure of time and money may be. But are they necessary? Primâ facie one would be inclined to say that the trial of such an issue as to title, involving the mass of evidence, documentary and otherwise necessary to the decision thereon, is wholly outside the scope of a suit for accounts, especially in view of the fact that the claim for the period prior to May 1909 was withdrawn. Whatever may have been the legal position in regard to the period up to May 1909, it would seem that after July 1909, when the father of the Defendant No. 1 executed the deed of rectification in favour of the two Kumars and the widow of the second Kumar, it was no longer open to the Defendant No. 1 to refuse to account to the widow. There can be no question that subsequent to July 1909 the Defendant No. 1 was permitted to make his collections by virtue of that deed executed by his father indemnifying the two Kumars and the widow in respect of acts done by the Defendant No. 1, and that all collections made after that date were made on account of the two Kumars and the widow. In view of those facts it appears to us that the Defendant cannot be allowed to raise the question whether he is liable to account to the widow, and to set up the title of a third party.

There can be no doubt that under sec. 51 of the Court of Wards Act (IX of 1879) the Court of Wards alone was legally competent to institute the suit. The second Kumar had been held by competent authority after due inquiry to have died in 1909, and unless and until it is established in a Court of law that he is alive and that his title subsists, the Manager under the Court of Wards was the only person legally competent to institute the suit on behalf of the estate.

Having regard to these facts and considerations we hold that the trial of these two issues in the present suit is unnecessary.

The next question is whether, assuming them to be unnecessary and irrelevant, the trial of them is likely to lead to a failure of justice, or to irreparable injury to the Petitioners. We think that both possibilities undoubtedly exist, indeed that there is something more than a bare possibility that one or both of these consequences may ensue. It is clear from the materials before us that, if the issue of title is tried, it will involve the importation of a mass of evidence both documentary and oral. Applications have already been made for the examination on commission of a number of witnesses. It seems to us to be eminently undesirable that all this evidence should be gone into in a simple account suit. It is plain moreover that very great delay in the disposal of the suit would necessarily result. The value of the suit is stated to be Rs. 1,926 odd, and it has been suggested before us that, if these issues are included, the cost of the litigation may amount to something like a lac of rupees. That may be an exaggerated estimate. The fact however remains that the trial of these issues will undoubtedly entail an expenditure both of time and money wholly out of proportion to the matter in dispute, and the delay consequent upon the scope of the suit being thus widened might be extremely prejudicial to the Plaintiffs and result in their failing to obtain justice. Nor can there be any doubt that, if the issues are unnecessary, as we hold they are, the trial upon them is likely to cause irreparable injury to the Plaintiffs since they will be put to the enormous extra expenses involved, and, as far as can be seen, with little prospect of recovering those expenses, even if they succeed in the suit. It may be true that the Plaintiffs are persons of substance and well able to bear the extra expense. That however is beside the point and cannot alter the fact that the Plaintiffs may suffer irreparable loss. It is plain from the materials before us that the Defendant No. 1 is not a person of any substance, and in fact it was on that account that the second jamminnama was taken from his father. That being so it becomes problematical whether in the event of their success in the litigation the Plaintiffs would be able to recover the costs from the Defendant.

The suggestion that these issues should be added is presumably due to an apprehension in the mind of the Defendant No. 1 that after the suit has been decided, and if the decision be adverse to him, he may hereafter still find that he is accountable to the sanyasi claimant in the event of his succeeding in establishing that he is the second Kumar. Assuming that such an apprehension exists the object in view would seem to be to secure a speedy decision of the account suit without in any way prejudicing the Defendant, and we suggested subsequent to the hearing of the Rule that the parties should consult together with a view to arriving at a solution of the difficulty satisfactory to both sides. In the result the learned Advocate-General intimated on behalf of the Petitioners that both the Manager under the Court of Wards and the widow (Plaintiff No. 2) were prepared ..idence of the ap- indemnity in favour of ... convincin and ... No. 1 indemnifying him agai... ated by inde- ... al evidence whatsoever. It seems to us tha... iven by a fair offer and that the Defendant ...lf in can have no reasonable excuse for refus... to accept it.

Upon a careful consideration of all the facts and circumstances we are of opinion that the trial of the suit ought not to be complicated by dragging in these issues which are outside its scope and wholly irrelevant and unnecessary, and the trial of which would inevitably prolong the litigation to the serious prejudice of the Plaintiffs. We accordingly make the Rule absolute, direct that the issues in question Nos. 9 and 10 be expunged and that the suit be now proceeded with according to law on the indemnity bonds being executed by the Manager under the Court of Wards and by the Plaintiff No. 2 in accordance with the offer made by them.

The costs of this Rule will be paid by the Opposite Party to the Petitioners. We assess the hearing fee at three gold mohurs.

per, it was a Reference under sec. 307, Cr. P. C. made by the Sessions Judge of Faridpur (Mr. S. C. Mallik), on the 12th April 1924, as he disagreed with the unanimous verdict of the jury who found the accused not guilty of the charge framed against them under secs. 120B, 302/34 and 394, I. P. C.

The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Mr. K. Chaudhuri, Mr. Mashi and Babu Jahnavi Charan Das for the Accused.

Mr. Khundkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

SANDERSON, C. J.—This is a Reference by the learned Sessions Judge of Faridpur under sec. 307 of the Criminal Procedure Code.

The case involved a charge of murder, and a conspiracy to murder, against three persons Abinash Bose, Abinash Sarkar and Kali Charan Barai. They were charged with having murdered one Abdul Aziz Khan.

There is no doubt that a brutal murder was committed and that the decapitated body of Abdul Aziz was found on a piece of land, overgrown more or less with jungle, called Roybagan, near the village Jhowkhola, and that his head was found in another part of Roybagan.

The case for the prosecution, shortly stated, was that Abdul Aziz and two of his relations who were Kabulis lived together carrying on a joint business in cloth. Abdul Aziz was an illiterate man: and one Nirode used to act as a sort of clerk for him writing out his khatas, making out his accounts, and he used to go with Aziz to collect the amounts due to him. After the collections had been made, Aziz was in the habit of going to Calcutta for the purpose of buying cloth for the business. It was alleged that on the 31st of December the three accused persons and Nirode were together at the house of Abinash Sarkar. Abinash Bose enquired of Nirode whether Aziz had made his collections and whether he would shortly go to Calcutta to buy cloth: and, when Nirode informed him that most of the collections had been made and that he, Aziz, would shortly go to Calcutta, one of the accused, namely, Abinash Sarkar, asked if they could not murder one of the Kabulis, as they had large sums of money and stated that if they could kill one of them, they would get a considerable sum of money.

In my opinion there is considerable improbability about such a story.

One of the accused, Kali Charan, had come to the village some 14 or 15 days before this. Nirode was closely connected with the deceased man as I have already said. It seems to be an extraordinary thing that Abinash Sarkar should make such a proposition as that, to which I have referred, to a man like Kali Charan, who had come to the village only 14 or 15 days before, and to a young man like Nirode upon whose co-operation, as far as I know, Abinash Sarkar at that time had no ground for relying. The alleged proposition seems to have been made as if it were almost a matter of ordinary occurrence, and, the murder, it was alleged, was in fact carried out the next day at Roybagan.

There are some circumstances with regard to the actual murder which strike me as being improbable and difficult to accept. Nirode said that when the deceased man was sitting down, taking a drink from a cocoanut, a dao was handed to him by one of the others, who instructed him to strike Aziz on the head and he was told that if he did not do so, the others, i.e., the accused, would murder him.

It seems to me a curious thing that the actual striking of the man should have been entrusted to Nirode, who was a young man and who had shown himself by no means anxious to have anything to do with the murder. However, according to his evidence, he did strike a blow which was ineffective, but, according to his evidence, it was not this blow which killed the deceased man, but it was the acts of two of the accused which finally effected the murder.

The case rested to a large extent upon the evidence of Nirode Bose who became an informer. It is quite true that in some respects there was evidence which materially corroborated the story of Nirode, as for instance, that the deceased man, Nirode and Kali Charan went together into the Roybagan and that the murder must have been committed shortly afterwards.

On the other hand, there are circumstances which the jury would be entitled to take into consideration, and which might affect their minds when considering how and by whom the murder was committed, as for instance, the fact that the witnesses who are supposed to have first discovered the body did not take the course which they would naturally do under such circumstances, that is to say, communicate at once with the chowkidar, but went away and said nothing about it until the enquiry made by the police.

The case was tried by a jury of seven, and the verdict of the jury was a unanimous one of not guilty. The jury when asked by the learned Judge for their reasons said: "The evidence of the approver is not sufficiently convincing and his evidence is not corroborated by independent witnesses. The medical evidence does not tally with the version given by Nirode. Nirode tried to save himself in his evidence."

In my judgment, although it is impossible to say that the case for the prosecution was not a serious one against the accused persons, as has been pointed out by the learned Counsel appearing for the Crown, still I am not prepared to say that the verdict of the jury, in view of the evidence, was a perverse one or was such that this Court ought to interfere.

For these reasons, in my judgment, the accused should be acquitted.

Before parting with the case I think it is necessary to refer once more to the way in which maps in criminal cases are prepared.

I am of opinion that the person who makes the map ought not to put upon it anything more than what he sees himself. Particulars derived from witnesses examined on the spot should not be noted on the body of the map, but on a separate sheet of paper annexed to the map as an index thereto, the spots being marked as A, B, C, D, etc.

If this course is not adopted the map, although it may be prepared perfectly bona fide, may turn out to be misleading. For instance, in this case, my learned brother and I on looking at the map obtained a wrong impression as to certain parts of the case. We were fortunate enough to have the assistance of the learned Counsel for the Crown, who was familiar with all the evidence and who was able to remove that impression. I mention this because it goes to show that if the Court, sitting on appeal, may receive a wrong impression from what appears upon the map, the jury may similarly be misled.

In this case, the Sub-Inspector, when he was investigating the case and examining the scene of the murder, found certain things. In one place he found blood upon the ground; in another he found a piece of cloth and hair; in another place he found leaves spattered with blood; in another place a brick spattered with blood. All these matters he could have legitimately marked on the map. But he did not mark any of them on the map, although he saw them himself. On the other hand, he did mark on the map that which he himself did not see: for instance, he marked on the map the places "where the first blow was struck," "where the second blow was struck" and "where the third blow was struck."

He was not present when the blows were struck. The question whether any of those blows was struck and if so, at what place or places they were struck, would depend upon the evidence which would be given before the Court and which might or might not be accepted by the jury.

The learned Counsel who appeared for Abinash Bose informed us that in consequence of the action which has been taken by this Court, maps which are prepared for the Criminal Sessions Court in Calcutta are now made in accordance with the directions of the Court and it is to be hoped that the maps to be prepared in future for use in the District Courts will be prepared on the above-mentioned principle.

In this connection attention may be drawn to the amendment of r. 173 of the Police Regulations, Bengal, Part V, which was made by the Government of Bengal in 1920, in consequence of a representation which was made by this Court. That representation contained a statement that in the opinion of the Judges it would be better if the particulars derived from witnesses examined by police officers on the spot, which are now put on the face of the map, were put on a separate sheet of paper annexed to the map as an index thereto, the spots being marked on the map as A, B, C, D, etc. But particulars such as "pointed out by witness A as the place where the fight began, or where the man fell when struck" should not appear on the map itself. We direct that the accused be acquitted and be released from custody.

CHOTZNER, J.—I agree.

REF. No. 226 OF 1923.

GREAVES, J. DUVAL, J. 1924, Heard, 1 & 2, April. Judgment, 8, April.

RAJIB LOCHAN SHAW, Complainant, v. JOGESH CHANDRA DAS GUPTA, Accused.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), Sch. II, charge under sec. 477A, I. P. C., pending at the time the amended Criminal Procedure Code came into force—Procedure of the new Code, if applies—Committing Magistrate's discretion, interference with.

Where at the time of the commencement of a case charges under sec. 477A, I. P. C. were exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions, but an amendment of the Code of Criminal Procedure Code subsequently passed made it triable as well by a Magistrate with first class powers:

Held—That, as the amendment of the law was a matter of procedure only, the amended Act applied notwithstanding that the case was commenced before the amended Act came into force and the Magistrate had power to deal with the case.

RAJIB LOCHAN SHAW v. JOGESH CHANDRA DAS GUPTA.

IN RE JOSEPH SUCHE & CO., LD. (1), JAMES GARDNER v. LUCAS (2) and KIMBRAY v. DRAPER (3) referred to.

Where the Magistrate's discretion in not committing a case to the Sessions cannot be said to have been improperly exercised, it should not be interfered with.

This was a Reference made by the Additional District Magistrate of Mymensingh (Mr. B. D. Hazra), recommending that the proceedings pending before the Deputy Magistrate of Tangail, against the accused under secs. 408 and 477A, I. P. C. may be committed to the Court of Sessions for trial.

The facts of the case and the grounds of the Reference would appear from the following letter of Reference :—

"The accused Jogesh Chandra Das Gupta was an accountant and cashier commonly styled as Khajanchi in the employ of Babu Hem Chandra Choudhury, Zamindar of Hemnagar in this District. During the tenure of his service as Khajanchi he is alleged to have defalcated large sums of money belonging to the estate and falsified the accounts. When this was detected, a case was instituted at the Gopalpur Thana. The Police Officer of Gopalpur after a protracted enquiry submitted a charge-sheet against the accused under secs. 408 and 477A, I. P. C., on the 19th April 1923.

The case is reported to the High Court for orders with the recommendation that the case may be ordered to be committed to the Court of Sessions for trial on the following grounds. First, that when the enquiry commenced the case was under the law then in force triable exclusively by the Court of Sessions so far as the offences under sec. 477A, I. P. C. are concerned. Under the amendment introduced from 1st September these offences are also triable by a Magistrate of the 1st class. An authoritative decision is necessary as to whether the amended provision applies to a case commenced under the old law. Second, that the amount of defalcation and the extent of falsification of accounts demand that the punishment in case of conviction should exceed what lies in the power of a 1st class Magistrate to award. Third, it is urged that if in case of conviction on one or more counts, the Court of Sessions awards adequate punishment, it will not be necessary to prosecute the other charges and there will thus be a saving in expenses on both sides. The trying Magistrate has shown no cause.

The Opposite Party appeared by pleader and urged that in case of conviction a 1st class Magistrate could award adequate punishment, and that under the amended law he can try the case. These views do not commend themselves to me."

Mr. Jackson, Babus Ramani Mohan Chatterjee and Rebati Mohan Chatterjee for the Complainant.

Babus Narendra Kumar Bose and Iswar Chandra Chakravarti for the Accused.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is a Reference by the Additional District Magistrate of Mymensingh recommending that the case may be ordered to be committed to the Court of Sessions for trial.

The complainant supports the Reference and the accused opposes it.

The case commenced in February 1923 in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Tangail and involved charges against the accused under secs. 408 and 477A of the Indian Penal Code.

At the time the case commenced the charges under sec. 477A were exclusively triable by the Court of Sessions. Since the amended Code of Criminal Procedure came into force charges under sec. 477A are triable by a Magistrate with first class powers. One of the grounds for the Reference is that the Additional District Magistrate desires a decision as to whether the amended provision of the Code of Criminal Procedure, authorising a Magistrate with first class powers to try offences under sec. 477A, applies to cases commenced before the amending Act came into force. Another ground for the Reference is that the amount of defalcation and the extent of falsification of accounts alleged demand, in case of conviction, a punishment in excess of what a Magistrate with first class powers can award. This is two years' rigorous imprisonment in the case of each charge subject to a limit of 4 years. The last ground suggested is economy. It is said that if the matter is dealt with by the Court of Sessions and if conviction follows on one or more counts, it will be unnecessary to prosecute other charges as adequate punishment can be conflicted in respect of the one or more counts established. The Magistrate framed charges in respect of one item only under secs. 408 and 477A of the Indian Penal Code on the 14th September 1923. The complainant asked that charges should be framed against the accused in respect of some seven items in regard to which defalcation and falsification of accounts were alleged but the charges framed relate to one item only of Rs. 10,000, the offences alleged being carried out by inserting under a heading Howlat in the Bakian a sum of Rs. 29,987-13-0 instead of Rs. 19,987-13-0.

With regard to the first point to which the letter of Reference relates we were referred on behalf of the complainant to certain passages in Hardcastle's Statute Law, 3rd Edition, at pp. 319 and 351, in support of the proposition that as the case commenced before the amended Criminal Procedure Code came into force the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code before the amendment alone applied. We think, however, that as the amendment of the law, which enables a Magistrate with first class powers to try charges falling under sec. 477A of the Indian Penal Code, is a matter of procedure only that the amended Act applies notwithstanding that the case was commenced before the amended Act came into force, which was on 1st September 1923, and we think that the Magistrate has power to deal with the case In re Joseph Suche & Co., Ltd. (1). "It is a general rule that when the Legislature alters the rights of parties by taking away or conferring any right of action, its enactments, unless in express terms they apply to pending actions, do not affect them. It is said that there is one exception to that rule, namely, that where enactments merely affect procedure, and do not extend to rights of action they have been held to apply to existing rights." And see also James Gardner v. Lucas (2). "It is perfectly settled that if the Legislature intended to frame a new procedure, that instead of proceeding in this form or that you should proceed in another and different way, clearly these bygone transactions are to be sued for and enforced according to the new form of procedure. Alterations in the form of procedure are always retrospective, unless there is some good reason or other why they should not be." And see again Kimbray v. Draper (3), where Blackburn, J., stated that a statute dealing with procedure applies primâ facie to all actions, pending as well as future. So far therefore as regards the first point raised by the Reference we hold that the Magistrate has power to hear the case.

The second point raised by the Reference involves an interference with the discretion which the Magistrate has exercised, namely, not to commit the case to the Sessions but to deal with it himself. We see no reason to believe that the Magistrate's discretion has not been properly exercised and accordingly we are not prepared to interfere with it. Although the Magistrate if he convicts cannot pass a longer sentence than two years in respect of any one offence it is open to him to pass a like sentence in respect of each offence of which he convicts the accused, up to a limit of four years, and to direct how the sentences are to run.

The third point raised by the Reference we need not deal with. In the result we are not able to accept the Reference and we reject it.

We desire to add for the information of the trying Magistrate that he should consider whether it is not advisable to frame an additional charge in respect of one or other of the other defalcations or falsifications alleged, up to the limit of his powers as set out in sec. 234, Cr. P. C.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

PAGE, J.—In this case some important and interesting questions are raised in respect of the obligations of a Railway Company towards the owner of goods consigned to it for transportation. On the 24th January 1922, 12 tins of ghee were consigned to the E. I. Railway at Arrah to be carried to Chandernagore, and there to be delivered to the Plaintiff, the Opposite Party. On the 21st August 1922, 7 of the tins were delivered to the Plaintiff at Chandernagore, but the Railway Company failed to deliver 5 of the tins. The issue in this case is whether the Plaintiff is entitled to recover damages for the non-delivery of the said goods. The Railway Company undertook to carry the goods on the terms of a risk-note which was signed by the consignor. The risk-note was in the form (B) which has been approved by the Governor-General in Council pursuant to sec. 72 (2) (b) of the Indian Railways Act (Act IX of 1890).

"Whereas the consignment of 12 tins ghee tendered by $\frac{\text{me}}{\text{us}}$ as per forwarding order No. 77194 of this date, for despatch by the E. I. Railway Administration or their transport agents or carriers to Chandernagore Station and for which $\frac{\text{I}}{\text{we}}$ have received railway receipt No. 77194 of same date, is charged at a special reduced rate instead of the ordinary tariff rate chargeable for such consignment $\frac{\text{I}}{\text{we}}$ the undersigned do, in consideration of such lower charge, agree and undertake to hold the said Railway Administration and all other Railway Administrations working in connection therewith, and also all transport agents or carriers employed by them respectively over whose Railway or by or through whose transport agency or agencies the said goods or animals may be carried from Arrah to Chandernagore harmless and free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration of or damage to the said consignment, from any cause whatever except for the loss of a complete consignment or one or more complete packages forming part of a consignment due either to the wilful neglect of the Railway Administration, or to theft by or to the wilful neglect of its servants, transport agents or carriers employed by them before, during and after transit over the said Railway or other Railway lines working in connection thereto or by any other transport agency or agencies employed by them respectively for the carriage of the whole or any part of the said consignment; provided the term 'wilful neglect' be not held to include fire, robbery from a running train or any other unforeseen event or accident."

By sec. 72 of the Railways Act it is provided that—"72 (1).—The responsibility of a Railway Administration for the loss, destruction or deterioration of animals or goods delivered to the Administration to be carried by Railway shall, subject to the other provisions of this Act, be that of a bailee under secs. 152 and 161 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872.

(2) An agreement purporting to limit that responsibility shall, in so far as it purports to effect such limitation, be void, unless it (a) is in writing signed by on behalf of the person sending or delivering to the Railway Administration the animals or goods and (b) is otherwise in a form approved by the Governor-General in Council.

(3) Nothing in the Common Law of England or in the Carriers Act, 1865, regarding the responsibility of common carriers with respect to the carriage of animals or goods, shall affect the responsibility as in this section defined of a Railway Administration."

The learned trial Judge found (1) that the Railway Company had not proved that the five tins had been lost, and (2) that disappearance of the five tins was due to the wilful neglect of the servants of the Railway Company.

The first contention urged before us on behalf of the Railway Company, which is the Petitioner, was that in order to obtain the benefit of the risk-note it was not incumbent upon the Railway Company to prove that the goods were lost, inasmuch as the Railway Company admitted that the goods were lost, and that the

THE E. I. R. Ry. Co. v. JOGPAT SINGH.

KISH... only issue in the case was whether such loss was due to the wilful neglect of the Railway Company or of its servants, the onus of proving wilful neglect lying on the Plaintiff. In my opinion, this contention is unsound. In order to appreciate the object which the legislature had in view in enacting Chap. VII of the Railways Act, "it is necessary to ascertain what has been the history of the law relating to carriers by rail in this country. The first legislation on the subject is that contained in Act XVIII of 1854, sec. 11 of which is as follows: 'The liability of such Railway Company for loss or injury to any articles or goods to be carried by them other than those specially provided for by this Act, shall not be deemed or construed to be limited, or in any wise affected by any public notice given, or any private contract made by them: but such Railway Company shall be answerable for such loss or injury when it shall have been caused by gross negligence or misconduct on the part of their agents or servants'. This continued to be the case until the passing of the Carriers Act, 1865. . . . . On the 10th September 1867 it was decided in the case of E. I. R. v. Jordan (1) by a Divisional Bench of this Court (Peacock, C. J., and Macpherson, J.) that Railway Companies in India were common carriers and liable as such, that is to say, as insurers of goods delivered to them. . . . . We now come to the Railways Act of 1879. Sec. 2 of that Act contains the following provision: 'Nothing in the Carriers Act, 1865, shall apply to carriers by Railway.' I cannot read these words in any other sense than as repealing all the provisions of the Carriers Act which relate exclusively to carriers by Railway, and confining the operation of the remaining provisions to carriers other than carriers by Railway, so that by the repeal of so much of the Carriers Act as related to Railways, and that of the whole of the Railways Act of 1854 the liability of carriers by Railway as it stood before the Acts of 1854 and 1865 was restored. . . . . It follows that after the passing of the Act of 1879 the liability of carriers in India including carriers by Railway, was not limited to a liability for negligence, but was a liability as insurers of the goods delivered to them." [Per Petheram, C. J., Chogemul v. Commissioners for the Improvement of the Port of Calcutta (2), see also Changa Mal v. The Bengal and North-Western Railway Company (3) and Irrawardy Flotilla Co. v. Bhugwandas (4)]. The object and effect of sec. 72 of the Railways Act of 1890 was, in my opinion, to limit the liability of Railway Companies during the transit of goods consigned to them for carriage, and to substitute the obligations of a bailee for the obligations of an insurer of such goods which prior to the passing of that Act were imposed upon them under the Common Law. Sec. 72 of the Railways Act, 1890, was enacted to confer a benefit upon Railway Companies and, in my opinion, except in cases where the Plaintiff admits that the goods have been lost, a Railway Company is not entitled to rely upon the provisions of the risk-note which pro tanto exempt it from liability, unless and until evidence has been adduced which satisfied the Court that a loss has occurred [see Ghelabhai Punsi v. E. I. Ry. Co. (5), E. I. Ry. v. Nilkanta Roy (6) and Great Indian Pen- insular Railway Company v. Jitan Ram (7)]. In the last case Mullick, J., observed: "It is clear that upon this special contract the burden of proof lies in the first instance upon the Defendants, that is to say, they must first prove that there was such loss as is contemplated by the first part of the risk-note, and when they have done so the onus will be shifted upon the Plaintiff to show that the loss is due to the wilful neglect of the Defendants or their servants as provided in the latter part." [See also East Indian Ry. Co. v. Kanak Behari Halder (8)].

It was further contended that, if it was incumbent upon the Railway Company to prove that the goods were "lost" within the meaning of that term as used in the risk-note, the Railway Company had discharged the onus which lay upon it by proving that the goods in question had not been delivered to the consignee. It was urged that "loss" as contemplated in the risk-note meant loss to the owner, and that such loss accrued whenever the person entitled to possession of the goods was wrongfully deprived of such possession by reason of the non-delivery, or the mis-delivery, of the goods or otherwise.

It was admitted and urged by both parties, in my opinion, rightly that the same construction must be put upon the term loss in the risk-note and in the section which comprise Chap. VII of the Railways Act, 1890.

Now, a distinction is drawn between suits for non-delivery of goods consigned to a carrier and suits for compensation for the loss of such goods in Arts. 30 and 31 of the 1st Schedule to the Limitation Act (IX of 1908) and, if the proper meaning to be attributed to the term "loss" is that for which the Railway Company contends, the learned Vakil who appeared for the Railway Company was constrained to admit, not only that the word "destruction" in the risk-note and in sec. 72 is mere surplusage, but also that it would follow that where goods consigned for carriage were not duly delivered because, for example, such goods were being deliberately detained by the Railway Company, or had been mis-delivered to a person other than the consignee, or had been converted by the Railway Company to its own use, in each of such cases the Railway Company would be entitled to pray in aid the provisions of sec. 72 which limits its liability in respect of "loss" to that of a bailee.

In my opinion, the meaning for which the Railway Company contends cannot reasonably be attributed to the term "loss" either in the risk-note or in sec. 72 and the kindred sections of the Railways Act, 1890.

In the course of the argument in Hearn v. L. & S. W. Ry. (9), in which case the question arose whether goods the delivery of which had been delayed were lost within the meaning of that term as used in the analogous provisions of the Carriers Act, 1830, S. T. Baron Martin put this question to Counsel, "Suppose a person delivered to a porter at a Railway Station a casket of jewels, and in consequence of his refusal to forward it the casket remained for some time at the Station, would that be a 'loss' within the Act?" and Baron Alderson asked, "Suppose the goods were known by the carrier to exist, but were not delivered by him for a month, would that be a 'loss' within the Act?" An affirmation that in such circumstances the goods have been lost, surely involves a distortion of the meaning of the word so extravagant as to approach an abuse of the English language. That judicial authority is not wanting in support of the construction of the term "loss" for which the Railway Company contends would appear to be due, if I may say so with great respect, to the fact that the intention of the legislature in enacting Chap. VII of the Railways Act of 1890 has not always sufficiently been borne in mind. The object, and, in my opinion, the effect, of sec. 72 was not to provide compensation for pecuniary losses suffered by the owners of goods consigned for conveyance to Railway Cos., but to lessen the burden of the obligation which prior to the passing of sec. 72 had lain on Railway Cos., as insurers of such goods.

In my opinion, the construction which Baron Parke put upon the term "loss" in Hearn v. L. & S. W. Ry. Co. (9) is correct, and the same interpretation should be given to the term in the risk-note and in sec. 72 of the Railways Act. Baron Parke, in giving the judgment of the Court, which was to the effect that "where goods which ought to be declared and are not declared are detained by a carrier without being lost by him, he is liable for such detention," observed: "The statute then proceeds to enact that no carrier shall be liable for the loss of, or any injury to, any of the enumerated articles. This does not mean the loss of the monies of the carrier, but the loss of the article itself, or injury to it. In ordinary parlance, this appears to mean the loss by the carrier of the articles committed to him, or injury to them, whilst in his care, not the loss sustained by the owner by non-delivery of the article in due time or altogether, or the loss of the use of the article by him. By the term 'the injury' is clearly meant the injury to the article itself. . . . and the reason of the law must be considered as being to protect the carrier not in all cases where the owner of the articles sustained a damage from the neglect of the carrier to carry, but in cases of a similar nature to those recited, where the chattel was either abstracted altogether, or taken from the place where it ought to be and it was incapable of being delivered at the time it ought to be by reason of that sort of loss. We think this is the true construction of the clause and the carrier is exempted only from being responsible for a loss by him of the particular articles named." The same interpretation was given to the term "loss" in Millen v. Brasch (10). The facts in that case were that on 13th November 1879 the Plaintiff delivered to the Defendants, who were carriers for hire from London to Rome, a trunk to be sent from London to Liverpool by rail, and thence to be shipped to Italy. Through the negligence of the Defendants' servants the trunk was placed in a vessel bound for America, and was shipped to New York. The mistake was not discovered until 15th December 1879. The issue in the case was whether the trunk had been "lost," and Lindley, L. J., in giving the judgment of the Court observed: "The result comes to this if goods which ought to be declared and are not declared are lost, whether temporarily or permanently, the carrier is protected from liability for their loss and its consequences. But whether goods not permanently lost are lost within the meaning of the Carriers Act, must depend upon whether they have been lost by the carrier as distinguished from lost to the owner: see Hearn v. L. & S. W. Ry. Co.

(9) 10 Exch. 793, 799 (1855).

(10) 10 Q. B. D. 142 (1882).

(9), and this, again, must depend on the facts of each particular case. If the carrier temporarily loses the goods, and delivers them within a reasonable time after he discovers them, he will not be liable; but if he keeps them after he has recovered them, the Carriers Act will not protect him from such consequent breach of the duty. The obligations on the part of the carrier to deliver the goods will remain or revive, and he will be responsible for future breaches of that obligation . . . . As we understand the facts, the Plaintiff's trunk was shipped and sent to New York as Hamburger's case, and was incapable of being traced and found until the mistake in the substitution of one package for the other was discovered; and the carriers had lost possession of the trunk, and did not in fact know where it was nor what had become of it. This was in our opinion, a loss of the trunk by the carriers."

In my opinion, the term "loss" as used in the risk-note and in Chap. VII of the Railways Act does not mean pecuniary or other loss suffered by the owner of the goods through being wrongfully deprived of the possession, use or enjoyment thereof, but means loss of the goods by the Railway Company while in transit, and such "loss" occurs whenever the Railway Company to which the goods have been consigned for conveyance involuntarily or through inadvertence, loses possession of the goods, and for the time being is unable to trace them. The term "loss" denotes a fact, not a cause of action. A valid cause of action against a Railway Company in India for damages for the non-delivery of goods consigned to it for carriage must be based either on contract or on tort, and must arise from the breach of some duty owed to the Plaintiff by the Railway Company. Proof of the fact that a loss of the goods has occurred may sometimes found, sometimes defeat, such a cause of action. But a cause of action for loss without more is not known to the law. Non-delivery of goods consigned to a Railway Company for conveyance may be due to the fact that the goods are being deliberately detained by the Railway Company or that they have been mis-delivered to some person other than the consignee or that they are "lost." It does not, therefore, necessarily follow that by proving the non-delivery of such goods the "loss" of the goods is also proved, for non-delivery or mis-delivery of goods may be due to "loss," or may be due to other causes.

The question as to what is the meaning of the term "loss" in risk-note (B) and in sec. 72 of the Railways Act does not appear up till now to have arisen in the Calcutta High Court. In Civil Rule No. 972 of 1922 my brothers Richardson and B. B. Ghose, in a case where damages were claimed against the Assam Bengal Railway Company for non-delivery of goods consigned to it for transportation, held that it was incumbent upon the Plaintiff to prefer a written notice of his claim to the Railway Company in accordance with the provisions of sec. 77 of the Railways Act. In the course of his judgment Richardson, J., observed: "I have indicated that in my view a claim for compensation for non-delivery includes the case of the loss of the goods just as much as the case of the detention of the goods. If that be so, it seems to follow that the statutory notice is a condition precedent to a verdict being taken on that alternative footing, because on that footing the goods may have been lost. If it be conceded, though I do not decide, that where goods are wrongfully detained by a Railway Company no notice is necessary under sec. 77, a plea by the Company of want of notice must at least be met on that ground, and the Court must be asked to find that the goods were being detained and were not lost when they ought to have been delivered. Where detention is not pleaded or put in issue, a claim simpliciter for compensation for non-delivery must be understood as including or involving a claim for the loss of the goods within the meaning of sec. 77."

The ratio decidendi of that case is consistent with the construction which I have placed upon the term "loss" in the risk-note, although the interpretation to be given to the term did not directly arise for determination in that case.

The view which I have expressed as to the meaning of the term "loss" in the risk-note and in sec. 72 is supported by three recent decisions of the Allahabad High Court [Secretary of State for India v. Jiwan (11), East Indian Ry. Co. v. Kishan Lal (12) and East Indian Ry. v. Makhan Lal (13)]. The same meaning has been attributed to the term "loss" by the Patna High Court in E. I. R. v. Kali Charan Ram (14), by the Chief Court of the Punjab in Changa Mal's case (3), in the Bombay High Court by Kajiji, J., in G. I. P. Ry. v. Ramchandra Jagannath (15) and in the Lahore High Court by Abdul Raoof, J., in Hill, Sawyers & Co. v. Secretary of State (16). In each of the last two cases, and in G. I. P. Ry. v. Jitan Ram (7), however, a Division Bench has held that "loss" means loss to the owner of consignor of the goods. It is to be observed that whereas Jwala Prasad, J., in E. I. R. v. Kali Charan Ram (14) held that when goods are not delivered by the Railway Company they are not "lost," Mullick and Bucknill, JJ., in G. I. P. Ry. v. Jitan Ram (7) held that goods which are not delivered or are mis-delivered are "lost" within the meaning of the term as used in risk-note (B) and in secs. 72 and 80 of the Railways Act. As I construe the term "loss," with great respect to these learned Judges, I am unable to accept either of these propositions as being correct. It appears to me that it is equally inaccurate to affirm that goods which are not duly delivered, or have been mis-delivered, are lost, as to assert that they are not lost. The true view would seem to be that in either case the goods may or may not be lost, and that proof of non-delivery or mis-delivery is by no means conclusive evidence as to whether or not a loss has incurred. Indeed, I go further, and beg leave to state that, in my opinion, from such evidence alone an inference could not reasonably be drawn that the goods had been lost. It was, moreover, conceded by the learned Judges who decided the case of G. I. P. Ry. v. Jitan Ram (7) "that if loss to the owner was meant, then there was no necessity for any reference to liability for destruction of the goods."

On the other hand, the Madras High Court in the case of Madras and Southern Mahratta Railway Co., Ld. v. Mattai Subba Rao (17), finding itself unable to accept the view that the term "loss" in the risk-note (B) includes "destruction, deterioration and damage," held that "if goods entrusted to the care of the Company cease to have any resemblance to the goods of the description which they undertook to carry, it seems to us that the Company should be held to have lost the goods." Seshagiri Ayer, J., was of opinion that the term "loss" bore the same meaning in sec. 72 as that attributed to "total loss" in a policy of insurance. But, with great respect, the obligations undertaken by insurer under a policy of insurance differ toto coelo from those undertaken by a Railway Company under a contract of carriage, such as that contained in risk-note (B). The Railway Company undertook to carry the goods as a bailee on the terms of the risk-note, but the insurer under a policy of insurance is not in any sense a bailee of the goods covered by the policy, his undertaking being that he will indemnify the assured in respect of the pecuniary loss which the assured may suffer by reason of the happening of any or every specific peril set out in the contract of insurance.

For the reasons which I have given I have been unable to persuade myself that the construction which was put upon the term "loss" in the last-mentioned cases is correct, and I am unable to adopt it. The question then arises, were the five tins which the Railway Company failed to deliver in this case "lost" in the sense which I have indicated? In my opinion, the only inference which can reasonably be drawn from the evidence adduced at the trial is that the goods in question were lost, and there was no evidence which would justify the finding of the learned Judge that the five tins were not lost.

In these circumstances, the only issue which remains is whether the loss of these five tins was due to the wilful neglect of the Railway Company or of its servants, as provided in the risk-note. The learned Judge has decided that issue in a manner adverse to the Railway Company. Was there evidence from which the learned Judge could reasonably have arrived at that conclusion? Having regard to the following facts, namely, that ghee is a perishable article; that there was no satisfactory evidence adduced to prove that the five tins were put into Wagon No. 34395 at Dinapur; or that they arrived at Asansole and that no attempt was made by the Railway Company's servants between 11th February, when the Wagon arrived at Asansole, and the 28th April, to ascertain whether the goods loaded in the Wagon were safe and sound, I am unable to hold that there was not evidence adduced before the learned trial Judge which would justify him in finding that the loss of the goods was due to the wilful neglect of the Railway Company's servants: the other findings of the learned trial Judge are not challenged. In these circumstances the Rule, in my opinion, should be discharged with costs.

SUHRAWARDY, J.—I agree. The Rule is discharged with costs. We assess the hearing fee at two gold mohurs.

a defaulter, in auction sale, whether void or only voidable—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 62, limitation for claim for surplus sale proceeds withdrawn by Defendant—Sec 14, exclusion of period between setting aside of the sale by lower Court and reversing of that decision by Appellate Court, if allowable in computing period of limitation for suit for recovery of the surplus sale proceeds.

A putni tenure having fallen into arrears was sold under Reg. VIII of 1919 on the 15th May 1916 and on the 29th May some of the putnidars brought a suit for setting aside the putni sale. During the pendency of this suit the putni again fell into arrears and was sold on the 16th November 1916, and the Plaintiffs putnidars applied for an amendment for setting aside the second sale also. The suit was decreed on the 21st February 1918, both the sales being set aside. The zamindar appealed and the High Court reversed the decision and confirmed the sales on the 23rd February 1920. In the meantime, on the 14th May 1917, one of the putnidars instituted a suit alleging that he had an 8 as. share in the purchase at the first sale because he had paid one-half the purchase money along with the ostensible purchaser, and praying inter alia that the second sale might be set aside. Before this, the said ostensible purchaser had on the 24th January 1917 withdrawn the surplus sale proceeds from Court. Subsequently the Plaintiff on the 31st May 1920 made an application for amendment of his plaint adding a prayer for recovery of one-half of the surplus sale proceeds:

Held—That so long as the putni sale was not set aside, the purchase by one of the defaulting putnidars was only voidable, and the sale having been confirmed, the question whether it was void or voidable did not arise, and did not affect the claim for the surplus sale proceeds.

That the claim for the surplus sale proceeds came under Art. 62 of the Limitation Act, under which a suit has to be brought within three years from the date on which the money was received by the Defendant. But as the money was withdrawn on the 24th January 1917 and the prayer for amendment of the plaint in respect of the surplus sale proceeds was made on the 31st May 1920, the claim for the surplus sale proceeds was barred by limitation.

In computing the period of limitation, the period between the date on which the sale was set aside by the lower Court in the first suit (21st February 1918) and the date on which the High Court reversed that decision and upheld the sale (23rd February 1920) could not be deducted, for the case did not come under sec. 14 of the Limitation Act, as the Plaintiff was not prosecuting the first suit and was not associated with the Plaintiffs of that suit, nor did it fall under any other section of the Act.

ZAHUR ALI KHAN v. RUTTA KOER (9) referred to and distinguished.

This was an appeal preferred on the 7th February 1922 against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Zillah Burdwan (Babu Atul Chandra Banerjee), dated the 30th of September 1921.

The facts of the case were briefly as follows :—A putni tenure (Mahal Debibarpur) was held under the Maharaja of Burdwan. The putni fell into arrears and was sold under Reg. VIII of 1919 on the 15th May 1916 and was purchased in the name of one Mritunjoy Ghosh. On the 29th May some of the putnidars instituted a suit (Suit No. 309 of 1916) for setting aside the putni sale. During the pendency of that suit the putni tenure again fell into arrears and was put up to sale again on the 16th November 1916. The Plaintiffs in Suit No. 309 of 1916 applied for amendment of the plaint by adding a prayer for setting aside the second sale also. The suit was decreed on the 21st February 1918 by the Subordinate Judge, both the sales being set aside. The Maharaja of Burdwan who was the second Defendant in the suit appealed to the High Court against the said decree and the High Court on the 23rd February 1920 set aside the decree of the Subordinate Judge and upheld both the sales.

During the pendency of the above suit, the present suit was instituted on the 14th May 1917 by Atul Krishna Ghosh, one of the putnidars, on the allegation that in the first sale he had an 8 as. share in the purchase, because he had paid one-half the purchase money, and it was prayed that the second sale might be set aside and Plaintiff's title declared to and possession given him of 8 as. share of the putni. There were alternative prayers that if the sale were not set aside the purchasers in the second sale might be directed to convey an 8 as. share of the putni to the Plaintiff, and if that sale and the first sale were set aside, the Plaintiff prayed for declaration of his title to ⅓rd share of the putni by right of inheritance. In the meantime, i.e., before even the institution of the suit, the ostensible purchaser in the first sale, Mritunjoy Ghosh, withdrew the surplus sale proceeds from Court on the 24th January 1917. Subsequently the Plaintiff on the 31st May 1920 made an application for amendment of his plaint by adding a prayer for recovery of one-half of the surplus sale proceeds. On the 30th September 1921, the Subordinate Judge held the sale under Reg. VIII of 1919 to be good, and gave the Plaintiff a decree for joint possession with Niranka Chandra Basu, purchaser at the second sale. The latter thereupon preferred the present appeal to the High Court.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This appeal arises out of the suit for setting aside the sale of a putni tenure held under Reg. VIII of 1919, and for declaration of title to and possession of 8 annas share of the putni tenure. There were alternative prayers, namely, that if the sale be not set aside the Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 be directed to convey an 8 annas share of the putni to the Plaintiff, and if that sale (and an earlier sale of the putni) be set aside the Plaintiff prayed that his title to ⅓rd share in the putni might be declared.

(12) 22 C. W. N. 611 (1917).

It appears that the putni tenure (Mahal Debibarpur) was held under the Maharaja of Burdwan who is the Defendant No. 1 in this case. The Plaintiff as well as the Defendants Nos. 6 to 27 were the putnidars. The Plaintiff's share originally was one-third in the tenure by right of inheritance, and the remaining 2/3rds belonged to the Defendants Nos. 6 to 27. The putni fell into arrears and was sold under Reg. VIII of 1919 on the 15th May 1916 and was purchased in the name of Defendant No. 2. The Plaintiff says that in that purchase he had an 8 annas share, because he had paid one-half the purchase money, so that although he had ⅓rd share by inheritance he became a sharer to the extent of 8 annas by the purchase. On the 29th May 1916 the Defendants Nos. 6 to 9 instituted a suit (Suit No. 309 of 1916) for setting aside the putni sale. The present Plaintiff was Defendant No. 19 in that suit, the present Defendant No. 2 Mritunjoy Ghosh was Defendant No. 1 and the present Defendant No. 1 the Maharajadhiraj of Burdwan was the Defendant No. 2 in that suit. During the pendency of that suit the putni tenure again fell into arrears and was put up to sale again on the 16th November 1916. The Plaintiffs in Suit No. 309 of 1916 applied for amendment of the plaint by adding a prayer for setting aside the second sale also. Before that suit was disposed of, the present suit was instituted on the 14th May 1917 by the Plaintiff. The previous suit was decreed on the 21st February 1918 by the Subordinate Judge, both the sales being set aside. On the 20th November 1918, the Court below took up the present suit and dismissed it on the ground that, as both the sales had been set aside there was no cause of action for the present suit. On the 18th December 1918, the Plaintiff applied under sec. 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, for setting aside the order dismissing the present suit and for restoration of the suit. On the 26th April 1919, the Court granted the application of the Plaintiff and restored the suit. There was an application to this Court for reviving the order and a rule was issued: but it was discharged on the 23rd February 1920.

It appears that in the meantime the Maharaja of Burdwan appealed to this Court against the decree in Suit No. 309 of 1916. This appeal was decided on the same day, namely, the 23rd February 1920. The judgment of the Subordinate Judge was set aside and both the sales were upheld by this Court. Thereupon an additional issue (Issue No. 7), viz., "whether the suit is barred by the rule of res judicata," was added at the instance of Defendant No. 7, the Maharaja, on the 24th June 1920 in the present suit. The learned Judge proceeded to decide this preliminary issue first, and by his judgment dated the 5th August 1921 held that the "question as to whether the second sale should be set aside or not is barred as res judicata." On the 30th September 1921, the other issues were taken up, and the Subordinate Judge held that the Defendant No. 3 was benamdar of the Defendant No. 2. The sale under Reg. VIII of 1919 was held to be good, but on the finding that the Defendant No. 2 purchased the property in the benami of Defendant No. 3, gave a decree to the Plaintiffs for joint possession in respect of 8 annas share of the putni with the Defendant No. 3.

The Defendant No. 3 accordingly has preferred this appeal, and so far as this part of the case is concerned the only question we have to consider is whether the Defendant No. 3 was the benamdar of the Defendant No. 2, because, if the Defendant No. 3 was the real purchaser at the sale, he is the owner of the entire mahal by his purchase at the second sale, both the sales having been held valid by the High Court.

In determining the question whether Defendant No. 3 was benamdar or not, the principal point to be considered is, who paid the purchase money. The Plaintiff's case was that it was the Defendant No. 2, who paid the purchase money. The onus is no doubt upon the Plaintiff to prove it. There is no evidence on the record to show that Defendant No. 2 did pay any purchase money. Defendant No. 2 says in his deposition that he did not pay the purchase money. The Plaintiff himself does not depose that the purchase money was paid by the Defendant No. 2. On the contrary his statement goes to show that it was Defendant No. 3 who paid the money. He says: "I do not know whence Niranka Babu (the Defendant No. 3) paid the purchase money of the nilam. Niranka Babu took possession of the mahal after his purchase." The Plaintiff no doubt in his deposition stated that the Defendant No. 2 purchased in the name of Defendant No. 3. But the reason for making that assertion was, as appears from his cross-examination, "the Defendant Ram Chandra (brother of the Defendant No. 2) was instructing Niranka Babu and he was offering bids; (adds): at that time Mritunjoy was standing at their side. From that I infer that Niranka Babu was the benamdar of Mritunjoy." That fact surely is not sufficient for holding that the Defendant No. 3 was the benamdar of Defendant No. 2. Then there are certain alleged admissions of Defendant No. 3 that he was the benamdar of Defendant No. 2. The Plaintiff's witnesses Triguneswar Mitra and Atul Chandra Adak stated that the Defendant No. 3 requested them not to raise the bids as he was bidding for the malik and that he would be able to out-bid others as he would get the surplus sale proceeds through the Defendant No. 2. If, however, the Defendant No. 3 was really bidding for the malik, it did not matter what the price was, because he would get back the purchase money out of the sale proceeds through the Defendant No. 2. It might be that the Defendant No. 3 wanted to deter other bidders if he really requested the other bidders not to raise the bids, in order that he might purchase the property at a lower price. It is also to be observed that the object of purchasing the property benami would be defeated by disclosing publicly at the time of the sale that it was Defendant No. 2, the defaulting putnidar, who was purchasing the property in the name of the Defendant No. 3.

The evidence adduced on behalf of the Plaintiff does not show that the purchase money was paid by the Defendant No. 2. On the other hand, Defendant No. 3 has adduced evidence to show that the purchase money was paid by him. The property was sold at Rs. 10,000 on the 16th November 1916. The sum of Rs. 1,500 was deposited on that day and the balance, namely, Rs. 8,500, was deposited on the 23rd November 1916. On the back of the challan by which Rs. 8,500 was deposited, the numbers of certain currency notes, some of which were of the value of Rs. 1,000 each were noted. The numbers of those notes exactly correspond to the numbers of certain currency notes which were received by the Defendant No. 3 on cashing a cheque for Rs. 10,000 in the Imperial Bank of India on the 22nd November. It appears that Rai Nalinakshya Bose Bahadur, the father of the Defendant No. 3, issued two cheques on the Imperial Bank, one for Rs. 1,100 on the 21st November 1916 and the second for Rs. 10,000 on the 22nd November. There was a third cheque for Demand Loan of Rs. 4,500, all the cheques being in favour of his son, the Defendant No. 3. The Imperial Bank of India certificates showing the numbers of notes issued on the 21st and on the 22nd November 1916, and the Loan Ledger of that Bank showing that Rs. 4,500 was paid as loan on the 22nd November 1916, support the above facts. The Current Account Ledger of the Bank shows a deficiency in the current account and the overdraft. This evidence certainly is very strong.

As stated above, on the 22nd November 1916 when the cheque for Rs. 10,000 was given by the father of Defendant No. 3 in his favour on the Imperial Bank of India another cheque for Demand Loan for Rs. 4,500 was drawn by him on the same day. From the papers produced by the Imperial Bank it appears that Government securities had been deposited by him for securing over-drafts which carried interests at 8 per cent. per annum, and if we are to accept the case of the Plaintiff, we have to hold that the father of Defendant No. 3 in order that the Defendant No. 2 might perpetuate a fraud, gave his son a cheque for Rs. 10,000 while he himself borrowed money on the same day at an interest of 8 per cent. per annum. We do not see any sufficient reason why the father of the Defendant No. 3 should act in this way. It is pointed out that the brother of Defendant No. 3 was married to a lady who had some property and pujas jointly with Defendant No. 2. It appears, however, that litigation was going between the wife of the brother of Defendant No. 3 and the Defendant No. 2 with respect to some of the joint properties. However that may be, no sufficient reasons have been shown why the father of the Defendant No. 3 should help the Defendant No. 2 in this way in order that he might effect a fraud.

It is pointed out by the learned vakil for the Respondent that the numbers of the currency notes received from the Imperial Bank were mentioned on the back of the challan, dated the 16th November 1916, and were subsequently penned through and then entered on the back of the second challan which throws suspicion on the matter. It was suggested, though somewhat faintly, that the numbers of the notes might have subsequently been entered on the back of the second challan in order to create evidence. But the witness Gouri Sanker Panja, a servant of the Defendant No. 3, who entered the numbers of the currency notes on the back of the challan explains the matter. He said: "By mistake the numbers of the said G. C. Notes were written on the back of (Ex. E) by me but on finding out my mistake penned this through." We do not see that any argument can be founded against the Defendant No. 3 on this mistake, because, whatever the intention might have been, there could be no doubt that it was by a mistake that the numbers of the notes were entered on the back of the first challan and when the mistake was discovered they were penned through and the numbers were entered on the back of the second challan. As to the suggestions that the numbers of the notes were entered on the back of the second challan subsequently in order to create evidence, it is based on the ground that the challans which were produced in Court are those which are given to the party by the Collectorate and retained by the party, and that therefore Defendant No. 3 had an opportunity of having the numbers of those notes which he had received from the Imperial Bank, entered on the back of the challan. In the first place this is a mere suggestion; secondly, the challan is dated the 23rd November 1916 when the original challan filed in the Collectorate was certainly in existence; and it would be unreasonable to assume that a party would take the risk of making false entries on the back of the challan when the falsity could be proved by the production of the challan filed in the Collectorate. As already stated there is nothing to support this suggestion. The Defendant No. 3 examined himself. He speaks to the payment of the purchase money and of his having received the cheques from his father for the purpose of cashing them. He further speaks to having given Government securities to the Burdwan Raj as security for putni rents.

It appears that notice was issued on the tenants of the putni mahal on the 28th November 1916 by the Burdwan Raj that the Defendant No. 3 had purchased the putni, and the receipt of possession dated the 1st December 1916 stands in the name of Defendant No. 3. They would no doubt be in the name of the ostensible purchaser and they by themselves do not prove much.

The evidence shows that the Defendant No. 3 collect .. putni ma. gomosthas, c appointed a go. barpur and Raj. security bond was t. 30th March 1917. A Madhab Manna was ap. of Mouzah Nandal. No executed by him has been p. it appears that a decree w. against the heirs of this gomos suit for accounts, and the prelimina the final decrees in the case show tha. sum of Rs. 234 odd was decreed agai. the heirs of the said Beni Madhab Manna who died before the institution of the suit. The decree was executed against the heirs of the said gomostha: some property was sold and was purchased by a third party and the Defendant No. 3 got the decretal amount.

Both the Plaintiff and the Defendant No. 3 summoned certain tenants who produced dakhilas, and one of them, Ex. 3. which was produced at the instance of the Plaintiff shows that rent receipts were granted by the gomostha on behalf of Defendant No. 3. There are other dakhilas produced by witnesses for the Defendant No. 3 which show the same thing. Then the Defendant No. 3 has produced challans obtained from the Burdwan Raj on payment of putni rent after the second sale in the name of Defendant No. 3 through Dinanath, the gomostha. The fact that the name of Defendant No. 3 was entered in the dakhilas on payment of rent to the Raj, by itself does not prove that he was the real owner, because, in all benami transactions the name of the ostensible purchaser is entered in rent receipts, but taking all the facts together, especially posses- . he evi- ae purchase t No. 3, we the case of the e gomostha Dina- ar have been exa- dant No. 3 says that tances from Dinanath twice. Dinanath also says ing. Then there is evidence Dinanath that the balance of payable to the Burdwan Raj after ing the amount collected by him the tenants was paid by Defendant . 3, and that is the way in which rent was paid to the Burdwan Raj. This is supported by the evidence of the Defendant No. 3. We do not think that the Subordinate Judge was right in holding that the Defendant's story was an absolute myth.

The Plaintiff examined three tenants, Panchu Jalia, Surendra Nath Ghose and Prohlad Ghose. They said that they received dakhilas granted by the gomostha in the name of Defendant No. 3 and they asked why the name of the Defendant No. 2 was not entered in the dakhilas and were told that it would be so done after the suit which was then pending was disposed of.

It is to be observed that these witnesses were not cited originally, but were cited only on the 8th August 1921 after the judgment on the preliminary issue (the 7th issue) was pronounced, and in any case the evidence of the witnesses is not of any value.

The Subordinate Judge observed in his judgment: "A study of the records shows that no step, good, bad or indifferent, was taken on behalf of Defendant No. 3 in this suit to rebut the Plaintiff's allegation and Plaintiff's prayer. No witness was cited or summoned for Defendant No. 3 and no document was called for on his behalf and even the said cheques from the Bank were called for by the Defendant No. 2 and not by Defendant No. 3." It appears that this finding is erroneous and is based upon a misconception of facts. The cheques referred to by the Subordinate Judge had reference to the first sale, and not to the second sale in which alone the Defendant No. 3 was interested. The cheques referred to by the Court below were drawn on the Delhi and London Bank, whereas the cheques which had reference to the second sale were on the Imperial Bank of India. There are several petitions made by the Defendant No. 3 showing that he took steps for the production of witnesses and evidence. He took out processes upon the Secretary of the Bank for production of the account books. The petitions are dated the 29th August 1921, 9th May 1921 and 14th March 1921. All that can be said is that at the earliest stage of this suit, the Defendant No. 3 was not so active as he was at a later stage. It must be remembered, however, that at the earlier stage of this suit the previous suit (Suit No. 309 of 1916) was pending, and was not disposed of by the Court of first instance until the 21st February 1918, and by the High Court until the 23rd February 1920. It is pointed out by the Subordinate Judge that the Defendant No. 3 did nothing in that suit, his defence in that suit being that if the second sale was set aside he was entitled to get back the purchase money with compensation. It is true that the question of benami was raised in connection with the second sale by way of amendment. No issue, however, was raised on the point, and as a matter of fact the decision of the first Court in suit

NIRANKA CHANDRA BASU v. ATUL KRISHNA GHOSE.

(No. 309 of 1916) directed that the Defendant No. 2 would get the purchase money back, and it was not until the second sale was confirmed by the High Court that there was a claim against him for 8 annas share, and it became necessary then for him to fight out the case with respect to the claim for possession of 8 annas share of the putni. We have pointed out the steps taken by him for the production of evidence in his favour in this suit.

Lastly, there is evidence as to the negotiations for a compromise of the suit which throws considerable light on the real facts of the case. Sailendra Nath Mitra who was then the officiating Government pleader of Burdwan and Mahima Ranjan Bakshi, pleader, Assansole, who took part in the negotiations for the compromise, were called by the Plaintiff; and their evidence goes to show that the negotiations were carried on with the Defendant No. 3 on the footing that he was the purchaser of the putni. Triguneswar Mitra who is related to the Plaintiff, stated in his deposition: "Sailendra Babu said that he had heard from Mritunjoy Babu that at the time of the nilam there was an understanding between Mritunjoy and Niranka Babu that the latter would give back the mahal to Mritunjoy if he paid the purchase money to Niranka Babu with interest at 9 per cent. per annum, and Sailendra Babu said how could we expect to get without payment of interest." That might be so. There might have been an understanding that the property would be purchased by Defendant No. 3 and that the Defendant No. 2 would get it from him on payment of the purchase money. Assuming that there was such an understanding it does not show that the purchase was made by the Defendant No. 3 as benamdar. On the contrary it shows that it was the Defendant No. 3 who would purchase the property and that he would convey the property to Defendant No. 2 if the latter paid the money. We are accordingly of opinion that there is no evidence of the Defendant No. 3 being the benamdar of the Defendant No. 2.

We have said that the Plaintiff has no direct evidence showing that he paid the purchase money and the circumstantial evidence relied upon by the Plaintiff has also been dealt with by us.

The Court below has commented upon the fact that the statements made by the Defendant No. 2 as to the surplus sale proceeds withdrawn by him after confirmation of the sale, viz., Rs. 9,000 are not consistent with each other. He stated in his deposition that he kept the money in the Bank. Subsequently he said that he kept the money with his aunt, and that therefore there is no consistent account about his keeping the money. We do not, however, see the force of the observations made by the Subordinate Judge on this point. If it is meant to suggest that the money was paid to Defendant No. 3 it would go to show that the money was originally supplied by Defendant No. 3 and that he was repaid by the Defendant No. 2. But there is no evidence to show that the Defendant No. 3 advanced any money to Defendant No. 2 before the sale or that the latter repaid it to the Defendant No. 3.

The Court below has also commented on the fact that the account books of the Defendant No. 3 were not produced by him. Those account books were in fact produced by him, but at a late stage of the case. He gave an explanation why these were not produced earlier. But whether that is satisfactory or not the Defendant No. 3 has shown that the purchase money was paid out of the money obtained by him on cashing the cheque drawn in his favour by his father.

The learned vakil for the Plaintiff-Respondent has conceded that some of the reasons given by the Subordinate Judge for deciding against the Defendant No. 3 are not borne out by the record. On the whole we are of opinion that the Plaintiff has failed to prove that the Defendant No. 3 was a benamdar of Defendant No. 2. That being so, the decree of the Court below in favour of the Plaintiff for joint possession in respect of an 8 annas share of the putni mahal with the Defendant No. 3 must be set aside.

So far as the Maharaja of Burdwan is concerned the sale having been held to be good, is no longer interested in the question raised in the appeal and no ground has been urged against him. The cross-objection preferred by the Plaintiff has not been pressed. The appeal as against the Maharaja is accordingly dismissed.

The next question is whether the Plaintiff is entitled to get a decree for one-half of the surplus sale proceeds of the second sale. That sale, as stated above, took place on the 16th November 1916, and fetched a price of Rs. 10,000. The Defendant No. 2 withdrew Rs. 8,999-11-11 as the surplus sale proceeds on the 24th January 1917. The Plaintiff's claim to one-half of this amount is based upon the allegation that he was the owner of the putni taluk (to the extent of 8 annas) by virtue of his purchase of it at the first sale jointly with Defendant No. 2. The first point for determination so far as this part of the case is concerned is whether the Plaintiff was a purchaser at the first sale jointly with Defendant No. 2. The Court below has come to the finding that he was. It has found that there was an agreement between the Plaintiff and Defendant No. 2 to purchase the taluk at the first sale and that the Plaintiff paid half the purchase money. The evidence on the point has been placed before us and has been commented upon at length by both parties. The Plaintiff's case is that he paid Rs. 300, that being one-half of the money which had been paid into Court on the date the sale took place (i.e., 15th May 1916), and that he paid a sum of Rs. 2,000 when the balance of the money had to be deposited on the 22nd May 1916. The Plaintiff says that he came to Burdwan a few days before the sale and that he expected that all the co-sharers of the putni mahals would pay their quota of the putni rent, and he further says that he had sufficient money with him for payment of his share of the putni rent which exceeded Rs. 300. It appears that he borrowed a sum of Rs. 1,500 a few days before the sale in order to pay off the rent due on account of some putni mahals held by him under the Burdwan Raj, and he says that he had a sum of Rs. 510 left with him after paying the rent due on account of the other putnis; but as his other co-sharers in the taluk Debibarpur did not pay their shares of the rent, he and Defendant No. 2 entered into an agreement to purchase the taluk jointly in the names of Defendant No. 2 and the Plaintiff's son Tarak. Bids were actually offered in those two names. The Plaintiff has not produced his account books and that certainly is a matter for comment. With regard to the balance of the purchase money which was to be deposited on the 8th day (the 22nd May) the Plaintiff adduced evidence to show that he paid Rs. 2,000 to Ram Chandra, the brother of Defendant No. 2 on account of the balance of his share plus certain incidental costs such as giving security, etc. It is to be observed that in the plaint as originally filed it was stated that a sum of Rs. 2,000 was paid on the 15th May and there is no mention of the payment of the sum of Rs. 300 on that day. It appears, however, as observed by the Subordinate Judge that the plaint was carelessly drawn up, and subsequently the plaint was amended.

It appears from the evidence that the financial condition of the Plaintiff was not good at the time. We have already referred to the fact that he borrowed Rs. 1,500 a few days before the sale and there is also evidence that he had to borrow money again, but that was sometime after (November, 1916). The evidence that he had Rs. 2,000 for payment of his share of the balance of the purchase money does not appear to be strong. There is the evidence, however, of one Mahima Ranjan, a pleader of Assansole, who swears that he was sent by his uncle Rash Behari to Burdwan with money in case his cousin Jotindra Mohan required it for purchasing another putni mahal. that the Plaintiff's son Radha Raman took two currency notes from him of the value of Rs. 500 each and that the said Radha Raman actually paid money for being deposited in the Collectorate on the 22nd May in the presence of the witness. The two currency notes of Rs. 500 were not as a matter of fact entered in the challan, but it is stated that the podder said that it was unnecessary to enter the notes in the challan.

There has been some discussion before us as to the ability of the Defendant No. 2 to raise the amount of money which was necessary for being deposited, and the Court below has found that the story of Defendant No. 2 as to the raising of the money was false. But it does not follow that [illegible] have raised mo[illegible] No. 2 was unabl[illegible] purchase money. [illegible] to consider is wheth[illegible] ment between the Pl[illegible] No. 2 for the purcha[illegible] whether the Plaintiff pa[illegible] of the purchase money. The [illegible] has produced two letters purporting to have been written by the Defendant No. 2 from Purulia. One is Ex. 8, dated the 23rd May 1916, which, if genuine, proves the case of the Plaintiff entirely, because, it contains a clear admission of Rs. 2,000 having been paid by the Plaintiff to Ram Chandra, the brother of Defendant No. 2, for the purpose of purchasing Debibarpur at the auction sale. The Defendant No. 2 denied that the letter was written by him. The Subordinate Judge has come to the finding that the letter was in the handwriting of Defendant No. 2. There is some similarity between his handwriting and the writing of the letter, but in the absence of any expert evidence on the point we do not think it safe to rest our decision on this letter. There are other circumstances however upon which the Court below has relied, and which we think have an important bearing on the case. The first is that joint bids were offered in the names of Tarak and Defendant No. 2. The Plaintiff's son Tarak was present in Court at the time of the auction sale and if joint bids were offered in the name of said Tarak, it is difficult to see why his name was joined unless it was agreed that the Defendant No. 2 and the Plaintiff should jointly purchase the property. The Defendant's case was that Tarak in whose name the bids were offered jointly with Defendant No. 2 was the son of Ram Chandra, the brother of Defendant No. 2. It appears, however, chase money ... son of Ram Chandra, was obtained ... month old at that time according to the Plaintiff's evidence, and a year old according to the Defendants' evidence. Ram Chandra had other grown up sons and it is extremely unlikely that bids should be offered in the name of a child of so tender an age.

The Defendant's story is that when bids were going on in the joint names of the Defendant No. 2 and Tarak, Ram Chandra came and objected to his being mixed up in the matter of the purchase and thereupon the name of his son Tarak was struck out from the bid-sheet. But Ram Chandra admittedly executed a security bond on behalf of his brother, the Defendant No. 2, in favour of the zemindar (the Burdwan Raj) as security for the rent of the putni mahal purchased by the Defendant No. 2. The evidence as to when the name of Tarak was struck out from the bid-sheet is conflicting, but we think having regard to the evidence of the Nazir that it was struck out by Mr. Waddell, the Collector, and initialled by him, when the bids were closed and the bid-sheet was placed before him. The name of Tarak appears jointly with that of the Defendant No. 2 in the challan by which the earnest money was deposited on the date of the sale. It is said by way of explanation that Bhuban Banerjee who wrote out the challan was not aware of the fact that the name of Tarak had been struck out and in ignorance of that fact the challan was written out in the joint names after the sale. But as stated above the name of Tarak was struck out after the bids had been closed and the challan was corrected, as it appears, by the Naib Nazir.

The second circumstance is that during the negotiations for compromise of the present suit in the Lower Court, which however was not successful, the fact that the Plaintiff had paid money for the purchase of the putni at the first sale was set up in the presence of the Defendant No. 2. It appears from the evidence of Sailendra Nath Mitra, the then Government pleader of Burdwan, and Mahima Ranjan Bakshi, pleader, Assansole, that Defendant No. 2 stated that if the Plaintiff had paid money to Ram Chandra, he would ascertain it from his brother and repay him. Of course there was no distinct admission that the Plaintiff had paid any money. But the Plaintiff had set up a case of payment of Rs. 2,400 in his plaint and these negotiations for compromise took place long afterwards. It is improbable that Defendant No. 2 should not have asked his brother Ram Chahdra as to what sum, if any, had been paid by the Plaintiff for the purchase of the putni taluk. In these circumstances we are unable to differ from the finding that the Plaintiff paid one-half of the purchase money. It is next contended that the Plaintiff having admittedly purchased the property for the benefit of his son, the suit could not be maintained by him. But until there was a conveyance executed by him the interest in the property remained in him. Any disclaimer would not pass the interest to his son, and the son's position was that of a benamdar.

It is further urged that the purchase of the putni by one of the defaulters was void; but so long as the sale was not set aside it must be taken that it was only voidable. See Gobinda Chandra Pal v. Dwarkanath Pal (1). The sale has been confirmed and the question whether it was void or voidable does not arise, and does not affect the claim for the surplus sale proceeds.

We now come to the questions of amendment of the plaint and limitation, but before doing so, we must notice a contention raised on behalf of the Plaintiff, viz., that the Defendant No. 2 not having preferred an appeal is not entitled to raise any objection against the finding of the Subordinate Judge. The Subordinate Judge gave a decree for possession to the Plaintiff in respect of an 8 annas share of the property. The question of the surplus sale proceeds would arise only if that decree for possession was set aside. There was no decree against the Defendant No. 2, with respect to the surplus sale proceeds and an appeal does not lie merely against findings. In any case having regard to the provisions of Or. 41, r. 33, C. P. C., we can give such relief to Defendant No. 2, as he may be entitled to.

Then comes the question of amendment of the plaint. It arises in this way. The first sale, as already stated, took place on the 15th May 1916 and on the 29th May 1916, Suit No. 309 of 1916 was instituted by Defendants Nos. 6 to 9. The second sale took place on the 16th November 1916. On the 22nd November 1916 the Plaintiff put in an application praying that the payment of the surplus sale proceeds might be withheld for one month, but the Court held that no action could be taken without an injunction from the Civil Court. On the 24th January 1917 the Defendant No. 2 withdrew the sum of Rs. 8,999 odd, that being the surplus sale proceeds. The present suit was instituted on the 14th May 1917. There was originally no prayer in the plaint about the surplus sale proceeds, though it was open to the Plaintiff on the 14th May 1917 (when the suit was instituted) to claim a moiety of the surplus sale proceeds in the alternative. He was fully aware of the fact that the Defendant No. 2 had withdrawn the whole of the surplus sale proceeds as he had objected to the withdrawal. On the 7th May 1920, an application was made for amendment of the plaint praying for a refund of Rs. 2,000 in case the first sale was set aside; even then there was no prayer for amendment in respect of the one-half of the surplus sale proceeds. On the 31st May 1920, an application for amendment in respect of the surplus sale proceeds was made for the first time. The Defendant No. 2 objected to the application; but the Court on the 18th July 1920 allowed the plaint to be amended. The question however seems to have been left open, and was finally decided in the judgment.

The question is whether the application for amendment was properly allowed. It is contended on behalf of the Appellant that the claim in respect of the surplus sale proceeds was barred at the date of the application for amendment (31st May 1920) as the surplus sale proceeds were withdrawn by the Defendant No. 2 on the 24th January 1917, and that therefore the amendment ought not to have been allowed. We have to see therefore whether the claim in respect of the surplus sale proceeds was barred by limitation on the 31st May 1920. The claim for the surplus sale proceeds comes under Art. 62 of the Limitation Act, under which a suit has to be brought within three years from the date on which the money was received by the Defendant. There is no doubt that money was received by the Defendant on the 24th January 1917 and the date of the amendment was 31st May 1920 which was more than three years from the former date. It is contended on behalf of the Plaintiff that the period between the date on which the sale was set aside by the Court below is

Suit No. 309 of 1916 (21st February 1918) and the date on which the High Court reversed that decision and upheld the sale (23rd February 1920), should be deducted and that if that period is deducted, the claim for the surplus sale proceeds would be in time. The case does not come under sec. 14 of the Limitation Act as the Plaintiff was not prosecuting the previous suit, nor does it fall under any other section of the Act.

The Plaintiff evidently relies upon the principle of suspension of time which has been laid down in some cases. The question of suspension of the period of limitation is one upon which the authorities do not seem to be uniform. In the well-known case of Ranee Surno Moyee v. Shoshee Mokhee Burmonia (2) the Judicial Committee in determining whether the cause of action accrued with reference to sec. 32 of Act X of 1859, at the end of each Fusli year when the rent became due or at the date of the decree reversing the auction sale of the putni taluk belonging to the zamindar, decided in favour of the latter date. That therefore was a case in which the question was when did the cause of action arise for the suit, and it was not really a case of suspension of the period of limitation. The case of Hukumchand Boid v. Prithichand Lal Chowdhury (3) is also not a case of suspension of the period of limitation. Their Lordships held that the sale had not become final and conclusive: in other words, for the purpose of the question of limitation the sale had not become absolute. On the other hand, in the case of Sani Rani v. Kanhaye Lal (4) where there was a fusion of the interests of the mortgagor and the mortgagee for a certain period, and it was contended that limitation was suspended for that period, their Lordships observed :—"There is nothing in Act XV of 1877 which would justify this Board in holding that, once that period of limitation has begun to run in this case, it could be suspended. Their Lordships consider that if they were to hold that by reason of the fusion of interests between 1883 and 1898 the period of limitation was suspended, they would—this not being a suit to which the proviso to sec. 9 of Act XV of 1887 applies—be deciding contrary to the express enactment of that section that when once time has begun to run no subsequent disability or inability to sue stops it." But in the case of Lakhan Chandra Sen v. Madhusudan Sen (5) this Court acting upon the principle of the cases Ranee Surno Moyee v. Soshee Mokhee Burmonia (2) and Pran Nath Ray Choudhury v. Rokea Begum (6) held that the Plaintiff's right to bring an action was suspended for a certain period: the decision of this Court was approved by the Judicial Committee in the case of Nrityamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Chandra Sen (7). In that case two out of three brothers were dispossessed of their shares in certain properties by the third brother. One of the brothers who were dispossessed brought a suit for recovery of possession of his share as against the other two brothers as Defendants. One of the Defendants supported the Plaintiff, and set up his own right to one-third share in the property. It appears that an issue was raised as between the co-Defendants as to whether the Defendant who supported the Plaintiff was entitled to a certain share. The Court actually passed a decree not only in favour of the Plaintiff but also declared that the Defendant had one-third share. On appeal the decree of the trial Court in favour of the Plaintiff was upheld, but was set aside so far as the Defendant was concerned. It was in these circumstances that this Court and the Judicial Committee held that limitation was suspended from the date of the decree of the first Court to the date when that decree was set aside on appeal. The Judicial Committee observed as follows :—"Limitation would no doubt run against them from that time. But it would equally without doubt remain in suspense whilst the Plaintiffs were boná fide litigating for their rights in a Court of Justice. They had in the suit of 1896 before Mr. Justice Henderson associated themselves with the Plaintiffs in that action and had asked for an adjudication in those proceedings of their rights. A distinct issue was framed in respect of their claim to which no objection seems to have been made by the Appellant. It was an effective decree made by a competent Court and was capable of being enforced until set aside. Admittedly, if the period during which the Plaintiffs were litigating for their rights is deducted, their present suit is in time. Their Lordships are of opinion that plea of limitation was rightly overruled by the High Court."

Now, what are the facts of the present case? Here the Plaintiff himself did not institute any suit. The suit was instituted by the Defendants Nos. 6 to 9 for reversal of the first and subsequently by way of amendment they prayed for setting aside the second sale. The Plaintiff was interested in upholding the first sale because he had purchased the property at the first sale. Though he was interested in having the second sale set aside he does not appear to have taken any part in the suit. It is true that in the case of Nrityamoni Dassi v. Lakhan Chandra Sen (7), also, the Plaintiff did not institute the previous suit and was a Defendant, but as pointed out by their Lordships, he had associated with the Plaintiff in the previous suit and had asked for an adjudication of his rights in that suit. A distinct issue was raised in respect of his claim to which no objection seems to have been made by the other Defendant. It was in these circumstances that the Plaintiff was held entitled to suspension of the time during the time the decree in the previous suit remained in force. The case of Sani Rani v. Kanhaye Lal (4) does not appear to have been brought to the notice of the Judicial Committee. A Full Bench of the Madras High Court in the case of Muthia Korarki Chetti v. Madar Arumal (8), considered the decisions of the Judicial Committee on the question of suspension of limitation and one of the learned Judges (Seshagiri Ayyar, J.) observed : "The true rule deducible from these decisions of the Judicial Committee is this : that subject to the exemptions, exclusion, mode of computation, and the excusing of delay, etc., which are provided in the Limitation Act, the language of the third column of the first schedule should be so interpreted as to carry out the true intention of the legislature, that is to say, by dating the cause of action from a date when the remedy is available to the party. This is a rule of construction and not a rule of law. I would answer the reference as above leaving each case to be dealt with in the light of these observations." However that may be, we do not think that the principle of Nrityamoni v. Lakhan Chandra Sen (7) should be extended to the facts of the present case and we are accordingly of opinion that the claim for the surplus sale proceeds was barred by limitation on the 31st May 1920 when the amendment was applied for.

It is contended on behalf of the Defendant No. 2 that even if the claim for the surplus would have been barred by limitation, it would be no ground for disallowing the application for amendment. Reliance is placed upon the case of Zahur Ali Khan v. Rutta Koer (9), where their Lordships allowed an amendment of the plaint on the ground that a new suit would be barred by limitation. But the reasons why the amendment was allowed is thus stated : "The fairer course is to do what the Judge of the Court of first instance might under the Code of Procedure have done at an earlier stage of the course, namely, allow the Appellant to amend his plaint so as to make it a plaint against Rutta Koer alone for the recovery of money due on a bond. Her liability on the bond may thus be tried on the issues already settled." It does not appear that the claim would have been barred had the amendment been allowed by the Court of first instance in that case. Then again the claim for recovery of the money allowed by way of amendment could be, as pointed out by their Lordships, tried on the issues already settled.

Here the claim for the surplus sale proceeds could not be tried on the issues in the case, and although the claim for possession of an 8 annas share and that for recovery of an 8 annas share of the surplus proceeds might be said to arise out of the same transaction, the cause of action was not identical [see Payana Reena Saminathan v. Pana Sana Patamapoor (10)].

In a series of cases it has been held that the power of the Court to amend the plaint should not be exercised where the effect is to take away from the Defendant a legal right which has accrued to him by lapse of time. See Kalidas Choudhury v. Draupadi Dassi (11), Upendra Narayan Ray v. Janaki Nath Ray (12), Rebati Raman v. Harish Chandra (13) and Gyanendra Nath v. Paresh Nath (14). The rule is recognised by the Judicial Committee in the case of Charan Das v. Amir Khan (15), where it was held that there are cases in which that consideration is outweighed by the special circumstances of the case. We do not think that there are any special circumstances in the present case to outweigh the rule.

The last question is whether the Plaintiff is entitled to recover the sum of Rs. 2,300 paid by him on account of the purchase money and other expenses. The application for amendment so far as this claim is concerned was made on the 7th May 1919 within three years of the date on which the money was paid (15th and 22nd May 1916). The application was ordered to be put up later, and was taken up along with the subsequent application, dated the 31st May which related to the claim for surplus sale proceeds and in the alternative for refund of the purchase money. It is stated in the order-sheet that the application, dated the 7th May, was not pressed. But the later application for amendment filed on the 31st May 1920 which as stated above related to the recovery of the surplus sale proceeds and in the alternative for the recovery of Rs. 2,300 was certainly pressed; it was therefore unnecessary to press the application, dated the 7th May, separately.

The result therefore is that the Plaintiff's claim so far as the surplus sale proceeds are concerned is disallowed, but the Plaintiff will get a decree for the sum which he had paid to the Defendant No. 2 for the purchase of the first sale, namely, the sum of Rs. 2,300.

The Plaintiff and Defendant No. 2 will bear their own costs in this Court as well as in the Court below. The Maharaja of Burdwan will get three gold mohurs from Defendant No. 3 and 2 gold mohurs from the Plaintiff as his costs in the cross-objection. Defendant No. 3 will get his costs from the Plaintiff in this appeal, the hearing fee being assessed at 5 gold mohurs.

The Plaintiff must pay the costs of the Maharaja in the lower Court and half the costs of Defendant No. 3 in the lower Court. Defendant No. 2 will not get costs of the additional papers printed out of Court.

ADUSUMILLI GOPALAKRISHNAYYA and anr., Respondents.

Mortgages, successive—Payment by owner, not bound by personal covenant to pay, of earlier mortgage—Subrogation—Earlier mortgage of land and crops and later of crops alone—Payment by owner to save crop from sale, if may be claimed in priority.

It is now settled law that where in India there are several mortgages on a property, the owner of the property subject to the mortgages may, if he pays off an earlier charge, treat himself as buying it and stand in the same position as his vendor, that is to say, he may keep alive the incumbrance for his own benefit and thus come in before a later mortgagee. This rule would not apply if the owner of the property had covenanted to pay the later mortgage debt. It is further to be presumed, as provided by sec. 101 of the Transfer of Property Act, that if there is no indication to the contrary the owner has intended to have kept alive the previous charge if it would be for his benefit.

payment by the owner to save the crops from sale by the prior mortgagee must be deemed to be purchase pro tanto of the prior mortgage and not a redemption thereof, so that in respect of the sum paid he would be entitled to stand in the shoes of the prior mortgagee.

This was an appeal from an order, dated the 26th January 1920, of the High Court of Madras, affirming an order, dated the 10th October 1918, of the temporary Subordinate Judge of Masulipatam.

The owners of certain property in Masulipatam created three mortgages upon it, dated respectively 21st August 1905, 5th March 1909, and 20th October 1909. The equity of redemption was purchased in execution of a money decree against the mortgagors, and the purchasers transferred their interest to the present Respondents. The first and third mortgages were upon the lands alone. The second mortgage included the annual crops as well.

In 1913 the second mortgagee filed a suit to enforce his mortgage and obtained a decree for sale of the mortgaged property. The Respondents and their assignors paid over considerable sums of money in discharge of that decree and satisfaction thereof was entered in 1918.

Meanwhile the Appellant instituted a suit (No. 12 of 1914) to enforce his third mortgage and obtained a decree for sale in execution of which a portion of the mortgaged properties was sold and purchased by the Appellant with the leave of the Court.

After payment of the amount due under the first mortgage a balance of Rs. 1,327-12-3 remained in Court to the credit of the cause.

The Respondents thereupon applied to the Subordinate Court for the payment to them of this balance claiming to be subrogated to the second mortgagee. The application was opposed by the Appellant who denied the Respondents' claim to subrogation and contended that the second mortgagee's decree had been satisfied in full and that such satisfaction inured to his benefit.

The Subordinate Judge decided in favour of the Respondents and his decision was upheld by the High Court (Oldfield and Seshagiri Ayyar, JJ.) on appeal.

Mr. Narasimham for the Appellant.

Mr. Dubé for the Respondents.

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

LORD PHILLIMORE.—Certain Indian landowners within the district of Masulipatam effected 1st, 2nd and 3rd mortgages on their property; the 1st and 3rd being on the lands alone, the 2nd on the crops also. They were afterwards sued to judgment by some creditors for ordinary debts, and their lands were sold in execution of the judgment but subject to the mortgages. The purchaser of the equity of redemption was one Pingala, who paid rupees 1,000, and thereout the judgment debt was satisfied.

The second mortgagee then instituted his suit to enforce his mortgage, making the original mortgagors the third mortgagee and Pingala Defendants; and having obtained judgment, he from time to time obtained orders for sale of the crops. In one case it would seem as if the crops were actually sold in execution; in others, Pingala, or the present Respondents who bought Pingala's interests during the course of the proceedings, paid the second mortgagee sums of money and saved the crops from seizure. While this was going on, the third mortgagee, who is the present Appellant, brought a suit, making the original mortgagors and Pingala parties; and in this suit the lands were sold out and out, freed and discharged from the mortgages. After payment of the amount due to the first mortgagee and the expenses of the sale and so forth, there remained in Court to the credit of the cause a sum of rupees 1,327 with some annas and pies.

The Respondents, the purchasers from Pingala, who had been added as supplemental Defendants in the suit brought by the Appellant, thereupon claimed to be subrogated to the second mortgagee, and in right of the latter, to receive this sum out of Court. They made this claim on the 22nd July 1918, for the following reasons. At the time of the decree in favour of the third mortgagee which was made on appeal by the High Court on the 13th February 1917, there was still due to the second mortgagee the sum of rupees 1,990. Now the decree of the High Court provided that Pingala or his assignees should be at liberty to pay the amount due under the decree obtained by the second mortgagee, and that by doing so, they would be relegated to the rights of that mortgagee. Accordingly the Respondents paid rupees 1,990 to the second mortgagee, and on the 20th of December 1917, full satisfaction by payment through the Court was recorded.

The application of the Respondents for the payment out of the money in Court was resisted by the Appellant, who contended that when the owner of a property subject to several mortgages pays off a prior mortgage, he is not entitled to stand in the shoes of the prior mortgagee but is to be taken as clearing the property from prior incumbrances for the benefit of the later mortgagee.

Now quite apart from the general law on the subject, the decree of the High Court, from which there was no appeal, had provided that in respect of any payment made by the owner of the property to the second mortgagee he should acquire the right of the second mortgagee. This would be sufficient for the determination of the question immediately in dispute, because the sum in Court, rupees 1,327 odd, is less than the sum of rupees 1,990 which the Respondents paid to the second mortgagee when final satisfaction was entered. And accordingly the Subordinate Judge had no difficulty in deciding the immediate application in favour of the Respondents.

From this decision the present Appellant appealed to the High Court at Madras. This Court, in affirming the actual decision, went further and stated a principle in accordance with which the present Respondents will not only be entitled to stand in the shoes of the second mortgagee in respect of Rs. 1,990, paid at the time of the final satisfaction, but also in respect of several payments that they or Pingala had made from time to time to save the crops from being seized. This question, as the Judges in the High Court rightly pointed out, was not determined by the previous decree of the High Court, which only affected payments made subsequent to that decree.

It is therefore necessary to investigate matters a little more closely. It is now settled law that where in India there are several mortgages on a property, the owner of the property subject to the mortgages may, if he pays off an earlier charge, treat himself as buying it and stand in the same position as his vendor, or to put it in another way, he may keep the incumbrance alive for his benefit and thus come in before a later mortgagee. This rule would not apply if the owner of the property had covenanted to pay the later mortgage debt, but in this case there was no such personal covenant. It is further to be presumed, and indeed the statute so enacts (Transfer of Property Act, sec. 101), that if there is no indication to the contrary the owner has intended to have kept alive the previous charge if it would be for his benefit.

So far therefore as Pingala or the Respondents can be supposed to have bought the rights of the second mortgagee at the various times when they paid sums to him, so far they are entitled to stand in his shoes and claim priority over the present Appellant, who is the third mortgagee. This could hardly be disputed by counsel for the Appellant, having regard to the decisions of this Board [Gokuldoss Gopaldoss v. Rambux Seochand (1), Dinobundu Shaw Chowdrey v. Jogmaya Dasi (2) and Mahomad Ibrahim Hossein Khan v. Ambika Pershad Singh (3)]. The point, however, on which he really relied arose under the peculiar conditions of the second mortgage, which was upon the crops as well as upon the land. He contended that sums paid to the second mortgagee to save the crops from seizure must be deemed to be sums paid in reduction of the second mortgage, and not purchases pro tanto of that mortgage.

Their Lordships fail to follow the contention. There was an incumbrance upon a composite security, land and crops. It became necessary for the owner subject to the incumbrance, to pay sums of money to the incumbrancer to prevent his enforcing his charge from time to time. The incumbrancer could sell his charge or portions of his charge to any one, and there is nothing in law or good sense to eliminate the owner of the property from the list of possible purchasers. It is to the benefit of the owner that the proceedings should be deemed to be a purchase and not a redemption, and no reason appears why it should not be assumed that he intended to act in the way most beneficial to himself.

If instead of the mortgage being on lands and crops it had been on three separate estates, and proceedings had been taken against one of them only, money paid to stave off such proceedings might certainly be considered to be purchase money and not redemption money. So in the case of these crops. Any sums paid by Pingala or the Respondents to save the sale of crops should be deemed to be pro tanto purchases of the second mortgage. It is suggested by the Appellant that the sum of rupees 2,058 odd received in April 1914, was not paid by Pingala but was the fruits of a sale in execution. If this should prove to be so, and there is nothing to qualify it, the present Respondents would not in respect of that sum be entitled to stand in the shoes of the second mortgagee. But in all cases where they have paid the money, they are entitled to the benefit. A fortiori they are entitled to keep the order made in their favour by the Judge of the Subordinate Court and confirmed by the High Court, and to have the money in Court paid out to them. Their Lordships will therefore humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Judgment, 22, November.

BAIJNATH SINGH and ors., Appellants, v. JAMAL BROTHERS & CO.; LD., and anr., Respondents.

Registration Regulation, II of 1897, of Upper Burma, rr. 4, 5, 7—Mortgage, if properly registered—Presumption—Official endorsement that presentation was by mortgagee—Omission to state reason of executant's inability or failure to appear and admit—Irregularity.

Where the law required that the document to be registered should be presented by some person executing or claiming under it or by the agent of such person duly authorised by power-of-attorney, and the document, in this case a mortgage, bore the official endorsement signed by the registering officer that it was presented for registration by the mortgagee and also a note purporting to be signed by some person as the agent of the mortgagee:

Held—That in the absence of any provision of law requiring the signature of the person presenting the document for registration the correctness of the official endorsement should be presumed and the signature of the agent for which there was no legal sanction could not operate to contradict it.

The omission by the registering officer to note the circumstances in which the executant of the document was unable or refused to appear and admit execution is at most a defect in procedure which does not vitiate the registration made on a proper presentation. The presumption in such a case is that the registering officer acted according to law when registered the document.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 10th January 1921, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma, whch reversed a decree, dated the 31st July 1916, of the Court of the Additional District Judge of Yenangyaung.

The Respondent Company sued to enforce a mortgage of oil-well sites, dated the 16th August 1904. The facts may be shortly stated as follows:—A. S. Jamal Brothers and Company lent the sum of Rs. 25,000 to the Defendants-Appellants, Baijnath Singh and Fateh Bahadur Singh, who executed a mortgage, dated the 16th August 1904, hypothecating certain oil-well sites specified therein. As the creditors desired that their name should not be made public in connection with the oil business, the deed of mortgage was executed benami in favour of Suna Ravana Mona Vengarachellum Chetty. The mortgagors covenanted as follows:—"We will pay the principal whenever it is required. If, when required, we fail to pay the principal and interest please act accordng to law and sell the wells."

The above deed of mortgage was duly presented for registration and the registering officer was satisfied that it was executed by the mortgagors, in accordance with the rules then in force in Upper Burma for registration of documents.

The Chettys, who were the benamidars for the said A. S. Jamal Brothers and Company, executed a deed of assignment or release on the 11th September 1914 in favour of the real mortgagees, who are now represented by the Respondent Company and they instituted the present suit on the 30th March 1915 against the Defendants to recover the amount of principal and interest due under the mortgage, dated the 16th August 1904, by sale of the mortgaged property.

The mortgagors Baijnath Singh and Fateh Bahadur Singh are Defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The 4th Defendant is the Burma Oil Company, Limited, having purchased some of the mortgaged properties from Defendant No. 1 in 1908, and the 3rd Defendant the Nath Singh Oil Company is also a subsequent transferee of the mortgaged properties.

The Plaintiffs claimed the usual decree for sale of the mortgaged properties on default of payment.

The trial Judge held that the mortgage was fictitious, that the Rs. 25,000 paid by Jamal Brothers to Baijnath Singh was not paid as consideration therefor, and that the mortgage was accordingly without consideration, and he dismissed the suit.

On appeal the judgment of the lower Court was reversed and the suit was decreed.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellants.—The mortgage is invalid. It was never presented for registration by a person duly authorized, and it was registered without admission of execution by the executant. There was no compliance with the provisions of sec. 32, Act III of 1877 and Reg. II of 1877, rr. 4, 6, 7.

The failure to admit execution is a fundamental defect and not merely a defect in procedure. There is no note by the Registrar of any enquiry as to execution and the inference is that no enquiry was made.

The assignment is also invalid for defects in registration. It is alleged to have been presented for registration under a power-of-attorney and no such power-of-attorney is in evidence.

Further, the document is not proved to have been executed by the Chettys and consequently their agent, even if duly authorised, was not entitled to present the document for registration.

[Reference was also made to sec. 114, Indian Evidence Act.]

Messrs. Micklem, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents.—The mortgage was registered in accordance with the rules. There is a presumption in favour of the correctness of the indorsement which professes to have been made by the mortgagees. The omission by the registering officer to record non-appearance is merely an error of procedure on the part of that officer for which the Respondents cannot be penalised.

BAIJNATH SINGH v. JAMAL BROTHERS & CO., LD.

Court of the Additional District Judge of Yenangyaung.

The suit is to enforce a mortgage of the 16th August 1904, for Rs. 25,000 advanced by the firm of Abdul Shakoor Jamal Brothers and Company to the Defendants Baijnath Singh and Fateh Bahadur Singh. The mortgage was taken in the name of Suna Ravana Mona Vengarachellum Chetty, but as benamidar for the firm of Jamal Brothers and Company.

The present Plaintiffs are Jamal Brothers and Company, Limited, who claim to be transferees from the firm of Jamal Brothers and Company and their benamidars of the mortgage debt and the security.

The suit was dismissed in the 1st Court but was decreed on appeal. From the Appeal Court's decree the present appeal is preferred.

Though numerous pleas in defence were urged in the early stages of the suit which has been needlessly and lamentably prolonged, the only pleas that now survive are by way of objection to the execution and registration of the mortgage and the transfer.

The mortgage purports to be signed by both the mortgagors and its execution is admitted by them.

But then it is contended that there has been no valid registration of the document. The law applicable is at that date to be found in Reg. II of 1897, and the rules made in exercise of the powers conferred by it. By the 4th rule "every document to be registered under the rules must be presented by some person executing or claiming under the same . . . or by the agent of such person . . . duly authorized by power-of-attorney."

It is urged that the mortgage was presented for registration by an agent, and to comply with the terms of the rule it was incumbent on the Plaintiffs to produce a duly authenticated power-of-attorney authorizing the agent's presentation. In support of this contention realiance was placed on the decision of this Board in Jambu Parshad v. Muhammad Aftab Ali Khan (1).

But the whole structure of this argument has no real foundation.

It rests on the supposition that the writing at the foot of the document purporting to be the Tamil signature of Ramasawmy Chetty shows that it was he who presented the document and that he was only an agent. This theory owes its origin to the belated and unfortunate discovery of one of the Defendants' legal advisers, and is directly opposed to the official statement signed by the registering officer that the document was presented for registration by the mortgagee.

There is no provision in the regulation or the rules that requires the signature of the person presenting the document for registration. But under r. 7 registration shall be affected by the registering officer writing on it an endorsement in the terms of that appearing at the foot of the document.

The correctness of this official endorsement is to be presumed, and the Tamil signature, for which there was no legal sanction, cannot operate to contradict it.

The presentation, therefore, was by a person claiming under the document.

It is next objected that execution of the mortgage was not admitted before the registering officer by Fateh Bahadur Singh. It, however, admittedly bears his signature and it is a fair presumption in the circumstances that the officer acted under r. 5 when he registered the document. It is true that where any party to a document is unable or refuses to appear the rule requires a note of the circumstances to be made, and that has not been done. But the omission is one for which the person presenting the document cannot be held responsible : it is at most a defect in procedure which did not vitiate the registration made as it was on a proper presentation.

Then the transfer of the mortgage to the limited company, the Plaintiffs, is assailed.

It is dated the 11th September 1914 and the parties to it are S. R. M. Soobramaniyan Chetty, S. R. M. Mayappa Chetty, S. R. M. Chinnayu Chetty alias Ramasawmy Chetty, and S. R. M. Arunachellam, described as carrying on business in partnership under the style of S. R. M. of the 1st part, Jamal Brothers and Company of the 2nd part, and Jamal Brothers and Company, Limited, the present Plaintiffs, of the 3rd part.

The Chetty partners, by the direction of the Jamal Brothers assigned, and Jamal Brothers confirmed, the mortgage debt of Rs. 25,000 with interest and also the mortgaged property to the Plaintiff Company, and the deed if executed and duly registered would unquestionably vest the debt and the security in the Plaintiff Company.

It is contended, however, that there is no formal proof of execution by the Chettys. It is true that the evidence of M. A. S. Jamal, as recorded on the 11th July 1915, does not speak specifically to execution by them. But later affidavits were sworn by M. A. S. Jamal and his advocate Mr. Ormiston to the effect that the witness had deposed to execution by the attorney of the Chetty firm. A petition was accordingly presented praying that the witness might be examined further on the point of the execution by the assignors of the deed of assignment. Interrogatories directed to this point were prepared under an order of the Court, and though no answers are on the record it is apparent from what is said by the Judicial Commissioner that on further examination under the order of the Court the formal defect was remedied.

It is next urged that though Mayappa was expressed to be a party, he did not execute. But in the attestation clause it is stated that the parties (other than the Plaintiff Company) had set their hands thereto, and the document is expressed to be signed by all four of the Chetty partners. The signature was in fact by their attorney and in the circumstances their Lordships are satisfied that the attorney acted for all four partners. This view gains support from the endorsement of presentation from which it is apparent that the signatory held a power-of-attorney authorizing him to act for the four partners. The transfer was also signed by the Jamal Brothers, and execution by them was admitted by their duly authorized attorney. The result then is that the transfer has been sufficiently executed and its registration has been effected in accordance with the law that then applied.

The appeal therefore fails and should be dismissed, and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

The Appellants must pay the costs of the appeal.

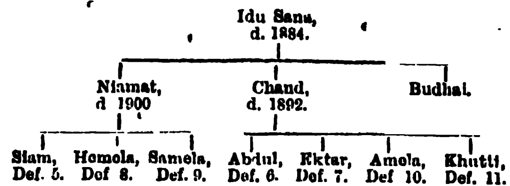
This was an appeal preferred on the 19th of July 1921 against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Zillah Khulna (Babu Tej Chandra Mitra), dated the 31st of May 1921.



The facts of the case will appear from the judgment.

Dr. Jadunath Kanjilal for the Appellant.

Babus Brajalal Chakravarti and Promodekumar Ghose for the Respondents.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows:—

The subject-matter of the litigation, which has culminated in this appeal, is a tenure created on the 25th February 1881 by the proprietor of Chuck Ula Kalijuga appertaining to Touzi No. 57 of the Collectorate of Khulna. The proprietary interest, which at that time was vested in Suryyakanta Rai Chaudhuri, has since been transferred to Jogendra Chandra Ghose and others. The case for the Plaintiff is that the tenure was granted to one Idu Sana; while the case for the Defendants is that the grant was made in favour of his son Budhai Sana. The relationship of the parties will appear from the annexed genealogical table:—

Idu Sana left three sons, Niamat, Chand and Budhai who inherited the properties left by him in equal shares. Niamat left a son (Defendant No. 5) and two daughters (Defendants, Nos. 8 and 9). Chand left two sons (Defendants Nos. 6 and 7) and two daughters (Defendants Nos. 10 and 11). The daughters are alleged to have relinquished their interest in favour of their respective brothers, and it may be taken for the purposes of this litigation that whatever estate was left by Idu Sana passed to his grandsons alone. On the 14th November 1906, Budhai sold the entire tenure to the first Defendant for a sum of Rs. 1,600, on the assumption that his nephews had no interest therein. On the 26th January 1917, the fifth, sixth and seventh Defendants conveyed a two-thirds share of the tenure to the Plaintiff for a sum of Rs. 3,000, on the assumption that it was the joint property of their respective fathers and of their uncle. On the 6th November 1918, the Plaintiff instituted the present suit for recovery of joint possession on declaration of title by purchase, for partition, and for incidental reliefs. The Plaintiff joined with the prayer for possession an alternative prayer for recovery of the purchase money from his vendors, should the Court ultimately hold against him on the question of title. The brothers and sisters of the first Defendant were brought on the record as Defendants (Defendants Nos. 2-4 and 12-15) in order that they might have an opportunity to oppose the claim and might be bound by any decree in favour of the Plaintiff. The claim was, however, contested by the first Defendant alone, who disputed the title and possession of the Plaintiff as well as of his vendors. The principal issues framed on the pleadings were as follows :—

(1) Did Idu Sana or his son Budhai Sana take settlement of the land in suit?

(2) Is the claim barred by limitation?

(3) Is the conveyance of the Plaintiff a bonâ fide document for consideration?

The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit and has disallowed the claim for possession as well as the alternative claim for refund of the consideration money. On the present appeal, the conclusions of the Subordinate Judge have been assailed upon every point.

We have to consider in the first place the fundamental question in the suit, namely, whether the settlement of the disputed land was taken by Idu Sana or by his son Budhai Sana. The oral testimony of the persons said to have been present at the time of the actual settlement has been accurately analysed by the Subordinate Judge, and he has held that the evidence given by the principal witnesses for the Plaintiff, Abdul Sana and Esen Sardar, to establish that the settlement was made with Idu Sana is wholly unreliable. The oral evidence is full of contradictions, and we are not prepared to dissent from the estimate of its value formed by the trial Judge. The unsatisfactory evidence brought forward by the Plaintiff does not gain in strength by the fact that the Defendant has not been able to produce unimpeachable evidence in support of his affirmative case that Idu Sana had died long before 1881 when the settlement took place. The Plaintiff must succeed on the strength of his own title and is not assisted by any weakness, real or apparent, in the case for the Defendant. We may add that some of the witnesses appear to have very hazy notions of time which make it difficult for the Court to place implicit reliance on them; but we feel bound to add that the Subordinate Judge should not have relied upon the statements of ages of witnesses at the head of depositions, which, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee, do not furnish evidence on the subject, Maqbuar v. Amad Hussain (1). In this state of the oral evidence the Plaintiff is driven to rely upon documentary evidence. In this category, we have the plaint in a suit for arrears of rent instituted on the 13th April 1904, by the landlord Suryyakanta Rai Chaudhuri against Budhai Sana. The second paragraph of the plaint recites that Idu Sana obtained the settlement on the 25th February 1881, when an amalnama was granted to him. The terms of the kabuliyat which was executed by the tenant after he had received the amalnama are then set out in detail, and the area is stated to have been 299 bighas by guess. The kabuliyat has not been produced, but the amalnama has been received in evidence, subject to objection. This amalnama, it must be mentioned here, purports to be in favour of Budhai Sana and not Idu Sana. In these circumstances, it is not surprising that there has been some discussion at the Bar as to the admissibility of the amalnama and of the plaint.

As regards the amalnama, we are of opinion that it was neither a lease nor an agreement to lease within the meaning of sec. 3 of the Indian Registration Act and that it was consequently admissible in evidence without registration, as explained in Dwarka Nath v. Ledu Sikdar (2) which distinguished the decision of the Full Bench in Syed Sufdar Reza v. Amzad Ali (3). The document in essence authorised the grantee to take possession, and was intended to be followed by a formal kabuliyat; it does not consequently fall within the scope of such decisions as Choonee v. Chandee (4), Meherunnessa v. Abdool Gunee (5), Luchmiswar v. Dakho (6), Lall Jha v. Negroo (7), Champaklatika v. Nafar (8) and Elahi v. Hukum (9). We must further remember that apart from sec. 17 (2) (v) of the Indian Registration Act, the document, even if deemed compulsorily registerable, is inadmissible only for the limited purpose mentioned in sec. 49 (c), namely, as evidence of a transaction "affecting" immoveable property comprised therein. Here the transaction itself is admitted by both sides, the only dispute is, whether it was between A and B or A and C. We need not pause to consider whether the use of the document as an aid for the solution of this question may or may not be called "use for a collateral purpose" within the meaning of such cases of Ulfatunnessa v. Hossein Khan (10), Bai Gulabbai v. Datagarji (11), Hope Mill, Ld. v. Readymoney (12) and Vyravan v. Subramanian (13). If the document be admitted in evidence, there can be no doubt that it militates against the theory put forward by the Plaintiff. Consequently a strenuous endeavour has been made to cast doubt upon its genuineness. We are not impressed by this argument. The original was produced in a previous litigation; the certified copy now on the record was taken from it on the 18th February 1914. The original cannot now be traced, but its custody is satisfactorily proved according to the test formulated in Gudadhar v. Bhoyrab (14) and Trailakha Nath v. Shurno Chongima (15). In such circumstances secondary evidence was plainly admissible, Ehtisham Ali v. Jamna Prasad (16) and a presumption of genuineness may be made. There is no substance in the suggestion that the terms of the amalnama are not in all respects identical with the contents recited in the plaint dated 13th April 1904. The variations afford no ground for suspicion, as all the terms could not be expected to be enumerated in an amalnama when a more formal document in the shape of a kabuliyat was intended to be drawn up.

As regards the plaint in the suit for arrears of rent, it was plainly admissible in proof of the fact that the landlord did sue on the allegation that the settlement had been made with Idu Sana; but the plaint is not admissible to prove the statement itself, as the conditions prescribed by sec. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act do not exist in this case. The landlord was alive, and no effective attempt was made to secure his attendance as a witness or to examine him on commission. The distinction between the admissibility of a document as evidence of a transaction and the admissibility of a document in proof of a statement contained therein is, if refined, but of a fundamental character and is yet frequently overlooked; see Kashinath v. Jagatkishore (17), Ram Perkash v. Anand Das (18), Seethapati v. Venkanna (19), Baidya Nath v. Alef Jan (20) and Sarada Prasanna v. Umakanto (21). In our opinion, the plaint cannot properly be used to prove the statement made by the superior landlord, and the same remark applies to the plaint, dated the 18th April 1911, filed by the Ghoses (the present landlords) in a suit for ejectment instituted by them. In this plaint, the Ghoses asserted that the settlement had been made with Budhai Sana. Between the dates of these two plaints, Suryyakanta Rai Chaudhuri, the former landlord, granted a lease on the 14th December 1905, to Dwarkanath Mandal and Dasarath Mandal, after he himself had purchased the tenure at the sale which followed the decree, dated 13th September 1904 in the suit for arrears of rent. This lease, which subsequently became infructuous by reason of reversal of the rent sale, recites that the original settlement had been made with Budhai Sana. The position, consequently, is that in 1904 the landlord came into Court on the allegation that the settlement had been made with Idu Sana, in 1905 the same landlord granted a lease on the assertion that the settlement had been made with Budhai Sana and in 1911 the new landlords maintained that the settlement had been made with Budhai Sana. The Subordinate Judge has correctly held that these conflicting assertions, even if they were regularly admitted in evidence, could not advance the case of the Plaintiff. We cannot further overlook that in 1908, when Suryyakanta Rai Chaudhuri sued Budhai Sana and others for arrears of rent, the present first Defendant, who was then the second Defendant, promptly repudiated the allegation of the landlord and maintained that Budhai Sana and not his father Idu Sana took the settlement. We must hold that the documentary evidence, like the oral evidence, does not prove the case for the Plaintiff. This view is materially confirmed when we examine the evidence of possession. The Subordinate Judge, on a detailed analysis of the oral evidence, has pronounced against the contention of the Plaintiff that Idu Sana took the settlement, raised the embankments, reclaimed the jungles, brought the lands under cultivation, and that, after his death, his three sons Niamat, Chand and Budhai were in joint possession till the death of Chand. We have closely examined the evidence, and notwithstanding the forcible criticisms of Counsel for the Plaintiff, we have come to the conclusion that the view taken by the trial Judge is correct. Consequently, in so far as possession may be deemed evidence of title, the case for the Plaintiff has completely broken down and we accept the view that since the settlement of 1881, Budhai Sana was in sole possession up to the time of the sale to the first Defendant in 1906. There is, in our opinion, no escape from the conclusion that the Plaintiff has failed to establish his alleged title. We may add that no solid foundation has been laid in the evidence for a possible theory that the settlement was taken in the name of Budhai for the benefit of the entire family, either during the life-time of Idu or after his death. Such a case would contradict and effectively destroy the theory that the settlement was taken by Idu as the head of the family. But, apart from this, the hypothesis would have no chance of acceptance in view of the decision in Sukur Mahomed v. Asmot Mandal (22) which, notwithstanding the dicta in Assamathen v. Lachmipat (23) and Muttyjan v. Ahmed Ali (24), followed Abdul Majeeth v. Krishnamachariar (25) and affirmed the doctrine that in Mahomedan law there is no representation of the family as under the Hindu law.

In view of our decision upon the question of title, we need not investigate the interesting point of limitation raised in course of argument, namely, whether having regard to the character of the lands, which, for many years, formed in the main an unculturable waste, the principles recognised by the Judicial Committee in Trustees and Executors Agency Co. v. Short (26), Radha Gobind v. Inglis (27), Rajkumar v. Gobinda Chandra (28), Secretary of State v. Krishnamani (29) and Basanta Kumar v. Secretary of State (30), and other cases which will be found elaborately reviewed by Chatterjee, J., in Rakhal Chandra v. Durgadas (31) should not be applied. In our opinion, the claim for recovery of possession has been rightly dismissed, as the Plaintiff has failed to establish his alleged title.

We have finally to consider the alternative claim made by the Plaintiff for recovery of the purchase money from his vendors, who, as we have seen, had no title to the disputed property. The Subordinate Judge has directed that the matter be determined in a separate suit, if occasion should arise. He has held that the Plaintiff is a speculative purchaser, who took the conveyance with full knowledge that his vendors were not in possession. He has further held that the evidence does not afford convincing proof of the precise amount, if any, paid by the Plaintiff, to his vendors. It is plain that though the alternative claim was put forward in the seventeenth paragraph of the plaint, no issue was raised on the point, and the evidence was not directed to the elucidation of the question, whether there is a covenant for title under sec. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act and whether in the events that have happened the Plaintiff can claim restitution. According to the opinion expressed by Wilson, J., in Hanuman v. Hanuman (32), which was affirmed by the Judicial Committee on a different ground, Hanuman v. Hanuman (33), sec. 43 of the Code of 1882, now superseded by Or. 2, r. 2 of the Code of 1908, would not bar a separate suit; in any event, the claim can, with the leave of the Court, be reserved for investigation in another suit. In view of the course the trial took in the Court below and the state of the evidence on the record, the Subordinate Judge has, we think, properly reserved liberty to the Plaintiff to institute a separate suit for restitution against his vendors; and we see no reason to vary that order.

The result is that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge is affirmed and this appeal is dismissed with costs in favour of the first Defendant.

These were appeals preferred on the 31st March 1922 from the decree of the District Judge of Zillah Hughly (Mr. S. C. Mallik), dated the 30th January 1922, modifying the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court of Hughly (Babu Srish Chandra Choudhuri), dated the 29th April 1921.

The material facts will appear from the following extract from the judgments of the lower Appellate Court in one of the appeals :—

"This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of arrears of rent for the years 1325 and 1326 and also for Baisack of 1327 B. S. The defence, inter alia, was that the Plaintiff's proprietary interest had passed to the Defendant under a partition decree. The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit found that the proprietary right of the Plaintiff had passed to the Defendant about the end of Falgoon 1326 B. S.; but finding that the rent had been made payable in ten monthly kists the last one of which was payable in Magh he (the Subordinate Judge) gave a decree to the Plaintiff for arrears for the years 1325 and 1326 together with interest at the rate claimed up to the date of the institution of the suit and dismissed the rest of the Plaintiff's claim. He gave to the parties costs in proportion of their respective success and he directed that the decretal amount shall carry interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the decree till realisation. The Defendant has appealed. The Plaintiff has filed a cross-appeal.

In appeal it was contended before me that inasmuch as the relationship of landlord and tenant had come to an end in Falgoon 1326, the Plaintiff was not entitled to any rent for the last two months of the year, namely, Falgoon and Chaitra. But the documentary evidence that was adduced before the lower Court clearly showed that the rent of the holding was payable in ten kists and that the last kist was payable in the month of Magh. That being the case and remembering that rent is ordinarily regarded not as accruing from day to day but as falling due at stated intervals according to the contract of tenancy [Satyendranath Thakur v. Nilkanth Singh (1)], I am of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was right when he allowed to the Plaintiff a full decree for the whole of the year 1326 B. S."

Babu Bejoy Kumar Bhattacharjea for the Appellant.

Babus Narendra Kumar Bose and Profulla Chandra Chakravarty for the Respondent.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GREAVES, J.—These are three appeals by the Defendant against a decision of the District Judge of Hughly, modifying a decision of the 2nd Subordinate Judge. The suits were for rent in respect of two putnis held by the Defendant in two separate moujas. Appeal No. 863 relates to a putni in mouja Ramnarainpur and Appeals Nos. 1218 and 1219 relate to a putni in the other mouja. The suits were brought to recover an 8 annas share of the rent. Under the putni the rent was payable in ten monthly kists, the last kist being payable in the month of Magh. On the 22nd Falgun 1326 there was a partition between the co-sharers as a result of which the whole proprietary interest passed to the Defendant and the Plaintiff's claim for rent is resisted with regard to a period of one month and seven days of the year 1326 because the Defendant contends that it is not right that he should not receive rent for seven days of Falgoon and for the month of Chait inasmuch as he was the proprietor during this period by virtue of the partition. There is no doubt that there is a good deal to be said on general grounds in support of the contention put forward on behalf of the Defendant but in our opinion the matter is covered by the two cases, to which we have been referred, namely, Satyendranath Thakur v. Nilkanth Singh (1) and Mathewson v. Shyam Sundar Singh (2). In effect these cases decide that rent does not accrue from day to day but is payable in accordance with the contract. In the present case the contract for the payment of rent was that the tenth kist should be paid at the end of the month of Magh. Consequently, in our opinion, unless there is any statute whereby the rent is apportionable or unless there is any contract between the parties as to the rent for 1 month and 7 days the contention of the Defendant cannot succeed. The only statute in this country dealing with apportionment is sec. 36 of the Transfer of Property Act, and that does not apply to agricultural lands and consequently has no application. When the partition took place there was no stipulation made by the Defendant that he should be entitled to the

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

This is an appeal by the Plaintiff in a suit for recovery of the price and hire of an elephant as also the cost of an iron chain. The case for the Plaintiff is that the first Defendant on behalf of the third Defendant who is an officer of the second Defendant (the Surma Valley Saw Mills Company, Limited) hired his elephant for a period of ten months from the 15th July 1919 to the 14th May 1920. There was a written agreement between the Plaintiff and the first Defendant executed on the 8th July 1919. The Plaintiff alleges that although the period of the hire expired on the 14th May 1920, the first Defendant did not re-deliver the elephant to him, and, as he was subsequently apprised, the elephant died on the 22nd May 1920. The Plaintiff accordingly seeks to recover from the three Defendants, jointly and severally, Rs. 5,000 as price of the elephant; Rs. 45 as price of the iron chain supplied by him when the elephant was delivered to the first Defendant, and Rs. 16-5-4 as hire for seven days from the 15th to the 22nd May 1920. The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the suit. On the present appeal, the Plaintiff has contended that he is entitled to a decree for the entire sum against all the three Defendants. The first and third Defendants have argued that neither of them is responsible to the Plaintiff and that the liability, if any, rests upon the second Defendant. The second Defendant has formally entered appearance, but we have been informed by Mr. Amiya Chandra Sen that he has received no instructions.

The facts material for the determination of the question in controversy lie in a narrow compass. On the 8th July 1919, the first Defendant executed an agreement in favour of the Plaintiff in the following terms :—

"I, Chandra Kanta Kakati, son of late Sonaram Kakati, contractor by profession and Kayastha by caste, inhabitant of Baliaghata, Mauza Konarpur, Thana Sub-Division, District Sub-Registry office Sibsagar, do execute this ekrarnamah (deed of agreement) and declare that this day I engage your elephant named Mohan valued at Rs. 5,000 under registered contract for ten months, promising to pay hire at Rs. 70 per month for timber business at Naojan Camp of the Surma Valley Timber Company, that for feeding the said elephant I will supply grain at the rate of ten seers per diem and I will also bear myself the costs of the same as also of ropes and other necessaries required for it, that I will also myself engage a mahut (driver) and a grass-cutter, etc., that will be required for the elephant, that from this day in case the elephant disappears, broken (in health and dies) or in any way injured (crippled or rendered defective), that is, made unfit for work (Harounbhagan lit. means loss or breakage—Hemkosh Dic., p. 966), I will pay Rs. 5,000 for its price, that on the expiry of the term I will bring back the elephant to your house and make the same over to your charge, that on account of hire of the said elephant I am paying you to-day Rs. 200 in advance for which Rs. 20 will be deducted every month and the balance Rs. 50 shall be paid to you month by month. I shall take charge of the elephant on 10th July next and pay you hire from the 15th July. If I fail to pay hire and thereby commit breach of this contract and do not make over the elephant to your charge within the term, then you shall be competent to recover from me both the hire and the price of the elephant through Courts. You will return me this document when I bring another from the Company. To the above effect I get this ekrarnamah executed of my own accord and in sound state of body and mind."

The elephant was delivered by the Plaintiff to the first Defendant on the 10th July 1919. Subsequently a memorandum of agreement was prepared, dated the 15th July 1919, to be executed between the Company and the Plaintiff. This document, however, was never executed as the Company declined to accept some of the terms of the proposed contract. The elephant, which had been made over by the first Defendant to the third Defendant continued, however, to be employed to carry timber for the benefit of the Company. The animal was not re-delivered to the Plaintiff on the expiration of the term of hire on the 14th May 1920, and there is evidence to show that it was employed as usual on the 15th, 16th and 17th May 1920; it was taken ill on the 18th May 1920 and died on the 22nd May 1920. In these circumstances, the question arises, whether the Plaintiff is entitled to the sum claimed from the Defendants or from any of them. The Plaintiff imputed negligence to the Defendants in the use of the animal. But that allegation is not borne out by the evidence and we are not prepared to decree the suit on the ground that the animal had been underfed and overworked during the term of hire. The real question is, what are the rights of the Plaintiff on proof of the fact that the animal taken on hire was not re-delivered to him on the expiration of the term on the 14th May 1920.

Sec. 160 of the Indian Contract Act provides that it is the duty of the bailee to return or deliver according to the bailor's directions, the goods bailed, without demand, as soon as the time for which they were bailed has expired, or the purpose for which they were bailed has been accomplished. Sec. 161 provides that if, by the default of the bailee, the goods are not returned, delivered or tendered at the proper time, he is responsible to the bailor for any loss, destruction or deterioration of the goods from that time. The rule thus enunciated is in agreement with the principle formulated by Sir James Mansfield, C. J., Mills v. Graham (1). The substance of the matter is, in the phraseology familiar to students of archaic English law, that trespass lies where the bailee has destroyed the bailed property or lost it, while where the bailee has been guilty of a conversion of the bailed property either by a user of it in a different manner or for a different purpose from that agreed upon or by failure to re-deliver it or to deliver it over in accordance with the terms of the contract, the bailor may sue him in trover, Loeschman v. Machin (2), Bryant v. Wardell (3), Fenn v. Bittleston (4) and Cooper v. Willomat (5). We are not now concerned with the question, whether the bailee would be liable if his failure to re-deliver the goods were due to an act of State or an act of God or an act of the King's enemies; Williams v. Llyod (6), Menetone v. Athawes (7), Taylor v. Caldwell (8), Cunningham v. Dunn (9) and U. S. v. Thomas (10). It is plain that in the case before us, the bailee was in default. In the Court below, the reason assigned for non-delivery was that the driver was taken ill on the 15th May 1920. The Subordinate Judge also mentions that as there was a festival at the time, it was not easy to secure the services of a driver. There is no evidence on the record to show that there was in fact a festival or that by reason of the festival performance of the contract became impossible. We need not consequently examine how far impossibility which arises subsequently to the formation of a contract excuses performance; Grant Smith v. Seattle (11). In any event, this is not a case where the Court will imply a term whereby the contract was intended to be discharged through impossibility of performance; Tamplin Steamship Co. v. Anglo Mexican Petroleum Co. (12), Redmond v. Dainton (13), Matthey v. Curling (14), Bank Line, Ld. v. Capel & Co. (15), Metropolitan Water Board v. Dick (16) and Horlock v. Beal (17). It cannot be maintained that here performance became impossible through supervening circumstances within the time or in the manner contemplated by the parties. The Defendant should have, in advance, completed arrangements to fulfil the agreement to re-deliver the elephant to the Plaintiff on the expiry of the term of hire on the 14th May 1920, but there is no evidence to show that he even made an attempt in that behalf. In our opinion, the case is covered by sec. 161 of the Indian Contract Act and the Plaintiff is entitled to recover the price of the elephant as also the hire from the 16th May to the 22nd May 1920, as he appears to have been paid the hire up to the 15th May 1920.

We may add that the rule adopted in modern decisions is that proof of loss or injury establishes a sufficient primâ facie case against the bailee to put him upon his defence; where chattels are delivered to a bailee in good condition and are lost or are not returned or are returned in a damaged state, the law presumes negligence to be the cause, and casts upon the bailee the burden to show that the loss is due to causes consistent with due care on his part; Mackenzie v. Cox (18), Reeve v. Palmer (19), Phipps v. New Claridge Hotel (20), Bullen v. Swan E. E. Co. (21) and Coldman v. Hill (22). There remains the question of the liability of the Defendants individually. It is beyond controversy that the first and third Defendants are both liable. The contract was made between the first Defendant and the Plaintiff. The third Defendant has admitted that he employed the first Defendant to enter into the transaction on his behalf. The principle applicable in these circumstances is concisely formulated in Bacon's Abridgement, tit Bailment: "If a bailee deliver the goods to another, then he shall have an action of detinue against him, because he hath his possession and undertakes for the custody, and the original bailor may have his action against either of them, because in him is the property which both are bound to answer to him."

The question of the liability of the second Defendant stands on a different footing. We have been pressed to hold that as the animal was employed for the benefit of the Company Defendant, that Defendant is equally liable to the Plaintiff. This contention is based on the fallacious assumption that there was in fact and in law a contract between the Plaintiff and the Company. We cannot overlook the circumstance that the Company refused to execute the document to the knowledge of the Plaintiff. The view cannot be maintained that the Plaintiff looked forward to the Company for the price or the hire. We are not now concerned with the question of the liability, if any, of the second Defendant to the third Defendant; that is a question which can be decided only in a suit properly framed for the purpose, if occasion should arise, between the two Defendants. In the present litigation, we feel bound to hold that the Plaintiff is entitled to no relief as against the second Defendant. We may add that the allegation that an iron chain was delivered by the Plaintiff to the first Defendant has not been satisfactorily established and that portion of the claim must be disallowed.

The result is that this appeal is allowed and the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside, except as against the second Defendant. There will be a decree for Rs. 5,016-5-4 in favour of the Plaintiff against the first and third Defendants jointly. This sum will carry interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of suit to the date of realization. The Plaintiff will have his costs in both the Courts as against the first and third Defendants. The decree of dismissal of the claim as against the second Defendant will stand confirmed, but there will be no order for costs in his favour in this Court.

Conviction of abettor where principal is acquitted, legality of—Acquittal on the ground of repugnancy or contradiction on the face of the record, how far allowable—Misdirection to jury—Indian Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), sec. 94, plea of compulsion by threat of instant death, if can be a good defence to a charge of abetment of murder—"Murder," meaning of.

N. was charged with murder and U. with murder and abetment of murder. U. made a statement of the nature of a confession implicating herself and N., in which she said that N. murdered her husband while she held his legs, but that she protested against the murder and only assisted N. because he threatened to murder her also. She retracted the incriminating statement afterwards. N. was acquitted of the charge of murder and U. was convicted of abetment of murder, but acquitted of murder:

Held—That it cannot be held as a general rule that an abettor if charged with having abetted the principal in the commission of an offence must be acquitted if the principal is acquitted.

RAJA KHAN v. KING-EMPEROR (1) distinguished.

In the absence of any provision in the Indian Statute Law the Court is not bound to follow the rule of English law that repugnancy or contradiction on the face of the record is a ground for quashing a conviction.

R. v. PLUMMER (2), ROMESH CHANDRA v. THE EMPEROR (3) and R. v. MANNING (4) referred to and discussed.

Held further—That under sec. 94 of the Indian Penal Code, a plea of compulsion by threats of instant death is a good defence by a person charged with any offence except murder and offences against the State punishable with death. The statement of U., if believed, though not a bar to her conviction on the charge of murder, could not support the charge of abetment of murder, for the word "murder" in sec. 94 cannot be held to include abetment of murder punishable under sec. 109, I. P. C. If the statement of U. was true she was entitled to acquittal on the charge of abetment on the ground that she acted under the apprehension of instant death and the fact that the jury did not convict her of murder but of abetment showed that they accepted her explanation and believed her confession as a whole.

This was an appeal preferred on the 17th March 1924 against the conviction under sec. 302/109, I. P. C. and sentence to transportation for life passed by the Sessions Judge of Birbhum (Mr. K. C. Nag), on the 17th January 1924.

The facts were briefly as follows:—One Nabanidhar Mandal was charged with the murder and the Appellant Uma Dasi was charged with the murder and of abetment of murder of her husband Radha Raman Mandal. Uma Dasi made a statement before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate implicating herself and Nabani, but she subsequently retracted this incriminating statement. In this statement Uma Dasi said that Nabani murdered her husband by striking him over the head with an axe while she held his legs. But she also said that she protested against the murder and only assisted Nabani because he threatened to murder her also. The jury found Uma Dasi guilty under sec. 302/109, I. P. C. and found Nabani not guilty of murder, and unanimously recommended Uma Dasi for mercy on the ground of her youth. The Sessions Judge agreed with the verdict and convicted her under sec. 302/109, I. P. C. and accepting the recommendation of the jury sentenced her to transportation for life and acquitted her of the charge of murder. Against this conviction Uma Dasi preferred the present appeal to the High Court.

Mr. Khundkar, Officiating Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

The Appellant Uma Dasi and one Nabanidhar Mandal were committed for trial to the Court of the Sessions Judge of Birbhum on a charge that they committed murder by causing the death of Radha Raman Mandal. In the Sessions Court a charge was added against the Appellant which was as follows :—"I, K. C. Nag, Sessions Judge of Birbhum, hereby charge you Uma Dasi as follows :—That you, on or about the 30th day of August 1923 at Dechandra, P. S. Shapur, being present abetted the commission of the offence of murder of Radha Raman Mandal by Nabanidhar Mandal which was committed in consequence of your abetment and thereby committed an offence punishable under sec. 302/109 of the Indian Penal Code." The first trial of the accused persons commenced on the 26th November 1923 and continued till the 5th December 1923 when the jury were discharged and a fresh trial ordered as one of them was unable to attend owing to illness. The second trial commenced on the 7th January and ended on the 17th January 1924. Seven of the jurors found Uma Dasi guilty under sec. 302/109 and two of them found her not guilty. Four were of the opinion that Nabanidhar Mandal was guilty under sec. 302 and five were of opinion that he was not guilty. The jury unanimously recommended Uma Dasi for mercy on the ground of her youth. The Sessions Judge agreed with the verdict of the majority of the jurors and convicted her under sec. 302/109, I. P. C. Accepting the recommendation of the jury he sentenced her to transportation for life. He recorded an order of acquittal of the charge under sec. 302, I. P. C. He did not accept the verdict of the majority of the jury acquitting Nabanidhar Mandal and referred his case to this Court under the provisions of sec. 307, Cr. P. C. This reference (No. 6 of 1924) was heard by another Divisional Bench of this Court on the 20th March. The reference was not accepted and the accused Nabanidhar Mandal was acquitted.

The first point urged on behalf of the Appellant is that Nabanidhar having been acquitted, her conviction cannot stand. It is urged that the only charge on which she was convicted was that of having abetted the commission of the offence of murder by Nabanidhar and that as it has been judicially and finally decided that Nabanidhar did not commit the murder it would be anomalous to hold that the Appellant abetted the commission of an offence that had not been committed. It is further urged as a supplementary argument that there was misdirection by the learned Sessions Judge since he omitted to tell the jury the points they would have to consider with reference to the charge of abetment if they acquitted Nabanidhar of the charge of murder. In support of this contention reliance is placed on the decision in Raja Khan v. King-Emperor (1). In that case one Torap Ali was charged with cheating by personation and the two Appellants were charged with abetment of that offence. Torap Ali was acquitted and the two Appellants were convicted. It was held on appeal that the jury should have been told that the first thing that must be decided was whether the alleged offence had been committed by Torap Ali and unless Torap Ali was guilty the Appellants could not be found guilty of abetting that offence. The report of the case gives no facts except those stated in the Appellate judgment and it does not in our opinion support the general proposition that in every case where an abettor and principal are tried together the abettor if charged with having abetted the principal in the commission of an offence must be acquitted if the principal is acquitted. In the majority of cases this would necessarily follow but we hold that a case like the present might be an exception to the general rule. The general rule is stated in the head-note to the case above cited in the following terms: "An offence of abetment falls through if the principal offence is not substantiated." There is nothing to suggest that in that case there was any evidence to prove the commission of the offence by the principal as against the abettors which was not equally good evidence against the principal Torap Ali. If the jury disbelieved that evidence it would necessarily follow that those charged with abetment should also have been acquitted. The present case is distinguishable firstly on the ground that there can be no doubt that the offence of murder was committed; secondly on the ground that there was the evidence of a retracted confession by Uma Dasi on the basis of which the jury might have found, as against her, that the murder was committed by Nabanidhar though as against him it would be of practically no value and insufficient to support a conviction. The strongest support to this contention on behalf of the Appellant is to be found in the English law, the leading case on this point being R. v. Plummer (2). Under English law the present Appellant would be entitled to an acquittal on the ground of repugnancy or contradiction on the face of the record. But we are in agreement with the opinion expressed by Beachcroft, J., in his judgment in Romesh Chandra v. The Emperor (3). He held at page 516 that mere repugnancy in the verdict of a jury is not by itself sufficient to ensure the quashing of a conviction. In addition to the weighty reasons given by Beachcroft, J., we may add that the English decisions on this point appear to have been based on a regard for long established practice rather than on principle. In one of the earlier cases R. v. Manning (4) two of the learned Judges Mathew and Stephen, JJ., expressly stated that they affirmed this principle with great reluctance. Lord Coleridge C. J., who originally tried the case had directed the jury that where two persons were indicted for conspiring together and were tried together they might find one prisoner guilty and acquit the other. He also was one of the Bench that heard the rule for a new trial. In his judgment on that rule he explained that his opinion at the time of the trial was that where there is a joint offence which has to be proved against each person separately the evidence which is sufficient to convict one person of the offence may not by any means be sufficient to convict the other. He further stated that he might have adhered to this view if the matter had been res integra. In R. v. Plummer (2) also two of the learned Judges Lord Alverstone, C. J., and Jelf, J., felt considerable difficulty on this point. In the absence of any provision in the Indian Statute Law we do not feel bound to follow this rule of English law that repugnancy on the record is a ground for quashing a conviction.

The learned vakil for the Appellant ably argued several other points of law on his client's behalf. As we hold that this appeal must be allowed on one of these grounds we do not think it necessary to discuss the other grounds of minor importance which we held not to have been established. The case for the prosecution is that Radha Raman Mandal was murdered by Nabanidhar Mandal, the paramour of Uma Dasi, who was the wife of the murdered man. On the night of the murder Uma Dasi and her husband were left alone in their house, the other inmate Radha Raman's mother having gone to another village at Uma Dasi's request. The next morning Radha Raman's corpse was discovered on the bank of a tank 30 cubits away. The wounds on the body, the blood-stains found in the house and marks of dragging from the house to the tank afford very strong circumstantial evidence that the murder was committed in the house by some one who struck the deceased three severe blows on the head with some hard substance. Uma Dasi's conduct was suspicious and she made contradictory statements when questioned about the manner in which her husband was killed. To the investigating Sub-Inspector Uma Dasi made incriminating statements when she produced a number of blood-stained articles. The following afternoon Uma Dasi was taken before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate where she made a statement of the nature of a confession implicating herself and Nabani. This incriminating statement she subsequently retracted. It is with reference to this statement that there has been serious misdirection. In this statement Uma Dasi said that Nabani murdered her husband by striking him over the head with an axe while she held his legs. But she also said that she protested against the murder and only assisted Nabani because he threatened to murder her also. The learned Sessions Judge in his charge to the jury has overlooked the provisions of sec. 94 of the Indian Penal Code. Under this section a plea of compulsion by threats which reasonably cause the apprehension of instant death is a good defence by a person charged with any offence except murder and offences against the State punishable with death. This statement of Uma Dasi, if believed, though not a bar to her conviction on the charge of murder, could not support the charge of abetment of murder. The word murder in sec. 94, I. P. C. cannot be held to include abetment of murder punishable under sec. 109, I. P. C. The prosecution is therefore placed in a dilemma. If the statement of Uma Dasi is true she is entitled to acquittal on the charge of abetment on the ground that she acted under the apprehension of instant death. If this statement is false the evidence against her is insufficient to prove that Nabani committed the murder and she cannot be convicted on the charge as framed that she abetted the commission of murder by him. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer asked us to disbelieve this part of the confession and to hold that the circumstantial evidence was sufficient to support the verdict of the jury. This we cannot do as it cannot be said that the jury would have convicted the Appellant if they had been properly directed as to the application of sec. 94, I. P. C. If, as we must presume, the jury obeyed the directions of law given to them by the learned Judge, it seems evident that they did believe the confession. They were told that if they held on a consideration of the whole of the evidence that Uma Dasi was actuated by the common intention of murdering her husband when she held his legs, Uma Dasi and Nabani were both guilty under sec. 302, I. P. C. As they did not find her guilty under this section but of abetment as charged it appears that they believed that she held her husband's legs while Nabani murdered him but that she was not actuated by the common intention of murdering him. They could only have come to this conclusion if they accepted her explanation and believed her confession as a whole. On this finding the Appellant is entitled to an acquittal and it would not be just to order her retrial.

There are also other reasons why we do not think a retrial should be ordered. At a retrial the case for the prosecution would necessarily be that the statement of Uma Dasi was not a true account of what happened but that her guilt was established by the circumstantial evidence. This circumstantial evidence is such that the inference might be drawn that she was guilty of murder but she cannot be again tried on that charge after her acquittal. Further the circumstantial evidence appears consistent with her having been an accessory after the fact and if the jury took this view she could not be convicted of abetment.

For the above reasons we set aside the conviction and sentence of the Appellant on the charge of having abetted the commission of murder by Nabanidhar Mandal and direct that she be released at once.

[APPEAL FROM MADRAS.]

LORD DUNEDIN. LORD PHILLIMORE. SIR JOHN EDGE. MR. AMEER ALI. SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS. 1923, Heard, 19 and 22, October. Judgment, 13, November.	OBALA KONDAMA NAICKER AYYAN and anr., Appellants, v. KANDASAMY GOUNDAR, Respondent.

Hindu law—Madras Presidency—Compromise by daughter with separated agnate dividing inheritance, if binds former, she acting bona fide whilst the latter knew he had no rights—Purdanashin lady, compromise by, without independent advice, not binding on reversioners—Mortgage by agnate—Mortgagee if purchaser for value without notice—Onus of proof, nature and extent of, on mortgagee—Hindu daughter's power of alienation—Court's power to declare alienation invalid beyond her life-time at the suit of expectant reversioners

A, the daughter and sole heiress of a Mitakshara Hindu and a purdanashin lady, recently widowed, and a mother of infant sons, was induced by M, an agnate of her father whose branch of the family had previously separated, to enter into a compromise dividing her father's estate with M, who subsequently mortgaged the share he got under the compromise. In a suit by A's son, brought in A's life-time challenging the validity of the compromise and the mortgage, it was found that M was fully aware that he was not joint with A's father but that there was no sufficient evidence to show that in assenting to the terms of the compromise A was not acting bonâ fide in the light of the circumstances brought to her notice:

Held—That the compromise was invalid as against M who, though A's sole adviser, took to the detriment of A and her infant sons benefits, to which, to his own knowledge, he had no honest claim.

That even as a compromise and an acknowledgment of an existing title, it was improperly induced and inoperative.

That the mortgagee's plea of purchase for value without notice was not sustainable in the absence of proof either of necessity or of inquiry validating the compromise, the mortgagee having had notice that his mortgagor took from one who only had a limited and conditional power of disposal.

It is now settled beyond dispute that in the Madras Presidency a daughter as heiress of her father takes a restricted interest similar to that taken by a widow with a similar power of disposal; she can dispose of the inheritance for legal necessity, but it lies on the alienee to prove the existence of this necessity and this is so even though the absence of necessity be not pleaded by the reversioner.

SHAM SUNDER LAL v. ACHHAN KUNWAR (1) followed.

The fact that the reversion was still in expectancy was no bar to the Court declaring that the mortgage was inoperative beyond A's life-time.

This was an appeal from a decree, dated the 2nd May 1919, of the High Court at Madras which varied a decree, dated the 23rd December 1916, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Madura.

(1) L. R. 25 I. A. 183 at p 191: s. c. I. L. R. 21 All. 71; 2 C. W. N. 729 (1898).

The suit was brought by the Appellants for a declaration that certain transfers of property made by their mother Aparanji were void as against them. They claimed to be reversionary heirs to the property of their grandfather Mayilchami. Mayilchami was a Hindu resident in Madras and his daughter, on his death, succeeded to his property for a woman's estate. On the death of Mayilchami in May 1901 disputes arose between his daughter Aparanji and his daughter-in-law Sennammam. The latter claimed the estate as being the widow of the deceased's son, and on the rejection of her claim, brought a suit against Aparanji and Mandalathipathy, a cousin of the deceased, seeking to establish an alleged Will of the deceased under which she claimed one-third of the estate.

Mandalathipathy defended the suit on the footing that he was an undivided member of the family of the deceased and Aparanji supported his claim. In the following year the litigation terminated in a compromise in accordance with which a decree was passed on the 29th September 1903. The estate was divided and in 1907 a partition deed was executed in terms of the compromise.

Subsequently alienations of the shares which they took thereby were made by each party to the compromise, among them being a mortgage executed by Mandalathipathy in favour of the Respondent on the 10th July 1910 to secure a sum of Rs. 10,000 which is in question in the present appeal.

On the 7th January 1915 the mortgagee obtained thereon a decree for Rs. 17,257 which he was proceeding to execute at the date of the suit which gave rise to the present appeal.

The Appellants in their plaint asked for a declaration that the compromise and partition of 1907 and the alienations were invalid as against them and void after the life-time of their mother Aparanji.

The Subordinate Judge found that the compromise and partition were valid and binding on the Plaintiffs; and that the rights of the present Respondent, which had been acquired for full consideration and without notice of any defect in the compromise or the partition, could not be affected even if the compromise were not binding on the Appellants. In the result he passed a decree dismissing the suit. On appeal the High Court was dissatisfied with the manner in which the suit had been tried and called for further findings as to whether Mayilchami and Mandalathipathy were undivided and whether the compromise was bonâ fide.

On remand the suit came before a different Subordinate Judge who without taking further evidence found that Mayilchami and Mandalathipathy were divided in status and estate, that the compromise and partition were not bonâ fide.

The appeal having come on for final hearing, the learned Judges of the High Court (Wallis, C. J. and Seshagiri Ayyar, J.) held that Aparanji in entering into the compromise must be taken to have done so as representing the estate, that she had done so bonâ fide, but that the compromise was not valid as against the Plaintiffs. As regards the present Respondent they found that he was not a party but the alienee of a party to the compromise and as such was entitled under sec. 96 of the Indian Trust Act, 1888 as against the Plaintiffs to the rights which his mortgage purported to give him, as he had paid consideration and was not shown to have had notice of the defect in his mortgagor's title.

They accordingly allowed the appeal as against the Defendants other than the present Respondent but dismissed it as against him.

The Plaintiffs appealed against the decree of dismissal.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellants.—The High Court were in error in applying the provisions of the Trust Act.

There are concurrent findings that the compromise and the subsequent deed of partition were brought about by undue influence and fraud on the part of Mandalathipathy and they are not binding on the Appellants.

Gunjeshwar Kunwar v. Durga Prasad Singh (3) and Sham Sunder Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (1).

Sec. 38 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882 is not applicable. The principle by which an innocent purchaser is protected cannot be applied to a person who takes at second hand from one with a limited interest. The Respondent could only have got a good title from Mandalathipathy if the latter had taken bonâ fide and for value. The Appellants never adopted the transaction as in Madhu Sudan Singh v. Rooke (4).

In any event the Respondent has failed to establish that he was a bonâ fide purchaser without notice. On the face of the title the Respondent had notice that his transferor took from one who had only a limited power of disposal and he has offered no proof that there was legal necessity for the borrowing; or that he had taken any pains to discover whether such necessity existed.

He must therefore be taken to have been cognisant of the defect in his mortgagor's title.

Sec. 3, Transfer of Property Act.

Hon. Sir Wm. Finlay, K. C. and Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham for the Respondent.—The appeal is incompetent being under Rs. 10,000. Leave was asked for under sec. 110 and was granted under sec. 109.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C.—The High Court have granted a certificate and the Board will not look into the circumstances under which it was granted when the High Court have certified that in their opinion there is an important question of law to be decided.

Hon. Sir Wm. Finlay, K. C. and Narasimham.—The High Court acted ultra vires in remitting the case for further findings. The trial Judge had already given his findings on the material facts in favour of the Respondents and the further findings on remand were made on the evidence already on the record.

Venkata Varuthi v. Anantha Chariar (5), Civil Procedure Code, Or. 41, r. 25.

In any event there are concurrent findings that the Respondent had no notice of any defect in the compromise.

Aparanji was acting bonâ fide on behalf of her children and of the estate and could pass a good title to the present Respondent.

[SIR L. JENKINS.—The position is different from that of an English bonâ fide purchaser for value.

Here the title is derived from a person who could only part with a limited interest unless certain specific conditions were satisfied.]

Mandalathipathy was not claiming under the compromise but as being undivided and therefore entitled to the whole property.

Aparanji compromised the claims against the estate and a compromise made by a Hindu woman can bind the reversioners.

Ramsumran Prasad v. Shyam Kumari (6).

The transfer under the compromise was not in fact an alienation but a recognition of a pre-existing right in Mandalathipathy.

Khunni Lal v. Govind Krishna Narain (7).

On the facts the original trial Judge's findings are correct that there was a genuine dispute ending in a compromise.

Mr. DeGruyther, K. C. in reply.—The High Court have in fact set aside the compromise as bad, so that it would have no binding effect as between Mandalathipathy and Aparanji. It is invalid as against the reversioner and an alienee cannot be in a better position. Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (8).

Their LORDSHIPS' JUDGMENT was delivered by

SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.—This is an appeal from a decree of the High Court of Judicature at Madras, dated the 2nd May 1919, which varied a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Madura, dated the 23rd December 1916. The Plaintiffs are the reversionary heirs of their maternal grandfather Mayilchami, who died in May 1901, and was succeeded by his daughter, Aparanji Amman, the mother of the Plaintiffs. The Defendants are (among others) Aparanji Amman, Kumaravigaya, the son of the late Mandalathipathy, Sennamman Avergal, and Kandasamy Goundar.

OBALA KONDAMA NAICKER AYYAN v. KANDASAMY GOUNDAR.

The purpose of the suit is to establish the Plaintiffs' title as reversioners.

To explain this title it will be convenient to set out the following pedigree :—

On Mayilchami's death Sennamman commenced proceedings under the Criminal Procedure Code for possession of the estate of her father-in-law. Her application substantially failed. She then instituted a suit on the 14th February 1902 against Aparanji and Mandalathipathy seeking to establish a Will alleged by her to have been executed by Mayilchami and praying that possession should be given to her of one-third share of the property left by him.

Both Defendants to that suit filed written statements and the litigation closed with a compromise in 1903.

It provided that 10 kulies of the property therein described and a house should be delivered by the Defendants to Sennamman. To this extent it was within the scope of the suit and ultimately a decree was passed in accordance with this stipulation.

But the compromise also purported to define the rights of the Defendants to that suit as between themselves. By cl. 8 it provided that the properties described in the plaint (other than what was given to Sennamman) should be divided into moieties and that each of those Defendants should take one. On the 23rd February 1907, a partition deed was executed in accordance with the terms of the compromise. On the 2nd July 1910, Mandalathipathy executed a mortgage on property taken by him under the compromise to secure Rs. 10,000 advanced to him by the Respondent Kandasamy Goundar, and on the 7th January 1915, a decree for Rs. 17,257 was passed on it in the mortgagee's favour.

The Plaintiffs, as reversioners under their maternal grandfather, have instituted this suit on the 2nd March 1915, seeking to establish the invalidity as against them of the respective titles claimed by Kumaravigaya, the son of Mandalathipathy, deceased, and by the mortgagee.

It has been held by the High Court, and their Lordships adopt the finding, that Mayilchami and Mandalathipathy were separate and not joint, and there can be no doubt that this was known to Mandalathipathy at the time of the compromise.

But the compromise was based on the supposition that there was a question as to whether there had been a separation between the two lines of the family.

The High Court has further found that there is no evidence that Aparanji, with full knowledge that there was no truth in the claim put forward by Mandalathipathy, agreed to the compromise from ulterior motives and that there is no sufficient evidence to show that in assenting to the terms of the compromise she was not acting bonâ fide in the light of the circumstances then brought to her notice. Their Lordships do not dissent from this appreciation of the evidence. Aparanji at the time of the compromise stood in need of especial protection. She was a purdanashin lady, recently widowed, the mother of infant sons, and, so far as the evidence discloses, without any adult male relation except Mandalathipathy to advise her.

But it was under his advice and influence that she acted in the litigation with

OBALA KONDAMA NAICKER AYYAN v. KANDASAMY GOUNDAR.

Sennamman and in the compromise by which Mandalathipathy took to the detriment of herself and her infant sons the benefits to which, as he well knew, he had no honest claim.

In these circumstances the High Court rightly came to the conclusion that as against Defendant No. 2, Mandalathipathy's son and heir, the Plaintiffs established the invalidity of the compromise after their mother's death. From this part of their adjudication no appeal has been preferred, and the only contest now is with the mortgagee in whose favour the High Court decided.

The ground of this decision is that the mortgagee is a bonâ fide transferee for value, and so stands in a better position than his transferor, whose title was held to be bad.

The High Court appears to have thought that justification for this view was to be found in the provisions of the Trust Act. In their Lordships' opinion this was erroneous: the Act has no direct relevance to the circumstances of this case, and it was properly realized in the argument here that if the High Court's conclusion can be supported it must be on other grounds.

It has thus been contended that the High Court acted without jurisdiction in remanding the case as it did, and that the true view of the facts is that taken by the first trial Judge. But though the High Court's procedure may invite criticism, this is of no importance in view of that Court's ultimate findings of fact which, as already indicated, their Lordships accept.

They therefore do not think it necessary to discuss further the propriety of the remand.

It is then contended that the plea of purchaser for value without notice assists the Respondent.

But an initial difficulty in applying this doctrine is that on the face of the title the mortgagee had notice that his mortgagor took from one who only had a limited and conditional power of disposal. And so the enquiry comes back to this: What was the daughter's interest and power, bearing in mind that the case comes from the Madras Presidency? It is now settled beyond dispute that a daughter as heiress of her father takes a restricted interest similar to that taken by a widow with a similar power of disposal. This power is conditional; she can dispose of the inheritance for legal necessity, but it lies on the alienee to prove the existence of this necessity, and this is so even though the absence of necessity be not pleaded by the reversioner. Thus it was laid down in Sham Sunder Lal v. Achhan Kunwar (1): "In a suit like the present, on a bond made by a person with restricted power of alienation, the Defendants are not required to plead the absence of legal necessity for the borrowing. It is for the Plaintiffs to allege and prove the circumstances which alone will give validity to the mortgage." And later it was said the "touchstone of the authority is necessity." It may be conceded that even though there may not be legal necessity in fact, the alienee would be equally protected if he honestly did all that was reasonable to satisfy himself that the required necessity existed.

But here there is no proof either of necessity or of enquiry validating the compromise.

The inheritance therefore was not transferred so as to bind the reversioners. On the contrary, the reversioners on the mother's death can treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court.

OBALA KONDAMA NAICKER AYYAN v. KANDASAMY GOUNDAR.

[Bejoy Gopal Mukerji v. Krishna Mahishi Debi (2)].

Nor in their Lordships' opinion does it alter the position that the dealing with Mandalathipathy purported to be a compromise and an acknowledgment of an existing title. Even so it was improperly induced and equally vitiated.

As against the reversioners in this case, it was not within the power of Mandalathipathy to transfer a larger legal title than he himself had, nor have the reversioners by any act or omission debarred themselves from insisting on this contention. It is true that the reversion is still an expectancy, but an expectant reversioner's right to sue for a declaration has statutory recognition, and for the purpose in hand it is legitimate to consider what their position would be on their mother's death in their life-time. They would in that event have the immediate title without the intervention of any Court, and there would in their Lordships' view be no principle of justice, equity or good conscience that would empower the Court to deprive them of that legal title or to impose any restriction in derogation of it.

Their Lordships therefore are unable to agree with the High Court's decision in the mortgagee's favour, and they will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that the appeal be allowed and that the decree of the High Court be varied so far as it dismissed the appeal as against the 4th Defendant and ordered that the Plaintiff should pay to the 4th Defendant Rs. 621-2-6 for his costs, by directing in lieu thereof (a) that it be declared that the mortgage of the 2nd July 1910, and the decree thereon are inoperative against the Plaintiffs beyond their mother's life-time, and (b) that the 4th Defendant pay to the Plaintiffs their costs in the lower Courts so far as attributable to his claim against them, the amount of such costs to be assessed by the High Court. The 4th Defendant must pay to the Plaintiffs their costs of this appeal.

Full Bench Reference

No. 1 OF 1924.

SANDERSON, C. J. WALMSLEY, J. NEWBOULD, J. MUKERJI, J. CHOTZNER, J. 1924, Heard, 25, July. Judgment, 8, August	BARADA KANTA RAY, Plaintiff, v. SHAIKH MAIJUDDI, Defendant.

Provincial Small Cause Court, if can order attachment of immoveable property before judgment—Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), sec. 17—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), secs. 7, 94, 95 and Ors. 38, 39 and 50—Procedure for such attachment—"Attachment" and "order for attachment," difference between—Construction of statute—Sec 7, "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders," meaning of.

Per CURIAM (WALMSLEY AND CHOTZNER, JJ., dissentiente).—A Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to order an attachment of immoveable property before judgment under Or. 38 of the Civil Procedure Code. There is a difference between ordering the attachment of property and attaching property. If a Small Cause Court passes such an order, it would have to send the order to an ordinary Civil Court for executing it.

Per WALMSLEY AND CHOTZNER, JJ.—A Provincial Small Cause Court has no power to attach immoveable property before judgment under Or. 38 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Per SANDERSON, C. J. AND NEWBOULD, J.—KEDAR NATH v. HEM NATH (1) was wrongly decided and SADEK ALI v. SAMED ALI (2) was rightly decided.

Per MUKERJI, J.—The case of KEDAR NATH v. HEM NATH (1), if it purported to lay down that a Provincial Small Cause Court can attach immoveable property and not merely make an order of attachment thereof, was not correctly decided, nor was the case of SADEK ALI v. SAMED ALI (2) correctly decided if it meant to lay down that no such order can be passed by a Provincial Small Cause Court.

This was a Reference to a Full Bench made by Newbould and B. B. Ghose, JJ., for decision owing to a conflict of decisions on the point which was made the subject of a Reference to the High Court by the Munsif of Madaripur.

The facts material to this report will appear from the following Reference by the Munsif of Madaripur, dated the 10th January 1924.

"Plaintiff in the present case has applied for attachment of Defendant's immoveable property before judgment, but as I entertain reasonable doubt as to whether such attachment can be legally made, I would refer the question to the Hon'ble High Court for its decision under r. 1, Or. 46, Civil Procedure Code.

The matter was twice before referred to the Hon'ble High Court within recent years. Vide Kumud Behari v. Hari Charan (3) and Kedar Nath v. Hem Nath (1), and in these cases it was held that the Provincial Small Cause Court is competent to attach moveable and immoveable property before judgment. In the latest case on the subject, Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2), however, it has been held that a Provincial Small Cause Court has no power to attach immoveable property before judgment. All that can be usefully said on both sides of the question has been said in the reported cases referred to above, and I have nothing more to add beyond saying that Kedar Nath v. Hem Nath (1), where it has been held that the Provincial Small Cause Courts can attach immoveable property, does not appear to have been considered in Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) which in effect overrules that decision. In view of this conflict of judicial authority a clear finding of the Hon'ble Court seems to be necessary for the guidance of subordinate Courts. So far as moveable property is concerned, there is no such conflict. I accordingly refer the following point for the decision of High Court:—Whether a Provincial Small Cause Court is competent to attach immoveable property before judgment?"

When the Reference came before the Divisional Bench (Newbould and B. B. Ghose, JJ.), the Court referred it to the Full Bench with the following observations:—

"This is a Reference by the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Madaripur under Or. 46, r. 1, Civil Procedure Code for the decision by this Court of the question whether the Provincial Small Cause Court is competent to attach immoveable property before judgment. The reason for the Reference is given to be the existence of conflicting decisions in this Court and apparently for this the referring Judge has not recorded his own opinion on the question. In the case of Kedar Nath v. Hem Nath (1), it was held that the Provincial Small Cause Court can attach immoveable property before judgment while the contrary view was taken in Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2). The earlier case was not evidently brought to the notice of the Division Bench which decided the latter case. Each of us was a party to one of the two cases cited, one of which must be overruled. Under this circumstance, we are unable to decide the question finally and we find it necessary to refer the matter to a Full Bench. We therefore refer the following questions for decision by a Full Bench :—

(1) Whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to order an attachment of immoveable property before judgment?

(2) Whether the case of Kedar Nath v. Hem Nath (1) or the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was correctly decided?"

Babus Santosh Kumar Bose and Sitaram Banerjee appeared amicus curiæ for and against the Reference at the request of the Court.

The arguments will appear from the following summary and from the judgment of Mukerji, J.

Babu Santosh Kumar Bose for the Reference.—Sec. 17 of the Small Cause Courts Act makes the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 mentioned in Sch. II applicable to Small Cause Courts whereas sec. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1882 expressly extended to Small Cause Courts certain provisions of the Code enumerated in the Second Schedule, other chapters and sections did not apply. Sec. 226, relating to attachment and sale, applied except with regard to immoveable property and secs. 273, 284, 285, 286, 287, 288, 289, 290, 328 to 332 and 333 applied so far as they related only to moveable property. Chap. XXXIV, relating to arrest and attachment before judgment, applied except as regards immoveables. Chap. XXXV, re injunctions and interlocutory orders, not being mentioned did not apply. By the Code of 1908 the whole scheme was altered. There is no express application of some of its provisions but it consolidates and amends the law of procedure applicable to Courts of civil judicature. Small Cause Courts are such Courts. Sec. 7, sub-sec. (a), cl. (iii) excludes provisions in the body of the Code relating to execution of decrees against immoveables, and sub-sec. (b) excludes secs. 94 and 95 so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders. Sec. 94, cl. (c) refers to injunctions and cl. (e) to interlocutory orders; other clauses do not contemplate interlocutory orders, although the word "such" appears in cl. (e). Otherwise sec. 7 will be rendered meaningless, and further because temporary injunctions and interlocutory orders are mentioned in Or. 39 and other orders mentioned in cls. (a), (b) and (d) are provided for in Ors. 38 and 40. Besides, by Or. 50, Or. 38 is not excluded. Sec. 7, sub-sec. (a), cl. (iii), excludes provisions in the body of the Code re execution of decrees against immoveables, and creates no bar against attachment before judgment. Or. 50, r. 1, sub-r. (a) (ii) also excludes so much of the schedule as relates to execution of decrees against immoveable property, but this attachment is not in execution, but before judgment. There is exception in Or. 16, r. 10 as regards attachment in cases of defaulting witnesses. Attachment before judgment is entirely for a different purpose from execution. The distinction between an attachment and an order of attachment is very thin. Refers to Kumud Behari Pal v. Hari Charan Sardar (3), Basiram v. Kattyayani (5), Arunachellam v. Haji Shaikh Rowther (6) and Sriram v. Tincowrie (7).

Babu Sitaram Banerjee against the Reference.—The Second Schedule of the Small Cause Courts Act excludes from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court all suits in respect of immoveable property, whether for declaration, partition or possession or otherwise and rights to or interests in immoveable properties are specifically and elaborately excluded. Sec. 17, Small Cause Courts Act relates to the procedure to be applied to Small Cause Court suits, the Code of 1882 specifically excluded the power of attachment of immoveable properties before judgment from the jurisdiction of Small Cause Court. In the present Code, sec. 7 and Or. 50 relate to the matters excluded. By sec. 7 (a) (iii) the execution of decrees against immoveable property is specifically excluded. Sec. 7 relates to the body of the Code and not to the orders and rules.

Refers to sec. 94 (c) and (e). Interlocutory orders are excluded from the jurisdiction of Small Gause Courts. Or. 38 has been prescribed to enable the Court to make an order for the attachment of any property for preventing ends of justice from being defeated, and therefore it is covered by sec. 94 (b). An attachment before judgment is an interlocutory order according to the usual acceptance of the term. Sec. 94 clearly refers to interlocutory orders in all its clauses, which is clear from the wording of cl. (e), viz., "such other interlocutory orders," and hence by the operation of sec. 7 of the Code, this must be excluded from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court and therefore a Provincial Small Cause Court is no longer competent to make any order for attachment of property before judgment. To hold that the Small Cause Court can attach immoveable property before judgment will lead to claims to immoveable property being decided by it with no right of appeal. To hold that it is competent to attach moveables before judgment, when Or. 39, r. 6 which gives this power, being an interlocutory order specified as such in the Code, is expressly excluded by sec. 7 read with sec. 94 (e), would lead to an anomaly. Reads Or. 50 (a) (ii). Several interlocutory matters, viz., relating to injunctions, appointments of receivers, etc., are not included in Or. 50. Hence neither sec. 7 nor Or. 50 is exhaustive. The argument in Kumud Behari Pal v. Hari Charan Sardar (3) is logically fallacious. An order under Or. 38, r. 6 is appealable under Or. 43, r. 1, but if the Small Cause Court makes an order under Or. 38, r. 6, would it be appealable? Under Or. 38, r. 11, there is no necessity for fresh attachment at the time of execution, which would be an anomaly. Similarly Or. 38, rr. 7 and 8 would lead to anomalies. The distinction between attachment in execution and before judgment is really technical and not fundamental. Distinguishes Basiram v. Kattyayani (5). The object is the same in both, viz., preservation of the judgment-debtor's property as security for the decree-holder's money. A Court which cannot attach primarily in execution of its decree cannot attach in anticipation of it. Refers to Marthamma v. Kittu Sheregara (4). If Or. 38, r. 7 applies to Small Cause Courts, then Or. 21, r. 63 will also apply, and then the anomalous position will follow that the order of a Small Cause Court will become final as regards immoveable property which is certainly contrary to the intention of the legislature. Under sec. 36, C. P. C., execution of order against immoveable property is same as execution of decrees, hence there is another anomaly. Arguments from previous Codes are apt to be misleading [Bank of England v. Vagliano (8)] and Kedar Nath v. Hem Nath (1) was decided on a wrong analogy of Small Cause Court's power over moveable properties, based on Kumud Behari Pal v. Hari Charan Sardar (3). Refers to sec. 158, C. P. C.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

SANDERSON, C. J.—The questions referred to the Full Bench are as follows :—

(1) Whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to order an attachment of immoveable property before judgment?

(2) Whether the case of Kedar Nath v. Hem Nath (1) or the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was correctly decided?

The reference arises by reason of conflicting decision of this Court in two cases. viz., Kedar Nath Pramanik v. Hem Nath Karmokar (1) and Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2).

In the former case it was decided that a Provincial Small Cause Court can attach before judgment immoveable property under the Code of Civil Procedure of 1908. In the latter case it was decided that a Provincial Court of Small Causes has no power to attach immoveable property before judgment under Or. 38 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 and that an order of such a Court adjudicating a claim to property so attached is ultra vires.

The decision in the case of Kedar Nath Pramanik v. Hem Nath Karmokar (1) was not brought to the attention of the learned Judges who decided the latter case.

I am not surprised that there has been and is a difference of judicial opinion in respect of this question, for in my opinion it is by no means easy upon an examination of the various provisions relating to it to ascertain what was the intention of the legislature with regard to this matter when the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 was passed. This presents an unsatisfactory situation, for the Provincial Small Cause Courts are obviously intended for the expeditious disposal of small causes, and it is desirable that those who preside over such Courts and those who practise in them should be able to ascertain without any difficulty what are the jurisdiction and procedure applicable thereto. So far from that being the case in respect of the matter now under discussion, it has become necessary, in order to ascertain the powers of the Provincial Small Cause Courts, to refer the question to a Full Bench and during the argument it was necessary to examine minutely sections of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act of 1887, the Civil Procedure Code of 1882 and the Civil Procedure Code of 1908 and the result is a difference of opinion.

This therefore appears to be a matter which should engage the attention of the legislature so that the jurisdiction of the Provincial Small Cause Courts may be made clear beyond all question.

BARADA KANTA RAY v. SHAIKH MAIJUDDI.

Sec. 15 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, provides that a Court of Small Causes shall not take cognizance of the suits specified in the Second Schedule as suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes and amongst the suits excepted by that Schedule from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes are. a suit for the possession of immoveable property or for the recovery of any interest in such property, a suit for partition of immoveable property, a suit for purchase or sale or redemption of mortgaged property, a suit for assessment, etc., of rent of immoveable property.

Sec. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, provides that the procedure prescribed in the chapters and, sections of the Code of Civil Procedure (viz.. Act XIV of 1882) specified in the Second Schedule to that Code shall, so far as these chapters and sections are applicable, be the procedure followed by a Court of Small Causes in all suits cognizable by it and in all proceedings arising out of such suits.

Sec. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882 provided that the chapters and sections specified in the Second Schedule thereto should extend to the Provincial Small Cause Courts and that the other chapters and sections of the Code should not extend to such Courts.

The Second Schedule included Chap. LIX (which dealt with the execution of decrees), sec. 266, but there was added the exception as follows :—" Except so far as relates to immoveable property."

The schedule also included Chap. LXXIV " Of arrest and attachment before judgment except as regards immoveable property."

It is therefore clear that at the time of the passing of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act in 1887 the intention of the legislature was that a Provincial Small Cause Court should not have power to attach immoveable property before judgment.

The Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, was repealed by the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908 and sec. 158 provided as follows :— " In every enactment or notification passed or issued before the commencement of this Code in which reference is made to or to any chapter or section of Act VIII of 1859 or any Code of Civil Procedure or any Act amending the same or any other enactment hereby repealed, such reference shall, so far as may be practicable, be taken to be made to this Code or to its corresponding part, order, section or rule."

There is, however, no part of the Code of 1908 which corresponds to the Second Schedule of the Code of 1882 and whereas the scheme of the 1882 Code was to specify the provisions of the Code which should apply to a Provincial Small Cause Court, the scheme of the 1908 Code is to make all the provisions of the Code of 1908 applicable except those which are expressly excepted. The result is that sec. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act is entirely inapposite although it remains unrepealed. This is one reason for the difficulty which has arisen.

On examination of the Code of 1908 and the orders contained in the first Schedule thereto, it seems to me that the most material sections and orders are as follows :—

Secs. 7, 36, 94 and 95; Or. 16 (r. 10), Or. 21 (r. 82); Or. 38, Or. 39, Or. 50.

Sec. 7 of the 1908 Code provides as follows :—" The following provisions shall not extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, or to Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes under that Act, that is to say,

BARADA KANTA RAY v. SHAIKH MAIJUDDI.

(a) so much of the body of the Code as relates to

(i) suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes; (ii) the execution of decrees in such suits; (iii) the execution of decrees against immoveable property; and

(b) the following sections, that is to say . . . . . secs. 94 and 95 so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders."

On reference to sec. 94 it will be found that all the orders therein mentioned are "interlocutory orders" in the ordinary meaning of the phrase and cl. (e) runs as follows:—"Make such other interlocutory orders as may appear to the Court to be just and convenient." This clause therefore would go to show that all the orders specifically mentioned in sec. 94 are "interlocutory orders."

It was therefore argued on the one hand that the intention of the legislature was to exclude all the matters mentioned in sec. 94 from the jurisdiction of a Provincial Small Cause Court. On the other hand it was argued that, if this contention were adopted, no effect would be given to the words, "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" in sec. 7. It was argued that some effect must be given to these words, and that they cannot be regarded as a surplusage, and further that if it had been intended to except all the matters mentioned in sec. 94, there would have been no necessity to refer to "injunctions" in sec. 7, for the only injunctions mentioned in sec. 94 are "temporary injunctions" which would be included in the phrase "interlocutory orders" which are the subject-matter of cl. (e) of sec. 94.

It is a well-known rule that in construing an Act, words found therein should not be regarded as surplusage, and full effect should be given to them, if a reasonable interpretation can be found.

In sec. 94 "temporary injunctions" and "interlocutory orders" are specifically mentioned in separate clauses, viz., (c) and (e) and in my judgment the only reasonable interpretation to be placed upon the words in sec. 7, viz., "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" is, that it was intended to exclude from the jurisdiction of a Provincial Small Cause Court the matters particularly specified in cls. (c) and (e).

I am confirmed in this opinion by the words which are to be found at the beginning of sec. 94, viz., "if it is so prescribed."

Having regard to the definitions in the second section of the Code the meaning of these words is, if it is prescribed by the rules and orders contained in the First Schedule of the Code.

On reference to the First Schedule, it will be observed that Or. 38 deals with "arrest and attachment before judgment" and Or. 39 deals with "temporary injunctions and interlocutory orders."

Therefore, although "orders for attachment before judgment" are in the ordinary meaning of the words "interlocutory orders" they are placed in a different category to "temporary injunctions" and "interlocutory orders."

Again although "temporary injunctions" are really "interlocutory orders" they are specifically mentioned in the schedule as being something special and distinct from "interlocutory orders."

The result of my examination of these sections therefore is the conclusion that the framers of this legislation were dealing with "temporary injunctions" and "other interlocutory orders" as matters distinct from the matters specifically mentioned in cls. (a), (b) and (d) of sec. 94 and that it was intended that the provisions of sec. 94, which were not to extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, were the provisions contained in cls. (c) and (e) of sec. 94.

Cl. (b) of sec. 94 empowers the Court to "order the attachment of any property."

Sec. 7 of the Code therefore does not prevent a Provincial Small Cause Court from making such an order.

But such order must be of an interlocutory nature, for sec. 7 of the Code and Or. 50 in the 1st Schedule expressly provide that the provisions of the Code relating to the execution of decrees against immoveable property shall not extend to a Provincial Small Cause Court.

Therefore the order for attachment contemplated by sec. 94, cl. (b) must be such an order as is specified in Or. 38, r. 6, viz., an order for attachment before judgment.

As I am of opinion that the provisions of cl. (b) of sec. 94 are not excluded by reason of sec. 7 and that the order for attachment there referred to must mean an order for attachment before judgment, it follows that, in my opinion, a Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to make an order for attachment before judgment of any property, which would include immoveable property.

I agree that at first sight it may appear strange that a Provincial Small Cause Court, which cannot entertain suits relating to immoveable property, and which cannot execute a decree by attachment of immoveable property or entertain a claim, which an attachment may produce, should have been given power to make "an order for attachment of immoveable property before judgment." There is, however, a distinction between making an order for attachment and making an attachment.

It may be that if a Provincial Small Cause Court were to make an order for attachment of immoveable property before judgment, it would be necessary for that Court to transmit the order to a Court of Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction for the purpose of the order being carried out and the property attached.

In this connection I desire to refer to a passage in the judgment of Rankin, J., in Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) which is as follows:—

"It is by no means absurd to suppose that the Code of 1908 may have meant, subject to the right of the High Courts to amend the rules, to extend the power of attachment before judgment to immoveable property in the case of Provincial Small Cause Courts while refusing to such Courts the right to attach such property in execution of decrees."

I agree with that passage if the words "power to order attachment before judgment" are substituted for the words "power of attachment before judgment."

The question, however, is whether the legislature has extended such a power to the Provincial Small Cause Courts.

It is to be noted that Or. 50, cl. (a) excludes from the jurisdiction of the Provincial Small Cause Courts, the matters mentioned in cl. (a) of sec. 7 of the Code and two other matters, viz., the execution of a decree against the interest of a partner in partnership property and the settlement of issues, and in cl. (b) specifies certain rules and orders which are not to extend to Provincial Small Cause Courts.

This order, however, does not mention Or. 38 which deals with attachment before judgment, and it does not mention Or. 16, r. 10 or Or. 21, r. 82.

Or. 16, r. 10 deals with the procedure

(2) 28 C. W. N. 16 at p. 19 (1923).

BARADA KANTA RAY v. SHAIKH MAIJUDDI.

where a witness fails to comply with a summons to give evidence or produce a document.

One of the powers given to the Court under that rule, is to attach his property.

But it is expressly provided that no Court of Small Causes shall make an order for attachment of immoveable property in respect of the matters referred to in that rule.

Similarly in dealing with the question of what Courts may order sales in execution of decrees or orders, Or. 21, r. 82 expressly provides that sales of immoveable property in execution of decrees may be ordered by any Court other than a Court of Small Causes.

These two rules therefore show that in respect of matters, which are not dealt with in Or. 50, when the legislature desired to exclude them from the jurisdiction of the Provincial Small Cause Courts, it expressly said so.

In my opinion, therefore, it is not unreasonable to assume that if the legislature had intended to exclude the powers conferred upon the Court by Or. 38, rr. 5 and 6 from the jurisdiction of the Provincial Small Cause Courts, it would have expressly so provided, as in the case of Or. 16, r. 10 and Or. 21, r. 82.

On the whole, therefore, though I think the matter is by no means free from difficulty as I have already indicated, I am of opinion that the first question referred to the Full Bench, viz., whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to order an attachment of immoveable property before judgment, should be answered in the affirmative.

The subject of the decisions in the two cases referred to in the second question was the power of a Provincial Small Cause Court to attach immoveable property before judgment and in Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) the question whether the Small Cause Court could adjudicate upon a claim to immoveable property arising by reason of the attachment was also involved. The decisions were not confined to the mere question whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has power to order attachment of immoveable property before judgment. In my judgment therefore the answer to the second question should be that Kedar Nath Pramanik v. Hem Nath Karmokar (1) was wrongly decided, and Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was rightly decided.

WALMSLEY, J.—The questions referred are whether a Provincial Small Cause Court can attach immoveable property before judgment, and which of two decisions, opposed to one another, is correct.

There was no doubt upon the main question before the present Code of Civil Procedure came into force: a Court exercising the powers of a Provincial Small Cause Court could not order such an attachment. The manner in which this restriction was enacted was as follows: The Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, sec. 17, runs as follows:—"The procedure prescribed in the chapters and sections of the Code of Civil Procedure specified in the Second Schedule to that Code, shall, so far as those chapters and sections are applicable, be the procedure followed in a Court of Small Causes in all suits cognizable by it and in all proceedings arising out of such suits." The Second Schedule to the Code then in force (that of 1882) enumerated the chapters and sections of that Code extended to Provincial Courts of Small Causes and among them was Chap. XXXIV "Of arrest and attachment before judgment," with the addition "except as regards immoveable property."

(2) 28 C. W. N. 16 (1923).

BARADA KANTA RAY v. SHAIKH MAIJUDDI.

The Code now in force proceeds on entirely different lines: there is no Schedule corresponding to the Second Schedule of the Code of 1882, and although the sections of Chap. XXXIV are reproduced with slight modifications in the rules of Or. XXXVIII and in sec. 95 of the present Code there is nothing to be found which corresponds to the clear words "except as regards immoveable property." The method has in fact been changed: in place of a detailed list of provisions which do apply to Provincial Small Cause Courts, there is first in the body of the Code in sec. 7 a description of the classes of provisions which do not apply, and in the first Schedule, in Or. 50, there is both an exclusion by class, and a list of particular provisions which do not apply. Inspite of this radical change the language of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act remains unaltered.

The position is therefore very obscure, and it is difficult to say whether the legislature intended to lay down any rule on the subject or not. The learned Vakils who have been good enough to lend us their help, have not in my opinion been able to advance any convincing argument in either direction.

It appears to me that we must approach the matter from the standpoint that by the Act of 1887 Provincial Courts of Small Causes are generally forbidden to have any dealings with immoveable property, both in suits and in execution proceedings. No change has been made in that principle by the new Code of Civil Procedure, and in one instance, that is, in the matter of compelling the attendance of a witness, there is a specific direction that no Court of Small Causes shall make an order for the attachment of immoveable property.

It would be surprising if a Court that could not execute a decree by attachment of immoveable property should be able to attach the same immoveable property before a decree came into being, and I am disposed to think that the provisions of sec. 7 may fairly be construed to give effect to this natural inference. That section says—The following provisions shall not extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act of 1887, or to Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes under that Act, viz.,

(a) so much of the body of the Code as relates to—

(i) . . .

(ii) . . .

(iii) the execution of decrees against immoveable property.

(b) . . . Secs. 94 and 95, so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders. Of these two sections, the latter is practically the same as sec. 491 of the old Code, the last section of Chap. XXXIV, which as I have mentioned was one of the chapters enumerated in the Second Schedule. The former authorises the Court to take certain measures to prevent the ends of justice being defeated. The measures are not new but the section is. The measures mentioned are the power to demand security from a Defendant to call upon a Defendant to produce property, to attach property, to issue an injunction, to appoint a Receiver. This list is followed by a fifth clause in these words "make such other interlocutory orders as may appear to the Court to be just and convenient."

The term "interlocutory orders" is not defined in any statute but the orders mentioned in the first four clauses are generally regarded as interlocutory orders, and I do not think that the heading to Or. XXXIX, can be taken to mean that only the orders mentioned in rr. 6 to 10 of that order are interlocutory orders. Moreover the reference in the fifth clause of sec. 94 to "other interlocutory orders" seems to mean that the preceding orders are also interlocutory orders.

On this view of the section, I must hold that the Small Cause Court cannot attach property whether moveable or immoveable. That view is contrary to the view taken in the case of Kedar Nath Pramanik v. Hem Nath Karmokar (1) except in so far as I hold that the present Code makes no distinction between the power to attach moveable property and the power to attach immoveable property. The earlier case of Kumud Behari Pal v. Hari Charan Sardar (3) to which the learned Judges referred for their reasons, was a reference as to the power to attach moveable property and the learned Judges were considering whether the present Code had taken away that power, and they held that an attachment of moveable property before judgment was not an "interlocutory order" for the purpose of sec. 7 (b), because that construction would render the words "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" superfluous. With all deference, I venture to differ, although I confess I can find no use for the phrase just mentioned in the view that I take.

The conclusion to which I come is that of Rankin, J., that the power to attach immoveable property before judgment is sufficiently, if not too clearly, negatived.

I would therefore answer the first question in the negative and the second question by saying that the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was correctly decided.

NEWBOULD, J.—The questions which we have to decide in this Reference depend primarily on the proper interpretation of cl. (b) of sec. 7 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, which enumerates certain sections in the Code which shall not extend to Provincial Small Cause Courts. Among these sections are included "secs. 94 and 95 so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders." As pointed out by Rankin, J., in his judgment in Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) "this provision is badly drafted." The difficulty arises from the fact that sec. 94 apparently refers entirely to interlocutory orders if the expression interlocutory order be given its ordinary meaning, as for example its definition in Wharton's Law Lexicon. But if this is done this qualification of sec. 94 in cl. (b) of sec. 7 becomes meaningless. It is a general rule of construction that full effect must be given to every word and the words of a statute must be construed so as to give a sensible meaning to them, if possible. It is possible to give a sensible meaning to the words "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" by interpreting them as used in a technical sense and as referring to orders expressly described in the Code itself as injunctions or interlocutory orders. That these words were used in this technical sense by the framers of the Code would appear from the inclusion of the word "injunctions" in the sentence. The only injunctions referred to in secs. 94 and 95 are temporary injunctions and these would be included in interlocutory orders if these words were used in the ordinary sense. This was the view I held in 1918 when I was one of the Judges who decided the case of Kumud Behari Pal v. Hari Charan Sardar (3) and I see no reason to change my view as to the principle to be followed in interpreting cl. (b) of sec. 7 of the Code. But now that I have had the advantage of hearing the point more fully argued I think that in applying this principle some modification should be made. My attention has now been drawn to the fact that the words "if it is so prescribed" at the end of the first sentence in sec. 94 render this section inoperative apart from the rules which are contained in the first Schedule to the Code. A reference to the first Schedule makes it easier to give a technical meaning to the words "injunctions and interlocutory orders." We there find that Or. 39 is headed "temporary injunctions and interlocutory orders" and the order is divided into two parts with separate headings, rr. 1 to 5 being described "temporary injunctions" and rr. 1 to 10 "interlocutory orders." It therefore appears to me that the meaning to be given to cl. (b) of sec. 7 so far as it relates to sec. 94, is that the provisions in Or. 39 of the first Schedule of the Code, shall not extend to Provincial Small Cause Courts but that it does not exclude the extension of the provisions in Or. 38 to such Courts. The present Code of Civil Procedure has the effect of making applicable to Small Cause Courts all the provisions of the Code that are not expressly excluded. I can find nothing in the Code apart from sec. 7, which could be interpreted to exclude the application of Or. 38 to such Courts. Under rr. 6 and 7 of that order a Court has power to order attachment of immoveable property. I would therefore answer the first question referred to the Full Bench, "Whether a Provincial Small Cause Court has jurisdiction to order an attachment of immoveable property before judgment?" in the affirmative.

At the hearing of this Reference my attention was drawn to a point that escaped my notice when delivering judgment in the cases of Kumud Behari Pal v. Hari Charan Sardar (3) and Kedar Nath Pramanik v. Hem Nath Karmokar (1), that is, that there is a difference between ordering the attachment of property and attaching property. It does not follow that because, as I hold, a Small Cause Court has the power to order the attachment of immoveable property, it has also the power to attach it. From the provisions of sec. 36 and Or. 38, r. 7 of the Code it appears that when it is sought to give effect to an order of attachment before judgment this must be done in accordance with the provisions of the Code for attaching property in execution of a decree. Since a Small Cause Court is prevented by the provision of sec. 7 (a) (iii) and Or. 50 of the Code from executing decrees against immoveable property it would appear that it is equally debarred from executing an order of attachment of immoveable property passed by it. In order to give effect to such an order the assistance of the Civil Court of ordinary jurisdiction would have to be invoked and claims to immoveable property attached under the order of a Small Cause Court would be heard and decided by the attaching Court and not by the Small Cause Court.

I would therefore answer the second question in this Reference "whether the case of Kedar Nath v. Hem Nath (1), or the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was correctly decided?" as follows :—

Having regard to the fact that the power to attach and not the power to order attachment is the subject of these decisions, Kedar Nath v. Hem Nath (1) was wrongly and Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) was correctly decided.

MUKERJI, J.—The two questions referred to us for decision are simple enough. They resolve themselves into the question as to whether Or. 38 of the Code of Civil Procedure applies to a Provincial Court of Small Causes. The solution is not quite so simple.

The two views that may be taken of the matter and the arguments in support of them may shortly be summarised thus.

Sec. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) lays down that the procedure prescribed in the chapters and sections of the Code of Civil Procedure specified in the second schedule to that Code shall, so far as those chapters and sections are applicable, be the procedure followed in a Court of Small Causes in all suits cognizable by it and in all proceedings arising out of such suits. Then follows a proviso which need not be considered for our present purpose. Sec. 5 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act XIV of 1882) provided that only certain chapters and sections of the Code (all specified in the second schedule thereof) were to extend to the Provincial Courts of Small Causes. From that schedule it would appear that the provisions regarding arrest and attachment before judgment (Chap. XXXIV) though made applicable to Provincial Small Cause Courts did not apply to such suits when they related to immoveable property. It is therefore quite clear that so long as the Code of 1882 was in force a Provincial Court of Small Causes could not make an order of attachment in respect of any immoveable property before judgment. The scheme of the Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) now in force is entirely different. It does not profess to lay down which particular provisions of the new Code are to apply to the Provincial Small Cause Courts but simply lays down that certain provisions are not applicable to such Courts. These provisions are to be found in sec. 7 and Or. 50 of the Code and also in Or. 16, r. 10 and Or. 21, r. 82. The two rules last mentioned do not refer to the present question beyond suggesting that the scheme of the Code is to exclude by express mention. Sec. 7 is divided into two parts. Part (a) is confined to the provisions contained in the body of the Code relating to suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, to the execution of decrees in such suits and to the execution of decrees against immoveable property. Part (b) mentions some of the sections, of which secs. 9, 91 and 92 have obviously no application to a Court of Small Causes, secs. 96 to 112 relate to appeals and sec. 115 relates to revision. Part (b) also excludes secs. 94 and 95 "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders." Although all the orders mentioned in sec. 94 may in one sense be said to be interlocutory orders, the legislature intended by the use of the words "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" in sec. 7 to mean only such of them as are specified as such in the Code, that is to say, injunctions and such orders as are said to be interlocutory orders in Or. 39 of the Code. The precise effect, therefore, of providing for exclusion of the operation of secs. 94 and 95 "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" is to exclude in reality orders which come under cls. (c) and (e) of sec. 94 and not orders passed under the other clauses of the section. Cl. (b) of sec. 94 under which a Court can order the attachment of any property is therefore not affected by sec. 7. Or. 50 which specifies the portions of the first schedule and the rules and orders which shall not extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887. or to Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes under that Act does not refer to Or. 38 at all. Consequently a Provincial Court of Small Causes is competent to make an order of attachment before judgment, in respect of moveable as well as immoveable property.

In support of this view it may be urged that the main object of an attachment before judgment is to enable the Plaintiff to realise the amount of the decree, supposing a decree is eventually passed, from the Defendants' property. It is a step taken merely for the purpose of preventing the debtor from delaying or defeating the enforcement of a decree and thereby obstructing or preventing the creditor from reaping its fruits. Unquestionably that is a much valued right; and so far as moveable property is concerned the Plaintiff enjoyed that right so long as the Code of 1882 was in force. The scheme of the Code of 1908 is radically different from that of the Code of 1882. Unlike the latter it by implication makes the whole Code applicable to Provincial Courts of Small Causes subject to certain express restrictions.

For the contrary view the reasoning in substance is this. The rules under Or. 38 have been prescribed to enable the Court to make an order for the attachment of any property for preventing the ends of justice from being defeated. Therefore the order is one which comes expressly within the last part of cl. (b) of sec. 94 of the Code. An attachment before judgment cannot but be an interlocutory order. The Code does not define what orders are interlocutory and what are not. Or. 39 only specifies certain classes of interlocutory orders. Something which is done between the commencement and the end of a suit or action, which decides some point or matter which, however, is not a final decision of the matter in issue, is known as an interlocutory order. An attachment before judgment is undoubtedly an interlocutory order according to the general acceptance of the expression. Sec. 94 refers entirely to interlocutory orders in all its clauses, and this is clear also from the wording of cl. (e) which speaks of "such other interlocutory orders." Therefore by sec. 7 of the Code they are all excluded, and a Provincial Court of Small Causes is no longer competent to make any order for attachment of property, either moveable or immoveable, before judgment.

The considerations that favour this view are that a Provincial Court of Small Causes is prohibited by its constitution from entertaining questions of rights in immoveables, and rights to or interests in immoveable property are elaborately excluded from its consideration. It can only go into such questions incidentally, and there is in sec. 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) a provision enabling but not making it obligatory for the Court to send the matter for decision to the ordinary Civil Court. A Provincial Court of Small Causes cannot deal with immoveables in execution of its decree, it cannot levy on immoveables, nor can it order the attachment of immoveable property to make a witness to appear. To hold that it is competent to attach immoveable property before judgment will be to open the gates for claims to such property being put in and allow the Court to investigate and decide on them with no right of appeal to the party aggrieved by its decision therein, and to countenance the eventuality of its decision being final if no suit is instituted to establish the right within the time allowed by law. To hold that it is competent to attach moveables before judgment, when undoubtedly Or. 39, r. 6 which gives the power to order interim sale of moveables which are subject to speedy and natural decay or which for any other just and sufficient cause it may be desirable to have sold at once, does not extend to the Court - an order under Or. 39, r. 6 being an interlocutory order specified as such in the Code and therefore expressly excluded by sec. 7 read with sec. 94, cl. (e)—would lead to an anomaly.

A close examination of these rival contentions leads us to a position which can scarcely be ignored. To accept the former view would be to hold that the legislature intended to extend in respect of immoveable property the powers which the Provincial Courts of Small Causes enjoyed with regard to moveables ever since the said Courts came into existence by Act XLII of 1860: to adopt the latter view would be to hold that the object was to take away those powers. There is no escape from this position. It is difficult to imagine that such a salutary power which affords protection to Plaintiffs without causing any appreciable inconvenience to Defendants—for the proceedings in a Court of Small Causes are meant to be summary, and if the Plaintiff fails, the attachment fails under Or. 38, r. 9, and when there are ample provisions made under Or. 38, rr. 6, 9 and 12 protecting the Defendant and also the rights of strangers, and the Code lays down stringent safeguards in the shape of conditions which must be shown to exist before an order can be made under Or. 38, r. 5—was intended to be taken away without some express words indicating such intention. On the other hand the scheme adopted by repealing Sch. II of Act XIV of 1882 which expressly extended only some of the powers under the Code to Provincial Courts of Small Causes and adopting in the Code of 1908 the other mode of expression, namely, of restricting only the application of some of the provisions specifically mentioned therein, favours the view that the object was to enlarge the powers rather than to limit them.

Now, it is to be regretted that sec. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act has not yet been amended as was absolutely necessary on the amendment of the Civil Procedure Code in 1908. The language of the section, as it is, is wholly inapposite. With the repeal of the Code of 1882 and of its second schedule the words of sec. 17 of the Provincial Court of Small Causes can no longer have any meaning: for though by sec. 8 of the General Clauses Act and sec. 158 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Act IX of 1908) we have, as far as practicable, to look to the part, order, section or rule which corresponds to the chapter or section of the earlier Codes, it will be seen that the Code of 1882 excluded the same by express mention whereas the Code of 1908 has restricted them by express mention.

There is little doubt that the amendments made by the Code of 1908 in this respect are anything but satisfactory. An examination of the provisions discloses a want of care and precision which is regrettable in an enactment dealing with procedure so largely in use. It is difficult to reconcile the expression "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" appearing in sec. 7 with the provisions of sec. 94 all of which deal with interlocutory orders of one kind or other. There is a clear ambiguity to dispel which it is permissible to look to the earlier enactments; but the earlier enactments afford us no real assistance, because in view of the fact upon either view it being admitted that a change has been effected—an extension of the powers to immoveables on the one view and a curtailment of the powers in the case of moveables on the other—it would be impossible to proceed on the assumption of a supposed policy on the part of the legislature not to depart from the law as it stood before. A change was intended and has been effected: and judging from the express words of the governing clauses of sec. 7 and Or. 50 there is no doubt in my mind that it was intended to extend the whole of the Code to Provincial Courts of Small Causes unless expressly provided for. The provisions of sec. 7 have to be reconciled with those of sec. 94, and that can only be done by treating interlocutory orders as meaning only such orders as are expressly said to be interlocutory orders in the Code, that is to say, those that are mentioned in Or. 39. That the legislature had this in view is apparent also from the fact that in sec. 7 as also in Or. 39 injunctions are treated as something other than interlocutory orders while in reality they are not so. I am of opinion that effect must also be given to the words "so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders" appearing in sec. 7 even at the risk of restricting the meaning of the expression "interlocutory orders" in sec. 94 to such orders as are mentioned as such in the Code and attributing to the legislature a redundancy in the use of the word "other" in cl. (e) thereof. In my opinion sec. 7 only excludes orders passed under cl. (c) and cl. (e) of sec. 94 and not under any of the other clauses thereof. I find it difficult to imagine that if the legislature intended to deprive the Provincial Courts of Small Causes of the power to order attachment of moveables they could not think of a better way of expressing themselves. I am therefore of opinion that Or. 38 has not been excluded either by sec. 7 read with sec. 94 or by Or. 50 and that it is applicable to a Provincial Court of Small Causes.

It remains now to consider some of the difficulties that are said to follow from the acceptance of this interpretation. The principle that a Court which cannot attach primarily in execution of its decree cannot attach in anticipation of it which was applied in the case of Marthamma v. Kittu Sheregara (4) to the Code of 1859 in a case decided under Act XI of 1865 which provided by sec. 47 for the application of the provisions of that Code to Provincial Courts of Small Causes "so far as the same are or may be applicable," cannot have any appreciable force under the present enactments, the more especially as the immediate objects of the two kinds of attachment are widely different. No doubt a Provincial Court of Small Causes cannot deal with immoveables in execution of its decree, or order a sale of immoveables; nor can it be doubted that it cannot make an order of attachment of immoveable property to compel a witness to appear and that is so because it cannot order the sale thereof. The occasion for the exercise of these powers and the circumstances connected therewith, however, are so different from those relating to the power to order attachment of immoveables before judgment for protecting the Plaintiffs' interest, that no analogy can be drawn from the exclusion of those powers. The objection as to the investigation and adjudication of claims, which an attachment may produce, is more substantial, but is there a real difficulty on that ground?

(4) 6 Mad. H. C. R. 90 (1871).

BARADA KANTA RAY v. SHAIKH MAIJUDDI

Or. 38, r. 6 says that "where the Defendant fails to show cause why he should not furnish security or fails to furnish the security required, within the time fixed by the Court, the Court may order that the property specified or such portion thereof as appears sufficient to satisfy any decree which may be passed in the suit be attached." The Court therefore under this rule makes an order that the property be attached. In order to make the attachment or to attach the property this order has got to be executed. R. 7 says that save as otherwise expressly provided, the attachment shall be made in the manner provided for the attachment of property in execution of a decree. If a Provincial Court of Small Causes makes an order of attachment before judgment in respect of immoveable property the order has to be executed under sec. 36 which lays down that "the provisions of this Code relating to the execution of decree shall so far as they are applicable be deemed to apply to the execution of orders." Under the provisions of sec. 38 and sec. 39, cl. (d) the order should be sent to an ordinary Civil Court within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the immoveable property is situate, and that Court should, under the provisions of Or. 21 which deals with execution of decrees and orders, proceed to execute it. That Court would then attach the immoveable property in accordance with r. 54 and investigate the claims, if any, under the provisions of r. 58 and the subsequent rules.

If the above procedure is followed, as I think it must under the Code, the objections as to investigations or adjudications of claims will lose all their force. As to the argument based on the absence of the right of appeal, orders of far greater importance passed by a Provincial Court of Small Causes are also not open to appeal; and in any event the suit itself being expected to be disposed of summarily no appreciable hardship is likely to be caused. As to the non-applicability of Or. 39, r. 6 it seems to be due to an omission on the part of the legislature. In the Code of 1882 the provision was confined to moveable property which was the subject of a suit; in the Code of 1908 the words "or attached before judgment in such suit" were added, but no provision was made extending the application of the rule to Provincial Courts of Small Causes. The matter is not of any great consequence, for I take it that even a Provincial Court of Small Causes can always act under sec. 151, C. P. C. and pass such orders as may be necessary.

On the whole, I am of opinion, that Or. 38, rr. 5 and 6 apply to the Provincial Courts of Small Causes and I would therefore answer the first question in the affirmative. The answer to the second question follows from the answer given to the first one and I would answer it by saying that the case of Kedar Nath v. Hem Nath (1) if it purported to lay down that a Provincial Small Cause Court can attach immoveable propetty and not merely make an order of attachment thereof, was not correctly decided, nor was the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2) correctly decided if it meant to lay down that no such order can be passed by a Provincial Court of Small Causes. In conclusion I should like to add that this is a matter to which the attention of the legislature should be directed as early as possible in order that the defects pointed out above may be remedied.

CHOTZNER, J.—The question referred for the decision of the Full Bench is whether the Provincial Small Cause Court is competent to attach immoveable property before judgment.

(1) I. L. R. 49 Cal. 994 (1922).
(2) 28 C. W. N. 16 (1923).

BARADA KANTA RAY v. SHAIKH MAIJUDDI.

That question was decided in the affirmative in the case of Kedar Nath v. Hem Nath (1) and in the negative in the case of Sadek Ali v. Samed Ali (2). It may be conceded that while the former Code of Civil Procedure (Act LIV of 1882) was in force, such attachments were beyond the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court. The procedure prescribed in sec. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Court Act (IX of 1887) was regulated by the Second Schedule of the Code, which was also in conformity with the provisions of sec. 15 of the Act and the Second Schedule appended thereto, whereby all suits relating to immoveable property were comprehensively excluded from the cognizance of the Small Cause Court. Chap. XXXIV of the Code dealt with arrest and attachment before judgment except as regards immoveable property.

It has now to be considered what changes have been introduced into the procedure laid down in sec. 17 of the Small Cause Court Act by the Code of Civil Procedure (Act V of 1908).

It should be premised that no alteration has been made in the wording of the Small Cause Court Act so far as the second schedule and secs. 15 and 17 are concerned, though in the case of the latter section it is plainly inapposite. In view, however, of sec. 158 of the Code, it must be taken to refer to sec. 7 and Or. 50 of the Code the schedule to which declares that certain of its provisions do not apply to Small Cause Courts. It will be noticed that in the Code of 1908 the Second Schedule of the Code of 1882 has disappeared, and that no new schedule has been provided in its place. On the other hand secs. 477 to 490 of the former Code are now with slight modification reproduced in Or. 38, rr. 1-11, while sec. 491 re-appears (again with slight modification) in sec. 95 of the new.

(1) I. L. R 49 Cal. 994 (1922).
(2) 28 C. W. N. 16 (1923).

Or. 38 deals with "arrest and attachment before judgment." R. 1 says: "Where at any stage of a suit other than a suit referred to in sec. 16, cls. (a) to (d) the Court is satisfied" (to put it broadly) as to any dishonest intention of the Defendant in regard to the disposal of his property or person, it may issue a warrant for his arrest.

Sec. 16 lays down the Courts in which suits relating to immoveable property are to be instituted and ex-hypothesi excludes suits which are not cognizable by the Small Cause Court. It would follow therefore that a Small Cause Court is not competent to arrest a Defendant in any suit other than one where the subject-matter is moveable property.

R. 5 says: "Where at any stage of a suit, the Court is satisfied that the Defendant is about to dispose of his property or remove it from the local limits of the Court, it may direct him to furnish security to produce and place it at the disposal of the Court," failing which it may, under r. 6, order it to be attached.

Now if it be correct that Or. 38 substantially represents Chap. XXXIV of the Code of 1882, there seems to be no good reason for importing into r. 5 a meaning which was specifically negatived in sec. 483 of that Code by extending the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court to attach immoveable property before judgment.

The difficulty in the way of this interpretation lies in the wording of sec. 94 (b) where the Court may order the attachment of any property and the Small Cause Court seems under sec. 7 (b) to be given the power of attaching such property before judgment. Sec. 7 moreover makes certain sections inapplicable and these include secs. 94 and 95 so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders, but as Rankin, J., points out sec. 94 appears to refer entirely to interlocutory orders and even to call them so but the parts of this section intended to be excluded are apparently cls. (c) and (e).

On the other hand powers under sec. 94 are only conferred "if it is so prescribed" and if it is said that they are so prescribed under sec. 7 (b), it would seem to be inconsistent with cl. (a) immediately preceding it, which excludes from the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court so much of the body of the Code as relates to suits excepted from the cognizance of a Court of Small Causes, the execution of decrees in such suits and the execution of decrees against immoveable property.

Again Or. 16, r. 10 prohibits the attachment of immoveable property by a Small Cause Court to enforce the attendance of a witness and Or. 21, r. 82 forbids the sale of such property by a Court of that description. It would therefore be anomalous that a Court, which has not the power of executing a decree by attachment of immoveable property after judgment, should have the power of attaching such property before judgment.

The conclusion, therefore, at which I arrive is that under the Code of 1908 there has been no departure from the principles underlying Chap. XXXIV of the Code of 1882, and that consequently the question referred should be decided in the negative.

Per CURIAM.—The result is that the Reference will be answered in accordance with the opinion of the majority of the Judges constituting the Full Bench, and will therefore be answered in the manner stated in the judgment of the learned Chief Justice.

No order is made as to the costs of the Reference.

We direct that a printed copy of the judgments of the Full Bench be forwarded to the Government of India as early as possible.

Mr. Langford James in support of the Reference.

The Advocate-General (Mr. S. R. Das) for the Secretary of State.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CHATTERJEA, J.—This is a case stated by the Commissioner of Income Tax, Bengal under the provisions of sec. 66 of Act XI of 1922 and sec. 51 of Act VII of 1918.

The Rogers Pyatt Shellac Company is incorporated in the United States of America with its head-quarters in the City of New York. The company have a branch office in Calcutta to buy gum shellac and other Indian products, and a factory at Wyndhamgunj in the United Provinces. No sales are conducted in India by the company: their transactions are limited to the purchase of shellac and other goods, some of which are purchased on account of a certain Gramophone Company which pay the company a fixed percentage on the purchase plus expense, while the balance is sold in the open market.

Income tax was assessed for the year 1921-22 as also super tax, and the tax was paid under protest on the 6th May 1923.

They were similarly assessed for the year 1922-23 and the tax was paid on the 29th March 1923, with a notice that "they shall in all probability appeal against the assessment." On the 27th June 1923, they made an appeal to the Assistant Commissioner of Income Tax against the assessment, and for refund of the amounts paid for income tax and super tax respectively for the year 1921-22. A similar petition was made with regard to the assessment for the next year. The Commissioner of Income Tax on the 13th October 1923, however, confirmed the assessments. Thereafter the Commissioner of Income Tax at the instance of the company made a Reference under sec. 66 of Act XI of 1922 and sec. 51 of Act VII of 1918 as stated above.

The Reference was made under Act VII of 1918 as well as under Act XI of 1922, the reason being that the income tax for 1921-22 was assessed and levied under Act VII of 1918, and that for 1922-23 under the new Act XI of 1922. The provisions of the two Acts are, generally speaking, similar with certain exceptions.

down: "Save as hereinafter provided, this Act shall apply to all income from whatever source it is derived if it accrues or arises or is received in British India or is under the provisions of this Act deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India." By sec. 5, certain classes of income are chargeable to income tax, and they include "(IV) income derived from business."

Sec. 4 of Act XI of 1922 is similar to sec. 3 of Act VII of 1918 except that it says that the Act shall apply to all income, profits, or gains as described or comprised in sec. 6. There is a sub-sec. (2) added to sec. 4 of the Act of 1922 which was not in the Act of 1918, which will be referred to later. Sec 6 of Act XI of 1922 is also similar to sec. 5 of Act VII of 1918, only that the word "heads" is used in the former instead of "classes" in the latter, and the item (iv) is described as "business" instead of "income derived from business" as in Act VII of 1918. Reading secs. 4 and 6 of Act XI of 1922 (secs. 3 and 5 of Act VII of 1918) together, all income derived from "business" (1) accruing, arising or received in British India or (2) deemed under the provisions of the Act to accrue or arise or to be received in British India is taxable income.

Now it is admitted that no part of the company's income accrued, arose or was received in British India. Sec. 33 (1) of the Act, however, provides that "in the case of any person residing out of British India all profits or gains accruing or arising to such person, whether directly or indirectly through or from any business connection in British India, shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India and shall be chargeable to income tax in the name of the agent of any such person, and such agent shall be deemed, for all the purposes of this Act the assessee in respect of such income tax." The contention of the Government is that although the income neither actually accrued, arose nor was recieved in British India, such income, as laid down in sec. 33 (1), shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India as it accrued or arose whether directly or indirectly through or from business connection in British India. In other words, the charging section (sec. 5) was enlarged by the provisions of sec. 33 (1). On the other hand, it is contended on behalf of the company that sec. 33 (1) is merely what is called a "machinery" section enacted for the purpose of laying down the mode in which the tax is to be levied in the case of a non-resident person, and providing that in such a case his agent is to be deemed to be the assessee in respect of the income tax.

Now, secs. 3 and 5 of the Act appear in Chap. I, which is headed "Taxable income." Sec. 5 as stated above enumerates the classes of income chargeable to income tax, the "(IV)" class being "income derived from business." Chap. IV of the Act headed "Liability in special cases" contains a group of sections which provide that in the case of minors, lunatics, etc., or persons whose properties are managed by others, such as the Court of Wards, Administrator-General, etc., the income tax would be levied and recoverable from the guardian, trustee, the Court of Wards, etc., as the case may be. There is no doubt that secs. 31 and 32 are "machinery" sections. Then comes sec. 33 (1), the latter part of which lays down that a non-resident person shall be chargeable to income tax in the name of the agent of any such person, and such agent shall be deemed to be for the purposes of the Act, the assessee in respect of such income tax. This part of sec. 33 (1) therefore also is a "machinery" section. The question is whether the first part of the section is also a machinery section or a charging section. As already pointed out sec. 3 provides that income not only accruing, arising or received in British India, but also income which under the provisions of the Act is "deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India" is taxable income. The first part of sec. 33 (1) lays down that income arising or accruing to a person residing out of British India, whether directly or indirectly through or from any business connection in British India, shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India. Taking the language literally, it seems that income accruing or arising to a non-resident person in certain cases though not actually accruing or arising within British India shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India, and reading sec. 33 (1) together with secs. 3 and 5, such income is liable to tax. This no doubt would extend far beyond what is recognised in England or had been recognised in British India previous to Act VII of 1918, as the territorial limit of taxation of income derived from business.

On behalf of the company, we have been referred to certain English cases, and a case in the Madras High Court, The Board of Revenue v. The Madras Export Company (1).

In Sulley v. Attorney-General (2), an American firm carried on a business in New York which consisted in the resale there of goods purchased on their account in England. One of the partners who resided in Nottingham transacted the business of the firm in England which consisted of purchasing and shipping goods for exportation, but no money was received in England except from New York for purchasing the goods. The profits arose on the sale of the goods at an increased price in America. It was held that the firm did not exercise its trade in the United Kingdom so as to subject it to income tax. Cockburn, C. J., observed : "Wherever a merchant is established, in the course of his operations his dealings must extend over various places; he buys in one place and sells in another. But he has one principal place in which he may be said to trade, viz., where his profits come home to him. That is, where he exercises his trade. It would be very inconvenient if this was otherwise. If a man were liable to income tax in every country in which his agents are established, it would lead to great injustice. The argument for the Crown must be carried to this extent, that merely buying goods in this country is a trade exercised here so as to subject the purchaser of the goods to income tax. . . . . . It would be most impolitic thus to tax those who come here as customers. The subjects of a foreign state, not resident here, cannot be made amenable to our laws. How then are their profits to be made amenable to the fiscal law? Simply by the provision that whosoever carries on the business and receives the profits here shall be assessed. But in the present case, no profits are received by the firm, or exist in this country."

A similar view was taken by the House of Lords in Grainger & Son v. Gough (3) where it was held that a foreign merchant who canvasses through agents in the United Kingdom for orders for the sale of his merchandise to customers in the United Kingdom, does not exercise a

(1) I. L. R. 46 Mad 360 (1922).
(2) 5 H. & N. 711 (1860).
(3) [1896] App. Cas. 325.

trade in the United Kingdom within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts, so long as all contracts for the sale and all deliveries of the merchandise to customers are made in a foreign country. Lord Watson observed (at pp. 340-341) : "There may, in my opinion, be transactions by or on behalf of a foreign merchant in this country so intimately connected with his business abroad that without them it could not be successfully carried on, which are nevertheless insufficient to constitute an exercise of his trade within the meaning of Sch. D. In illustration of that view I may refer to Sulley v. Attorney-General (2) which was decided in the Exchequer Chamber by no less than six very eminent Judges."

The statutes under which the above cases were decided are the Income Tax Act, 1853 and the Income Tax Act, 1842. Chap. 34, sec. 2, Sch. D of Act, 1853, imposes a duty "for and in respect of the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to any person whatever, whether a subject of Her Majesty or not, although not resident within the United Kingdom from any trade exercised within the United Kingdom," and Chap. 35, sec. 41 of the Income Tax Act of 1842, provides : "Any person not resident in the United Kingdom whether a subject of His Majesty or not, shall be chargeable in the name of . . . . any factor, agent or receiver, having the receipt of any profits or gains arising as herein mentioned. . . . . ."

It will be seen that under the English Acts, it is essential that the profits should arise from the exercise of the trade within the United Kingdom. In the Indian Acts (VII of 1918 and XI of 1922), however, in the case of any person residing out of British India all profits or gains accruing or arising to such person, whether directly or indirectly through or from any business connection in British India, shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India. There is no such provision in the English Acts, and that distinguishes the English Acts and the cases decided thereunder from the Indian Acts.

In the case of Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (4) the Appellants were a Danish firm resident in Copenhagen manufacturing and dealing in cement-making and other similar machinery which they exported all over the world. They had an office in London in charge of a qualified Engineer who was their whole time servant. He received enquiries for machinery such as the firm could supply, sent to Denmark particulars of the work which the machinery was required to do, including samples of materials to be dealt with, and when the machinery was supplied he was available to give the English purchaser the benefit of his experience in erecting it. The contracts between the firm and their customers were made in Copenhagen and the goods were shipped f. o. b. Copenhagen. It was held by Rowlatt, J., that the place where a trade was exercised was the place where the transactions forming the alleged business were closed, in the case of a selling business by the sale of the commodity, and the profit thereby realised, and that therefore the firm exercised their trade in Denmark, and that they could not in respect of the same profits and gains exercise their trade elsewhere.

The question therefore, viz., whether the profits arose from the exercise of trade within the United Kingdom was the same as that decided in the other two cases cited above. But the provisions of sec. 31, sub-sec. 2 of the Finance Act (No. 2 of 1915) (5 and 6 Geo., C. 89) were also considered in Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (4). That section runs as follows :—" A non-resident person shall be chargeable in respect of any profits or gains arising whether directly or indirectly through or from any branch, factorship, agency, receivership or management, and shall be so chargeable under sec. 41 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, as amended by this section, in the name of the branch, factor, agent, receiver or manager."

Rowlatt, J., observed: " The scope of this section is not very clear, but I am not prepared to hold that its effect is to bring into taxation profits made by non-residents from a trade not exercised in the United Kingdom. To make an extension in the scheme of taxation of that magnitude and importance the Court is entitled to look for words of clear and direct enactment." In the Court of Appeal, Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (4), Lord Sterndale, M. R., observed : " Sec. 31 is only for the purpose of extending the operations of sec. 41 of the Income Tax Act, 1842. That section is not a charging section and only relates to the method of charging persons who are made chargeable under Sch. D. The duties mentioned in that section are the duties charged by Sch. D. It has been called only a machinery section, i.e., a section which provides a method of carrying out the charge imposed by Sch. D. I think this is its effect, and the expression 'machinery' has no doubt often been used, as it is convenient, but I think it has also often been used in a wider sense than was intended by those who first used it, and may be fallacious, and I prefer not to use it. Sec. 31, sub-sec. 1, I think clearly does nothing more than extend the method provided by sec. 41 of carrying out the charge imposed by Sch. D, and it would be very strange if another sub-section of the same section imposed an entirely new charge not within the Schedule at all. I agree with Rowlatt, J., that such a thing, if intended, should be carried out with the greatest clearness and that if a reasonable meaning can be given to the sub-section without producing that effect, such a meaning should be given. I think this meaning can be given to it by adopting the construction suggested by the Respondents, namely, that it merely points out or, so to speak, sums up the effect of sec. 41 of the Act of 1842 as extended by sec. 31 of the Act of 1915, still keeping within the limits of the charge of Sch. D." In the House of Lords in Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (4) Lord Buckmaster referring to sec. 31 (2) of the Finance Act 2 of 1915, observed :—" The Appellant argued that the effect of that sub-section is to extend the operation of Sch. D of the Act of 1853, and to render the Respondents liable to be assessed for income tax, even though upon the facts they did not exercise trade within the United Kingdom. I am unable to accept the argument that the sub-section has that effect. It is I think important to remember the rule, which the Courts ought to obey, that, where it is desired to impose a new burden by way of taxation, it is essential that this intention should be stated in plain terms. The Courts cannot assent to the view that if a section in a taxing statute is of doubtful and ambiguous meaning, it is possible out of that ambiguity to extract a new and added obligation not formerly cast upon the tax-payer. Sub-sec. 2 here is at the best a sub-section of an extremely doubtful character, and I think there is very great weight in the argument that has been placed before your Lordships by Sir William Finlay and Mr. Bremner that, as the original charging power of the earlier statutes was derived from their Schedules, if it were desired to affect and alter the operation of those Schedules some clearer and better reference should have been made to their terms than the obscure and indirect reference that must be found in the section under consideration."

The charging provisions of the English Income Tax Acts are to be found in the Schedules, and Sch. D of the English Act of 1842 (5 & 6 Vict., C. 35 which is similar to that of the English Act of 1918) provides that tax under that Schedule shall be charged in respect of—

(a) the annual profits or gains arising or accruing,

(i) to any person residing in Great Britain from any kind of property whatever, whether situate in Great Britain or elsewhere; and

(ii) to any person residing in Great Britain from any profession, trade, employment, or vocation, whether the same shall be respectively carried on in Great Britain or elsewhere; and

(iii) to any person whatever whether a subject of Her Majesty or not, although not resident within Great Britain from any property whatever in Great Britain, or from any profession, trade, employment or vocation exercised within Great Britain.

Sec. 41 of the same Act provided as follows :—" And be it enacted that the trustee, guardian, tutor, curator or committee of any person, being an infant, or married woman, lunatic, idiot or insane, and having the direction, control or management of the property or concern of such infant, married woman, lunatic, idiot or insane person, whether such infant, married woman, lunatic, idiot or insane person, shall reside in Great Britain or not, shall be chargeable to the said duties in like manner and to the same amount as would be charged if such infant were of full age, or such married woman were sole, or such lunatic, idiot, or insane person were capable of acting for himself; and any person not resident in Great Britain, whether a subject of Her Majesty or not, shall be chargeable in the name of such trustee, guardian, tutor, curator or committee, or of any factor, agent or receiver, having the receipt of any profits or gains arising as herein mentioned, and belonging to such person, in the like manner and to the like amount as would be charged if such person were resident in Great Britain, and in the actual receipt thereof; and every such trustee, guardian, tutor, curator, committee, agent or receiver shall be answerable for the doing of all such acts, matters and things as shall be required to be done by virtue of this Act in order to the assessing of any such person to the duties granted by this Act, and paying the same."

The Finance (No. 2) Act, 1915, 5 & 6 Geo. V., C. 89, sec. 31 lays down—

" (1) Section forty-one of the Income Tax Act, 1842 (which relates to the charge of income tax in special cases) shall, so far as it relates to the taxation of non-residents, be extended—

(a) So as to make non-resident persons chargeable to income tax in the name of any branch or manager as well as in the name of any factor, agent or receiver :

(b) so as to make non-resident persons so chargeable although the branch, factor, agent, receiver or manager may not have the receipt of the profits or gains of the non-resident.

(2) A non-resident person shall be chargeable in respect of any profits or gains arising whether directly or indirectly through or from any branch, factorship, agency, receivership or management and shall be so chargeable under sec. 41 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, as amended by this section in the name of the branch, factor, agent, receiver or manager."

As pointed out by Lord Sterndale, M. R., in Smidth & Co., v. Greenwood (4) the duties mentioned in sec. 31 (of the English Finance Act, 1915) are the duties charged under Sch. D (of the Income Tax Act of 1842), and sub-sec. (1) of sec. 31 does nothing more than extend the method provided by sec. 41 of carrying out the charge imposed by Sch. D, and " it would be very strange if another subsection of the same section (sub-sec. 2) imposed an entirely new charge not within the Schedule at all . . . . such a thing if intended should be carried out with the greatest clearness and that if a reasonable meaning can be given to the subsection without producing that effect, such a meaning should be given." It appears from the last part of Sch. D of the Income Tax Act of 1842 that the profits or gains of a non-resident must arise from trade, etc., exercised within the United Kingdom, and as Lord Sterndale, M. R., says it merely points out or, so to speak, sums up the effect of sec. 41 of the Act of 1842 as extended by sec. 31 of the Act of 1915 still keeping within the limits of the charge of Sch. D. In other words, the liability to tax is controlled by Sch. D under which it is essential that the profits should accrue or arise from trade, etc., exercised within the United Kingdom, and that the territorial limits imposed by Sch. D cannot be taken to have been widened unless by clear words to that effect. It is contended by the learned Advocate-General that the Indian Income Tax Act, VII of 1918, does not recognise the territorial limit. Under sec. 3 of that Act income in certain cases for purposes of the Act, shall be deemed to be profits accruing or arising or to be received in British India, which indicates that income in certain cases though not actually accruing, arising nor received in British India, shall, for the purposes of the Act, be deemed to have accrued, arisen or been received in British India. The Indian Act therefore differs from the English Act in this respect. Although therefore sec. 31 (1) of the Indian Act, VII of 1918, is similar to sec. 31 of the English Finance Act, 1915, there is the distinction that in the former there are no such words as appear in the latter, viz., "shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India."

The Madras High Court in the case of The Board of Revenue v. The Madras Export Company (1), which in its facts is similar to the present case, has followed the English case of Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (4). It has held that sec. 33 (1) of the Indian Income Tax Act did not create a new category of income which could be charged under the Act in addition to incomes mentioned under sec. 5 as chargeable under the Act, but that sec. 33 (1) merely provided a machinery by which non-resident foreigners (amongst others) trading in British India or having business connection in British India could be taxed on income derived by them in British India. But the learned Judges do not appear to have noticed the difference between the Indian Act and the English Act in so far as the former lays down that certain profits though not arising or accruing in British India shall be deemed to arise or accrue in British India.

There are several matters, however, which have to be considered and which have been urged on behalf of the company. The first is the position of sec. 33 in the Act. As stated above it comes under Chap. IV headed "Liability in special cases." It is to be observed that secs. 31 and 32 dealing with certain special cases (such as guardians of persons under disability, trustees, agents, or Court of Wards, etc.), merely lay down that the tax is to be levied upon and recoverable from certain persons while sec. 33 (1) provides that with regard to non-resident persons, income in certain cases shall be deemed to be income accruing or arising within British India. The provision would perhaps more appropriately come in after sec. 4 (2) of the Act XI of 1922, which deals with the converse case: "Profits and gains of a business accruing or arising without British India to a person resident in British India shall be deemed to be profits and gains of the year in which they are received or brought into British India notwithstanding the fact that they did not so accrue or arise in that year provided that they are so received or brought in within three years of the end of the year in which they accrued or arose."

Sec. 3 of the Act VII of 1918 which comes under Chap. I headed "Taxable income" expressly lays down that the Act shall apply not only to income accruing, arising or received in British India, but also to such income which under the provisions of this Act is "deemed to accrue, arise or to be received in British India." That section contemplates some provisions in the Act according to which income though not actually accruing or arising in British India shall be deemed to have so accrued or arisen, and if a section in the subsequent part of the Act clearly lays down in what cases it shall be so deemed, such provisions must be taken as incorporated in sec. 3 which deals with "taxable income" and the mere fact that such provision could have been more appropriately placed in some other part of the Act, cannot take away its effect, if the meaning of the provision is clear.

Secs. 7 and 11 of Act XI of 1922 show that income arising out of British India, may in some cases be deemed chargeable with tax. The first head of taxable income under sec. 6 is "salaries," and sec. 7 (2) lays down:—"Any income which would be chargeable under this head if paid in British India shall be deemed to be so chargeable if paid to a British subject or any servant of His Majesty in any part of India by Government or by a local authority established by the Governor-General in Council." The 5th head is "professional earnings" and sec. 11 (3) provides that "professional fees paid in any part of India to a person ordinarily resident in British India shall be deemed to be profits or gains chargeable under this head." It may be said that secs. 7 and 11 appear under Chap. III headed "Taxable income," and secs. 7 and 11 along with others lay down in detail what would come under the "heads" of income (i) to (vi) in sec. 6. That is so, and we refer to those sections merely as illustrations of cases in which the income though not arising in British India shall be deemed to be chargeable with tax.

The next point for consideration is that sec. 33 (1) speaks of profits or gains through or from any business connection in British India whereas sec. 5 merely mentions "income from business." If by the expression "business connection" in sec. 33 (1) was meant something different from "business" in sec. 5, then it would be going beyond the "classes of income" which alone according to sec. 5 are chargeable to income tax. Sec. 6 of Act XI of 1922 uses the word "heads" instead of "classes." The former expression seems to have been substituted to make it more comprehensive; we think the same thing was meant by the two expressions "business" and "business connection" and for this reason. Even if sec. 33 (1) be taken as a "machinery" section, as contended on behalf of the company, the agent cannot be charged with income tax, nor can the agent be deemed the assessee in respect of the income tax, unless the principal is chargeable. The principal is chargeable with tax upon income from "business," and unless the expression "business connection" in sec. 33 (1) was used in the same sense as "business" in sec. 5, the principal cannot be charged, and a fortiori the agent cannot be charged with the tax. The section accordingly, even as a machinery section, would be useless. The English Finance Act No. 2 of 1915, sec. 31 (2) uses the words "through or from any branch, factorship, agency, receivership or management," and the comprehensive expression "business connection" was probably used in the Indian Act to cover all those words. Then it is pointed out that the word "property" in sec. 42 (1) (which was not in the previous Act VII of 1918) indicates that the section could not but be a "machinery" section. It is contended that the profits of "property" in British India must accrue or arise in British India, and the fact that the profits of "property" also shall in some cases be deemed to be profits accruing or arising in British India indicates that the section was merely intended to provide for the method in which the tax was to be realised.

The word "property" seems to have been taken from the English Act, though the expression does not appear to have been considered in the English cases cited above. It is possible to conceive of cases where a property may be situate in British India and the profits thereof may accrue or arise out of British India.

The English Income Tax Acts lay down a territorial limit. The Indian Act, II of 1816, followed the English law, but in Act VII of 1918 and Act XI of 1922, the Indian legislature appears to have gone beyond that limit. Whether that is politic and whether it contravenes the comity of nations, it is not for us to consider. We have to construe the Act, and having regard to the essential difference in language between the English and the Indian Acts upon the point under consideration, we are unable to follow the English authorities decided with reference to the English statutes, or the Madras case referred to above. We accordingly hold that the company are liable to pay income tax having regard to the provisions of sec. 33 (1) read with secs. 3 and 5 of Act VII of 1918, and sec. 42 (1) read with secs. 4 and 6 of Act XI of 1922.

So far as the factory at Wyndhamgunj is concerned, it clearly comes within the Act. Admittedly there is a manufacturing branch of the company at that place, and under sec. 2, cl. (3) of Act VII of 1918 "business" includes among other things any "manufacture." The income therefore from such manufacture would be income from "business" and as such taxable under secs. 3 and 5 of the Act.

We make no order as to costs.

Re : ROGERS PYATT SHELLAC CO. v. THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL.

CHOTZNER, J.—I agree.

MUKERJI, J.—I have read the judgment just now delivered by my learned brother Chatterjea, J., and I entirely agree in the conclusions he has arrived at. In view, however, of the importance of the questions involved I desire to make some further observations.

Before dealing with the cases decided under the English statutes to which our attention has been drawn, I propose first of all to deal with the relevant provisions of the Indian Acts. For this purpose, it is not very material to advert to the provisions of Act II of 1886, or the enactments which preceded the same or the subsequent amendments incorporated into the said Act by Act V of 1916 and Act XI of 1903. A perusal of the several enactments makes it clear that the Income Tax Act of 1918 (Act VII of 1918) effected a radical change in the scheme and scope of operation of this branch of law. The Act of 1918 professes to be a consolidating and amending statute; on any point specifically dealt with in the Act the law is to be ascertained by interpreting the language used in the statute in its natural meaning, uninfluenced by considerations derived from the previous state of the law. [Administrator-General v. Premlal (5), Narendra v. Kamal Basini (6) and Ramdas v. Amer Chand & Co. (7)]. Reference to the previous state of the law would be permissible for the purpose of aiding in the construction of a new statute if any provision therein is of doubtful import [Bank of England v. Vagliano Bros. (8), Robinson v. Canadian Pacific Ry. (9) and Mersey Docks v. Cameron (10)]. I propose therefore to deal with the questions which arise on this reference primarily in the light of the provisions of Act VII of 1918. The question as to what change, if any, was effected by Act XI of 1922 will be considered later.

Reading sec. 3 (1) and sec. 5 of that Act it would appear quite clearly that the legislature expressly enacted that save as otherwise provided by the Act, all income, that is to say, salaries, interest on securities, income derived from house property, income derived from business, professional earnings, and income derived from other sources—is chargeable to income tax, provided it accrues or arises or is received in British India, or is under the provisions of the Act, deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India.

The section is divided into two parts; the first part deals with a reality, i.e., where the income accrues or arises or is received in British India; the second part deals with a legal fiction, i.e., where the income is deemed to accrue or arise or be received in British India. A close examination of the provisions of the Act discloses that the fiction does not purport to transform something unreal into real; the income is there, it has accrued or arisen or been received, the fiction only fixes the place where it is to be deemed as having accrued, arisen or been received, and the fiction is resorted to in order to make some person other than the beneficiary liable.

There is no provision in the Act under which income is deemed to be received in British India. There is only one provision, and that is contained in sec. 33 (1) under which income is deemed to accrue or arise in British India. Reading secs. 3 (1) and 33 (1) together it would appear that it is income which really accrues or arises or is received in British India that is liable to tax; by a fiction some kinds of income which accrues or arises to a person not resident of British India is deemed to accrue or arise in British India (ignoring the aspect that it accrues or arises to a person outside British India) for the purpose of realising the same from an agent resident in British India. All these kinds of income, however, are such as may be said to have accrued or arisen at different places in British India by reason of its having been the direct or indirect result of some business connection there or outside British India where the ultimate transactions producing the profits or gains took place, but under the Act they are deemed to have accrued or arisen in British India so as to be taxable under the Act and recoverable by making some person in British India responsible for its payment. To appreciate correctly the exact significance of these sections a detailed examination of some of the provisions of the Act is necessary.

First of all, turning to sec. 3 (I) of the Act, we find the word "income" used there. Now, what is income? The term is nowhere defined in the Act. The definitions of "agricultural income" and "total income" as contained in sec. 2, afford very little assistance in determining what is meant by income. In the absence of a statutory definition we must take its oridnary Dictionary meaning, "that which comes in as the periodical produce of one's work, business, lands or investments, considered in reference to its amount and commonly expressed in terms of money; annual or periodical receipts accruing to a person or corporation (Oxford Dictionary). The word clearly implies the idea of receipt, actual or constructive. The policy of the Act is to make the amount taxable when it is paid or received either actually or constructively. "Accrues" "arises" and "is received" are three distinct terms. So far as receiving of income is concerned there can be no difficulty; it conveys a clear and definite meaning, and I can think of no expression which makes its meaning plainer than the word receiving itself. The words "accrue" and "arise" also are not defined in the Act. The ordinary Dictionary meanings of these words have got to be taken as the meanings attaching to them. "Accruing" is synonymous with "arising" in the sense of springing as a natural growth or result. The three expressions "accrues" "arises" and "is received" having been used in the section, strictly speaking, "accrues" should not be taken as synonymous with "arises," but in the distinct sense of growing or growing up by way of addition or increase or as an accession or advantage; while the word "arises" means comes into existence or notice or presents itself. The former connotes the idea of a growth or accumulation and the latter of the growth or accumulation with a tangible shape so as to be receivable. It is difficult to say that this distinction has been throughout maintained in the Act and perhaps the two words seem to denote the same idea or ideas very similar, and the difference only lies in this that one is more appropriate than the other when applied to particular cases. It is clear, however, as pointed out by Fry, L. J., in Colquhoun v. Brooks (11) (this part of the decision not having been affected by the reversal of the decision by the House of Lords), that both the words are used in contradistinction to the word "receive" and indicate a right to receive. They represent a stage anterior to the point of time when the income becomes receivable and connote a character of the income which is more or less inchoate.

One other matter need be noted in connection with the section. What is sought to be taxed must be income and it cannot be taxed unless it has arrived at a stage when it can be called "income." In order to determine whether it is taxable under the Act the place where it has accrued or has arisen or has been received has got to be ascertained. The section ignores the person and only takes into account the place where the income accrues, arises or is received. Income may accrue at one place, arise at another and be received at a third. Again it may accrue or arise in respect of or out of something situated at one place but accrue or arise to a person at a different place.

To apply the provisions of secs. 3 (1) and 5 aforesaid to concrete cases, six different classes of cases will have to be taken into account: viz., where the income accrues in British India, where it is deemed to accrue in British India, where it arises in British India, where it is deemed to arise in British India, where it is received in British India and where it is deemed to be received in British India. Upon the plain meaning of the two sections aforesaid in all the above six classes of cases the income, provided it comes within one or other of the classes of income mentioned in sec. 5, and is not otherwise saved or excepted by the Act, is chargeable to tax. Once an income is found to exist it will have to be examined whether it has accrued or arisen or been received in British India. If so, it is chargeable. If not, the provisions of the Act will have to be looked into to find whether there is any provision under which it is deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India.

Now of the six classes of cases aforesaid, the last two may be dealt with in very few words. If the income is received in British India no matter wherever it may have arisen or accrued, that is to say, if it is received by a resident in British India from sources that lie outside, it is taxable. If it is income derived from an outside source and is received outside British India by a person resident in British India it is chargeable if this receipt outside is deemed under the Act to be receipt within British India. The Act does not expressly say what income received by a person outside British India shall be deemed to be received in British India so as to be chargeable to tax by the operation of sec. 3 (1). So far as receipt outside British India is concerned there are two instances where such receipt has been made chargeable. The Act by sec. 10, sub-sec. (3) has made provision for a particular case of this nature by enacting that professional fees paid in any part of India to a person ordinarily resident in British India shall be deemed to be income chargeable under the head of professional earnings. By sec. 6, sub-sec. (2), any income which would be chargeable under the head of salaries if paid in British India shall be deemed to be so chargeable if paid to a British subject or any subject or any servant of His Majesty in any part of India by Government or by a local authority established by the Governor-General in Council. I have not been able to discover any other provision in the Act by which income which is received outside British India (and which neither accrues nor arises in British India nor is deemed by the Act to accrue or arise in British India), has been made chargeable. Both these cases, however, are cases where the imposition may be justified by the consideration that in one the income has accrued to a person who is ordinarily a resident of British India and in the other it has accrued or arisen to a British subject or a servant of His Majesty and has been paid out of the British Indian Exchequer and has so accrued or arisen in British India.

To turn, then, to the first four classes of cases, for the sake of brevity and convenience they may be dealt with as really of two kinds, the distinction between "accruing" and "arising" being left out of account for the moment. Taking the cases of a resident and a non-resident separately in connection with the accruing or arising of income as aforesaid, the position is this. If income accrues or arises in British India either to a resident or a non-resident it is chargeable; for as already observed, sec. 3 does not make any distinction between residents and non-residents. In the case of a non-resident such or so much of his income as arises or accrues to him, whether directly or indirectly from any business connection in British India, is, under sec. 33 (1) to be deemed to accrue or arise in British India, and is so chargeable under the Indian Income Tax Act. It will be seen from the very nature of the cases contemplated by the section that no income which does not represent profits or gains, not accruing or arising in point of fact within British India, has been made chargeable by this section, nor is a non-resident made liable by this section, as he is already liable by reason of sec. 3 of the Act. The profits or gains made chargeable are profits or gains which have accrued or arisen within British India. Sec. 33 (1), therefore, in my opinion does not go beyond sec. 3 in any respect: it really makes no income chargeable which is not chargeable under sec. 3, it imposes no liability on a non-resident which is not imposed by sec. 3, it merely explains what kind of income, in fact arising or accruing in British India to a resident outside, is to be deemed as arising or accruing in British India for the purpose of the Act and provides for a method of realization, namely, by assessing the agent and holding him liable for payment of the tax. It is interesting to note that whereas in sec. 3 (1) it is the income that is charged to tax, in sec. 33 (1) the "profits" or "gains" are deemed to be the income so liable, indicating that only so much of the income as represents the profits or gains derived under conditions specified in the section are so deemed.

The section as I read it only means that the non-resident assessee is to be made liable to tax for such profits or gains which accrue or arise to him directly or indirectly through or from any business connection within British India. He may have received the income outside British India; it may have accrued or arisen to him while he was outside British India; but the same or such parts of it as may be taken to be profits or gains accruing or arising through such connection is to be deemed as income accruing or arising in British India and so chargeable to tax. In my opinion, in such cases it will have to be ascertained by the taxing authorities what profits or gains (out of the income made by such a person) accrued or arose to such person, directly or indirectly, through or from any business connection in British India. This to my mind is the plain interpretation of the statute. The accrual or arising of income to a person is different to my mind from the receipt of the income by him; and the overlooking of this distinction in my opinion creates a confusion and makes the interpretation difficult.

The argument that sec. 33 (1) is only a "machinery section" and should not be treated as a "charging section" loses all its force in the light of this interpretation.

As already observed the charging section in the Act is sec. 3. Sec. 33 (1) does not mean to travel beyond sec. 3. Its position in Chap. IV is not altogether undeserved as it really imposes a liability on the agent as a special case. The drafting of the section, however, is not free from defects.

We are not concerned with the policy of the legislature or the question whether the statutes infringe any principles regarded sacred by the comity of nations: but at the same time I do not see how the above interpretation will lead to an unreasonableness or absurdity as it would only charge to tax profits or gains which may be attributable to business connection in British India. It is obvious that if they are attributable to such connection there is no reason why they should not be legitimately charged to tax. It is sufficient to say that the imposition of a tax under circumstances such as these would not in any way militate against the well-known principle that the power of taxation of any State is, of necessity, limited to persons, property or business within its territorial jurisdiction.

This brings us to the next question as to what is meant by "business connection." By sec. 4 of the Act "income derived from business" is liable to tax. It has been argued that unless the income which is now sought to be charged amounts to income derived from business, it would not be chargeable under sec. 3 (1); and that sec. 33 (1) by enacting that profits and gains accruing or arising directly or indirectly through or from business connection with British India professes to make something chargeable which is not chargeable under sec. 3 read with sec. 5. The answer to this argument, however, is that sec. 5, cl. (vi) includes "income from all other sources" and by sec. 11 "income derived from all other sources" include income and profits of every kind and from every source to which the Act applies if not included under any of the preceding heads, i.e., (i) to (v). But even if it be argued that "income derived from all other sources" may not refer to income of this description, a question, with regard to which I do not wish to pronounce any definite opinion, I do not see why "profits and gains from business connection" should not be included in the general expression "income derived from business" which is used in sec. 5. The expression, it must be admitted, is dangerously vague and it is much to be regretted that in a fiscal enactment a more precise expression has not been used. The meaning, however, does not admit of much doubt; for the context shows that it is such gains or profits as may be calculated to have been made as being that part of the income of the non-resident which is attributable to the connection he has with a business in British India. The word business is one of large and indefinite import and connotes something which occupies attention and labour of a person for the purpose of profit. The word means almost anything which is an occupation or a duty requiring attention as distinguished from sport or pleasure and is used in the sense of an occupation continuously carried on for the purpose of profits [Smith v. Anderson (12), Rolls v. Milner (13) and Re : Marine Steam Turbine Co. (14)]. A concern by reason of which one can be said to have connection with such an occupation is business connection.

Act XI of 1922 emphasises the distinction between "income" and "profits or gains" by introducing "profits or gains" in sec. 4 which is the charging section corresponding to sec. 3 of Act VII of 1918, and instead of the expression "classes of income" and "income derived from business" in sec. 5 of the latter Act, speaks of "heads of income, profits and gains" and "business" in sec. 6. In sec. 42 of Act XI of 1922 we find the words "business connection or property" in the place of the words "business connection" in the corresponding sec. 33 (1) of Act VII of 1918. These amendments cast the net wider by including profits or gains arising or accruing from property as well. It is not inconceivable as to how a non-resident can have profits or gains accrued to him through or from property in British India, e.g., if a property in British India is let out or the value of property in British India is increased and profits or gains accrue or arise, but accrue or arise to a non-resident, sec. 42 (1) will bring these profits and gains within the Act, they being deemed to have accrued or arisen within British India. Such profits or gains accrue in British India where the property is situate, though they may acquire only a tangible shape where they are actually received. A further amendment in the shape of the introduction of a sub-section, viz., sub-sec. (2) together with an explanation as to what is or is not to be deemed to be received in British India is also noticeable.

Turning now to the English statutes, in Colquhoun v. Brooks (11), Lord Herschell observed: "The Income Tax Acts themselves impose a territorial limit: either that from which the taxable income is derived must be situate in the United Kingdom or the person whose income is to be taxed must be resident there." This fundamental principle of the English statutes does not appear in Act VII of 1918 or Act XI of 1922. The question of residence does not arise nor any territorial limits are recognized by the charging sections of the said Acts. Under the Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 and 6 Vic., c. 35) and the Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vic., c. 34) the duty is charged upon annual profits and gains in the nature of income from whatever source derived and is imposed under sec. 5, Schs. A to E inclusive, which are framed to include all such sources of income. Sch. D, the operation of which is limited to the classes of income not charged under any other schedule, charges to tax income "for and in respect of the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to any person residing in the United Kingdom from any kind of property whatever, whether situate in the United Kingdom or elsewhere and for and in respect of the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to any person residing in the United Kingdom from any profession, trade, employment or vocation, whether the same shall be respectively carried on in the United Kingdom or elsewhere;" "and for and in respect of the annual profits or gains arising or accruing to any person whatever, whether a subject of Her Majesty or not although not resident within the United Kingdom, from any property whatever in the United Kingdom or any profession, trade, employment or vocation exercised within the United Kingdom." In the case of a non-resident, therefore, question would arise as to whether the profits or gains have arisen or accrued to him from any trade exercised within the United Kingdom. In Sulley v. Attorney-General (2), it was held that wherever a merchant is established, in the course of his operations his dealings must extend over various places; he buys in one place and sells in another; but he has one principal place in which he may be said to trade, viz., where his profits come home to him; and that is where he exercises his trade. In the Indian statute the question where the trade is exercised does not come in at all. In Grainger & Son v. Gough (3). it was held that a foreign merchant who canvasses through agents in the United Kingdom for orders for the sale of his merchandise to customers in the United Kingdom, does not exercise a trade in the United Kingdom within the meaning of the Income Tax Acts, so long as all contracts for the sale and all deliveries of the merchandise to customers are made in a foreign country. Lord Herschell in that case observed that there is a broad distinction between trading with a country and carrying on a trade within a country. Lord Watson observed that there may be transactions by or on behalf of a foreign merchant in one country so intimately connected with his business abroad that without them it cannot be sufficiently carried on, which are nevertheless insufficient to constitute an exercise of the trade within that country within the meaning of Sch. D. Lord Watson further went on to observe referring to the case of Sulley v. Attorney-General (2) as follows:—"The learned Judges recognised the principle that purchasing of stock in this country with the view of trading in it elsewhere, does not of itself constitute an exercise of the trade in the United Kingdom when that department of the business from which profits or gains are directly realized is carried on in another country." These observations indicate that profits or gains may accrue or arise to a non-resident or may be realised or received by him in respect of business in a country which does not amount to exercise of trade in that country, and that such profits or gains may arise directly or indirectly. The English statutes by using the words "from any trade exercised within the United Kingdom" left such profits or gains free, while the Indian Acts using a different phraseology in their charging sections included them. By the terms of sec. 33 (1) of Act VII of 1918 and sec. 42 (1) of Act XI of 1922 they are to be deemed to have accrued or arisen in British India for the purpose of making the resident agent responsible for the tax. Sec. 41 of the Act of 1842 may be read as follows: Any person not resident in the United Kingdom whether a subject of Her Majesty or not, shall be chargeable in the name of any factor, agent or receiver having the receipts of any profits or gains arising as herein mentioned. By sec. 31, sub-sec. (2) of the Finance Act (No. 2) of 1915:—"A non-resident person shall be chargeable in respect of any profits or gains arising whether directly or indirectly, through or from any branch, factorship, agency, receivership or management and shall be so chargeable under sec. 41 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, as amended by this section, in the name of the branch, factor, agent, receiver or manager." In Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (4), the House of Lords affirmed the decision of Rowlatt, J., in Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (4) and of the Court of Appeal in Smidth & Co. v. Greenwood (4). In that case it was held by the Court of Appeal that the sub-section was not a charging sub-section but that it merely summed up the effect of sec. 41 of the Act of 1842 as extended by sub-sec. 1 of sec. 31 of the Act of 1915 still keeping within the limits of Sch. D, and it was observed that to hold otherwise would be to hold that such an important alteration has been made on the basis of taxation as the abolition of the condition of exercise of trade within the United Kingdom before a person not there resident can be taxed. "To take the latter course," Lord Sterndale observed, "would be to violate the well-known canon of construction of taxing Acts that no one is to be taxed except by express words." The Indian law does not proceed upon the basis of such a condition but upon the taxability of the income regarded from the point of view, of the place where it accrues, arises or is received or is deemed to accrue, arise or be received under the Act. I am unable to assent to the view taken by the Madras High Court in the case of The Board of Revenue v. The Madras Export Company (1) for it seems to me that the learned Judges in that case proceeded upon the supposition that the legislature intended no change from the earlier statutes which to a large extent were modelled on the English statutes. That there is now a substantial difference is clear, and has been recognised in the cases, amongst others, of Board of Revenue v. Ramanadhan Chetty (15), In re Aurangabad Mills Ld. (16) and In re John & Co. (17).

(11) 21 Q. B. D. 52 at p. 59 (1888); 14 A. C. 493 at p. 509 (1889).

An objection has been urged that to include income which did not arise or accrue in British India to a non-resident of British India would be to make not actual but "notional" income chargeable. The taxability of "notional" income is an idea not foreign to the Act, for by sec. 8 of the Act bonâ fide annual value of property has been made assessable as being income which has accrued to the property, though it may not have actually arisen from it. It is notional in the sense that its quantum has to be determined by calculation but it is real in the sense that it has actually accrued.

In my opinion therefore the answers to the questions submitted for our decision should be in the affirmative.

The question as to how the profits or gains attributable to business connection in British India have to be calculated or ascertained is not a matter within the scope of this reference. The Board of Inland Revenue in the exercise of the powers conferred by sec. 59 of the Indian Income Tax Act (XI of 1922) have framed certain rules of which r. 33 runs as follows:—"In any case in which the Income Tax Officer is of opinion that the actual amount of the income, profits or gains accruing or arising to any person residing out of British India whether directly or indirectly through or from any business connection in British India cannot be ascertained, the amount of such income, profits or gains for the purpose of assessment to income tax may be calculated on such percentage of the turn-over so accruing or arising as the Income Tax Officer may consider to be reasonable, or an amount which bears the same proportion to the total profits of the business of such person (such profits being computed in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Income Tax Act) as the receipts so accruing or arising bear to the total receipts of the business, or in such other manner as the Income Tax Officer may deem suitable." The rule is drawn from the English statutes and its sufficiency or

[CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION.]

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 657 OF 1922.

GREAVES, J. CHAKRAVARTI, J. 1924, 5, May.

PRAMATHA NATH CHOUDHURI and ors., Defendants, Appellants, v. KRISHNA CHANDRA BHATTACHARJEE and anr., Plaintiffs, Respondents.

Documents between third parties—Recitals of boundaries in, if admissible in evidence—Indian Evidence Act (I of 1872), secs 11, 13 and 32 (3).

Recitals of boundaries of other lands in documents between third parties are not admissible in evidence either as regards the question of the boundary or as to the nature of the land.

SAROJ KUMAR v. UMED ALI (1) followed.

A mere description of boundaries in a document between third parties cannot be said to be a statement against the proprietary interest of the person making it and is not admissible under sec. 32 (3) of the Indian Evidence Act.

ABDULLAH v. KUNJ BEHARI LAL (3) dissented from.

BRAJESWARI PESHAKAR v. BUDHANUDDI (5) referred to.

This was an appeal against the decree of Babu Satis Chandra Basu, Officiating Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Pabna in Zillah Pabna and Bogra, dated the 22nd of November 1921, affirming the decree of Babu Srish Chandra Chakravarti, Munsif, third Court at Pabna, dated the 28th of February 1921.

(5) I. L. R. 6 Cal. 268 (1880).

The facts of the case are shortly these :—

This was a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession of a plot of land as the brahmattar lands of the Plaintiffs. The Courts below decreed the suit relying partly on statements contained in a certain kabuliyat between third parties. This document Ex. 4 recited that the land with which it was concerned was bounded by the lands in dispute in the present suit. Some of the plots were therein described as brahmattar lands and one plot as Plaintiff's brahmattar. The executant of the kabuliyat was dead.

Babu Ramesh Chandra Sen for the Appellants.—The document is inadmissible in evidence.

Saroj Kumar v. Umed Ali (1) relied on.

Babu Atul Chandra Gupta (for Babu Mohini Mohon Chakravarty) for the Respondents.—The recitals are relevant under sec. 13 of the Evidence Act and also under sec. 11. They are also admissible under sec. 32 (3).

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

GREAVES, J.—This is an appeal by the Defendants. The suit was one for declaration of title to and for possession of a certain plot of land. Both the lower Courts have decreed the suit in the Plaintiffs' favour. The judgments of both the Courts are attacked on the ground that it is said that a document between third parties, namely, a kabuliyat, Ex. 4, was admitted and wrongly admitted as evidence in the suit. This document Ex. 4 purported to show that the land with which it is concerned was bounded by some of the lands in suit which were therein described as brahmattar lands, another plot being described as Ishan's brahmattar. There is no doubt that if this document Ex. 4 is admissible in evidence it supports the Plaintiffs' contention and the judgments of both the lower Courts are correct. But, in our opinion, this document Ex. 4 which was between third parties was not admissible in evidence either as regards the question of the boundary or as to the nature of the land, namely, that it was brahmattar and Ishan's brahmattar. We agree with the decision in Saroj Kumar Acharji Choudhuri v. Umed Ali Howladar (1), where it was decided that a document of this nature was not admissible in evidence under the provisions of either sec. 11 or sec. 13 of the Indian Evidence Act. The authorities, some of which are conflicting, are discussed at p. 22 of that judgment. Mr. Justice Mookerjee who, in the case of Bisheswar Dayal v. Harbans Sahay (2) had apparently held that a document of this nature was admissible in evidence under the provisions of secs. 11 and 13 of the Indian Evidence Act, altered his view in the decision in Abdullah v. Kunj Behari Lal (3), where he held that a document of this nature was not admissible in evidence under the provisions of secs. 11 and 13 of the Indian Evidence Act, thus differing from the view which he had previously expressed. Both the cases in Saroj Kumar Acharji Choudhuri v. Umed Ali Howladar (1) and Abdullah v. Kunj Behari Lal (3) must be taken to overrule the decision in

(1) 25 C. W. N. 1022: s. c. 35 C. L. J. 19 (1921).

(1) 26 C. W. N. 1022: s. c. 35 C. L. J. 19 (1921).

(2) 6 C. L. J. 659 (1907).

(3) 16 C. W. N. 252: s. c. 14 C. L. J. 467 (1911).

Dwarka Nath Bakshi v. Mukunda Lal Choudhuri (4), where it was held that a document of this nature was admissible under the provisions of secs. 11 and 13 of the Indian Evidence Act.

It only remains to refer to a passage in Abdullah v. Kunja Behary Lal (3) where Mr. Justice Mookerjee seems to think that although such a document is not admissible under the provisions of secs. 11 and 13 of the Indian Evidence Act, it may be admissible under the provisions of sec. 32 of that Act. But, with great respect to that learned Judge, the reasoning by which he arrives at this view does not seem to me at all conclusive and I find great difficulty in seeing how a mere description of boundaries in a document between third parties can be said to be a statement against the proprietary interest of the person making it. It may well be that, for some ulterior purpose boundaries may not be correctly described in a document, and, if this is so, how a statement of that nature can be said to be against the proprietary interest of the person making it, it is somewhat difficult to ascertain.

I think that the law is correctly stated, if I may say so, in the decision in Saroj Kumar Acharji Choudhuri v. Umed Ali Howladar (1) to which I have already referred and I am not prepared to say that the document Ex. 4 is admissible in evidence under the provisions of sec. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act.

I wish to say in passing that it does not appear in the case of Saroj Kumar Acharji Choudhuri v. Umed Ali Howladar (1), whether the executant of the document was dead or not.

(1) 25 C. W. N. 1022: s. c. 35 C. L. J. 19 (1921).

(3) 16 C. W. N. 252: s. c. 14 C. L. J. 467 (1911).

(4) 5 C. L. J. 55 (1906).

PRAMATHA NATH CHOUDHURI v. KRISHNA CHANDRA BHATTACHARJEE.

In the present case the executant of the document is dead; but even so, for the reasons which I have already stated I do not think that the document is admissible in evidence under the provisions of sec. 32 of the Indian Evidence Act.

This disposes of the matter. The appeal is accordingly allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case is sent back to that Court in order that the learned Judge may deal with the appeal upon the evidence on the record excluding Ex. 4 from consideration. Costs will abide the result.

I may add that it seems to us that the law was correctly laid down many years ago in Brajeswari Peshakar v. Budhanudhi (5), where the learned Chief Justice Sir Richard Garth in deciding a difference of opinion between two other learned Judges stated :—" A recital in a deed or other instruments is in some cases conclusive, and in all cases evidence as against the parties who make it . . . But it is no more evidence as against third persons than any other statement would be."

CHAKRAVARTI, J.—I agree.

[CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION.]

REV. No. 555 OF 1924.

SANDERSON, C. J.	RAM KHALAWAN
CHOTZNER, J.	AHIR
1924,	v.
7, August.	TULSI TELINI.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898, before amendment by Act XVIII of 1923), sec. 517, Criminal Court's power of disposal of property regarding which offence committed—Power to order confiscation—Desirability of adjudication by Civil Court when there are rival claimants.

The Criminal Courts had no power, under sec. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code before its amendment in 1923, to order the confiscation of property in respect of which an offence appeared to have been committed.

Where conflicting claims to such property were put forward before the Criminal Court, the proper order to make was to keep the property in Court subject to any order that might be made by a competent Court of Civil Jurisdiction.

This was a Rule granted on the 2nd July 1924 against the order passed by Mr. A. Z. Khan, Presidency Magistrate, on the 4th May 1923 and the order passed by Mr S. W. Ali, on the 26th April 1924, rejecting the Petitioner's application for return of the properties in question to him.

The facts are fully set out in the judgment.

Babu Haramba Chandra Guha for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. C. Choudhuri and Babu Phanindra Nath Dass for the Opposite Party.

Babus Jogesh Chunder Bose and Apurba Charan Mukherjee for Beni Madhab Karmakar.

The JUDGMENT OF THE COURT was as follows :—

CHOTZNER, J.—This was a Rule calling upon the Chief Presidency Magistrate and Beni Madhab Karmakar to show cause why the order passed by Mr. Khan on the 4th of May 1923 and the order passed by Mr. Ali on the 26th of April 1924 should not be revised and such other order passed as to this Court might seem fit and proper.

The allegations in the petition may be briefly stated. A theft was committed in the house of the Petitioner on the 24th of April 1922 when jewellery and cash to the value of about Rs. 18,000 were stolen. On the 19th of July the shop of Beni Madhab Karmakar was searched and a quantity of gold ornaments was discovered. Upon certain statements made by him the Opposite Party Tulsi Telini who was the accused in the case and is said to have been at the time an occupant of a room in the Petitioner's house was arrested on a charge under sec. 380 of the Indian Penal Code. She was, however, not tried under that section but under sec. 54A of the Calcutta Police Act: and, by his judgment of the 2nd of December 1922 the learned Magistrate convicted her and sentenced her to three months' rigorous imprisonment. At that time no order was made by the learned Magistrate as to the disposal of the property recovered which he directed to be kept in the malkhana.

On the 6th of February, Tulsi applied to this Court for a Rule against her conviction and sentence but her application was refused and she subsequently applied on the 23rd of February for bail pending her application in England for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council. That application was also rejected. Then, on the 4th of May, upon the arrival of the record in the Magistrate's Court, the Petitioner applied under sec. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code for a return of the property to him. The learned Magistrate made an order upon the petition "To D. C." by which I understand him to mean to the Deputy Commissioner of Police "for disposal." The matter remained pending before the Deputy Commissioner until the 22nd of November when upon a further application by the Petitioner the Deputy Commissioner sent the application to the Public Prosecutor for advice; and on the 27th of that month the Public Prosecutor advised that the Deputy Commissioner had no jurisdiction to dispose of the matter which was one either for the Magistrate or for this Court to decide. Then, a somewhat mysterious order was passed by the Deputy Commissioner, "To Girija Babu." We are told that Girija Babu is an Inspector of the Criminal Investigation Department who had enquired into the case. Then, on the 10th of March the Petitioner moved this Court and the learned Judges who heard the application told him to make another application before the learned Magistrate inviting him to exercise his powers under sec. 517 of the Criminal Procedure Code. Thereupon, on the 18th of March, the Petitioner moved the Magistrate. The Magistrate, Mr. Ali, on the 26th of April disposed of the petition in these terms: "Mr. Khan had already recorded an order regarding the disposal of the property. I cannot hold an enquiry in the matter. Application rejected." It appears that the order made by Mr. Khan on the 4th of May 1923 was to this effect: "The conviction was under sec. 54 of the Calcutta Police Act and the only order possible about the property by the Court was passed sending it to Crown malkhana as suspected stolen property. The Court is not in a position to pass definite orders about the property. To D. C. C. I. D. for favour of disposal. This was I am told a C. I. D. case."

The learned Vakil who has appeared on behalf of the Petitioner has urged that the learned Magistrate had no jurisdiction to make the order consigning the property to the malkhana without giving him an opportunity of being heard in support of his claim: and, he further complains that the Magistrate has passed a further order by which the property has been confiscated.

It is urged that under sec. 517 of the former Code of Criminal Procedure the Magistrate had no authority to make any order for confiscation because that power has been given to him only by the amending Code of 1923. The former section read : "When an inquiry or a trial in any Criminal Court is concluded, the Court may make such order as it thinks fit for the disposal of any property or document produced before it or in its custody or regarding which any offence appears to have been committed, or which has been used for the commission of any offence." Under the amending Code the following words are introduced after the word "disposal," i.e., "by destruction, confiscation, or delivery to any person claiming to be entitled to possession thereof or otherwise."

We are of opinion that the order made by the learned Magistrate directing the confiscation of the property was without authority and cannot be supported.

The question which remains for consideration is what course should now be adopted. It is urged by the learned Vakil for the Petitioner that his client should be given an opportunity of examining witnesses before the learned Magistrate and so establishing his claim. It is argued on behalf of Beni Madhab Karmakar on whom the Rule was also issued that he has a lien on the goods and that that lien should be recognised by any order that may be made by the Magistrate. Evidently this Court has no jurisdiction to deal with that question. It is also argued by the learned Counsel on behalf of Tulsi Telini that the property should not be disposed of until her title has been decided in a civil suit. There is evidently, therefore, a conflicting claim to the property and it is very doubtful whether the Magistrate even if he hears all the evidence will be able to give a final decision as to the ownership of the property. The matter is one which can only be adequately dealt with by a Civil Court. The learned Magistrate in the cause which he has shown has in effect repeated what he said in his original order, namely, that "the ownership of the property was uncertain and could not be definitely adjusted." If, therefore, any further enquiry is held by him, we do not think that any satisfactory result will be attained.

We think that the proper order to make is that the order of confiscation should be set aside and that the property should remain in the Court malkhana as at present subject to any order which may be made by a Court of competent civil jurisdiction.

The Rule is accordingly made absolute in these terms.

SANDERSON, C. J.—I agree.

J. N. R. Rule made absolute.

NOTES

Foreword for the coming year.

To-day we have stepped into the twenty-eighth year of our existence and we accord our good wishes to the members of the Bench and Bar whom we have endeavoured to serve in the discharge of their arduous duties all these long years. We are sure they too will reciprocate an equally kindly feeling towards us. The Bench, the Bar and we as legal journalists are co-workers in the field of administration of justice. Of all the functions of the State, that of administration of justice is, perhaps, the noblest one. Of all the British institutions, the law Courts are undoubtedly the most popular. However, there is still a great deal of scope for the improvement of the administration of criminal justice in this country. The vital draw-back in this respect consists in the combination of judicial and executive functions of the District and Sub-Divisional Magistrates. We in common with our countrymen have always pressed for their separation. The principle has been accepted by the highest executive and legislature. The Greaves Committee has reported upon its desirability and feasibility. The only consideration that bars this much needed reform is that it may throw an additional burden on the already strained conditions of the provincial finance. But we are of opinion that this apprehension is unfounded.

If the scheme of the Greaves Committee is adopted and put into operation, it would be found in practical working that by suitable division of work the scheme may be made to work in a manner which might effect a saving instead of increasing the cost of administration of criminal justice. We would urge on the local legislature to give effect to the scheme even at the risk of incurring additional expenditure and make suitable provision for it in the next budget. If an efficient Committee is appointed for effecting a re-organisation of the services on the lines suggested by the Greaves Committee, with such modifications as may be required in its practical working, we believe, it will be found that no additional recurring expenditure need be incurred. Even if some additional and recurring expenditure has to be incurred, it would be quite worth while to risk it, as it is a question that affects the life and liberty of the people. The law Courts and the administration of justice are the greatest bulworks of the British Empire. The present system of the combination of executive and judicial functions is an anomaly.

Worse still, is the blunder that the Executive Government has recently made in arresting and incarcerating without trial several British subjects in Bengal under Reg. III of 1818, even after the highest Legislature and Executive in India decided that it should not be put into operation against British Indians. We would urge on the Government of Bengal to abandon the retrograde and reactionary course that it has adopted and to release the persons arrested or bring them to trial before a Court of justice, if there is any evidence to go upon. Letter de cachet should be a dead letter in India. It is highly compromising to this progressive Presidency that the rusty and clumsy weapons from the armoury of the Bourbons should be used so late in the day by our Provincial Government. Since we meet after the Dushera, we appeal for peace and good will all round and for forgiveness and oblivion of all transgressions, as well our own as those of others. May we enter upon the duties of the coming year, in a spirit of justice, charity and fairplay?

The late Mr. Dasarathi Sanyal.

We are exceedingly sorry to have to record the death which took place during the vacation at Darjeeling of Mr. Dasarathi Sanyal. That he was the leading practitioner on the Criminal Appellate Side of the Calcutta High Court constitutes but a small part of his claim to remembrance by members of the legal profession and by the litigant public at large in this and the sister province of Bihar and Orissa; for besides all the qualifications which go to make a successful advocate, he possessed what is rarer, a large and generous heart which endeared him to every one with whom he came into contact, whether professionally or in the more intimate relations of life. With all these, he combined a wide culture and unbending independence. In his untimely death the profession has lost one of these rare spirits who succeed by the very nobility of their character in winning at the same time the respect and the affection of their fellowmen; and the void left in its ranks will not be easily filled. The Vakil Bar, of which he was one of the most trusted leaders and an ornament, will be distinctly the poorer for his death.

Some Official Acts.

A warrant for the arrest of an absconding offender having remained unexecuted, a police officer to whom an enquiry slip has been sent finds a person within his jurisdiction bearing the same name but who, he knows, is not the person for whose arrest the warrant has been issued. The similarity in name is a coincidence, but the police officer, a man of resources, turns it to his own profit, by putting the man (whom let us call X) under arrest and letting him off only on his paying him a certain amount as the price of his liberty. These in substance were the facts of the case reported at page 10 of this issue. The question was whether in arresting X, the police officer was acting in his official capacity, or, to use a colloquial expression, "on his own bat." In the former case X's suit for damages for wrongful arrest and refund of the money extorted was illegally constituted, not having been preceded by the notice prescribed by sec. 80 of the Civil Procedure Code. The Court in effect held that the arrest was made by the police officer "in his official capacity," but that the extortion was entirely a matter of personal enterprise; so that the suit failed in so far as damage was claimed for illegal arrest, but it was properly constituted as regards the claim for refund of money extorted. We find ourselves unable to discriminate between the quality of the initial arrest and of the consequential extortion. Both were parts and parcels of the same scheme of fraud and the same abuse, not of legal authority (for it did not exist either in fact or even in the mind of the officer concerned), but of the appearance of it. The act complained of was not merely malâ fide, but several degrees worse, being malicious to the extent of rendering it ultra vires of the doer. It was not an official act. It was an instance of what French administrative law would characterise as "detournement du puvoir." At the same time, we agree that mere proof of malâ fides does not necessarily take an act out of the category of "official acts." But in this case, the act was both un-official and malâ fide.

Outlook in Europe.

Another year has passed since the conclusion of peace, but peace is not yet in sight. In Europe, the effect of the French policy culminating in the occupation of the Ruhr, in defiance of the terms of the Treaty and the sentiments of the civilized world, has been to reduce Germany to the verge of industrial and political ruin. In another month, we apprehend, this country will present the spectacle of an absolutely bankrupt and starving people and the Reich will break up into a number of petty squabbling republics, each trying to aggrandise at the expense of the other. Such a state of things will, no doubt, suit France admirably, as it will rid her of the nightmare of counter-revenge and secure her political ascendancy for some time to come. But neither Great Britain nor Italy could be expected to take the situation quietly. Great Britain, we have no hesitation in saying, has no desire to acquire an inch of soil on the European continent or elsewhere. What she now is anxious for is the restoration of pre-war trade and prosperity. But unfortunately Italy cannot be credited with any such pacific intentions. Her latest tactics have made it abundantly clear to those who have eyes to see that she is thirsting for dominion and will snatch at the earliest opportunity to extend her rule beyond the Adriatic. Mazzini and Garibaldi worked for a united Italy. That achieved, Mussolini is working for an imperial Italy, and therein lie the seeds of trouble for the future.

Imperial Conference and Indians Abroad.

At the Imperial Conference, General Smuts has propounded a theory of imperial citizenship, which, pushed to its logical conclusion, reduces the Empire to a quiddity. In his view, every Dominion has the inherent right of determining the conditions of citizenship and excluding those who fail to satisfy them. If this view is correct, the Empire is non est and imperial citizenship, a meaningless combination of words. It is regrettable that none of the members of the British Cabinet (except the Secretary of State for India who listened to this exposition of the subject of citizenship within the Empire) made any serious attempt to controvert it. The impression left on our minds, after a perusal of the report of the proceedings of the Conference, is that, although the British Government provided the Indian delegates with every facility to present their case, they themselves were not anxious to render any assistance in solving this difficult problem. Rather they thought that it was a matter entirely between the Indian delegates and the Dominion premiers and so left it to them to fight it out. An admirable instance of all round, genuine British sportsmanship!

The net result of the Conference is that, although Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru's resolution has been accepted by the Conference, no real gain has accrued to India thereby. For the real trouble for Indians is in South Africa and South Africa has refused to accept the resolution. The Boer General has barred and bolted her doors and has pronounced in no uncertain terms that there is no British citizenship throughout the Empire. For ourselves, we say frankly that the disabilities of Indians abroad will not disappear as the result of pious resolutions passed by Imperial Conferences or of appeals made to Dominion premiers on grounds of humanity, empire and common allegiance to the Crown. They will only disappear when we are in a position to bargain with the Dominions, and that we could do only when we should have an autonomous government as Mr. Fitzgerald pointed out at the Conference. "I do not think," he said, "that the Indian representatives here are on a footing of equality with us, because they are not really here in a representative capacity. They are not really sent by an independent Indian Government and they cannot really be regarded as equal with the rest of us. . . . . . Their treatment outside India arises really from the fact that they have not so far reached the degree of self-government that the rest of us have reached." In these words, Mr. Fitzgerald has, we believe, raised the real point at issue. The question of our disabilities abroad, we repeat, will never be solved by Dominion premiers—it will have to be solved by us as between ourselves and the British Parliament by the establishment of Dominion Home Rule.

The Elections.

The elections, it seems, are going to be fought out much more strenuously on this occasion than on the last. It is not for us to canvass on behalf of any candidate or party. But we do hope that, in view of the momentous character of the questions which will come up before the Council and the Assembly, the electors, at any rate, those of them who have received some political education, will, in casting their votes, not be moved by any personal feelings and interests, but will vote for men of proved ability and independence.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The Michaelmas sittings of the Judicial Commitee commenced on the 18th October.

The list contains 21 Appeals from India and only 5 from the Dominions and Crown Colonies.

The first case down for hearing is an appeal from Allahabad, Raja Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai.

This raises the whole question of what is an "antecedent debt" so as to justify a transfer of joint family property by the manager of a family in the case of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law.

The Allahabad Court applied the observations of the Board in Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh, reported in 21 C. W. N. 698. A different view has prevailed in the Courts of Madras, Patna and Oudh and the Appellants contend that the observations of the Board have been wrongly interpreted by the Allahabad Court.

The appeal was first heard on the 19th April 1923, and after hearing the arguments of Counsel the Board decided that the importance of the point in issue was sufficient to warrant a re-hearing before a Full Board.

The re-hearing is now taking place before VISCOUNT HALDANE, LORDS DUNEDIN, ATKINSON, SHAW, PHILLIMORE, MR. AMEER ALI and SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.

Messrs DeGruyther, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Appellant.

Mr. W. Wallach appeared as amicus curiæ.

A QUESTION OF COURT-FEE.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

Sir,

Will you kindly publish the following matter of some general importance to litigants? Art. 1A, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act, 1870, as amended by Act XV of 1911, provides that a fee of 12 annas is to be paid by all applicants when they pray for calling for records from another Court under circumstances where the transmission involves the use of post. According to the Rules of the High Court for the custody of records, records of cases that are disposed of are periodically transmitted to the District Record Room, but it is apparent that by such transmission the records do not come to the Court of the District Judge, as the District Record Room is not a part of the Court of the District Judge. It therefore appears plain enough that this article should not apply when the record called is the record of the Court to which the application is made, but which has been transmitted to the District Record Room. The words "another Court" have been made to include "Criminal Courts" by High Court's General Letter No. 7, dated the 23rd May 1914. By their Rule No. 2 of 1914 the High Court laid down that the fee is not to be levied where the Court calls for a record from the District Record Room suo motu or on the application of a party. But this Rule was cancelled by Rule No. 14 of that very year.

However notwithstanding the plain terms of the article different practices prevail in different Districts, and litigants are charged with this fee, and it is desirable that the High Court should lay down a uniform rule for the whole province, which should be according to law.

Yours faithfully,
GOBINDA CHANDRA CHAKRAVARTI,
Bengal Civil Service (Judicial).

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported
(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before NEWBOULD and RANKIN, JJ. S. A. No. 2318 OF 1920. ISWAR CHANDRA CHOWDHURY, Defendant-Appellant v. KAMIRUDDIN MALLICK, Plaintiff-Respondent. The 7th June 1923.

Bengal Tenancy Act, secs. 105 and 108—Service of notice whether gives jurisdiction.

In the record-of-rights published on 7th May 1911 the Plaintiff was recorded as a settled raiyat. The Defendant landlords then applied for the settlement of fair and equitable rent. The Plaintiff tenant claimed a mokurari maurasi right and pleaded under sec. 50 of Bengal Tenancy Act uniform payment of rent for over 20 years at Rs. 9-4-9. The Settlement Officer held that the Plaintiff had failed to substantiate his plea and in the body of the judgment found that the Plaintiff was a settled raiyat at a rent of Rs. 10-7-3 but through mistake in the ordering portion of the judgment it was ordered that the Plaintiff was a makurari maurasi raiyat and the record-of-rights was corrected and in the schedule, the Plaintiff was shown accordingly. On 8th February 1918 Defendants made an application under sec. 108, Bengal Tenancy Act for correction of the mistake and paid process fees for service of notice on the Plaintiff but through a mistake the notice was not served on the Plaintiff. The application under sec. 108, Bengal Tenancy Act was allowed in favour of the Defendant landlords by the Settlement Officer and the entry in the record was ordered to be corrected and the Plaintiff to be shown as settled raiyat at a rental of Rs. 10-7-3. On 15th April 1919 the Plaintiff instituted the present suit for a declaration that the revision of the previous order and correction of the record under sec. 108, Bengal Tenancy Act was not binding and without jurisdiction as no notice had been served on the Plaintiff. The first Court dismissed the suit on 29th July 1919 and the said decision was reversed on appeal by the learned Additional District Judge on 12th July 1920:

Held—(1) The Plaintiff was entitled to the legal character of a tenant and (2) as the order under sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act was in favour of the Plaintiff tenant and the order under sec. 108 was without jurisdiction for non-service of notice on the Plaintiff the suit was not barred under sec. 109, (3) the order under sec. 108 being without jurisdiction it is the clear duty of the Court to set aside the order and make the declaration.

Babus Surendra Ch. Sen and Narendra Nath Sett for the Appellant.

Arrest under Regulation III of 1818.

The arrest of a number of persons and their detention under Bengal Regulation III of 1818 has come as a surprise to all and has met with a chorus of strong condemnation from one end of the country to the other. As our readers will remember, in March 1921, the Government of India appointed a Committee to examine the repressive laws on the Statute Book and to report whether all or any of them should be repealed. The Committee examined the offending statutes, heard the evidence of a large number of persons representing all shades of opinion and, after a most careful inquiry, submitted a unanimous Report which was accepted by the Government. Although the Committee did not ask for the repeal of Bengal Regulation III of 1818 and the analogous Regulations in the Presidencies of Bombay and Madras, it is clear from their Report that they recommended its retention subject to certain restrictions. To avoid any misconception, we quote below, in extenso, their observations on this point.

"Dealing with the older Acts first, we notice that they relate generally to a state of affairs which no longer exists We regard it as undesirable that they should be used for any purpose not contemplated by their authors. The objections to them are obvious. Some, as for example, Bengal Regulation 10 of 1804, or the Forfeiture Act of 1857, are inconsistent with modern ideas; others are clothed in somewhat archaic language and are applicable only to circumstances which are unlikely to recur. Many arm the Executive with special powers which are not subject to revision by any judicial tribunal. Their presence on the Statute Book is regarded as an offence by enlightened public opinion. The arguments for their retention are as follows. The use of the Bengal State Prisoners Regulation, 1818 (Regulation III of 1818) in Bengal was necessitated by the revolutionary movement which the ordinary law failed to check The wholesale intimidation of witnesses rendered recourse to the ordinary courts ineffective. Though we have evidence of a change in the attitude of individual leaders of the anarchical movement in Bengal, we are warned that similar symptoms of intimidation have been noticed, and that, should there be a recrudescence of any revolutionary movement, it would, in the absence of these old preventive Regulations, be impossible to cope with the situation, and fresh emergency legislation would be necessary. Lastly, the plea is advanced that these old Acts may be regarded as measures intermediate between the ordinary law of the land and martial law, the ultimate result in case of extreme disorder. The abolition of those special laws, it is suggested, may mean earlier recourse to martial law than might otherwise be the case.

"We recognise the force of these arguments, in particular the difficulty of securing evidence or of preventing the intimidation of witnesses. We also appreciate the fact that the use of the ordinary law may in some cases advertise the very evil which the trial is designed to punish. But we consider that in the modern conditions of India that risk must be run. It is undesirable that any Statutes should remain in force which are regarded with deep and genuine disapproval by a majority of the Members of the Legislatures. The harm created by the retention of arbitrary powers of imprisonment by the Executive may, as history has shown, be greater even than the evil which such powers are directed to remedy. The retention of these Acts could in any case only be defended if it was proved that they were in present circumstances essential to the maintenance of law and order. As it has not been found necessary to resort in the past to these measures save in cases of grave emergency, we advocate their immediate repeal. In the event of a recurrence of any such emergency we think that the Government must rely on the Legislature to arm them with the weapons necessary to cope with the situation.

"Our recommendation in regard to Regulation III of 1818 and the analogous Regulations in the Bombay and Madras Presidencies is subject, however, to the following reservations. It has been pointed out to us that, for the protection of the frontiers of India and the fulfilment of the responsibilities of the Government of India in relation to Indian States, there must be some enactment to arm the Executive with powers to restrict the movements and activities of certain persons who, though not coming within the scope of any criminal law, have to be put under some measure of restraint. Cases in point are exiles from Foreign or Protected States who are liable to become the instigators or focus of intrigues against such States: persons disturbing the tranquillity of such States who cannot suitably be tried in the Courts of the States concerned and may not be amenable to the jurisdiction of British Courts: and persons tampering with the inflammable material on our frontiers. We are in fact satisfied of the continued necessity for providing for the original object of this Regulation, in so far as it was expressly declared to be 'the due maintenance of the alliances formed by the British Government with Foreign powers, the preservation of tranquillity in the territories of Native Princes entitled to its protection and the security of the British Dominions from foreign hostility,' and only in so far as the inflammable frontier, is concerned from 'internal commotion.'"

We have said already that the Report was accepted by the Government of India. That means that they pledged themselves to apply Regulation III and the analogous Regulations for securing the "due maintenance of the alliances formed by the British Government with Foreign Powers, the preservation of tranquillity in the territories of Native Princes and the security of the British Dominions from foreign hostility and only in so far as 'the inflammable frontier' is concerned, from internal commotion," and not for arresting and detaining British subjects on the allegation that they are engaged in a revolutionary conspiracy. To justify this breach of faith, the Government of Bengal have issued a communique explaining the reasons which induced them to take the step in question. We may point out that these reasons were all considered at great length by the Committee but were considered inadequate to support the retention of arbitrary powers in the hands of the Executive. The communique says: In weighing the undoubted objections to detention in safe custody without trial, the Governor in Council is forced to consider whether there is a greater evil than the alternatives which are presented. They involve, on the one hand, the gravest risk to the lives of the officers and members of the public . . . . and, on the other hand, the exposure to danger of immature youths . . . ." We can well understand the solicitude of the Government for the welfare of the immature youths of this country; we also appreciate their anxiety for the lives of their officers and of the members of the public; but we are not convinced that they justify in any country where there is any respect for personal liberty the detention of persons without trial except in circumstances of real peril to the existence of the State. During the War, Acts and Regulations were passed arming the Executive with powers of a most arbitrary character for safe-guarding the defence of the country. The Legislatures of the country had not a word to say against it. The public, if not glad, at any rate, acquiesced without a murmur. They felt that necessity knows no law and they must submit to it. But the world is now at peace. Except for a few communal riots and the Akali troubles, there is no disturbance in the country. Surely, this is not the time to apply the Regulation in total disregard of the pledge given by the highest executive, and to throw into the dust-bin the considered opinion of the highest legislature and the sentiments of the public at large.

The Government of Bengal, to convince themselves and the public of the propriety of their action, propose to place such evidence as they possess before two judges. This procedure is improper and unconstitutional and not authorised by any law on the Statute Book. It is the same as was provided in the Regulations under the Defence of India Act. The Government of Bengal is surely aware that the Defence of India Act was repealed by the Indian Legislature in 1922 and all the Regulations thereupon fell with it. May we ask under what statutory authority the Government of Bengal are going to place the information or evidence, as it is called, before two judges? It is against the traditions of the judiciary to express any opinion extra-judicially. It is the function of the law-officers of the Crown to express such opinion. It is no part of the work of judges who are appointed to try cases in open Court according to the laws of the country to condemn or justify in camera the policy of the Executive.

High Court Rules.

ORIGINAL SIDE.

It is ordered with the approval of the Governor-General in Council that the following Chap. XIII A containing rules as to summary procedure in suits to recover debts or liquidated demands or for immoveable property be added to Chap. XIII, and r. 6 of Chap. XVI of "The Rules of the High Court, 1914" be amended by prefixing the words "Subject to the provisions of Chap. XIII A" with effect from the 12th day of November 1923:—

CHAPTER XIII A.

SUMMARY PROCEDURE IN SUITS TO RECOVER DEBTS OR LIQUIDATED DEMANDS OR FOR IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY.

1. The provisions of this Chapter shall not be applicable save to suits—

(A) in which the Plaintiff seeks to recover a debt or liquidated demand in money payable by the Defendant with or without interest arising—

(i) on a contract express or implied; or

(ii) on an enactment where the sum sought to be recovered is a fixed sum of money or in the nature of a debt other than a penalty; or

(iii) on a guarantee where the claim against the principal is in respect of a debt or a liquidated demand only; or

(iv) on a trust; or

(B) for the recovery of immoveable property with or without a claim for rent or mesne profits by a landlord against a tenant whose term has expired or has been duly determined by notice to quit or has become liable to forfeiture for non-payment of rent or against persons claiming under such tenant.

2. A Plaintiff shall not be precluded from proceeding under this Chapter by reason of the fact that the suit might have been brought under the provisions of Or. 37 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but this Chapter shall not be applicable to suits which have been instituted under the said Order.

3. Where the Defendant in any suit which is within the terms of r. 1 has entered appearance, the Plaintiff may, as regards any claim which is within the terms of r. 1, on affidavit made by himself or by any other person who can swear positively to the facts verifying the cause of action and the amount claimed, if any, and stating that in his belief there is no defence to the claim, apply to the Judge for final judgment for the amount claimed together with interest, if any, or for the recovery of the land (with or without rent or mesne profits) as the case may be and costs:

Provided that as against any Defendant who has filed a written statement such application shall not be permissible unless the summons is taken out as in r. 4 mentioned within ten days after the entering of appearance.

4. The application by the Plaintiff for judgment under r. 3 shall be made by summons returnable not less than seven clear days after service accompanied by a copy of the plaint and affidavit.

5. (a) The Defendant may show cause against such application by affidavit.

(b) The affidavit shall state whether the defence alleged goes to the whole or to part only and (if so) to what part of the Plaintiff's claim and shall deal specifically with all matters of fact.

(c) The Judge may, if he thinks fit, order the Defendant, or in the case of the Corporation any Officer thereof, to attend and be examined upon oath or to produce any lease, deed, book or document or copy of or extract therefrom.

6. Upon such application the Judge may, unless the Defendant by affidavit or otherwise as the Judge may direct shall satisfy him that he has a good defence to the claim on its merits or disclose such facts as may be deemed sufficient to entitle him to defend, make an order refusing leave to defend and forthwith pronounce judgment in favour of the Plaintiff.

7. If it appears to the Judge that any Defendant has a good defence to or ought to be permitted to defend the claim and that any other Defendant has not such defence and ought not to be permitted to defend, the former may be permitted to defend and the Plaintiff shall be entitled to judgment against the latter, and may issue execution upon a decree to be drawn up pursuant to such judgment without prejudice to his right to proceed with his claim against the former.

8. If it appears that the defence set up by the Defendant applies only to a part of the Plaintiff's claim, or that any part of his claim is admitted, the Plaintiff may have judgment forthwith for such part of his claim as the defence does not apply to or is admitted, subject to such terms, if any, as to suspending execution or payment into Court or costs or otherwise as the Judge may think fit and the Defendant may be allowed to defend as to the residue of the Plaintiff's claim.

9. Leave to defend may be given unconditionally or subject to such terms as to giving security, or time, or mode of trial or otherwise as the Judge may think fit.

10. In all cases the Judge shall have power to give directions as to the further conduct of the suit.

11. The costs of and incidental to all applications made under this Chapter shall be dealt with by the Judge on the hearing of the application, who shall order by and to whom and when the same shall be paid or may reserve them to the Court at the trial: Provided that in the latter case, if no trial afterwards takes place or no order as to costs is made, the costs are to be costs in the cause.

12. Upon the hearing of an application under this Chapter the suit may, with the consent of the parties, be finally disposed of in a summary manner without right of appeal or referred to such officer and upon such terms as the Judge shall approve.

13. For the purposes of procedure under this Chapter any right to relief against forfeiture shall be deemed to be matter of defence, and upon the hearing of the application for judgment under r. 3 the Judge may, if he shall think fit, determine whether and upon what terms such relief shall be granted.

A judgment for recovery of land given under this Chapter on the ground of forfeiture for non-payment of rent shall have the same effect upon any right to such relief as if the judgment had been given after trial.

14. A special list shall be kept for the trial of causes in which leave to defend has been given under this Chapter, and in which the Judge is of opinion that a prolonged trial will not be requisite; and the Judge may at any time if he thinks it advisable order any such suit to be put into such list. All suits on such list shall be treated as short causes.

15. Unless the Judge otherwise directs the costs of one Advocate will on taxation between party and party, or as between attorney and client, be allowed to the Plaintiff and to each set of Defendants having divergent interests.

SEC. 16, BENGAL TENANCY ACT—ITS TRUE SCOPE.

To

The Editor "Calcutta Weekly Notes."

Sir,

I shall feel obliged if you kindly insert the following in your esteemed journal with a view to the points raised therein being cleared up by authoritative exposition.

It is well-known that sec. 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is often pleaded as a bar in rent suits in the Mofussil Courts. The section runs thus: "A person becoming entitled to a permanent tenure by succession shall not be entitled to recover, by suit, distraint, or other proceeding, any rent payable to him as the holder of the tenure until the Collector has received the notice, etc., referred to in the last foregoing section." Now the question arises whether this objection can be raised by a tenant who has taken settlement, oral or written, from a person after he has become owner of the tenure by succession. Nextly, whether a tenant who, in a previous rent suit against him raised the objection, though the suit was decreed either owing to the landlord's compliance with the aforesaid condition or waiver on the part of the tenant, can legitimately raise the same objection in subsequent rent suits against him. As this is often done in the pleadings of Mofussil Courts, and as the points are not free from ambiguity, they require elucidation. It seems but reasonable that the penal provision should not be enforced in such cases, for, in the first case no succession has taken place during the tenancy of the Defendant, and in the latter two cases, no succession has taken place after the successful rent decree. It would be well if you discuss these points in the journal.

Truly yours,

Rajendra Nath Ghosh, B.L.,

Pleader.

NOTES

Indian Bar.

The Government of India, as our readers are aware, have appointed a Committee to examine and report on (1) the proposals for constituting an Indian Bar, whether on an All-India basis or provincial basis with particular reference to the constitution, statutory recognition, functions and authority of a Bar-Council or Bar-Councils and their position vis a vis the High Courts; and, (2) the extent to which it may be desirable to remove the existing distinctions between Barristers and Vakils. The personnel of the Committee consists of men of ability, integrity and experience and we have no doubt that their recommendations will not only be comprehensive in their scope, but will also seek to do justice to all parties concerned. A Vakil of the Calcutta High Court, we feel, should have been on the Committee. It should not be forgotten that of the three Bills introduced into the Assembly in connexion with the legal profession, that of Mr. Neogi was the first in order of time and that under the present system the Vakils of the Calcutta High Court profess to be the worst sufferers. Their exclusion from the Original Side is absolute, whereas in Bombay and Madras, Vakils, subject to certain limitations, may be and are in fact enrolled as advocates and allowed to practise on the Original Side. In view of these facts, the Vakil Bar here should have been represented on the Committee. We hope that, if it is not too late, this omission may be rectified.

The question of the creation of an Indian Bar will, no doubt, be the main question before the Committee. Public opinion, so far as we can ascertain, is strongly in favour of such a Bar. The right of members of the English or Scotch Bar as such to practise in the Courts of this country is an anomaly and inconsistent with our present political status. In our opinion, if there is to be an Indian Bar, there should be one uniform theoretical and practical test for enrolment to it. A mere university degree or certificate from the Inns of Court should not be a pass-port to it. There should be an All-India Bar-Council or a Bar-Council in every province which will determine the requisite qualifications for those who want to practise the legal profession. It may be said that the effect of this will be to shut out European lawyers and that that would not be fair to the large number of Europeans who are settled or doing business here and who would naturally prefer to get their legal business done by Europeans. To this our answer is that the creation of an independent Bar will not necessarily have the effect apprehended. It will be possible to make arrangements with the authorities in Great Britain by which reciprocal rights of audience as between Courts in Great Britain and Courts in this country may be granted to members of the legal profession here and in Great Britain, and such an arrangement, if made, would secure the presence of a number of European lawyers whose services may be requisitioned by those who want them.

Elections.

We heartily congratulate Mr. B. Chakravarti, Mr. A. C. Banerjee and Dr. Pramatha Nath Banerjee, members of the Calcutta Bar, on their success at the polls. Needless to say that they will prove a valuable asset to the new Council and considerably add to its strength and independence.

Appointments.

We understand that Mr. B. L. Mitter and Mr. Langford James have been appointed to act as Officiating Advocate-General and Standing Counsel respectively. We congratulate them both.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The following appeals have been taken up by the Privy Council during the past week.

Oct. 18th. Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad. The hearing was concluded by the Full Board of this appeal which raised the question as to the meaning of "antecedent debt" so as to justify alienation of the joint family property by the manager of a Hindu family. The argument was concluded by Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and B. Dubé on behalf of the Appellants.

The Respondents were not represented, but Mr. W. Wallach appeared as amicus curiæ. Judgment was reserved.

Oct. 19th. Khanderao Vithoba Kore v. Corporation of Bombay concerned the powers of the Respondents to acquire surplus property for the purpose of recoupment under a street scheme. The Board dismissed the appeal without calling on the Respondents.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.

Oct. 19th and 22nd. Obala Kandama Naicker Ayyan v. Kandasamy Goundar (Madras). The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the Plaintiffs as reversioners to their grand-father's estate for a declaration that a compromise and alienations in pursuance thereof were invalid. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants.

Sir W. Finlay, K. C. and Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham for the Respondents.

Oct. 23rd. Ramlal Hargopal v. Kisanchandra (Berar). This was an appeal from an application under sec. 525 of the old Civil Procedure Code for filing an award. The subject-matter of the arbitration was the right to manage the affairs of the temple of Shri Sitaram Maharaj at Hyderabad, Deccan. The validity of the award is challenged by the Appellants who further contend that the Court was without jurisdiction. The argument is not yet concluded.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Appellant.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. J. M. Parikh for the Respondents.

Special leave to appeal was granted in Nagubai Manglorkar v. Manghibai (Bombay) and Jacob v. Wills (Bengal).

High Court Rules.

APPELLATE SIDE.

The following amendments in Chap. VI of the Rules of the High Court, Appellate Side, 1922, relating to appeals to the Privy Council, are published for general information. These Rules will come into operation, with effect from the 12th November 1923, the date on which the High Court will re-open after the annual vacation.

By order of the High Court,
N. G. A. EDGLEY,
Registrar.

ADDENDA AND CORRIGENDA TO THE RULES OF THE HIGH COURT, APPELLATE SIDE, 1922.

1. Cancel rr. 5 to 19, Chap. VI, at pp. 37 to 40, and substitute therefor the following:—

5. In all other applications regarding matters connected with appeals to His Majesty in Council, including petitions for leave to appeal, notice under r. 6 of this Chapter is necessary, in addition to any other notice herein prescribed.

6. Notice of an application under the preceding Rule shall be given by the applicant or his vakil by delivering to the proper person a copy of the petition, together with a notice in the following form:—

Take notice that this application will be made in Court on the day of 19 , at o'clock in the forenoon, when you are required to attend and show cause against the application, if you desire to do so.

7. All applications which have been duly filed with the clerk in charge of Privy Council Appeals will be set down in a list in the order in which they are notified to him. The cases in the list will be called on peremptorily in their turn, and if, by the fault of the applicant, the application cannot be proceeded with, it will be liable to be dismissed.

8. Every petition under Or. XLV, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, shall be presented to the Stamp Reporter. Such petition shall be accompanied by—

(1) a court-fee of Rs. 16 for drawing up an estimate of the expense of preparing and forwarding to the Registrar of the Privy Council the record of the case;

(2) the fee for the issue of the notice of the application for leave to appeal to all the Respondents who did not enter appearance in the High Court at the hearing of the appeal;

(3) forms of notices to all Respondents duly filled up in the manner prescribed in r. 14.

If the Stamp Reporter finds that the petition is barred by limitation he shall forthwith lay the same before the Court for orders. If it is filed within the prescribed period of limitation he shall lay it before the Registrar with a report whether it has been filed in accordance with the Rules of the High Court and whether the stamps filed therewith are sufficient.

9. Upon receipt of such petition with the Stamp Reporter's report, the Registrar shall, in case the petition is not in proper form or is not accompanied by the requisite court-fee stamps, fix a period within which the additional fees may be paid or within which the petition may be amended or lay the same before the Court for orders. If such petition is sufficiently stamped and complies with the provisions of the rules, he shall, upon receipt of such petition, direct notice to be served on the Opposite Party to show cause why the certificate should not be granted.

10. Where more than one such application is made by the same party at the same time relating to decrees or final orders made in pursuance of the same judgment and only one record is required to be printed, the Registrar may order that only one court-fee of Rs. 16 be paid, or may refer the matter to the Court for orders.

11. As soon as the Registrar has directed notice to be served under r. 9 of this Chapter, the clerk-in-charge of Privy Council Appeals shall forthwith proceed to issue notice of the application for leave to appeal to all the Respondents who did not appear at the hearing of the Appeal before the High Court. He shall also serve notices of the application for leave to appeal on the vakils for the Respondents who appeared at the hearing before the High Court.

12. A notice which it is necessary to serve under these rules (other than notices under r. 6 of this Chapter) or under Or. XLV, r. 3, or r. 8, Civil Procedure Code, may be served in the manner provided by the Code for the service of notices, or unless the Court or the Registrar otherwise directs, upon any vakil who appeared for the party to whom notice is to be given in the appeal to this Court, unless the vakalatnama of such vakil has been cancelled with the sanction of the Court. If there is no vakil upon whom notice can be served, then unless the Registrar shall otherwise direct, the notice must be served upon the party in Calcutta through the Sheriff, or in the mufassal through the proper Court in the District in which such notice is to be served on paying the usual fee. The fee for the issue of the notice must be paid into Court at the time of filing the application. Such payment is to be made by stamp affixed to the notice intended to be served.

13. Nothing in these rules requiring any notice to be served on or given to an Opposite Party or Respondent shall be deemed to require any notice to be served on or given to the legal representative of any deceased Opposite Party or deceased Respondent in a case when such Opposite Party or Respondent did not appear either at the hearing in the High Court or at any proceedings subsequent to the decree of the High Court:

Provided that notices under sub-r. (2) of r. 3 and r. 8 of Or. XLV, Civil Procedure Code, shall be given by affixing the same in some conspicuous place in the Court house of the Judge of the District in which the original suit was brought and by publication in such newspapers as the Court may direct.

Notices under the proviso to this rule may be issued in the manner prescribed to the legal representatives of the deceased Respondent or Opposite Party in question without specifying such legal representatives by name.

14. (1) With the fee for the issue of the notice the applicant shall also file printed forms of such notice duly filled up in the prescribed form (see page 46, post), the date of appearance and the date of the notice being left blank.

(2) The information entered in the forms must be filled up in the vernacular (or in English if the party to be served is a European British subject or a resident of Calcutta) in a bold, clear and easily legible handwriting.

(3) The date fixed for the hearing of an application will be inserted in the form and the notice will be dated by the clerk-in-charge of Privy Council Appeals, before it is signed by the Deputy Registrar.

(4) The necessary number of printed forms of notice in the prescribed forms will be supplied to applicants or their vakils, free of cost, on application to the Forms clerk.

(5) The Registrar may, in his discretion, direct in any particular case that the forms of notice be entirely filled up in the office of the Court.

15. The date fixed for the hearing of the application shall be regulated by the time-table prescribed in r. 42, Chap. V.

16. As soon as it shall appear that the notice of the application for leave to appeal has been duly served on all the Respondents, the clerk-in-charge of Privy Council Appeals shall lay the application for leave to appeal before the Division Court for orders under Or. XLV, r. 3 (1), Civil Procedure Code.

17. Immediately after the grant of the certificate, the clerk-in-charge shall call for the transmission, ordinarily within seven days, of the record and all material papers.

18. The applicant shall be notified of the arrival of such record as soon as it is received in the office of the Court.

19. Whenever it shall be impossible for the lower Court to comply with the requisition within the time stated, such Court shall report the reason of its inability, and shall ask for such further time as may be necessary.

20. Within two weeks of a certificate for leave to appeal being granted, the applicant shall deposit with the Accountant of the Court a cash deposit of Rs. 100 towards the cost of the preparation of the Index.

21. Immediately after the deposit of the fee referred to in r. 20, the clerk-in-charge of Privy Council Appeals shall cause to be prepared an Index of all the papers to be included in Part II of the paper-book and a list of all papers, documents and exhibits in the cause not included in the transcript. Such list shall be typed as soon as it has been prepared, provided there is sufficient money in deposit to cover the cost of typing.

† NOTE.—The list of omitted documents should be inserted at the end of the Part to which they belong.

II. Re-number the existing rr. 20, 21, 22 and 23 as rr. 22, 23, 24 and 25.

III. Re-number the existing r. 24 as r. 26 and insert the following "Note" after item (e):—

NOTE.—When marginal notes only have to be inserted in Parts I and III of the paper-book, the editing charge should be calculated at the rate of two annas a page.

IV. Re-number the existing rr. 25—43 as rr. 27—45.

Review.

THE LAW OF PRIVATE DEFENCE. By Anukul Chandra Moitra, M.A., B.L., Calcutta. Butterworth & Co. (India), Ltd., 6, Hastings Street. Price Rs. 5.

It seems extraordinary that the book under notice should be the first to deal systematically and exhaustively with a subject of such outstanding importance as the law of private defence. The plea of self-defence, as Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri points out in his foreword, is very far from being a technical plea. The right of private defence is a substantive right, and one which the Law Commissioners did not fail to observe, the circumstances of this country specially required should not be unduly restricted. That the right fails to receive adequate recognition in the actual administration of the criminal law in the Mofussil is in a large measure undoubtedly due to a want of proper appreciation of the fundamentals of the law of self-defence. These have been effectively and scientifically dealt with in the present treatise. After briefly discussing the basic principle of self-defence in the introductory chapter, the details of the subject are considered under the following heads: (1) Pleading, (2) Commencement of the right, (3) Continuance of the right, (4) Defence of property, (5) Justifiable homicide, (6) Acts of public servants, (7) State help, (8) Exceeding the right and (9) Non-criminality and self-defence. The topics dealt with under each of these heads are logically arranged and lucidly analysed with reference to statutory provisions and the case-law, the English cases being referred to wherever they are calculated to throw light upon the law. The subject-index provides further facilities for handling the material for purposes of practice. The book is handy and for its price fairly well got up. No criminal lawyer and Judge should be without it, and it is bound to secure an honoured place in every lawyer's library.

NOTES

The present election and its lessons.

There is no question that the Swarajya candidates have scored a singular success at the present election to the Bengal Legislative Council. The significance of this is that the verdict of the country is in favour of early establishment of Swaraj or provincial autonomy and responsibility in the Central Government. There are no two opinions in the country about this. The only difference of opinion that exists between the more sober section of practical politicians and our idealist friends is that the former apprehend that it will be suicidal to attempt to wreck the reforms which were won by life-long exertions of their predecessors. We believe that the Swarajya party will be convinced of the impracticability of their procedure when they proceed to work in Council. From the very nature of the constitution of the Council they will find that they cannot command a majority in the Council without forming a coalition with the representatives of the various sections of the Indian communities and interests. If the Swarajya party members are agreeable to form such a coalition, they will have to modify their views with regard to many matters, especially about wrecking the Council. Then it is said that the members of the Swarajya party are pledged not to assume any office in the provincial Council. If they mean by this that none of them would assume the office of a minister or ministers, their party will be unable to control the policy of Government or bring about a dissolution when the executive Government may act irresponsibly. If they agree to the election of ministers from amongst the coalition candidates and if such ministers are not prepared to oppose every Government measure, they will not be able to have such ministers removed unless they can command an absolute majority in the Council. If they oppose the ministers selected from amongst members who do not belong to their party, without forming any coalition, they will be in a perpetual minority and their opposition or resignation will be ineffective.

The ministerial offices are not Government service in the ordinary acceptance of the term. A minister is a servant of the Council and the public. It has to be given up no sooner than one forfeits the confidence of the Council. The members of the Swarajya party may very properly say that they would not accept any salary, but we see no sense in their saying that they would not assume ministerial offices which are stepping stones to Swaraj. After all, if they resile from their pledge and their leaders assume ministerial offices, they will even then have to look to coalition support in Council and for this they will have to modify their policy of obstructing every measure or of wrecking the Council. If the Swarajya party desire at any time to bring about a dissolution of the Council on any question on which the Executive Government and the Council may differ, it may only be done if any minister or ministers oppose such Government measure or policy in the Cabinet Council of the Governor and if outvoted or overruled there, such minister or ministers oppose such measure or policy in the Council with the support of a majority of members. It is by such means that dissolution of the Council may be brought about. The resignation of individual members or even of a party, who do not command absolute majority in the Council, imposes no obligation on the Governor to dissolve the Council. If a group of members resign their seats as a protest against any Government measure, the seats will be declared vacant and the constituencies will be called upon to elect members in their places. These considerations will show that the avowed object of the Swarajya party of wrecking the Council by entering it is chimerical. They can only achieve their object of securing Swaraj by forming a coalition within the Council, following a course which will commend itself to the majority of members representing different communities and interests and making use of the constitution to make the Executive responsible to the Legislature, which is the aim and end of Swaraj in every self-governing country.

The Indian Bar Committee.

The Indian Bar Committee now holding meetings in Bombay have issued a questionnaire inviting public and professional opinion on a large number of points affecting the legal profession in all its branches. Space does not permit us to print it in our columns. But members of the profession will do well to peruse it carefully and ventilate their views in the press. One of the questions mooted is, whether "the control of matters relating to professional conduct and etiquette might be removed from the hands of the High Court." In our opinion, if there is to be a Central Bar Council or a Bar Council in every province, all matters of professional etiquette and discipline should be exclusively within their jurisdiction. It has been suggested that during the non-co-operation movement, the judges in dealing with practitioners under the Legal Practitioners Act for having taken part in the movement were influenced by their political views. True or false, judges should be placed above any such suggestion.

Lord Justice Scrutton commenced his judgment in the O'Brien case with the following observation :—

"This appeal raises questions of great importance regarding the liberty of the subject, a matter on which English law is anxiously careful and which English judges are careful to uphold. As Lord Herschell says in Cox v. Hakes : 'The law of this country has been very jealous of any infringement of personal liberty.' This care is not to be exercised less vigilantly, because the subject whose liberty is in question may not be particularly meritorious. It is one test of belief in principles if you apply them to cases with which you have no sympathy at all. You really believe in freedom of speech, if you are really willing to allow it to men whose opinions seem to you wrong and are dangerous; and the subject is entitled only to be deprived of his liberty by due process of law, although that due process, if taken, will probably send him to jail."

The Bengal Government, we hope, will carefully weigh these words when they are again tempted to apply Reg. III.

Lord Hewart, the Lord Chief Justice, speaking at a general meeting of the Magistrates' Association in London, exhorted his audience to think twice and thrice before sending a man or woman to prison for the first time. In most persons, he said, the notion of going to prison, when it was still in the future, was a dreadfully repugnant one. But once a person had gone to prison, it proved, he feared, a place so much more comfortable than any body had contemplated that one element, at any rate, in that repugnance permanently disappears after the first imprisonment. It is a common thing for our Magistrates in security cases to send a man to prison in default of finding security. It is equally a common thing for them to inflict heavy fines on accused persons without considering whether they have any means to pay them, and, in default, to send them to prison. It is to be hoped that these guardians of criminal justice will recall the words of Lord Hewart before they decide to send a man to jail for the first time.

LONDON NOTES.

(From our Correspondent.)

Two Boards are still sitting, Lord Dunedin presiding over that in the Council Chamber where appeals are being heard that deal more especially with Indian law. In the Board Room Lord Atkinson presided over a Board composed of Lords Shaw, Wrenbury, Carson and Younger. The cases heard by the latter Board were :—

Macmillan & Co., Ltd. v. K. & G. Cooper (Bombay) and The I. G. Nav. and Ry. Co. v. The Dekhari Tea Co., Ltd. (Bengal).

The former (heard on Oct. 25, 26, 30) raises a question of copy-right law. The Appellants published extracts from North's translation of Plutarch's life of Alexander and they complain that the Respondents have published a volume which contains almost identical extracts and notes. Judgment was reserved.

Sir John Simon, K. C. and Messrs. Mackinnon, K. C., Macgiltwray and Macmillan for the Appellants.

Messrs. W. H. Upjohn, K. C., E. B. Raikes, and Harold Hardy for the Respondents.

The other case (heard on Nov. 1, 2) raised a question of the liability of the Appellants for damages for goods destroyed by fire during carriage. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and K. Brown for the Appellants.

Messrs. Neilsan, K. C. and Spence for the Respondents.

In the Council Chamber the following is the record of business :—

Satya Narayan Singh v. Satya Niranjan Chakravarti (Patna) (heard on Oct. 26).

The judgment of the Board in this case which was heard in May last was delivered by LORD SUMNER. The questions in issue are of importance and the judgment deals at length with the incidents of ghatwali tenures. The broad outlines of the decision are to the effect that the tenure in regard to which the appeal arose was a Government ghatwali, that it was inalienable, and that it remained so although the services of the ghatwal were no longer exacted.

Pujari Lakshmana Goundan v. Subramania Ayyar (Madras) (heard on Oct. 26, 27). The question at issue in this appeal is whether the temple of Sri Kandaswami at Kalipatti is the private property of the Appellants or is a public religious trust. The Board did not call on Counsel for the Respondents but reserved judgment.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and B. Dubé for the Appellants.

Mr. Narasimham for the Respondents.

Kanga v. Kanga (Bombay) (heard on Oct. 29, 30) raises a question as to the validity of a Will and undue influence by the Appellant is alleged. Judgment was reserved.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

Mr. T. Bucknill for the Respondent.

Ram Singh v. Ram Chand (Lahore) (heard on Oct. 30). This was a suit for the dissolution of partnership and accounts. The High Court decided that the Plaintiff was not entitled to relief owing to his destruction and falsification of the accounts. The Board delivered judgment allowing the appeal.

Messrs. Dubé and Bishan Narain for the Appellant.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondent.

Baijnath Singh v. Jamal Bros. & Co., Ltd. (Upper Burma) (heard on Oct. 30, Nov. 2). A suit to enforce a mortgage of oil wells. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. Micklem, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents.

Walireddi Ayyareddi v. Adusumilli Gopalakrishna (Madras) (heard on No. 1) raised a question whether a purchaser of the equity of redemption discharging a mortgage is not entitled to subrogation. Judgment was reserved.

Mr. Narasimham for the Appellant.

Mr. Dubé for the Respondent.

Nagendrabala Dasi v. Dinanath Mahish (Bengal) (heard on Nov. 1 and 6). One of the Appellants is a pleader and had acted for the Respondents in suits relating to the properties in dispute, the other Appellant is his wife and the lower Courts held that he had bought the suit properties benami in her name and the suit was brought by the Respondents for a reconveyance. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for the Appellants.

Mr. A. Majid for the Respondents.

Nainapillai Marakaryar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (Madras) (heard on Nov. 6). A suit for ejectment raising the question whether the trustees of a temple held the melwaram as well as the kudivaram rights in certain property.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Narasimham are opening the case for the Appellants.

Review.

THE INDIAN CANDIDATE AND RETURNING OFFICER. By E. L. L. Hammond, I.C.S., C.B.E., with a Foreword by the Rt. Hon. E. S. Montague. Oxford University Press.

This is a manual giving the law and procedure of elections in British India and Burma. Mr. Hammond is well-known as an authority on the subject through his work on Indian Electioneering and Election Petitions which he published in 1920 and 1921. The work under review covers the grounds of his two previous works but is in every respect an altogether new work. Mr. Hammond was a member of the Electoral Rules Revision Committee. This, together with his previous experience in framing and editing the previous election rules and regulations, has furnished him with a rare opportunity of compiling a comprehensive election manual in which the rules which are common to all India as also the provincial regulations are to be found. Evidently Mr. Hammond's work was under preparation and in the press before these rules and regulations were finally revised by the Government of India and the Provincial Governments. We have compared some with the final Government publications. There is some discrepancy in the numbering of the schedules giving the rules and regulations but on the whole the rules and regulations are correctly given. The chief merit of the work does not rest in the compilation. Its chief value consists in the guidance that it gives to candidates, their agents, the voters and the returning and other officers concerned in conducting the election. The suggestion it contains for party organisation will be found very valuable. In England, in every constituency there are party organisations of those who represent different interests and political views, such as, the Conservatives, Liberals and Labour. They have their permanent officers and offices and each of them take care to keep an up-to-date register of voters and keep a note of their own supporters. For such purposes they constantly apply to the officer in charge of electoral rolls for excluding names of deceased and disqualified persons and the inclusion of qualified persons. Each party organisation selects its candidates and publishes its political programme. A re-adjustment of party supporters takes place in accordance with the extent of support that such political programme receives amongst the voters. Each candidate also expresses his views about local questions. Voters are influenced chiefly through views of candidates announced at public meetings and through the public press. Each party keeps a vigilant watch over any attempt at corrupt practice. In this way English elections and public life have become much more clean than it used to be before. Mr. Hammond's book will be found a valuable guide in this respect.

Without organisation of parties the election in India will continue to be a very expensive affair too and able men of humble means will never get a chance. Each party should have a party fund to which its supporters and sympathisers contribute.

There is a great deal of misapprehension in the mind of persons who are deeply interested in the present election with regard to contributions to party funds. It is quite legitimate for those who belong to any particular party or who sympathise with them to contribute to party funds for election purposes. There is no impropriety on the part of party in selecting a candidate from amongst them on condition that he should contribute a substantial sum of money to the party fund. But it amounts to bribery and corruption both according to the election rules in this country and in England for any candidate or his party to withdraw or propose or offer to withdraw on payment or any promise of payment of any sum of money either to the candidate or his party by another candidate who does not belong to the party. We invite attention in this connection to the rules relating to corrupt practice and bribery in Sch. V (in Hammond's book put down as Sch. IV), Parts I and II. Part I, r. 1 says: "A gift, offer or promise by a candidate or his agent, or by any other person with the connivance of a candidate or his agent, of any gratification to any person whatsoever, with the object, directly or indirectly, of inducing a person to stand or not to stand as, or to withdraw from being, a candidate" amounts to bribery. Then again in the same Schedule, Part II, r. 3, says: "The receipt of, or agreement to receive, any gratification, whether as a motive or a reward by a person to stand or not to stand as, or to withdraw from being a candidate" amounts to bribery. The electoral rules contemplate by using the term "bribery" that for any breach of such rule an election may not only be declared void but for such an offence a person may be punished under sec. 171E, Ch. IXA of the Indian Penal Code. Reference may be made to Ch. XI of Mr. Hammond's work. The chapters on corrupt practices and election petition in Mr. Hammond's book are very valuable and should be perused by every one interested in election affairs. Mr. Hammond has given references to English standard works and cases throughout his book, which makes it very helpful. Representative Government is a blessing no doubt but if it brings in its train bribery and corruption it would be a curse to our countrymen. It is therefore of the utmost importance that our party leaders and public men and the people at large should make every endeavour to keep public life clean in this country.

NOTES

Governor and his duty in selecting ministers.

We are very much surprised at the misconceptions prevailing amongst many new and old members of the Bengal Council and also amongst journalists as regards the responsibility of H. E. the Governor with regard to the selection of ministers. Suggestions are being freely offered to H. E. the Governor of Bengal for the selection of certain individuals by name as the next ministers. It is commonly believed that the power or discretion of the Governor in this respect is absolute, unfettered and unlimited. But those who are familiar with the Joint Committee's report and appreciate the significance of para. 6 of the Instrument of Instructions to the Provincial Governors and know how such instructions to the Dominion Governors have been interpreted by the Colonial Office in cases of conflict between the Governor and the Legislature in the Dominions, are aware that the power of the Governor in this respect is a strictly constitutional power which is governed by the parliamentary convention that obtains in this behalf in the United Kingdom and the Dominions. Sec. 52 (1) of the Government of India Act confers on the Governor the same absolute powers that H. M. the King has in appointing and dismissing his ministers. But such powers can only be exercised subject to parliamentary practice and conventions.

Like H. M. the King in the United Kingdom, the Governor here, as those in the Dominions, has to ascertain after a general election, which party is likely to command majority in the House. He has to send for the leader or leaders of the party and ascertain from them who would be acceptable to the party as ministers. The recent instance, when speculation was rife whether Lord Curzon, the Foreign Secretary or Mr. Baldwin, occupying a much humbler position, would be selected as Prime Minister and the ultimate selection of Mr. Baldwin, according to party wishes, is very instructive in this connection. The Dominion Governors, who were formerly erratic in this respect, now-a-days follow the same practice. Interpreting para. 6 of the Instrument of Instructions to the Provincial Governors in India in the light of the recommendations of the Joint Parliamentary Committee, there is little doubt that they should follow a similar practice here also..

So we repeat our advice to the newly elected members of the Provincial Council that they should meet and form a coalition and the coalition party should settle amongst themselves as to whom they would like to take charge of the ministerial portfolios. This would relieve H. E. the Governor of the responsibility in selecting ministers. We understand that there was a ministerial party in the Bengal Council. Very few of their members have been elected at the recent election. So H. E. the Governor would not, as he cannot constitutionally, offer any ministerial portfolio to any member of that party. The reason for this is also very simple. If he did, he would have to change his ministers after a motion of want of confidence is passed against them. Then the Governor will have to select his minister from the majority party by the process we have already explained. It would therefore be wise on the part of the Governor to select such ministers only as would command the confidence of the majority immediately after the newly elected members have taken their oath.

The members also have a serious responsibility with regard to the matter. They must learn to act together and select their own leaders in a spirit of compromise. Unless they do this, they will not be able to work their way up to parliamentary government or Swaraj. The only other method is revolution, which is admittedly out of the question. We have always maintained that the idea of attaining Swaraj by wrecking the Councils is no less absurd and that it can only be attained by the promotion of unity and co-operation amongst the members of Council and thus availing themselves of the constitutional powers to make the executive responsible to the legislature. We have explained before how popular ministers with the support of the House can control the policy even of the Governor and his Executive Council. The Joint Committee expressly says that a Governor may discharge an opposing minister, order dissolution, but on re-election if the ministers return with a majority, the Governors should abide by the advice of the ministers. What a pity that so few of our members know so little of their constitutional powers.

The late Mr. Inverarity of the Bombay Bar.

For the last four decades the late Mr. Inverarity was just as much an outstanding figure amongst the members of the Bombay Bar as Mr. Jackson has been in Calcutta. Both have been noted for remarkable personality, force of character, sturdy independence and great ability which made them a terror to their opponents. Mr. Jackson in the zenith of his career was popularly known as "Tiger Jackson." Inverarity, on the other hand, was a great sportsman and as his favourite pastime outside the Bar was hunting down lions, he was known as a lion-hunter, an appellation which was not altogether inappropriate in many a forensic contest. While Bombay could boast of one Inverarity, Calcutta had many such stalwarts who were more than a match for him in any fair forensic fight at the Bar. In Calcutta we have always appreciated merit and been above all provincial jealousy. Thus, about 32 years ago when Mr. Inverarity came down from Bombay with a junior from another provincial Bar to defend Jacob in the Nizam's diamond case in which Jacob was prosecuted before the Calcutta High Court Session, the members of the Calcutta Bar welcomed him and his coleague in quite a sportsman-like spirit. The Bar in India is distinctly the poorer through the death of this distinguished advocate.

Correspondence.

To

The Editor, "Calcutta Weekly Notes."

Sir,

I shall feel much obliged if the following few lines find space in your much esteemed journal. There is now a distinct pronouncement from the highest authority that the present delay in civil litigation amounts to a denial of justice. Their Lordships of the Privy Council exposed this in no uncertain terms (which is the subject-matter of your editorial published in your issue dated 18th of june last); the Viceroy repeated the same thing in his speech at the Lahore High Court on 23rd October 1923 published here on 24th October 1923. The press persistently clamour against this delay of civil justice and the cognate subject of the corruption of the ministerial officers of Civil Courts; this last subject is under discussion in the Behar Council. But it is a matter of surprise that while this condemnation of the present system is proceeding from the highest authority on the one hand, there is the same effort going on to perpetuate it on the part of those entrusted with the administration of the machinery, I speak specially, of the mofussil Courts.

The present delay is largely responsible for the idea that contested civil suits or appeals need not be decided before they are nearly twelve months old. The direct consequence of this standard is that Courts are abolished in places where it is found that there are not too many of such suits or appeals pending there. How can the public expect speedier justice so long as this system continues? I shall quote a notification in the Calcutta Gazette, dated 31st October 1923, published after the pronouncement of the Viceroy to illustrate this:—"Babu Romesh Chandra De, Officiating Additional Munsif of Dacca, now employed at Barisal in the District of Backergunge, is appointed to act until further orders, as a Munsif in the District of Jessore, to be ordinarily stationed at Bhanga, but for the present to be employed as Additional Munsif in the District of Rajshahi." Any intelligent reader will observe that this notification means that this officer could not find any work in the Districts of Dacca, Barisal and Jessore. Now we may ask if there is no delay in civil litigation in those districts. Undoubtedly the answer would be that there is.

There are two other notifications in the same Gazette which point to the same conclusion.

Thus the foremost remedy is to employ all the available Courts in bringing down the age of contested suits and appeals. Once the duration of suits and appeals has been brought down, say to three months, the number of Courts may be reduced to the normal level. There is another advantage in the speedy disposal of cases; there will be a fewer number of records to be dealt with every day, as the cases will come before the Court only during three months instead of rotating throughout the year, and thus afford the presiding officers more time to direct their personal attention to the work that is now left to clerks, and thus less opportunity for the ministerial staff to blackmail the litigant public.

Yours, etc., JUSTICE.

THE CONSTITUTION AND JURISDICTION OF COURTS OF CIVIL JUSTICE IN BR. INDIA. By Sir Earnest John Trevelyan, D.C.L. Thacker, Spink & Co., Calcutta and London. Price Rs. 35.

The name of the work is sufficient to convince one of the patience and labour involved in compiling a work of the kind. The subject is almost cyclopaedic and it is a pleasurable surprise to find that all essential information regarding the subject covering such a wide field is given within 658 pages. From the High Courts in the Presidencies and Provincial capitals to the Courts of village Panchayat, the constitution of different grades of Civil Courts and their jurisdiction—original, Appellate or revisional are sufficiently set out. The magnitude of the ground covered may well be conceived from the fact that the territorial limits extend from Assam to Aden and its dependencies on the one hand and from North Western Frontier Province, Beluchusthan and the Andaman and Nicobar Islands on the other. It must not be supposed that all this information is given in a haphazard way on any territorial basis. The constitution and jurisdiction of the different classes of Courts are classified under appropriate headings. The High Courts are first dealt with and the statutes and Letters Patent relating to them are not only given in extenso with very valuable annotation supported by references to the case-law on the subject. Next, the Subordinate Civil Courts are dealt with, giving references to enactments and cases concerning their jurisdiction. The general provisions of the Civil Procedure Code relating to the jurisdiction of Civil Courts and that of the High Court in respect of appeals, reference and revision as also of appeals to the Privy Council are specially dealt with in a separate part. Part V deals with jurisdiction of Courts under special Acts, such as those relating to Income Tax, Limited Companies, Patent, Designs, Copy-right, Municipalities, Lunacy, Marriage and Divorce, etc. Part VI deals with special Tribunals, such as, Improvement Trust, Land Acquisitions. The work closes with an account of the Revenue Courts in different parts of India. The information given under these heads may not be quite exhaustive in every case but as references are given to the enactments relating to the same, further information is readily available. This work has removed a great want that legal profession has long felt. To a jurist or an academic lawyer it is by no means of less interest. We congratulate the author for this valuable contributions to the Indian legal literature.

THE LAW OF MINORS IN BRITISH INDIA. By P. Ramanatha Aiyar, B.A., B.L., Vakil, Trichinopoly. Madras Law Journal Office, 1922.

This work deals with the rights and liabilities of minors. It commences with an introductory chapter in which the jurisprudence and legal history of the subject is given not merely from English law, for the provisions of the Roman, Hindu and Mahomedan law are also noticed in this connection. Coming to the practical portions of the work we find that the rights and liabilities of the minors in respect of contracts, torts and acquisition of property are very fully dealt with, giving references to the High Court and Privy Council decisions from the official and non-official reports. The adjective law on the subject such as the proof of age, domicile, estoppel, ratification, avoidance, is also treated with care. The author acknowledges his indebtedness to such standard works as Trevelyan on Minors, but he has drawn his materials from various sources and carefully edited them in a manner which makes it a quite comprehensive work on the subject. The industry and labour that the author has bestowed in the preparation of the work is very commendable and practising lawyers will find it very helpful as a work of reference.

THE LAW OF GUARDIANSHIP AND PROCEDURE. By P. Ramanatha Aiyer, B.A., B.L., Vakil, Madras Law Journal Office. 1923.

This is a companion work to the one above reviewed. It deals with the relationship of guardians and wards and the procedure in suits by and against minors. The subject is of much wider range as it has to deal with the personal law of the Hindus, Mahomedans, Budhists, Christians and other communities. The law as administered in British India in this respect is largely borrowed from English law, the principles of which are adequately noticed and illustrated by reference to cases. The general law with regard to guardianship and the rights and liabilities of guardians are explained. The personal laws of the different communities are very appropriately dealt with, supported by case-law. Chapters are devoted to Court of Wards. Pleadings and the procedure in suits by and against minors will furnish practical guidance to the profession. A chapter is devoted to offences by and against minors. In the appendix the enactments of general application as also the provincial enactments relating to the subject are given. On the whole, it is an up-to-date comprehensive work on the subject which will surely be found useful by practising lawyers.

GHOSH'S DIARIES. Compiled by J. N. Ghosh. Published by M. C. Sarkar & Sons, Law Book-Sellers and Publishers, 90/2A, Harrison Road, Calcutta.

As many as six varieties of Ghosh's Diaries have been sent to us for notice. The Kohinoor Diary priced Rs. 1-6 and the Lawyer's Diary priced Rs. 1-4 have similar contents, but the former is flapped. Besides a large repertory of miscellaneous information, such as are usually found in publications of this kind, it will interest lawyers to know that there are in both issues tables of court-fees, stamp duties, registration-fees, the limitation schedule, model legal forms, table of statutes, a digest of recent cases and a calender for two hundred years. The remaining four issues are pocket diaries, two (one of which is flapped) priced Re. 1 and as. 12 respectively and giving a day to a page containing much useful information of constant reference, including legal information of the kind mentioned above, a third, two days to a page diary, flapped and priced as. 10 but otherwise like the two previously mentioned, and the last, a small day to a page diary, which will go into any pocket and fitly named the "Gem," suited for general use, and having prefaced to it just a list of public holidays, indispensable postal information and a table of memorable dates which, if not useful, are at any rate interesting. The get-up of all the issues is praiseworthy.

THE BIHAR AND ORISSA MUNICIPAL ACT and other laws relating to Municipalities. By S. K. Sahay, Barrister-at-Law, Calcutta : Butterworth & Co. (India) Ltd., 6, Hastings Street. Price Rs. 10. 1923.

This is the only commentary on the Bihar and Orissa Act, VII of 1922, we have come across and, with an appendix of related statutes and rules, covers all phases of Municipal activity within the province and is in consequence bound to provide a fairly complete book of ready reference on the law relating to Municipalities applicable to the province. The Appendix contains the Bengal Vaccination Act, 1880, the Vaccination Rules, the Cattle Trespass Act, 1871, the Local Authorities Loans Act, 1914, the Loans Act Rules, the Municipal Taxation Act, 1881, the Government Buildings Act, 1899, the Notifications relating to Taxation of Railways, the Motor Vehicles Act, 1914, the Bihar and Orissa Places of Pilgrimage Act, 1920 and the Rules thereunder, the Bengal Ferries Act, 1885, the Bihar and Orissa Primary Education Act, 1919 and Rules thereunder, the Bengal Births and Deaths Registration Act, 1873, the Election Offences and Inquiries Act, 1920, the Bihar and Orissa Food Adulteration Act, 1919 with Rules, the Bihar and Orissa Municipal Survey Act and Rules and Orders under the Municipal Act. Mr. Sahay has made full use of his experience as Chairman of the Ranchi Municipality. An introductory note by Mr. M. G. Hallett, Secretary to the Bihar and Orissa Ministry of Local Government, comparative tables of the old and the new Acts and a carefully prepared subject-index enhance the value of a treatise which should be in the hands of all lawyers and laymen interested in the Municipal administration of the province. It is a substantial piece of work honestly executed and shows immense industry and much judgment. The get-up is all one could wish.

NOTES

Ministers, if officials.

We stated in our last issue that a minister is not a Government servant in the ordinary or legal sense of the term. We shall now quote chapter and verse to show this. In Part V of the Government of India Act which deals with Local Governments, sec. 52 (1) says that the "Governor . . . . may appoint ministers, not being members of his Executive Council or other officials, to administer transferred subjects, etc." That a minister on being so appointed does not become an official or cannot be said to accept office is expressly stated in sec. 80B of the Act. This section says in the first place, "if any non-official member of the local Legislative Council, whether elected or nominated, accepts any office in the service of the Crown in India, his seat in the Council shall become vacant." Thus if a minister's office was considered an office in the service of the Crown he would have to resign on assuming office. But a minister on appointment is not required here to vacate his seat and seek re-election, as in England. Proviso to sec. 80B provides an express saving in this respect in the following terms :—"Provided that for this provision (i.e., sec. 80B) a minister shall not be deemed to be an official and a minister shall not be deemed to accept office on appointment as a minister." Then amongst the definitions, with which the Act concludes, we find it stated quite at the end of sec. 134 that "the expressions 'official' and 'non-official,' where used in relation to any person, mean respectively who is or is not in the civil or military service of the Crown in India." In terms of this definition also, which is quite general, a Provincial minister cannot be said to be a servant of the Crown or an official or to have accepted office under the Crown. That he shall hold office during the Governor's pleasure, as provided in sec. 52 (1), means, that he may be removed from office forthwith, without notice or without the assignment of any reason. The significance of this is that on an adverse vote of the Council or when the Governor is of opinion that he does not command the confidence of the House, he may be dismissed at once. The proviso in sec. 52 (1) which says that his salary may be reduced practically without any limit by the vote of the Council, makes the Council, for all intents and purposes, his master and his responsibility is primarily to the Council.

May a non-member be a minister.

Another misconception that is current with regard to the office of a minister is that a Governor of a province may appoint as minister any non-official member he likes and retain him in office for six months. This misconception has evidently arisen from a failure to appreciate the constitutional significance of sec. 52 (2) of the Government of India Act which says : "No minister shall hold office for a longer period than six months, unless he is or becomes an elected member of the local legislature." Similar provisions occur in some of the Dominion constitutions. The meaning of it is simply this that if the Governor with the concurrence of the party who command a majority in the legislature summons a party leader who may not be a member of the Council, or one who may have been defeated at the election, he may be appointed a minister. But if he is so appointed he must seek election and get elected within six months, otherwise he is to vacate office on the expiry of six months. For a minister so appointed, it would not be difficult to get elected because some member of his party will vacate his seat and get him elected in his place. The provision above quoted only gives him a reasonable time for such election. Further, it gives the Governor and members of the Council a very wide choice in the election of a capable minister. That cl. (2) in sec. 52 does not mean that the Governor, as we have already explained in our last issue, can arbitrarily offer the ministerial portfolio to any one he likes, is evident for the obvious reason, that if he did so against the wishes of the House, the Council may vote want of confidence in the minister and he will have to be removed by the Governor. Under the unwritten English constitution a prominent party leader, although not a member of Parliament, may be included in the cabinet. For instance, the late Mr. W. E. Gladstone after he lost his seat at an election was accepted as a cabinet minister by his party and held the portfolio of Council Secretary for some time. He was subsequently elected as a member of Parliament. It is for providing for such contingencies that the cl. (2) in sec. 52, quoted above, has been introduced in the Indian constitution. It does not mean that a Governor can appoint or keep in office an outsider or an ex-minister or any minister he likes for six months against the wishes of the House. That our view is correct is supported by the constitutional course recently adopted by H. E. the Governor of Bengal.

The Bar and professional courtesy.

We mentioned in our last issue that the late Mr. Inverarity and members of the Bar from other High Courts were allowed to appear before the Calcutta High Court without any objection from the Calcutta Bar. But the welcome we accorded to members of the Bombay Bar was denied to members of the Calcutta Bar when they went to Bombay to defend Balgangadhar Tilak in the Kesari sedition trial. As Mr. Inverarity was not available then for defending Mr. Tilak, the late Mr. L. P. Pugh, Mr. William Garth and Mr. J. Chaudhuri went down to defend Tilak in Bombay. On their arrival, the members of the Bombay Bar objected to their appearing on behalf of the defence, because they came from Calcutta and were not members of the Bombay Bar. When they applied formally to the Hon'ble Judges of the Bombay High Court for leave to appear, Mr. Pugh was given permission on the ground that no Counsel of his standing was available in Bombay but his juniors were not. Mr. Davar, who subsequently became a High Court Judge, appeared for Tilak as Mr. Pugh's junior. Mr. Garth and Mr. Chaudhuri, however, sat next to them for taking notes. As they sat there in their robes, some members of the Bombay Bar considered this too as an infringement of their privilege and they invited the attention of the Court to it, whereupon Mr. Justice Stratchey asked them to put away their gowns, which they did. They, however, remained in Court, watched the case, took notes and instructed Mr. Pugh as mere members of the public. This is a case which would be full of lessons to the Indian Bar Committee. We know of many subsequent occasions, when the members of the Calcutta Bar raised no objections to members from other Provincial Bars appearing before the Calcutta High Court in special cases in the interest of their clients.

A Redoubtable Litigant.

The death of Mr. Shrager, well-known in Calcutta, will recall to many of our readers what is known as the Old Furniture case. With reference to this case, our English contemporary, the Law Journal, writes as follows :—

"With the merits of the deceased gentleman's action against the antique furniture dealers, this journal has nothing to do. It is, however, impossible to withhold a certain professional admiration from a litigant so stout-hearted. For twenty-five days he bore the brunt in the Court of the Official Referee. Dissatisfied with the decision there, he appealed to the Divisional Court, and there he was bold enough to put forward the case that the cause had been placed in the list of a particular Official Referee by a process which was, not unfairly, described as "Jockeying." Ultimately the Court of Appeal dealt with the matter, partly in favour of and partly against the Appellant; but the Lords Justices all took occasion to animadvert on the irregularities that had attended the placing of the case in the list. Lord Justice Atkin, commenting on the fact that the Plaintiff naturally objected to a judge who was a near relative of his opponent's leading counsel, repeated Lord Reading's well-known dictum that—"It is of as much importance that justice should seem to be fairly administered as that it should in fact be so"; and he added: "To obtain by improper means a particular judge may be as bad as to obtain a particular judgment." These great principles, which should be engraved on the heart of every judge and officer of the law, were, then, asserted by the late Mr. Shrager, so that his litigious career, if it ruined him financially—as it is believed to have done—was, at any rate, of considerable value to the community."

The Bench and the Bar.

Talking about judicial unfairness, this commodity is not a monopoly of any one country. It exists wherever there are law courts, judges and lawyers. Personal likes and dislikes, social and political views, in fact, all the infirmities of body and mind to which man is subject, play their part in judicial pronouncements. It is for the public, and, in particular, the legal profession, to keep them within reasonable limits so that they may not result in any serious miscarriage of justice. Judges also will do well to remember that judicial scenes and proceedings take place in open Court, and that, although the public do not rush into print as often as they might, they are not slow to form their own views about judges and their idiosyncrasies. It cannot be too strongly impressed on them that they occupy a most responsible position and that as the present Lord Chief Justice remarked in the case of The King v. Hurst and others, that the rule of conduct for them "is that nothing is to be done which so much as creates even a suspicion that there has been an improper interference with the course of justice." While on this point we cannot do better than quote the following from Lord Bacon.

"Patience and gravity of bearing is an essential part of justice, and an overspeaking judge is no well-tuned cymbal. It is no grace in a judge first to find that which he might have heard in due course from the bar, or to show quickness of conceit in cutting off evidence or counsel too short or to prevent information by questions, though pertinent."

A great deal is now being said and written about the dignity of the legal profession and as to what steps should be taken to maintain it. The dignity of the profession, we need hardly point out, is in the hands of those who practise it. Differences between the Bench and the Bar will arise from time to time. It is to nobody's interest nor is it consistent with the dignity of the Bench and the Bar that they should be magnified. As Mr. Justice Richardson said in a case (reported in 27 C. W. N., at p. 98).

"After all men are human whether on the Bench or at the Bar and in the heat of the moment, or on the impulse of the moment expressions may be used on one side or the other which are not within the bounds of propriety, but in the great majority of such cases an apology or an expression of regret for over-hastiness in speech tendered and accepted in the right spirit would be sufficient to terminate the incident."

Where, however, a serious affront is offered to a member of the Bar, it is for him to do whatever he thinks necessary to maintain the dignity of his profession. He may do what Sir John Simon did the other day by openly calling for an explanation from Lord Birkenhead, the Ex-Chancellor and the presiding judge of the Court. Of course not many are in a position to do what Sir Simon did. But some undoubtedly are and the Bar looks to them to preserve its old traditions of independence and fearlessness.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Nainapillai Marakayar v. Ramanathan Chettiar, the appeal from Madras, is still being heard.

On Nov. 13, judgment was delivered by the Board in Obala Kondama Naicker Avergal v. K. Goundar (Madras), the appeal being allowed.

On Nov. 14, the judgment of the Full Board in Brij Narain v. Mangla Prasad was delivered by LORD DUNEDIN. The Board held that the prior mortgages were "antecedent debts" and allowed the appeal.

The following Criminal petitions were heard by a Board composed of VISCOUNT HALDANE, LORDS DUNEDIN and CARSON, SIR JOHN EDGE and SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS.

(1) Waryam Singh v. King-Emperor.

Mr. Dubé for the Petitioner.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Crown.

(2) Rustom v. King-Emperor and (3) Randhir Singh v. King-Emperor.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Jackson for the Petitioners in each application.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Crown.

In each case the Board pointed out that the alleged reasons put forward for the Petitioner were pleas which might be considered by a Court of Criminal Appeal but which were quite inadequate to justify an appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The Petitioners had been convicted of murder and had been sentenced to death, for special leave to appeal.

LORD DUNEDIN said that he had sat in a great many of such cases, but he did not remember any attempts so glaringly made as these to bring up for review a question of mere evidence. Of course, he could understand that a man who was going to be hanged clung at any straw and he could understand that counsel only obeyed instructions and did their duty in putting forward such petitions, but he thought that it ought to be clearly appreciated and recognized in India that there was not a chance of the Judicial Committee's turning itself into a mere Court of Criminal Appeal. They could not take up the two cases before them without making themselves such a Court.

Mr. Dunne, K. C., said that the difficulty in which counsel and solicitors were placed was that while as in these two cases they knew the application for leave to appeal was hopeless, their clients in India insisted on such applications.

LORD HALDANE said that it was very desirable that what LORD DUNEDIN had said should be well understood all over India. As for preventing people from appealing to the King-Emperor they must remember that they were dealing with the East and that people had a constitutional right to present these petitions for leave to appeal. But it was an idle form when it was a mere question of evidence. The sooner that was understood the better.

Mr. Dunne said these people, as LORD DUNEDIN had said, caught at the last straw, and it was difficult to persuade them that there was no chance of the petitions being granted. He hoped their Lordships' comments would be communicated to the various Courts and circulated all over India.

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

In Issue No. 2 of the current volume of the Calcutta Weekly Notes, Mr. Rajendra Nath Ghosh has raised some questions about sec. 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The first is: "Whether objection under this section can be raised by a tenant who has taken settlement from a person after he has become owner of the tenure by succession." In such cases the tenancies for which rents have been claimed were not in existence when the succession opened for the tenure-holder, and so the provisions of sec. 16 have no application.

The next question is whether a tenant can raise objection under that section when that objection having been raised in a previous suit was successfully met by the landlord on the ground of compliance. In such cases the judgment in the previous suit will show clearly that the landlord did comply with the provisions of sec. 16 and it being inter partes will operate as res judicata and this objection in the subsequent suit can be successfully met by the landlord by the production of the judgment of the previous suit.

Lastly, there is the case where the objection having been taken by the tenant was waived by him at the trial. This waiver on the part of the tenant did not require that point to be decided in that suit. The question therefore was kept open in that suit and the position is the same as if no such objection was taken in the suit. The matter, therefore, was not res judicata. The tenant can certainly raise that objection in a subsequent suit. Mr. Ghosh says that in such cases no succession has taken place after the successful rent suit. But sec. 16 is not concerned with that. It simply bars a decree being passed whenever there is a succession to a permanent tenure, and it applies to all rent suits brought after the succession.

Yours truly,

SURENDRA NATH ROY,

SALES IN EXECUTION (PRINCIPLES AND PRACTICE). By Swaminathan Iyer, Vakil, High Court, Madras. Second Edition; Madras Law Journal Office, 1923.

The troubles of a litigant in this country, specially in the mofussil, begin with the execution of a decree and its realization by sale. The dictum of Sir Barnes Peacock in this connection is well-known. The Viceroy also has been recently complaining about law's delay in India. This is chiefly to be attributable to the circumlocution of the procedure of execution and sale that obtains in this country. The author of the work under review has with a great deal of labour dealt with the subject analytically and evolved a systematic work on the subject. In the present edition, the addition of a chapter on attachment which is the first stage for bringing the property to sale has enhanced the usefulness of the work. A special treatment of the incidents of sale under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the Madras Rent Laws will add to the value of the work to practitioners in these Presidencies. The author has noticed the principles of English and American law in appropriate places. But he has taken care not to encumber his work by references to foreign decisions which are often confusing than otherwise. In America each State has its own laws and unless one can refer to their details, the decisions based upon their interpretation are of little help to us. The author has, however, devoted two chapters for explaining the principles of English and American law. The questions of Hindu and personal laws that may arise in the course of execution proceedings and sale are noticed in their appropriate places. The work is undoubtedly a very valuable guide to the difficulties that frequently arise between the decree stage and sales which lead to more complications than at any other stage of a suit.

NOTES

Appointment of Mr. Manmathanath Mukerjee as Judge of the Calcutta High Court.

The appointment of Mr. Manmathanath Mukerjee as an additional Judge of the Calcutta High Court to fill up the vacancy caused by the retirement of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee has given general satisfaction. Mr. Mukerjee is in the prime of his life, though he has already put in more than twenty-five years' practice, during the greater part of which he has been one of the leading practitioners on the Criminal Appellate Side of the Calcutta High Court and latterly the leader of the bar on that side. Besides being firmly grounded in the principles and practice of law, he possesses balance of judgment and a strong common sense; he is also by nature patient, courteous and painstaking, all of which are qualities which should provide the coping-stone for the building up of a successful career as a Judge. He is popular with the bar and possesses the respect and confidence of the Judges. We welcome him to his new office with pleasure.

Selection of Ministers by Governor.

We congratulate H. E. the Governor of Bengal for having followed a perfectly parliamentary course in the selection of ministers. He has also displayed a true statesman-like tact and judgment before making his final choice in favour of Mr. Surendra Nath Mallik and Moulavi Fazlul Huq—both of whom are very capable men. As H. E. the Governor's action has been variously criticised in the public press, we have no hesitation in repeating that the course followed by him is strictly constitutional and in accordance with the established conventions of the British and Dominion Parliaments. We were the first to suggest in these columns that the Swarajya party should try to form a coalition with the Independents and their other sympathisers and in that case we felt confident that the Governor would ask them to form a ministry to take charge of the transferred department. H. E. Lord Lytton exactly fulfilled our expectations in this respect and scored over Mr. C. R. Das and very skilfully put him in a rather embarrassing and awkward position. If Mr. Das had formed a coalition he would have had to act with responsibility to the members of the Coalition. If on the other hand he had assumed office with only 45 followers pledged to the party's policy of obstruction or destruction, he and his brother ministers could not have remained in office for many days. The next offer of ministry to the so-called Independent party was a no less adroit move. The Independent party under Mr. Chakravarti did not exceed a dozen in strength. Even if they had joined the Swarajya party the total strength of the coalition could hardly have exceeded 57 in a House of 140. But the Independents are not wholesale obstructionists, so coalition between them and the Swarajya party was not possible. His Excellency did well in giving Mr. Chakravarti a chance of forming a party. Since he could not find a sufficient following from the rest of the House, the attempt of Mr. Chakravarti to form a ministry naturally failed.

It is by such a process of elimination that His Excellency as a last resort has selected Mr. Mallik and Mr. Huq as ministers, which is very appropriately described in the Government communique given below :—

His Excellency the Governor then invited Mr. B. Chakravarty, the leader of the Independent Nationalist group, to become a Minister in coalition with representatives of other groups in the Council. Mr. Chakravarty after consulting his followers, agreed to take office if the other two Ministers were also selected from his own party, but was not prepared to enter a coalition Ministry. As the Independent Nationalist group was not large enough to secure a majority over all other parties, and as the reasons given by Mr. Das for refusing to take office must necessarily also prevent his followers from supporting any Minister who tried to work within the present constitution, Mr. Chakravarty's proposal was not acceptable and His Excellency was therefore obliged to select his Ministers from among other groups in the Council. He has appointed Mr. Surendra Nath Mallick to take charge of the portfolio of Local Self-Government and Public Health and Maulvi A. K. Fazlul-Huq to take charge temporarily of Education, Agriculture and Industries until a third Minister is appointed, when the distribution of the portfolios will be reconsidered. The new Ministers will take over their duties on January 2nd.

Apprehension is expressed in the public press that if Mr. Mallik's election is set aside in the result of the election petition that is now pending, Lord Lytton may have to change his minister. We have explained in these columns before that under sec. 52 (2) of the Government of India Act, Mr. Mallik may continue in office for six months, if he can command the confidence of the House, and in such a case the Governor would not have to remove him till his re-election within such period.

His Excellency has acted very wisely in offering the ministry last of all to a party who together with the official block in the House may be able to command a majority. If he had done so at the very outset, it would have met with much adverse criticism. That Lord Lytton has effectively disarmed criticism is evident from the fact that even the organ of the Swarajya party has paid a handsome tribute to his statesmanship by admitting that he has acted constitutionally and sympathetically. If this spirit of giving credit where credit is due and of opposing or condemning measures which deserve condemnation prevails it would surely make for much more orderly progress.

Gladstone as Colonial Secretary when not in Parliament.

In our last issue we cited the instance of Mr. Gladstone continuing in office as a Cabinet Minister for some months without a seat in Parliament, to explain the provision of sec. 52 (2) of the Government of India Act. Unfortunately the words "Colonial Secretary" were misprinted as "Council Secretary." But the fact is so well-known that, we expect, it is not likely to mislead any one. Still it is worth while referring to it with greater precision to refresh public memory. It was on the 20th of December 1845 that Gladstone was appointed Secretary of State for the Colonies in the Peel Ministry and vacated his seat in the House of Commons for Newark but did not get re-elected. He, however, continued in office as Cabinet Minister and Colonial Secretary till the 28th of June 1846 when he went out of office with his chief, Sir Robert Peel. It will be seen that the period for which he remained in office as Cabinet Minister without being a member of Parliament was six months. The limit of time that has been adopted in the Government of India Act is the same.

The Bar and professional courtesy and etiquette.

We publish in another column a letter from Mr. B. Misra of Darbhanga alleging that the Bombay Bar only retaliated when permission was refused to Mr. Garth and Mr. Chaudhuri to appear in the Bombay High Court because the Calcutta Bar had on a previous occasion objected to Mr. Rattigan appearing with Mr. Inverarity in the Jacob Diamond case. We have no desire to re-open the old controversy regarding Mr. Rattigan. That the reason why the Calcutta Bar objected to his appearing with Mr. Inverarity was quite different from the ground on which Mr. Garth and Mr. Chaudhuri were refused permission would have been evident to our correspondent if he had paid attention to the fact (he himself mentions) and tried to appreciate its significance. It is very ordinary professional etiquette amongst Counsel that after one has appeared in a case and done part of the work it is improper on the part of a client to cancel his engagement and engage another Counsel in his place. A Counsel (i.e., a barrister-at-law) cannot sue his client for such arbitrary cancellation of engagement but the professional etiquette that prevails amongst them furnishes a sufficient remedy, if he choses to enforce it. When such engagement is cancelled, no other Counsel can appear in the case without his leave or permission. In case of infringement of the rule, he would report to the Bar and the Bar would take the necessary steps to prevent a breach of such professional etiquette. It is for such reasons that the Calcutta Bar had objected to Mr. Rattigan supplanting Mr. Manamohan Ghose who was his senior by many years and the Calcutta High Court did not allow such a breach of professional etiquette. We must also say in common fairness that, except in cases of infringement of professional etiquette, the Calcutta Bar has always welcomed members of the Bar from other Presidencies and Provinces when they have come to the Calcutta High Court at the request of their clients. For instance, no objection was taken to Mr. Ross Alston appearing in the case of Capt. Hearsay v. The Pioneer, although Mr. Alston was then junior to many members of the Calcutta Bar. It was also not very long ago that Mr. Macinerny of the Karachi Bar, also junior to many at the Calcutta Bar, appeared in a case against the Calcutta Tramway Co. in the Calcutta High Court without any body objecting to it. The late Mr. Pherozsha Mehta, during his stay in Calcutta as member of the Imperial Legislative Council, was elected as an honorary member of the Calcutta Bar Library club.

THE RETIREMENT OF SIR ASUTOSH MOOKERJEE.

Sir Asutosh Mookerjee's intensely active career as a Judge of the Calcutta High Court comes to a close with to-day. To have been a Judge of the High Court for nearly twenty years and to have retired from the Bench in the full possession of powers and faculties which the youngest and most brilliant of his colleagues may well envy would have been distinction enough, measured by ordinary standards, but Sir Asutosh Mookerjee's is just one of those personalities which do not admit of being measured by ordinary standards. Great as he has been as a Judge and indefatigable though he has been in the discharge of his duties, the fact is obvious that they proved all too insufficient to give full occupation to his exceptional abilities. Amonst the tributes paid to him by the Bench and the Bar on the eve of the closing of the Courts for the Christmas holidays, that from his Lordship the Chief Justice struck the right note when he remarked that the many activities of the retiring Judge presented a proposition of such dimensions that he despaired of being able to deal with them at the short time at his disposal. His Lordship also gave correct expression to the passing thought of every one present when he said that Sir Asutosh's had been an outstanding personality not only in the Court, and not merely in Bengal but throughout the whole of India. We may add that it is owing to want of opportunities (which again is due mainly to the subordinate position that India holds in the Council of Nations and the unfavourable political conditions of the country which cramps and paralyses all indigenous talent) that Sir Asutosh is not at this moment one of the outstanding personalities of the world. Learning, courage, organising power, capacious memory, keen intellect, unlimited capacity for industry and a masterful personality are amongst the qualities that have helped him to push his way to the front rank amongst his contemporaries in this country. Although we have differed from him at times on public questions, yet we have never failed to recognise that the Bar, the Bench, the Calcutta University and its associated activities have failed to provide adequate scope for the unusually rich heritage of faculties and powers which by nature is his and which unlike many men similarly endowed he has spared no pains to cultivate and develop.

Speaking of Sir Asutosh's judicial career, the outstanding feature is undoubtedly his erudition. His reported judgments which touch and illuminate almost every topic of legal learning, collected together, would cover volumes. It will be years before it will be possible to appraise correctly at their real worth the services he has rendered in exploring and interpreting a system of laws which is not the less difficult of application and elucidation because it is so largely and incoherently statutory. With untiring industry and wide research he carried on for twenty years a work initiated by the late Sir Bhashyam Ayyangar during his all too short tenure of office as a High Court Judge. This alone would have been sufficient to perpetuate his memory as one of the most eminent Judges and lawyers India has produced. But the quality and quantity of his written opinions, however remarkable by themselves, form but a small part of his claim to remembrance as a Judge. His manner of dealing with cases in Court was ideal from the point of view as well of the parties concerned as of the legal practitioners appearing for them. His relations with the latter were of the happiest and that not in the conventional sense only. A deeply learned and knowing lawyer may, and as we know often does, prove a most trying person on the Bench. He is apt to be impatient of the facts and contemptuous of the law sought to be presented before him. But Sir Asutosh's avidity for getting in and analysing all the relevant facts in every case that came before him and his longing for knowing all the law bearing thereon was extraordinary. His attitude therefore to the members of the Bar appearing before him was always of one desirous of knowing and expecting to be informed. The veriest junior had therefore no occasion to feel diffident over his case, if he had real assistance to render to the Bench, and work well and conscientiously done whether by junior or senior never failed of quick and generous recognition. In the appreciation of merit, whether on the Bench or outside, Sir Asutosh was absolutely impersonal. His courtesy towards members of the Bar—and indeed towards all with whom he came into contact—has always been unassumed and cordial. It is owing to this that through the bitterest of controversies, of which a man of his varied activities, accustomed to give and receive hard knocks, has often inevitably found himself the target, his genuine hold on the admiration of his countryman has never waned.

Sir Asutosh's retirement from office is a grievous loss to the Bench and to the public. Nevertheless, we venture to think that the loss to the latter through his absorption in the work of the High Court and the University, great as that work has been intrinsically, is even greater. Looking back to the day when he accepted the Judgeship, when Lord Ampthill was Governor-General, we cannot help thinking that had he remained at the Bar and taken his share in the political life of the country, he would have found work to-day more commensurate with his commanding abilities. Even now, it is impossible to believe that these, liberated as they have been from the calls of an exacting office, will not hereafter be placed more freely at the service of his countrymen in the very critical times through which they are now passing. Sir Asutosh retires from the Bench with his faculties unimpaired and his capacity for work and labour and his influence over the educated community undiminished. It lies in him to make this day, the day of his retirement, the turning point for a new career. Is it too much to expect that he will respond to the call, when the call comes?

SIR A. MOOKERJEE'S RETIREMENT.

TRIBUTES FROM BENCH AND BAR.

Mr. Justice Mookerjee bade farewell to the High Court, Calcutta, on the 21st of December last at the rising of the Court for the Christmas vacation after a distinguished career on the Bench for over 20 years.

Members representing every branch of the legal profession assembled in the Court of the Chief Justice, when the Vakils' Association presented an address to the retiring Judge.

The address, which was read by Babu Basanta Kumar Bose, (President of the Association) was as follows:—

"It is with feelings of the deepest regret that we, the Members of the Vakils' Association, approach your Lordship to bid you farewell on the eve of your retirement from the Bench, which you have so conspicuously adorned for the last twenty years.

Your career as a Judge has been characterised throughout by profound learning, great ability, marked independence, untiring patience and uniform courtesy, qualities by which you have always commanded the respect and admiration of all branches of the profession.

Your successful and brilliant career as a Judge is a source of pride to the members of the profession to which you belonged, and will ever remain an illustrious example to the body.

While discharging your arduous duties as a Judge, you have not been sparing in your labours for the advancement of the country in educational and other matters. As a Fellow of the Calcutta University for the last thirty-five years, and as its second Indian Vice-Chancellor you secured to the graduates of the University many valuable privileges and you have always worked for the welfare of our youths with singular zeal and wisdom.

And now in taking leave of you, my Lord, we fervently hope and pray that many years of health and strength may yet be vouchsafed to you to work with greater vigour in various spheres of usefulness for the Motherland."

Mr. B. L. Mitter, acting Advocate-General, on behalf of the Bar, associated himself with the address read by Babu Basanta Kumar Bose. Mr. Justice Mookerjee's services in educational, literary, scientific and social spheres were, he said, well-known. Apart from his outstanding personality and the brilliance of his career on the Bench, he had earned the esteem and affection of the Bar by his invariable courtesy, quick appreciation and constant encouragement of diffident merit. No junior felt diffident in his Court where good law was administered. In the maze and labyrinth of adjudged cases he had walked with firm step holding aloft the torch of justice. "May you long be spared," Mr. Mitter concluded, "in the service of the country. We bid farewell with a heavy heart."

Sir Deva Prosad Sarbadicary, in the unavoidable absence of the President of the Incorporated

Law Society, associated himself and his colleagues whole-heartedly with the sentiments that had been so admirably expressed in the address presented by the vakils and endorsed by the Advocate-General. The void created by Sir Asutosh's retirement would be difficult to fill. In his activities outside the Court, whether in the University, Asiatic Society, Mathematical Society or various other interests with which he had been identified, Mr. Justice Mookerjee had always worked with a whole-hearted devotion that would be difficult to equal or replace.

The Hon'ble the Chief Justice said:—

My learned brothers and I join in the expressions of regret which have been made at the Bar with reference to the retirement of Mr. Justice Mookerjee. The many activities of the learned Judge present a proposition of such dimensions that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to deal adequately with it in the short time which is at my disposal. I feel however, that it is not necessary for me to dwell upon them at any length because the learned Judge and his strenuous life are well-known to you all. The point which is uppermost in my mind, and which I desire to emphasise, is that I am sure that among all his interests—and their number is legion—those which have been, and, I believe, always will be, dear to his heart are the welfare of this Court and the profession to which he belongs. In all that he has done during the many years that he has sat on the Bench I am convinced that he has been actuated by one desire only, namely, to maintain the great traditions of the Court and to promote the administration of justice in all its branches.

His great knowledge, his wonderful memory and his untiring energy have been devoted to this purpose for nearly twenty years and his service in this respect will always be remembered and will constitute a record of which any man is entitled to be proud. He has been an outstanding personality, not only in the Court, but also in Bengal, and I think I may say with propriety that his name has been known and his influence felt throughout the whole of India. Though he is retiring from the Bench, I am confident that he will continue to take a lively interest in the welfare of the Court and the profession and I hope that the relations between him and the Judges of this Court, which have been so cordial in the past, will long continue in the future.

Though I am sorry to say he is not in the best of health at the moment, I sincerely hope that the rest which he has so well deserved will soon restore him to his usual robustness and that he may be privileged to enjoy good health for many years. I feel sure that opportunities will present themselves for doing much useful work in other capacities.

In conclusion, I desire to take this opportunity of acknowledging my own indebtedness to my learned brother for the unfailing and loyal assistance which he has always rendered to me as Chief Justice of this Court.

The Hon'ble Mr. Justice Mookerjee in reply said:—

The addresses which you have just delivered have afforded me the greatest gratification. It is impossible for a Judge to receive such addresses on the eve of his retirement from office without feeling greatly honoured and, at the same time, without being deeply affected. To be told, as I have been told, that I have earned the esteem and affection of the members of the profession by my patience, courtesy and encouragement of diffident merit and to receive that assurance in the terms which have just been addressed to me by so learned and independent a body as those whom I am now addressing is a matter of true self-congratulation.

During the 20 years that I have been privileged to administer justice in the name of my Sovereign in this great Court, I have never spared myself in the discharge of my responsible duties. You have referred to my knowledge of law and to my efforts to hold aloft the torch of justice in the maze and labyrinth of adjudged cases. I have worked strenuously in the firm belief that without great labour success cannot be attained and that it would have been impossible otherwise to do justice in dealing with those important and abstruse questions which have come before me for adjudication in the course of my career.

But notwithstanding diligent study of the Science of Law for more than a third of a century, I have now a more profound and abiding sense of ignorance than oppressed me in the beginning of my career. I have ever felt that it would have been almost impossible for me to arrive at sound and correct conclusions without the valuable assistance which I have always derived from the members of an intelligent, learned and independent legal profession. I frankly and gratefully acknowledge my debt to the distinguished practitioners whose arguments have been characterised by learning, ingenuity and research. But for such assistance I could not have realized even to a limited extent, my desire to decide every case upon its merits, to administer justice according to right and to act upon the true and sound principles of justice, equity and good conscience.

You have referred to my independence as a Judge. I have throughout endeavoured strenuously to hold the scales of justice even and to treat alike all litigants without distinction of caste, creed, race or position, regardless of the status of the Counsel engaged before me, whether Barrister or Vakil, whether senior or junior. I have tried uniformly to keep wide open the gates of justice so that every litigant who considered, rightly or wrongly, that he had a grievance, might not have his cause summarily rejected and might have the fullest opportunity to place his case fully on the merits before the highest tribunal—the ultimate Court of Appeal in the land.

My ambition has been to attain the ideal of Judicial administration, to hear patiently, to consider diligently, to understand rightly, to decide justly. It is for others to judge what measure of success I may have achieved, notwithstanding inevitable errors of judgment.

I have now, gentlemen, to bid you all collectively farewell. It is my sincere wish that you may all enjoy health, happiness and prosperity, and that you maintain the highest dignity and noblest tradition of the profession to which we all belong, for I am firmly convinced that the function of this Court as the potent instrument for the administration of justice amongst the people of this land can be completely fulfilled, only with the aid of a learned, independent and respectable legal profession.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The Judicial Committee have not been hearing Indian appeals for the past 10 days, owing to the illness of LORD CARSON who was a member of the Board hearing the part-heard case of Mirza Abid Husain Khan v. Mt. Kaniz Fatima (Oudh). The hearing of this appeal was commenced on Nov. 23rd. The question at issue is whether the Appellant, a mortgagee in possession, was entitled to charge the legal representatives of the deceased mortgagor with enhancements of Government revenue and local cesses.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and E. B. Raikes represent the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and S. Hyam for the Respondent.

On Dec. 6th the hearing was commenced of an appeal from the Central Provinces, Waman Ganesh v. Sarnbai. The validity of a Will is in question. The trial Judge found in favour of the Will but the Appellate Court was of opinion that the evidence in support of it was not satisfactory or strong enough.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and S. Hyam for the Appellant.

Mr. L. M. Parikh for the Respondent.

Judgment was reserved.

Nov. 15th was the sixth day occupied in the hearing of the appeal from Madras, Nainapillai Marakayar v. Ramanathan Chettiar. The Respondents, represented on this appeal by Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown, filed the suit as trustees of a temple in Korilur to recover possession of certain lands from the Appellants. The Respondents claim both Meluvaram and Kudiram rights. The Appellants contend that the temple is the owner of the Meluvaram right alone. The Appellants are represented by Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. K. V. L. Narasimham.

Judgment was reserved.

Nov. 16. Kaju Mal v. Salig Ram (Lahore). This appeal referred to the Kangra Valley Tea Estate. The Plaintiff successfully established his right to pre-empt certain portions of the estate. The Plaintiff was successful in both the lower Courts, and his Counsel Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. W. Wallach were not called upon to defend the judgment of the Chief Court.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Hyam appeared for the Appellant. The appeal was dismissed.

Nov. 16th and 19th. Raghunath Sahu v. Saraju Prasad Sahu (Patna). The Respondents sued to recover the amount due under a mortgage. The Appellant resisted payment on the ground that the rate of interest was excessive, penal and unconscionable.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., H. N. Sen and R. Majid for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Hyam for the Respondent. Judgment was reserved.

Nov. 19th and 20th. Ma Thaung v. Ma Than (Upper Burma). The contest centres round the estate of U. Nyein, a wealthy Burman Buddhist who died in 1914. The children by his first wife claim a share in his property, their claim is resisted by the Respondent, the second wife, who contends that U. Nyein during his life-time and in view of his approaching marriage with the Respondent divided his inheritance among his children.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C., Parikh and Maung San Wa for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.

Judgment was reserved.

Nov. 20th, 22nd and 23rd. Md. Raza v. Syed Yadgar Hussain (C. P.). In this appeal the question for determination is whether a religious foundation is or is not a wakf. The founder was a Hindu and an objection has been raised that a Hindu cannot found a wakf.

The Appellant who was represented by Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and A. Majid contended that a valid wakf had been created and that he was the mutwalli.

Judgment was reserved.

Nov. 23rd. In Maung P. Kaing v. Maung Pau Maung, Mr. E. B. Raikes applied for special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The applicant, he informed the Board, had been successful in the first Court but had lost an appeal. There were 8 connected suits, in each of which the value was over Rs. 10,000. Owing to an error on the part of his legal adviser, who advised that he had 6 months in which to apply for leave to appeal to the Privy Council, the Petitioner was out of time in making his application in the High Court which decided that the fault of a legal adviser was not sufficient cause for granting an extension of time and they refused leave. Leave was refused by the Board.

The following judgments have been delivered.

On November 26th. Pujari Lakshmana Goundan v. Subramania Ayyar (Madras). The appeal was dismissed. Baijnath Singh v. Jamal Bros. & Co., Ld. (Upper Burma). The appeal was dismissed.

On November 23rd. India Gen. Nav. & Ry. Co., Ld. v. Dekhari Tea Co., Ld. (Bengal). The appeal was dismissed.

On November 26th. Mahreddi Ayyareddi v. Adusumilli Gopala Krishnaya (Madras). The appeal was dismissed.

On November 29th. Sm. Nagendrabala Dasi v. Dinanath Mahish (Bengal). The appeal was dismissed.

On Nov. 30. Kanga v. Kanga. The appeal was allowed.

On Dec. 6th, arguments were heard and judgment delivered dismissing the appeal in Haji Hedayatulla v. Mahomed Kamil (Bengal).

Mr. W. Wallach for the Appellant contended that the High Court were in error in ordering that the representatives of a deceased partner were entitled to the share in the business, carried on by the surviving partners, which the deceased would have taken had he been alive.

Mr. Abdul Majid for the Respondents was not called upon.

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

DEAR SIR,

In the last two numbers of the C. W. N. you have been referring to the Jacob Diamond case of Hyderabad. You have said that the Calcutta High Court allowed Mr. Inverarity to appear for Mr. Jacob in Calcutta, but under similar circumstances the members of the Bombay Bar opposed the appearance of Messrs. Garth and Chowdhry in Bombay and allowed only Mr. Pugh to appear for Mr. Tilak. I fear your memory is not correct. Mr. Inverarity and Mr. Rattigan both had applied to appear for Mr. Jacob. The Calcutta Bar raised no objection to the appearance of Mr. Inverarity but objected to the appearance of Mr. Rattigan on the ground that Mr. Monomohan Ghosh had appeared for Mr. Jacob in the earlier stage of the case and was sufficient for Mr. Jacob's defence, there being no reason why Mr. Ghosh should be given up by Mr. Jacob. This was done with the consent of Sir Charles Paul and Sir J. T. (then Mr.) Woodroffe. The Calcutta High Court thereupon refused permission to Mr. Rattigan who, however, being a part proprietor of the Pioneer and the Civil and Military Gazette raised a great noise in those papers. The members of the Bombay Bar therefore only retaliated when they opposed the appearance of Messrs. Garth and Chowdhry and did not oppose the appearance of Mr. Pugh. I hope you will kindly refer to this subject in your editorial in a future issue of your paper if only to show that you are not averse to state a fact against your own argument.

Your Sincerely,
BHUWANESWAR MISRA,

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY and SUHRAWARDY, JJ. M. A. Nos. 138 AND 139 OF 1923. KALI CHURAN BANIK, Appellant v. MON MOHAN BANIK, Respondent. The 23rd November 1923.

Indian Stamp Act, secs. 35 and 36, Art. 5—Deed of reference to arbitration, when to be stamped.

A dispute relating to the common boundary of the lands belonging to the Appellant and the Respondent respectively was referred to the arbitration of three persons named in the deed of reference which was duly stamped under Art. 5 of the Stamp Act. Subsequently one of the persons failing to act, the parties appointed another person in his place by a written document which was not stamped. An award was given by these persons whereby it was held that the land in suit belonged to the Appellant. The Respondent thereafter instituted a suit for the recovery of the same ignoring the award and the Respondent filed a cross suit to enforce the award. The Court of first instance admitted in evidence the second deed by realizing a penalty under sec. 61 of the Stamp Act. It was held at the trial that it did not require to be stamped and in any event under sec. 36 the question as to the insufficiency of the stamp would not be raised and dismissed the Respondent's suit and decreed the Appellant's one. The lower Appellate Court held otherwise and remanded the suit for adjudication upon merits:

Held per WALMSLEY, J.—That the question about the insufficiency of stamp could not be raised in the suit and that the award based upon reference insufficiently stamped or not stamped could not be said to be invalid and the Court had jurisdiction to enforce it. 27 C. W. N. 513, followed.

Held per SUHRAWARDY, J., also—That the deed appointing an arbitrator in the place of the one named in the original deed of reference did not require to be stamped under Art. 5 of the Stamp Act.

Dr. S. C. Bysack (with him Babu Kanai Lal Saha) for the Appellant.

Babu Rupendra Coomer Mitter for the Respondent.

S. C. C. Appeal allowed with costs.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before NEWBOULD AND B. B. GHOSE, JJ. CIVIL REVISION CASE NOS. 521 AND 522 OF 1923. KULO CHANDER BISHARAD, Decree-holder, Petitioner v. SHEIKH ASMATALI, Judgment-debtor, Opposite Party. The 26th November 1923.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 141, Or. 9, r. 9, Or. 21, r. 2, Or. 41, r. 1 (c), sec. 115—Dismissal of application under Or. 21, r. 2 for default, rejection of application under Or. 9, r. 9 for restoration, if appealable—Or. 9, if applicable to applications under Or. 21—Operation of sec. 141.

The Petitioner applied for execution of a mortgage-decree in the Court of the Munsif of Brahmanberia on 9th January 1922. The judgment-debtor, Opposite Party, filed an objection under Or. 21, r. 2, Civil Procedure Code, which was fixed for hearing as miscellaneous case No. 96 of 1922 and was dismissed for his non-appearance on 28th August 1922. He thereupon applied under Or. 9, r. 9 for setting aside the said order of dismissal, dated the said 28th August 1922. The Munsif dismissed the judgment-debtor's application on the merits. The judgment-debtor then preferred an appeal against the Munsif's order of dismissal to the Court of the District Judge of Tipperah. The question before the learned District Judge was as to the competency of this appeal, who, overruling the (decree-holder) Petitioner's objection, was of opinion that an appeal lay in his Court under Or. 41, r. 1 (c) and set aside the Munsif's judgment of dismissal upon facts.

The question for adjudication in this rule was whether sec. 141 made the procedure laid down in Or. 9, applicable to the application, which was made before the Munsif by the judgment-debtor, Opposite Party, if not, whether the Munsif's order dismissing the Opposite Party's application under Or. 9, r. 9 was applicable under Or. 41, r. 1 (c):

Held—That the procedure laid down in Or. 9 does not apply to application made under Or. 21 and therefore the order of the Munsif on the Opposite Party's application under Or. 9, r. 9 for setting aside the order of dismissal for default passed on his application under Or. 21, r. 2 was not appealable and so the order passed on appeal was ultra vires and without jurisdiction.

Charoo Chander Ghose v. Chandi Charan Rai Chowdhuri, 19 C. W. N. 25, Bhubun Behary Nag v. Dhirendra Nath Banerji, 20 C. W. N. 1203, Diljan Nichha Bibi v. Hemanto Kumar Roy, 19 C. W. N. 758, Thakur Prasad v. Fakirulla, 17 A. 106; 22 I. A. 144 and Bunkoo Behary Ganguly v. Nilmadhub Chatterjee, 18 C. 635, referred to.

This rule was originally heard by Mr. Justice Chotzner who referred the case to a Division Bench.

Babu Gopal Chander Dass for the Petitioner.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party who was represented by vakils before Mr. Justice Chotzner.

NOTES

Knighthood conferred on Mr. Justice Greaves.

It is with pleasure we note that a Knighthood has been conferred on Mr. Justice Greaves on the New Year's day. Sir Ewart Greaves is the seniormost Barrister Judge of the Calcutta High Court. He has always been noted as a very patient and painstaking Judge and his relations with the Bar have been unexceptionable. His regard for justice, equable temper and bearing on the Bench have made him popular with the profession and the public alike. As the President of the Committee appointed by the Bengal Government for reporting on the question of the separation of the judicial and executive functions, he has done very valuable work in formulating a scheme for such separation. His report is marked by his sympathy with the popular demand in this respect. The local Legislature and the Government ought to take into consideration the report and give effect to it at an early date. A Knighthood conferred on him is honouring one to whom honour is due.

Sankaritola Post Office Murder Case.

Beside raising important questions of law, this case has raised certain questions of practice. Cl. 26 of the Letters Patent authorises the Advocate-General to certify that there is an error in the decision of a point or points of law, decided by the original court, or that a point or points of law which has or have been decided by the said court should be further considered. But it does not indicate the procedure to be followed by him when he is called upon to grant a certificate. In the present case, the Advocate-General gave his certificate on a petition by the accused, after consulting the defence Counsel. At the hearing of the reference, Counsel for the Crown made a grievance in that he had not been consulted before the certificate was granted. There is a great deal of substance in his grievance having regard to the fact that the petition contained a few incorrect statements. Mookerjee, J., after making inquiries about previous practice, has settled the procedure to be followed in future. "The certificate of the Advocate-General," he said, "which reflects his judgment and is naturally entitled to respect, should be granted after he has heard representatives of the prisoner and of the Crown and has carefully considered all the materials whose accuracy had been verified by Counsel or other responsible persons." With these observations, Richardson, J., generally concurred.

It is unfortunate that no proper record is kept of the proceedings of the Criminal Sessions of the High Court. The result is that at the hearing of references before the Full Bench under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent, serious differences between the trial Judge and Counsel occasionally arise as regards what actually transpired in Court. The principle is well-settled that "when the Court is called upon to review a cause under cl. 26 of the Letters Patent, it will accept as unquestionable the statement of the trial Judge as to what actually took place before him in Court." But although much may be said in support of this principle on grounds of policy and expediency, it is neither grounded in rules of common sense nor of justice. In the present case, the accused, when called upon to answer to the charge under sec. 394 of the Indian Penal Code, it appears from the minutes kept by the Clerk of the Crown, answered "yes." But we are informed by his Counsel as well as by many of those actually present in Court that his answer was, yes, subject to the reservation that he did not hurt, the actual Bengali words used by him being কিন্তু আমি মারি নাই। The trial Judge's minutes threw no light on what the accused actually said. And so Mookerjee, J., appears to have accepted the answer as taken down by the Clerk of the Crown as the accused's answer to the charge under sec. 394. Fortunately, in the present case, nothing turned on the point as to what the accused's answer really was. But in any other case, the point might be of the utmost importance to the accused or the Crown. In these circumstances, we strongly urge upon His Lordship the Chief Justice to give effect to the recommendations of Mookerjee and Page, JJ., by appointing competent stenographers to take accurate shorthand notes of proceedings at the High Court Sessions. It will be their duty to take in shorthand everything that occurs at the trial, so that if there is a reference to the Full Bench, the latter may be in a position to form as good an opinion as is possible when reading the transcript.

One of the special features of this case was supplied by the unusual step which was taken by the defence Counsel in approaching the trial Judge, immediately before the trial, with certain proposals on behalf of the accused. At the hearing of the reference, this incident was brought to the notice of the Court. Mookerjee, J., commented on it in very strong terms. But we take this opportunity to point out that irregularities in the administration of justice in this country are not by any means rare. Not many years ago, Mr. Gibbons, then Advocate-General, withdrew, on behalf of the Crown, cases against certain gentlemen involving very serious charges, although he was confident that the prosecution was in a position to prove the cases up to the hilt. It is a notorious fact that in the Police Courts in Bankshall Street and Jorabagan, the parties are allowed to compromise criminal cases involving charges of cheating, defalcation of accounts, etc., with the knowledge and consent of the Magistrate. Even in the High Court Sessions, we hear, arrangements are sometimes arrived at as the result of compromise and given effect to solemnly in open Court. It is to be hoped that after what has happened in the present case, these irregularities will not be encouraged by those who are responsible for the administration of justice. Cheating is now a compoundable offence. Still the Courts ought to see that a criminal process is not abused for the realization of civil claims.

THE STAMP AMENDMENT ACT: ACT XLIII of 1923.

The recent amendment of the Stamp Act, Imperial Act, XLIII of 1923, raises a question of considerable difficulty. The Act received the assent of the Governor-General in Council on the 1st October 1923 and was published in the Fort St. George Gazette on the 16th October 1923. The Act does not say when it comes into operation. Under the General Clauses Act, sec. 5 (1), this Act would come into operation on the 1st October 1923. Documents dealt with under this Act and taken by parties between the 1st and 16th October 1923 have naturally been stamped under the old law. Promissory notes which have been taken between those two dates with an one anna stamp under the old law would require to be stamped with two annas and four annas respectively according as the amounts covered by them exceed Rs. 250 or Rs. 1,000. A suit to enforce a promissory note for more than Rs. 250 and executed between these two dates would be unsustainable as the document could not be put in evidence and stamp-penalty could not be levied therefor. (Vide secs. 35, 40 and 41 of the Stamp Act). This result was apparently not foreseen and the legislature should take the earliest opportunity of giving legislative sanction to such documents taken before the 16th October 1923, or what is more reasonable, the Act itself should be made to operate from a date certain, of which the public could have due notice.

Another question arises with reference to sec. 47 of the Stamp Act. It would appear that the section was formerly applicable to bills of exchange and promissory notes chargeable with a duty of one anna. If so, promissory notes payable on demand which are now chargeable with a duty of more than one anna will be outside the scope of this section. This aspect also does not appear to have been considered by the legislature.

Further the application of sec. 47 to promissory notes even under the old Act is itself an anomaly, as the very person who is bound to affix the stamp is enabled thereby to charge the payee with the stamp duty which he himself had defaulted to pay. (Vide 19 Bom. 635 at p. 639).

Instruments chargeable under the old Act with a duty of one anna under Arts. 19, 36, 37 and 52 are by the new Act made chargeable with two annas. The result of this is that these documents have now become immune from the disabilities which formerly attached to them under secs. 35, 40 and 41 of the Stamp Act in case of such documents not being duly stamped. The Madras Stamp Amendment Act VI of 1922 when it made a similar enhancement of duty on mortgage of crop, Art. 34 (a) of Sch. I (a), from one anna to two annas, correspondingly amended secs. 35, 40 and 41 by bringing it within the exceptions in those sections.

Another question of interest arises as to how promissory notes with a duty of two annas and four annas are to be taken. Sec. 11 of the Stamp Act permits the use of adhesive stamps for instruments chargeable with a duty of one anna. R. 5 of the Government of India Stamp Rules made under the Act provides : "A promissory note or bill of exchange shall, except as provided by sec. 11 or rr. 13 and 17, be written on paper on which a stamp of the proper value with or without the word 'Hundi' has been engraved or embossed." It would therefore appear that promissory notes for more than Rs. 250 should be engrossed on general stamp paper or impressed sheets bearing the word "Hundi." This result has one advantage, that it will now be more difficult to forge or ante-date such pronotes. It is, however, attended with some amount of inconvenience to bankers and money-lenders who are accustomed to keep printed forms and do business on a large scale.

It is not unlikely that promissory notes are taken with "postage and revenue" stamps of the requisite value exceeding one anna in ignorance of the rule referred to above. In such cases the remedy will be under r. 18 of the Government of India Stamp Rules, by a suitable application to the Collector.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Dec. 6th. The argument was concluded and judgment reserved in Waman Ganesh v. Sarnbai, an appeal from the C. P., in which the validity of a Will was in question.

Haji Hedayetulla v. Mahomed Kamil, an appeal from Calcutta, was argued on behalf of the Appellant by Mr. W. Wallach.

On the death of a partner in a hardware business part of his assets was retained in the business by the surviving partner. The Respondents were the representatives of the deceased partner and claimed an account of the business after the death of the deceased. The order of the High Court declared their interest to be the same as that of the deceased partner and to this the Appellant objected on the ground that their share in the business could only be ascertained after the Commissioner had reported how far the deceased's assets were utilised in the business.

Mr. A. Majid for the Respondents was not called upon and the appeal was dismissed with costs.

Mirza Abid Husain Khan v. Mt. Kaniz Fatima (Oudh) of which the hearing was adjourned on November 23rd was further heard on December 7th and judgment was reserved.

Dec. 10th and 11th. Judgment was delivered in Ramlal Hargopal v. Kisanchandra (C. P.) allowing the appeal but inasmuch as the contentions put forward on appeal had not been raised in the lower Courts nor in the Appellant's case, no costs were awarded.

Mt. Lajwanti v. Sapa Chand (Punjab). The Appellant as a posthumus daughter of one Jawahar Mall claimed certain property from the Respondents who were in possession as the nearest reversionary heirs after the death of Jawahar Mall's widows. The Respondents allege the birth of a posthumus son of Jawahar Mall through whom they claimed. The Appellant further sets up adverse possession by the widows and res judicata. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Wallach for the Appellant.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Messrs. H. N. Sen and Bishan Narain for the Respondents.

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."
DEAR SIR,

You state in your last issue that except in cases of infringement of professional etiquette the Calcutta Bar has always welcomed members of the Bar from other Presidencies and Provinces when they have come to Calcutta. This is not, however, exactly the fact. After its establishment, the Patna High Court was rather freely granting permission to eminent members of the Calcutta Bar to appear in that Court. But later on, when permission was sought for Mr. Hassan Imam, the leader of the Patna Bar and an ex-Judge of the Calcutta High Court, to appear in a criminal case in the Calcutta High Court, this latter Court refused such permission. Since then the Patna High Court became stricter in giving permission to members of the Calcutta Bar to appear before it. In my evidence before the Indian Bar Committee I mentioned this incident, and when I said: "We became stricter," Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, one of the members, said "you retaliated" and I said "yes." As a matter of fact, the Calcutta High Court lawyers are the greatest gainers if permission is granted to appear in other High Courts and it is a matter of regret that the Calcutta High Court refused permission to Mr. Imam to appear.

Yours truly,
NARES CHANDRA SINHA.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before NEWBOULD AND B. B. GHOSH. JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER No. 352 OF 1921. RAJA BEJOY SINGH DHUDHURIA (Decree-holder), Appellant v. ASHUTOSH GOSWAMI and others (Judgment-debtors), Respondents. Heard 26th and 27th November 1923. Judgment delivered on 6th December 1923.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, r. 66, sub-r. (2), cl. (e), r. 9—Sale-proclamation, value inserted in, as given by both parties—Material irregularity—Value, estimate of, by Court—Substantial loss to the judgment-debtor.

The Judgment-debtors, Respondents, applied, on 16th December 1920 under Or. 21, r. 90, for the reversal of an auction-sale of their ancestral house, held on 18th November 1920, in execution of a money decree, obtained against them by the decree-holder, Appellant, on the ground that their said property valued one lakh, having been valued at Rs. 5,000 by the decree-holder in the sale proclamation, which was a material irregularity in the publication, it was sold at that inadequate price and purchased by the decree-holder himself, and he alleged that this had caused substantial loss to them. The judgment-debtors had objected to the valuations as given by the decree-holder. And on the objection of the judgment-debtor before the issue of sale proclamation the Court executing the decree had decided that the value as stated by the decree-holder as also that stated by the judgment-debtor, should be both inserted in the sale proclamation and did not itself enter into the question of valuation notwithstanding the judgment-debtor's application in that behalf. The decreed amount was Rs. 20,774-10-9 and attachment was for this sum plus execution costs and interests. The lower Court set aside the sale:

Held—(1) Insertion of the valuations of both parties in the sale proclamation by the Court below instead of attempting to give its own valuation in it was not a material irregularity in publishing the sale, this being one of the exceptional cases in which it was most difficult to value the property accurately.

(2) The statement of the two different valuations was not likely to deter and mislead an intending buyer though not of much assistance to him.

Sankaritola Post Office Murder Case.

The most important question of law raised in this case relates to the interpretation of sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. The difficulty arose from these words of Mr. Justice Page's charge to the jury:—"I say if you doubt that it was the pistol of the accused which fired the fatal shot; that does not matter. If you are satisfied, on the other hand, that the shot was fired by one of those persons in furtherance of the common intention, if that be so, then it is your duty to find a verdict of guilty."

The defence contended that this portion of the charge was a mis-direction inasmuch as if the jury had any doubt in their minds that it was the accused's pistol which fired the fatal shot, it was the Judge's duty to direct them to return a verdict of "not guilty." In support of this contention, reliance was placed on the decision of Mr. Justice Stephen in King-Emperor v. Nirmal Kanto Roy (18 C. W. N. p. 723). In that case, the learned Judge observed as follows:—"The only act that the accused can be liable for under the section (sec. 34) is one done by several persons of whom he was one, that is, by the man who escaped and himself. They may have committed many criminal acts together: but they did not both kill Nripendra. The difference between the acts of two men is that the one actually killed the Inspector and the other merely attempted to kill him. In order to make the accused liable for murder under sec. 34, it would be necessary to say that an offence and an attempt to commit it are the same 'act' which seems to me not to be the case." If the interpretation placed on sec. 34 by Mr. Justice Stephen be good law, there is no answer to the defence argument; and hence, the necessity felt by the Full Bench to attempt a fresh interpretation of the section.

Mr. Justice Mookerjee after a most exhaustive survey of the decisions on the section and a most learned research on the whole law with regard to abetment and accomplices and principals in the first and second degree in this country as well as in England and America, declined to commit himself to a definite interpretation of the section. "This analysis of the course of decisions," he said "in the different Courts which administer criminal justice according to the Indian Penal Code, discloses a deep-seated divergence of judicial opinion as to the true interpretation of sec. 34. The apparent simplicity of the language of the section is delusive, as it furnishes no test to determine when a particular criminal act may be said to have been 'done by several persons'; and the consequence has been that the Courts have sometimes, in their reluctance to apply the section to the facts of the case before them, come to the conclusion that the criminal act was not proved with certainty to have been done in furtherance of the common intention of all. In my judgment, the exposition given by Stephen, J., places too narrow an interpretation upon sec. 34, and that the question whether a particular criminal act may be properly held to have been 'done by several persons' within the meaning of the section cannot be answered regardless of the facts of the case."

Mr. Justice Richardson has assumed a more positive tone in his treatment of the subject. His Lordship said: "It appears to me that sec. 34 regards the act done as the united act of the immediate perpetrator and his confederates present at the time and that the language used is susceptible of that meaning. The language follows a common mode of speech. In R. v. Salmon, 6 Q. B. D. 79 (1880), three men had been negligently firing at a mark. One of them—it was not known which—had unfortunately killed a boy in the rear of the mark. They were all held guilty of man-slaughter. Lord Coleridge, C. J., said :—"The death resulted from the action of the three and they are all liable." Stephen, J., said :—"Firing a rifle" under such circumstances "is a highly dangerous act, and all are responsible, for they unite to fire at the spot in question and they all omit to take any precautions whatever to prevent danger." * *

* * * * * * * * * * *

Continued his Lordship: "To put it differently, an act is done by several persons when all are principals in the doing of it, and it is immaterial whether they are principals in the first degree or principals in the second degree, no distinction between the two categories being recognised. This view of sec. 34 gives it an intelligible content in conformity with general legal notions. The opposing view involves a distinction dependent on identity or similarity of act which, if admissible at all, is wholly foreign to the law, both civil and criminal and leads nowhere."

The sum and substance of Mr. Justice Richardson's view appears to be that if two or more persons have a common intention to commit a criminal offence, and one of them commits the act which constitutes the offence, but the others are sufficiently close to the spot to be able to influence the act of the perpetrator, then in that case they are all equally liable under sec. 34 for the commission of the offence. We refrain from making any comments. It is possible that the Privy Council will have to interpret the section, if they do not summarily dismiss the accused's appeal which is now pending before them.

Police Methods and the Standard of Justice.

To give our readers an idea of police methods which are sometimes practised even in England and how British Judges deal with them, we quote the following extract from the English Law Journal :—

"Another case of doubtfully just methods in the practice of inferior tribunals has afforded the Lord Chief Justice a fresh opportunity for the assertion of the Court's determination to maintain the highest standard in the administration of justice. In a case before the Court of Criminal Appeal this week (Rex v. Coss, December 12), where the Appellant had been convicted at Cheshire (Kantsford) Sessions of house-breaking, and had been sentenced to three years' penal servitude, it appeared that, before the two principal witnesses were taken to identify the accused person, the police took them into a room and showed them a number of photographs, and the witnesses picked out the photograph of the Appellant. No doubt there are circumstances in which the police may legitimately use photographs, but they cannot do so without suspicion of "coaching" when the question is the identification of the very person whom the witnesses are afterwards going to see. That is a course which the Courts will not countenance, and the fact that what had been done in this case made it possible that a suspicion of unfairness, however unfounded, might arise, was sufficient to invalidate the proceedings."

Journal of Comparative Legislation.

The November number of the Journal of Comparative Legislation is a particularly interesting one. The previous number of the journal contained a summary of legislation in different parts of the British Empire. The present number contains contributions from eminent writers on legal topics of international, constitutional and social interest. Prof. Berriedale Keith contributes an article on the "International Status of the Dominions" in which he notices incidentally that of India as well in this connection. He also contributes some "Notes on Imperial Constitutional Law." Dr. Jenk's paper on the "Function of Law in Society" read before the sociological society is reproduced. "The Abrogation of the Turkish Capitulations" by Mr. Bentwich is also a very informing article.

Eugenics and limitation of marriage.

Mr. J. P. Chamberlain's article on the above subject is reproduced in the Society's Journal from the Journal of the American Bar Association. It notices some of the recent Statutes passed in different States in America in restraint of marriages of epileptics, insane, imbecile and feeble-minded persons with a view to restrict the birth of children with hereditary taints and the spread of disease through marriage. The Statutes contemplated gaining this end by forbidding such marriages. The earlier legislation imposed a penalty for such marriages by punishing any person infringing the law to a minimum imprisonment of three years. But the law Courts seemed to have held that such infringement did not amount to an annulment of the marriage. But if one of the parties who suffered from such ailment fraudulently concealed it from the other party, some States provided for such annulment. In certain other States where the Statutes declared such marriages unlawful and imposed penalty, the marriages were made voidable at the instance of the innocent party. In some States where license is required before any marriage could be celebrated, the Statutes provided that no such license is to be issued unless a medical certificate showing freedom from such diseases was produced. Other States required the applicants for marriages to be examined by physicians and certified to be free from disqualifying diseases. An appeal to the county Court against a disqualifying certificate is allowed and such Court may order re-examination of the applicant by three physicians whose report "shall be final." In some States statutes were passed for the sterilization of certain criminals and feeble-minded and otherwise defective inmates of State institutions. But the Courts declared these Statutes unconstitutional. The article concludes by saying that "a serious impediment in the enforcement of these Statutes is the lack of an exact standard of deficiency," but the writer expresses a hope that when people are convinced that such defects are heritable and can be detected with certainty, "the law will not lag behind medical science in the protection of future generations."

HINDU LAW AND EUGENICS.

The Hindu law from the earliest times has to some extent been socialistic in its provisions. The joint family system, and the law of maintenance have nothing analogous to them in other ancient and even in modern systems of jurisprudence. It was far from democratic, still it showed more concern for the social and moral well-being of the community than for material prosperity of individuals. In the early days when the growth of population was of vital importance to the community, it did not impose any restriction on marriage. The strictest and the loosest forms of matrimony found recognition in it. Even illegitimate sons were assigned a legal status and provision was made for their maintenance. While it did not attempt to check the growth of imbeciles, weaklings or disease-stricken individuals by putting a restraint on marriages, it sought to gain the end by other indirect means. The Code of Manu provided that lunatics and idiots were debarred from inheriting paternal or ancestral properties. They were entitled to be maintained out of joint family estates but not to inherit any portion of it. In case of lunacy, it need not be incurable or congenital but it is sufficient, if the person is insane when the succession opened out. In the case of idiots, however, it must be shown that the idiocy is complete, absolute and congenital. The reason for this is obvious.

The review of the American Statutes shows that the lack of a standard of the mental or physical defects has been a great obstacle in putting the law into operation. The means contemplated by the American Statute is prevention of marriages. The Hindu sages attempted to gain the same end by excluding the afflicted persons from inheritance. Members of a joint family were bound to maintain them, but they would naturally be reluctant to take upon themselves the burden of maintaining the wife and children of an insane or other disqualified persons. But the Hindu law-givers took precautions that the interested members of a joint family did not take advantage of a person's weak intellect and deprive him of his inheritance. Hence the commentators, who, as in Rome, wielded great influence in amending the law, imposed an obligation that in case of idiocy it must be proved to be absolute, complete and congenital. Thus they managed to fix the standard of disability in the cases of debatable disqualifications.

One of the most comprehensive disqualifications in Hindu law was in respect of "incurable diseases." Disqualifications under this head, which has been interpreted in terms of English jurisprudence, have been rather dubious on the ground that hardly any disease may be said to be incurable. But we are disposed to agree with Sir John Trevelyan that there is no reason why the Hindu law text should not be followed in cases of incurable diseases such as cancer or phthisis. When remedies for such diseases are found and satisfactorily established, such diseases may be excluded from the category of incurable diseases. Leprosy, however, is specifically mentioned amongst the disqualifying diseases. It need not be congenital. But more modern interpretations put upon it in our law Courts exclude only those who are afflicted with an aggravated and incurable form of leprosy. Sir Leonard Rogers claims that leprosy is a curable disease. The drug he has discovered has long been known in India and it is said that injection of it instead of mere superficial application has proved to be a very efficacious remedy. When leprosy is proved to be a curable disease, it may be excluded from amongst the disqualifications.

The other disqualifications are impotence; want of limbs or organs such as legs, nose or tongue; but these must be congenital and in the case of cripples, it must be complete incapacity to walk. Loss of limbs in war would not disqualify. Congenital deafness and dumbness as also blindness are also put down as disqualifications. With regard to deafness and dumbness, it may be said that such defects are not transmissible but as they are frequently associated with idiocy, such disqualification may not be quite unreasonable. But why congenital blindness was put down by the ancient Hindu law-givers amongst the disqualifications, it is difficult to divine. A Bill for removal of some of the disqualifications above-mentioned in respect of those governed by the Mitakshara law was passed by the Legislative Assembly in March last but, we believe, it has not been passed by the Council of State and is not yet law. The Bill excludes Bengal, because under the Dayabhaga law a father possesses absolute power of gift and bequest even in respect of ancestral properties and he may disinherit any disqualified person and make provision for his maintenance. But in cases of intestate succession the disqualifications would come into operation. We consider it preferable that the law Courts should deal with these disqualifications according to the facts of each case and modify their operation when necessary than that the Legislature would sweep them away by one stroke on merely sentimental grounds.

Correspondence.

COURT-FEE UPON EXTENDED SUCCESSION CERTIFICATE BEYOND EXEMPTION LIMIT.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

I shall feel much obliged if you kindly insert the following in your much esteemed journal for favour of your opinion and that of any of your readers.

Sec. 10, cl. 1, of the Succession Certificate Act, being Act VII of 1889, runs as follows:—A District Court may from time to time, on the application of the holder of a certificate under this Act, extend the certificate to any debt or security not originally specified therein, and every such extension shall have the same effect as if the debt or security to which the certificate is extended had been originally specified therein. Under the present amended Court Fees Act no fee is to be paid on the amount or value of any debt or security not exceeding one thousand rupees, and if the amount or value exceeds that amount, two per centum on the amount or value of any debt or security specified in the certificate up to ten thousand rupees. With respect to an extension of such a certificate three per centum is to be paid on the amount or value of any debt or security to which the certificate is extended. I like to cite here a specific instance for true interpretation of law on the subject. A man applied for a succession certificate for a debt valued Rs. 1,000 and was granted the same without payment of any court-fee. He again applies for an extension of such a certificate for a debt valued Rs. 500 not originally specified therein. Now, the point to be cleared up is whether he shall have to pay the amount of fees at the rate of three per centum on Rs. 500 only being the amount to which the certificate is extended or on Rs. 1,500 being the total of the amount specified in the original certificate and that in the extended certificate. I learn that it is the practice with some Courts in such a case to charge three per centum on Rs. 1,500 and some Courts charge the amount of fees at the same rate on Rs. 500 only in a case like that stated above.

I would like to cite another instance for favour of opinion. A man got a succession certificate for a debt valued Rs. 1,000 on payment of usual fees before the amended Court Fees Act had come in force. Now he applies for an extension of such a certificate to a debt valued Rs. 500 not originally specified therein. Will he pay the amount of fees at the rate of three per centum on Rs. 500 only being the amount to which the certificate is extended or on Rs. 1,500 at the same rate minus two per centum originally paid on Rs. 1,000?

Yours sincerely,
SAKHANATH GHOSE.

NOTES

Communal representation in the services.

Now that a great deal is being said and written about the Bengal Swarajya Hindu-Mahomedan Pact and the Pact is also likely to form the subject-matter of a resolution in the Bengal Legislative Council, we wish to draw public attention to a debate on the question of communal representation in the services which took place in the Legislative Assembly in March last. It shows that it is not merely a Hindu-Mahomedan question, but following the example of our Moslem brothers, the Christians, the Sikhs, the various sects, castes and sub-castes amongst the Hindus are also claiming communal representation not only in the legislature but also in the public services as well. The framers of the Swarajya Pact have fallen into the fundamental error of fixing representation in the public services not by reference to the percentage of the educated members of the respective communities but by reference only to the relative population. That the fixing of any definite proportion of recruitment in the public services on communal basis even by reference to education and ability is impracticable and would be prejudicial to the best interest of India is apparent from the debate in the Assembly to which we invite attention.

A resolution was brought on the 10th of March last before the Legislative Assembly by a non-Brahmin member from Madras for communal representation in the services. It was by no means so drastic as the Swarajya Pact. It recommended that "in making appointments to the public offices, preference should be given to classes and communities which were not well represented in the services," with a proviso, "where the qualifications of the candidates are adequate to discharge the duties efficiently by their education, ability and integrity." This resolution was much more sensible, for, it referred rather to the maximum qualification and not to the minimum qualification of the Bengal Swarajya Pact. Non-Brahmins of Madras, Mahomedans, Shikhs and Anglo-Indians took part in the debate. The leading members of the Democratic and the Nationalist parties who were members of the old Indian National Congress avoided taking part in the controversy. Their ideal was unity and growth of nationality in India. They, therefore, left it to the Home Member to reply. Sir Malcolm Hailey in his speech described the debate as an "Internecine warfare" and remarked that many members who took little interest in general questions that came before the House showed a "morbid interest" in communal questions.

Regarding the resolution Sir Malcolm Hailey said :—

"I have reminded the House that if I were to be called upon in the terms of this resolution to represent adequately the claims of the different communities or to protect minority communities, we must translate those terms into regulations. How are we to do so? The resolution suggests that not neglecting the claims of efficiency and the like, we are to give preference to those who belong to classes or communities who are not well represented in the Services. But we must have some means for deciding if they are adequately represented. Previous references have been made to the extraordinary difficulty which we should find in adequately classifying the communities throughout India and standardising their requirements."

Referring to the Hindus Sir Malcolm said :—

"For census purposes we classify the Hindus as one community; but the very reason why this resolution has been brought to-day is because a large number of Hindus in Madras consider that Hindus do not make a community in Madras and that Brahmins should be separated from Non-Brahmins . . . . . . Then again take the difficulty that confronted us when the Franchise Committee visited Bombay. Lingayts are classified as Hindus, but the Lingayts who number, I think, about two and three quarter millions claimed separate representation from other Hindus . . . . ."

Referring to his experience in the Punjab the Home Member said :—

"If you were to ask a Pathan of the Punjab what he was, his first claim would be for representation as a Pathan; it would not satisfy him to be told that you were admitting the claims of Mahomedans generally."

Regarding the Hindus of southern and north-western India he said :—

"There are some 5 millions Marathas, nine and half millions Rajputs and both of them would reject a discrimination based on religion as insufficient and claim recognition on tribal and national basis . . . . . We have something like this arising among Ahirs, Gujars (two millions); Jats (seven millions)"

The Home Member after mentioning that there were 2378 castes and tribes and 43 races and nationalities in India, he asked :—

"Will any one give me a common denominator which will allow me to establish the fractional proportions of representation for the Gujars (two millions), Sikhs (two and a half millions), Mahars (three millions), Marathas (five millions), Rajputs (nine and a half millions), Parsees (one hundred thousand) and Pathans (three and a half millions)? I purposely include classes widely differing in claims."

This at once shows the absurdity of the claims to communal representation.

Then Sir Malcolm Hailey, who had a long experience of the Finance Department of the Government of India, bore testimony to the efficiency that had been secured in that Department by discarding a limited competition in favour of an open competitive examination for the recruitment of officers for responsible positions in the Indian Audit and Account Services. He said :—

"In the Imperial Service of Egnineers, Local Governments select Indian recruits for themselves, but mainly by open competition, and then again, when we have to recruit for a technical service, it is difficult to arrange for anything like adequate representation. I come to an interesting case; that of our Indian Audit and Account Service, which as the House knows, has for many years looked to competition for a greater part of its recruiting It has a long and a distinguished record and it has maintained that record by open competition. There were for a few years restrictions in this sense, that it was a competition among nominees and that we attempted in accepting nominations to see that one class in particular did not appear in too great numbers at our examinations, I mean the Madras Brahmins. But lately, the restriction has been felt to be unnecessary and it has now been removed. The result will interest the House. We have twenty-eight Madras Brahmins and three Madras Non-Brahmins, two Syrian Christians, twenty-one Bengal Hindus, eight United Provinces Hindus, six Punjab and Delhi Hindus, three Punjab Mahomedans, three Bombay Hindus and one Sikh. For my part I should be loath to see the final record of their service, which has been obtained by open competition, altered to any system of close nomination to secure representation of different communities or minor classes."

In this respect we may say that Sir Malcolm voices the views of the educated community throughout India, who are in favour of recruitment in the public services, civil or technical, provincial or imperial, by open and unfettered competition.

Sir Malcolm Hailey in opposing the resolution concluded by discouraging any further discussion of the question in the following words :—

"It was betrayed into an exhibition of the existence of separatist tendencies which only supplies arguments to those who claim that Indians can never combine."

The Home Member wound up his speech by appealing to the House in the following terms :—

"We shall do well to avoid placing before the world at large differences which were not edifying in themselves and the arising of which here can lead to no good result."

The champions of communal representation had the good sense of bringing the debate to a close without a division.

Sir Devaprasad Sarbadhikary acting as a peace-maker between the advocates of communal representation and the officials moved an amendment to the resolution in the following terms, which was accepted by both :—

"This Assembly recommends to the Governor-General in Council that in making new recruitment for the Services under the control of the Central Government steps be taken to secure that the Services are not unduly overweighted with representatives of any one community or province and as far as possible claims of all communities and provinces are considered."

Thus ended this unseemly strife for communal representation in the services.

THE ABUSE OF ADVOCACY.

The independence of the Bar, which has long been recognised as essential to the administration of justice in the Courts, involves a sense of responsibility which, happily, is rarely wanting. Whenever a member of the Bar does violate the traditions of his calling by allowing his privilege to degenerate into licence, the profession, no less than the public, have good reason to make an earnest protest. One may hope, therefore, that the strong condemnation' by the Attorney-General of the extraordinary speech which Mr. Cecil Hayes made in defence of Lord Alfred Douglas at the Central Criminal Court—a speech which, in its malignity and baselessness, aggravated the gross offence of his convicted client—will be followed by some inquiry by the Benchers of his Inn into conduct which was condemned by Mr. Justice Avory as well as by Sir Douglas Hogg, and which has been the subject of much vigorous comment in the Press in all parts of the country. The recognised rules of advocacy permit an advocate to do all that he honestly can for his client, but they certainly did not justify Mr. Cecil Hayes in adding his own calumnious attack upon Mr. Winston Churchill to that for which his client was sent to prison for six months. "An advocate," said Sir Alexander Cockburn, in his classic definition of the functions of the Bar, "should be fearless in carrying out the interests of his client; but I couple that with this qualification and this restriction—that the arms which he wields are to be the arms of the warrior, and not of the assassin. It is his duty to strive to accomplish the interests of his clients per fas, but not per nefas." A member of a learned profession ought never to stoop to regard himself as a mere hireling—a point which is emphasised by Dr. Showell Rogers in his admirable brochure on "The Ethics of Advocacy":—

"Counsel ought never to sink his own individuality so far as to become the alter ego for all purposes of every knave who can find a guinea to employ him; and he is not bound, indeed he is bound not to employ knavish artifices in a knave's defence. He must never forget that the stream of his forensic eloquence should flow from him as through a purifying filter; and it behoves him to guard against opening the sluices of words regardless of evil consequences to others; and he is not to regard himself, nor allow himself to be used, as a mere 'conduit pipe' for the transference of matter, be it never so foul or vile."

That is an excellent statement of the forensic obligation which Lord Alfred Douglas's counsel did not observe. He saw fit to justify the libellous statements of his client by repeating them as his own personal views. He is protected by the privilege of the Bar from the proceedings which might have been taken against him had he made his scurrilous speech in some place other than a Court of Justice; but he is not protected from the censure of those whose business it is to guard the honour of the Bar.—The Law Journal.

LOCUS STANDI OF ACCUSED BEFORE BEING SUMMONED.

There is no provision in the Criminal Procedure Code (even in the amended one) by which the accused can appear before the Court, as a matter of right, before being summoned. But some Courts favour such appearance and sometimes call upon the accused to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. But this procedure seems to be quite inconsistent with the scheme of the legislation. Sec. 202 of the Criminal Procedure Code lays down the manner in which the enquiry is to be held, when the Magistrate postpones the issue of process against the accused, recording his reasons therefor. And if after enquiry the Magistrate sees sufficient ground for proceeding, he shall issue process as provided in sec. 204, Cr. P. C. and not before that. This view is supported by the ruling reported in 21 C. W. N. 127 (Balai Lal Mukherjee v. Pasupati Chatterjee). This was followed in a subsequent case reported in 27 C. W. N. 196 (Chandi Charan Mitra v. Manindra Chandra Roy Chowdhury), in which the Magistrate taking cognizance of the case directed notice to be served upon the accused to show cause why process should not issue against him. Cause was shown by the accused, and the Magistrate came to the conclusion that he did not find any reason to issue process against the accused. The case eventually came up to the Hon'ble High Court, and the learned Chief Justice was pleased to observe: "The Magistrate did not act in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Procedure Code as laid down in secs. 202 and 203 of the Criminal Procedure Code and the learned Sessions Judge was quite right in saying that the procedure was improper and irregular. I hope that the judgment which we are delivering in this case and the judgment which this Court delivered in the case of Balai Lal v. Pasupati (21 C. W. N. 127) will be brought to the notice of Magistrate, and that they will observe in this respect the plain provisions of the Code of Criminal Procedure."

As regards motions under sec. 437, Cr. P.

C., the Full Bench case reported in I. L. R. 15 Cal. 608 (Hari Das Sanyal v. Saritullah) lays down the principle that no notice to an accused person is necessary in point of law before an order under sec. 437 can be passed, but the discretion of the Court is not in all cases fettered in this matter, and it may call upon the accused to appear and urge his defence. But in a recent case reported in 27 C. W. N. 552 (Jogesh Ch. Sen v. Nikunja Behary Chowdhury), a fine distinction was made regarding the appearance of the accused. He was given an opportunity of being heard by the Magistrate and no objection seems to have been taken thereto by the complainant. Thereafter the complaint was dismissed under sec. 203, Cr. P. C. The Sessions Judge, on being moved, set aside the order of dismissal and directed a further enquiry without giving the accused an opportunity of being heard. The case came up to the Hon'ble High Court and it was held by the learned Judges, distinguishing the Full Bench case I. L. R. 15 Cal. 608, that in the circumstances of the case, the accused should have been given an opportunity of being heard before the learned Sessions Judge, he having been allowed to be present from the very commencement of the proceedings at the instance of the complainant. So in this case the appearance of the accused before being summoned was not considered improper and irregular, but on the other hand it was thought incumbent upon the Sessions Court to call upon the accused to appear and hear him, as he was heard before the Magistrate at the commencement of the proceeding.

So it appears that the accused has no locus standi in an enquiry under sec. 202, Cr. P. C., unless the complainant waives his objection thereto, and the Full Bench case as well as the case reported in 27 C. W. N. 552, favour the opinion that in a motion under sec. 437, Cr. P. C. before the Sessions Judge, it lies in the discretion of the Court, whether notice should be issued against the accused with a view to give him an opportunity of being heard, the discretion to be exercised in each case according to its special circumstances.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY and SUHRAWARDY, JJ. M. A. Nos. 19 and 20 OF 1923. BECHARAM CHOWDHURY v. PURNA CHANDER CHATTERJI. The 4th January 1924.

Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 109, whether bar to suit for enhancement, when previous application under sec. 105, withdrawn—Sec. 98, C. P. C., whether abrogates cl. 36 of Letters Patent.

The Plaintiffs instituted proceedings under sec. 105, Bengal Tenancy Act for enhancement against the Defendants. The said proceedings were withdrawn with leave to bring civil suits in respect of the subject-matter. Accordingly he instituted the present suit for enhancement of rent. The Court of first instance overruled the tenant Defendants' plea that sec. 109 was a bar but held that the rent could not be enhanced as the tenures were permanent. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal held that sec. 109 was not a bar (following Soroj Kumar v. Umedali, 25 C. W. N. 1022), and holding that the tenures were not permanent he remanded the cases for fixing the amount of enhancement. The Defendants appealed to this Court:

Held per WALMSLEY, J.—That sec. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act was a bar to the prayer for enhancement (following 24 C. W. N. 1024; S. A. No. 1358 of 1919 decided by Mookerjee and Walmsley, JJ., on 16th January 1923 and 27 C. W. N. 989).

Held per SUHRAWARDY, J.—That sec. 109, Bengal Tenancy Act, was not a bar (following 25 C. W. N. 1022).

At this stage a question arose as to whose judgment should prevail.

Held per WALMSLEY, J.—That cl. 36 of the Letters Patent has not been abrogated by sec. 98, C. P. C.; hence the judgment of the senior Judge should prevail (25 C. W. N. 605 P. C.).

Held per SUHRAWARDY, J.—That sec. 98 of the Civil Procedure Code governs all appeals from the mofussil and therefore the judgment which agreed with the lower Court should prevail.

Held, finally—That as they could not go on differing ad infinitum, the appeal must be allowed, Suhrawardy, J., agreeing.

NOTES

Parliamentary and unparliamentary obstruction.

We have said before that the Swarajya party would have been wise if they had assumed ministerial responsibility when it was offered to them. If after assuming responsibility, the ministers with the support of their party had demanded provincial autonomy or opposed repressive measures, such as the detention or deportation of persons without trial, their demands would have carried great weight with constitutionalists both in England and in this country. They might have brought about dissolution by opposition as we have explained before, and such action could not have been characterised as unconstitutional. A policy of irresponsible obstruction with a view to bring all business before the Legislature to a standstill, as has been done in the Central Provinces, will hardly find favour with any one who is accustomed to parliamentary Government. We must, however, say in all fairness to the Swarajya party in Bengal, that they have not so far adopted any such unparliamentary attitude. The Government of India Act can only be amended by the British Parliament and any move for making Government impossible will not find favour with members of Parliament, no matter to which party they may belong. However, parliamentary methods of opposition with a view to bring about reforms in the constitution would draw pointed attention to its defects, for the remedying of which the whole country is unanimous.

Britishers are as a rule very hard-headed, practical and business-like people. They understand opposition and defeating Government in matters of policy or with regard to particular measures and the assumption of responsibility for effecting a reversal of such policy and for the bringing about of reforms. They do not appreciate or understand obstruction for producing a deadlock in the administration. However much the parties in England may fight with each other over momentous constitutional or political issues, they do not produce such a deadlock in the administration that no laws may be passed, no taxes raised or expenditures incurred by Government. If matters are brought to this pass, it amounts to a passive revolution. The Government in such circumstances considers itself justified in assuming extraordinary executive powers. For instance, not very long ago when all transport and traffic in England was sought to be stopped by what was known as the "triple alliance" of powerful labour organisations in England, which though non-violent in its character, was a quasi-revolutionary movement, designated as "direct action," the Government of Lloyd George assumed extraordinary powers, took extraordinary precautions and resorted to extraordinary measures to cope with the situation. Since the Swarajists have themselves come to the conclusion that civil disobedience is an impossibility, their policy of creating a deadlock with a view to paralyse administration is illogical and inconsistent. From what we have said, it is evident that the Government in such circumstances may plead constitutional justification for carrying on the administration anyhow. If such extraordinary powers or measures cannot be met by effective civil disobedience or some other form of direct action, the only reasonable course would be to work within the constitution and work for its reform and expansion in the manner we have indicated.

We say this for explaining the significance of what Mr. Ramsay MacDonald said on the eve of his assumption of the office of Prime Minister of England. In bringing the debate on the no-confidence motion to a close, he announced to the House that he was not lacking in the sense of responsibility of the high office that he was going to assume, in the following words :—

A Labour Government might create many fears, but what would be still worse would be any action which should degrade the House and bring it to a deadlock, produce stalemate and show their incapacity for Government.

After this we can hardly expect that the action of the Swarajya party in the Central Provinces, which we hope will not be followed by the members of that party in the Central and Provincial Legislatures elsewhere, will meet with the approval of a Prime Minister hailing even from the Labour party in England.

The remarks we have quoted above were not made in connection with India but with reference to the attitude of the Labour Government as regards the policy of that Government generally. In his message to some of our Indian daily contemporaries, Mr. Ramsay MacDonald said :—

I can see no hope if India become an arena of struggle between constitutionalism and revolution. No party in Britain will be cowed by threats of force or of policies designed to bring Government to a standstill, and if any Indian sections are under the delusion that it is not so, events will sadly disappoint them. I urge upon all Indians to come near to us rather than stand apart from us, to get at our reason and goodwill

These words were uttered sometime before the no-confidence motion was brought before the House and before it became a settled fact that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald would be the Prime Minister of England. Since his assumption of office, the inclusion of Sir Sydney Oliver and Lord Chelmsford in his Cabinet is not without significance. Whatever may be his individual views with regard to India, he has been obliged to include some members of the Liberal party in his Cabinet. The Labour party by themselves are not in absolute majority in Parliament and he must rely on the support of the majority of the Liberal members to enable him to remain in office and carry on the Government. So he has been obliged to appoint a Secretary of State for India who would command the confidence of his Liberal colleagues. The newly appointed Secretary of State for India has no Indian experience and we presume for that reason Lord Chelmsford has been included in the Cabinet. Lord Chelmsford, the joint collaborator of the present Indian constitution, has openly declared that he is not enamoured of the virtues of his foster-child, diarchy. We may therefore reasonably expect that if we proceed by constitutional and parliamentary methods to expose and oppose the pranks of this deformed prodigal child and with united voice ask for its recall, diarchy will, before long, disappear from India.

The New British Premier.

The elevation of Mr. Ramsay MacDonald to the office of the Premier is the best commentary on the value of free institutions. Here is a man, son of a farm-servant and educated in a country school, who by dint of hard work, courage and consistency has attained the highest position any Britisher is capable of attaining and been awarded the highest office and honour in the gift of the Crown and the people. Only a few days ago, Mr. MacDonald expressed his misgivings that if he took office, he would not get a fair play. The Punch assured him that he would: and now the opinions and comments of journalists and public men leave no doubt that so long, at any rate, as the Labour Government do not launch into the more ambitious items of their programme, but confine themselves to the question of how to relieve unemployment and the existing strained relations between the European Cabinets, no needless obstacle will be raised to their carrying on His Majesty's Government. It is a truism to say that the country must have a Government. Mr. Baldwin's having gone out, Mr. MacDonald, being the head of the Opposition, automatically comes in; and we hope he will have a fair chance to give effect to the policy for which he and his party stand.

Regulation III and Bengal Council.

The speeches which were delivered last week in the Bengal Council as well as the voting constitute the most effective reply to the apologia offered by the Government in support of the arbitrary arrest and detention by them of certain persons under Regulation III of 1818. They demonstrate beyond question that the opinion of the great bulk of the people is against the application of the Regulation. That being so, His Excellency the Governor and his Executive Council will do well to consider whether they ought not to revise their policy. Supposing there is a revolutionary conspiracy, that is no reason why the conspirators should not be brought to trial. There will be expense, delay and some danger to those who will depose as witnesses as well as to those who will have the management of the trial on behalf of the Crown. But a civilised Government has to risk these contingencies, as the members of the Repressive Law Committee themselves recognised in their report. The subject of deportation without trial has been discussed more than once in these columns and we do not wish to repeat the arguments we have advanced against it. We shall content ourselves for the present by pointing out that by their persistence in an arbitrary policy, the Government are on the high road to alienating the saner sections of the people from them.

The Public and the Courts.

An unusual application was made to the Divisional Court at the close of the last sittings which resulted in a noteworthy exercise of jurisdiction by the Judges—Sankey and Swift, JJ.—who heard it (Ex parte Everett: December 18th). The applicant complained that he had been unable to gain admission to the public gallery of the Central Criminal Court during the trial of Lord Alfred Douglas, that the police in charge of the entrance to the public gallery had allowed some persons to enter who had waited not nearly so long as other persons whom they kept out, and that this improper discrimination was due to "tipping." Mr. Justice Sankey, while stating that the "Court could express no opinion on the facts of the case without hearing both sides," showed that both he and Mr. Justice Swift regarded the application with some sympathy by adding that "if the facts had been correctly stated by Mr. Everett, the Court thought that the police officers concerned ought not to have exercised an improper discrimination and ought not to have kept persons out of the public gallery when there was room for them in it, and when there was no legal objection to their being admitted." That goes to prove that the Judges are not unconscious of the undesirable practices by which, whenever a sensational trial is proceeding, certain members of the public are enabled to obtain admission in preference to others. They are practices, be it added, which are not confined to the Central Criminal Court. But what is even more noteworthy is that the Divisional Court, being asked by the applicant to make inquiries into the matter, decided to "request" the Associate to send a copy of Mr. Everett's affidavit to the Lord Mayor and to ask his Lordship to inquire into the matter. The result of the action delicately taken by the Divisional Court will be awaited with much interest. The Central Criminal Court, which is a statute-created tribunal, is peculiarly under the control of the Lord Mayor and the Corporation; the police officers whose conduct as janitors is impugned are also controlled and paid by them. It might, therefore, have been thought that Mr. Everett's application should have been made to the city authorities. The interesting thing about the decision of the Divisional Court, informal as it appears to have been, is that it implies that the King's Bench Division has, by virtue of its general jurisdiction to remedy the grievances of the King's subjects, a right of control even over what may be regarded as the more domestic arrangements for the administration of justice at the Central Criminal Court.—Law Journal.

SANJIVA ROW'S ALL-INDIA CIVIL COURT MANUAL. In two Volumes. Edited by A. K. Nanniah, B.A., B.L., High Court Vakil, Fourth Edition. Lawyer's Companion Office, Madras. 1922.

We welcome the new edition of this well-known compilation. It comprises the Government of India Acts to which frequent references have to be made by legal practitioners in the course of their professional duties in Court and also for drafting and other purposes in their offices or at home. The previous edition was published in 1915 and such new enactments passed during the next five years which are likely to prove useful to the legal profession are included in the present volumes. The amendments in other Acts are also incorporated and noted in this work. It is difficult to bring a compilation of this kind quite up-to-date. It takes time to edit and print it. Thus, though the amendments and new enactments subsequent to 1920 do not find a place in this compilation yet we have no hesitation in saying that it is the most up-to-date and comprehensive Civil Court Manual that we have come across. Short annotations and important recent rulings are given in the foot-notes, which enhance its usefulness. The printing, binding and general get-up of the book is no small part of its attraction. We congratulate the Law Printing House and the Lawyer's Companion Office of Madras on the admirable execution of the work in a style which would do credit to any publisher and printer in the world.

THE CHARITABLE AND RELIGIOUS TRUSTS ACT, being Act No. XIV of 1920, with a commentary. By Kshitish Chandra Chakrabarti Smritibhusan, M.A., B.L., Calcutta: The Standard Law Book Society, 8-2, Hastings Street. 1923.

This is a commentary on a most important statute which found a place in our statute book none too soon, a somewhat modest attempt previously made by so redoubtable a champion as the late Sir Rashbehari Ghose to provide public control over Hindu religious trusts having been defeated by unreasoning prejudice and stark conservatism so far back as 1908. There is a useful and interesting historical introduction by the annotator who being an orthodox Hindu could not well begin his story from anywhere later than the Satya Yuga: and it is not his fault that the light he succeeds in gathering from the Markandaya Purana aided by references to Jimutavahana's Vyavahara Matrika and Narada is exhausted in two short paragraphs. The historical introduction may therefore be taken to deal almost entirely with the events of the Kali Yuga and seems to demonstrate that the necessity for the control of religious institutions grows with the progress in intensity of that age. The statute of 1920, itself a mild one, must therefore be taken to mark a not very aggravated stage of that Age, which is surely reassuring. We have also assured ourselves that apart from other interests, the book will prove a convenient aid to the practical administration of the statute, the case-notes having been very carefully compiled.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before SUHRAWARDY AND PAGE, JJ. CIVIL REV. No. 843 OF 1923. ABINASH CHANDRA SAMUI, Petitioner v. UMES CHANDRA SAMUI, Opposite Party. The 11th January 1924.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 21, r. 89—Decretal amount deposited to set aside a sale with a prayer for restraining the decree-holder from withdrawing the amount deposited—The injunction granted in a title suit and sale set aside—Tender, if valid.

The Plaintiff, Opposite Party, brought a money suit against the Defendant, Petitioner, and the suit was decreed on compromise. The decree-holder, Opposite Party, in execution of the said compromise-decree brought to auction sale some property of the judgment-debtor, the Petitioner, and the decree-holder himself purchased the property on the 14th November 1922. On the 14th December 1922, the Petitioner made an application to set aside the sale under Or. 21, r. 89 of the Civil Procedure Code with a prayer that the decree-holder be restrained from withdrawing the decretal amount, pending the decision of a title suit filed simultaneously with this application under Or. 21, r. 89, C. P. C. On the 15th December the Petitioner filed a title suit to set aside the compromise decree in which he prayed for an injunction restraining the decree-holder from withdrawing the money. On the 16th December his prayer for injunction was granted in this title suit and on the 18th December the auction sale was set aside by the Munsif and the decree-holder was restrained from withdrawing the decretal amount.

The decree-holder preferred an appeal against the order of the Munsif setting aside the sale which was on appeal allowed to stand. The judgment-debtor obtained the present Rule against that order of the Appellate Court:

Held—That the tender was not a valid one and the sale could not be set aside on conditional payments. (16 C. W. N. 904, followed.)

NOTES

Remnants of the Repressive Laws.

The President of the Bengal Legislative Council and H. E. the Governor are to be congratulated for admitting the resolutions recommending the repeal of Reg. III of 1818, the Seditious Meetings Act and the Criminal Law Amendment Act and allowing a full and free discussion on the resolutions. They or either of them might have objected to admit the resolutions under the rules on the ground that the subject-matter of the resolutions was not primarily the concern of the Local Government, as the Regulation and the Acts referred to can only be repealed by the Central Legislature. The Bengal Council by their votes carried the resolutions against Government opposition, but the debate was of a general character and no serious attempt was made to answer the specific arguments advanced from the Government benches. We would therefore try to meet some of the salient points in the Government case for retaining in the statute books these remnants of the repressive laws, after a whole lot of them have been repealed according to the recommendations of the Repressive Laws Committee which was appointed by the Central Legislature in 1921.

We have always maintained that a person may be arrested on suspicion and kept in custody for a reasonable period pending investigation, for which the Code of Criminal Procedure makes ample provision, but it is contrary to the spirit of modern constitution and civilized system of laws that a citizen should be kept in prison or detention for an indefinite period under an executive order without being brought to trial before a Court of law. That one's guilt or innocence may only be proved before a Court of law by regular trial, is one of the elementary rights of citizenship which when interfered with by the executive, is naturally resented and causes great public discontent. We quite admit, as was said by Sir Hugh Stephenson the other day in the Bengal Legislative Council, that there may be occasions when the executive may be armed with extraordinary powers for ensuring the safety of the State. It is no doubt true that during the Irish rebellions the operation of the Habeas Corpus Act was from time to time temporarily suspended. During the last European war, although it was not so suspended, the Defence of the Realm Act armed the executive with powers of internment with which the law Courts would not interfere. In India too the Defence of India Act armed the provincial executives with similar powers and the Government of India also had resort to Reg. III of 1818 for the arrest and detention of political suspects.

The Committee appointed by the Indian Legislature for examining the Repressive Laws recommended the repeal of the Defence of India Act and it was forthwith repealed. The Committee also recommended the immediate repeal of Reg. III of 1818, with certain reservation in respect of non-British subjects, which we shall notice hereafter. We shall first deal with Sir Hugh Stephenson's argument for putting Reg. III of 1818 into operation at the present moment and for its retention in the statute book. His argument that the Habeas Corpus has been known to have been suspended by Parliament only on occasions of grave emergency to the State, supports the view of the Committee, which is in accordance with the public opinion in India, that it should not find a permanent place in our statute books. Reg. III of 1818 not only arms the executive with the power of arrest and detention of all British subjects in India but the Habeas Corpus section of the Code of Criminal Procedure, sec. 491, which has recently been extended to the whole of India, retains cl. (3) which debars even the High Courts in India from issuing any writ for bringing the arrested persons to trial. This means a permanent suspension of the Habeas Corpus in respect of all British subjects in India. The law of England is that when the State is in danger, Habeas Corpus may be suspended with the leave of the legislature. The law in India is that a citizen may be deprived of his liberty at the will of the executive and he is debarred from the ordinary right of every citizen to resort to a Court of law to have his liberty restored or of being produced and tried before a Court of law.

Sir Hugh Stephenson also referred to passages from the Report of the Repressive Laws Committee where they noticed "the difficulty of securing evidence or of preventing the intimidation of witnesses." As the members of the Bengal Council made no attempt to meet this point either, we would invite public attention to the answer given in the Committee's Report which immediately follows the passage which Sir Hugh quoted :—

"But we consider that in the modern conditions of India that risk must be run. It is undesirable that any Statutes should remain in force which are regarded with deep and genuine disapproval by a majority of members of the Legislature. The harm created by the retention of arbitrary powers of imprisonment by the executive may, as history has shown, be greater even than the evil which such powers are directed to remedy. The retention of these Acts could in any case only be defended if it was proved that they are in the present circumstances essential to the maintenance of peace and order As it has not been found necessary to resort in the past to these measures save in cases of grave emergency, we advocate their immediate repeal."

Such grave emergency might have existed during the great war but no reasonable man would say that any such grave emergency exists now and that the few struggling revolutionaries or demented anarchists cannot be dealt with properly and effectively by recourse to judicial trial.

The Committee, therefore, recommended that Reg. III of 1818 and the corresponding Madras and Bombay Regulations should be repealed except for the original purposes for which they were framed. The Report says :—

"We are in fact satisfied of the continued necessity for providing for the original object of this Regulation, in so far as it was expressly declared to be 'the due maintenance of the alliance formed by the British Government with foreign Powers, the preservation of tranquillity in the territories of Native Princes entitled to its protection and the security of the British Dominions from foreign hostility' and so far as the inflammable frontier is concerned, from 'internal commotion.'"

The Regulation may with propriety be used for deporting Bolshevik agents but the above extracts show that the Committee recommended that Reg. III of 1818 is not to be put into operation against British Indian subjects even in the case of civil commotion except in the north-western frontier. We presume that H. E. the Governor-General will also admit that an inspection of the cases against the detenus even by a lawyer of the eminence of an ex-Attorney-General and ex-Lord Chief Justice of England is no substitute for a public trial.

Those who are apprehensive that in cases of internal disorder the Government, in the absence of Reg. III of 1818, would be powerless to cope with the situation, should remember that Chap. IX of the Code of Criminal Procedure furnishes ample power to the executive to cope with civil commotions. If it is of greater magnitude, resort to martial law is a more drastic remedy. It is a recognised principle of English constitution that force may be repelled by force. The executive in India have also the power of framing ordinances at a time of emergency. But under ordinary circumstances the personal liberty of the subject cannot be interfered with even by the highest executive except by recourse to judicial tribunals. The Resolution passed by the Bengal Council recommending the repeal of Reg. III of 1818 is, however, of no more value than a mere expression of opinion. For, it is only the Legislative Assembly and the Council of State which can repeal the Regulation with the Governor-General's assent. We are sure the Central Legislature of India will now repeal Reg. III of 1818 and the corresponding Madras and Bombay Regulations in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee of the Central Legislature which were accepted by the Governor-General in Council. Thus if the Swarajists would follow up the path chalked out by the constitutionalists they may do a lot of useful work.

With regard to the Seditious Meetings Act and the Criminal Law Amendment Act, it is to be noted that Part I of the latter Act has already been repealed in accordance with the recommendations of the Committee. With regard to Part II of the latter and the Seditious Meetings Act, they have also been recommended for repeal by the Repressive Laws Committee. Before we come to that, we ought to mention that these Acts are not ordinarily in operation. The former may be put into operation by notification by the Governor-General in Council and the latter under the Devolution Act by the Local Government by notification. The Seditious Meetings Act has not recently been put into operation in Bengal except in Howrah for a few months in 1921. But the Criminal Law Amendment Act was passed in 1908 for the suppression of Samitis (Associations) which were alleged to have been organised for unlawful political purposes. In 1913, the English law of conspiracy was introduced into India and was embodied in the Indian Penal Code as secs. 121A and 121B. These sections made any sort of conspiracy political or otherwise between two or more persons punishable, provided the purpose or means is unlawful. In case of conspiracy for the commission of offences, the punishment is the same as for the offence itself. For instance conspiracy for commission of murder or for the subversion of Government may be visited with the same punishment as for the substantive offence.

It was urged before the Repressive Laws Committee that as the conspiracy sections 121A and 121B were sufficient to cope with unlawful associations, Part II of the Criminal Law Amendment Act was no longer required. That secs. 15 and 16 are open to the objection, that if they were brought into operation by an executive order and an association declared unlawful, it is very difficult, if not impossible, to show that it was not so. The conspiracy sections on the contrary cast the onus on the prosecution. In any such case if conspiracy is proved between any two persons and association is established with regard to other members, the onus is shifted on to the latter. So it is by no means so very difficult for the prosecution to prove a case of conspiracy. If cases of conspiracy are proved and punished in due course of law, the accused can make no grievance, the public cannot say that any injustice has been done and the good faith of Government can never be questioned. But it is otherwise with suppression of associations by executive orders. None of these arguments were urged by members of the Bengal Council who made speeches recommending its repeal. But the Repressive Laws Committee took all these facts into consideration as also the opinions of all the Local Governments who were opposed to the repeal of the two Acts.

The Local Governments oppose the repeal of these Acts because they have found them handy in prohibiting meetings and suppressing political organisations of a questionable character. But our view in the matter is that sec. 144 of the Code of Criminal Procedure confers sufficient powers on a Magistrate to prohibit meetings in the interest of peace or order. Further, secs. 107 and 108 (a) of the same Code empower Magistrates to adopt speedy measures for preventing likely breaches of the peace or the dissemination of sedition. The only difference between the powers conferred under these sections and of those under the Seditious Meetings Act consists in the fact that the person or persons aggrieved by the Magisterial orders are entitled to show cause and have the propriety of the orders tested before a superior Court, but in the case of executive orders issued under the Seditious Meetings Act no such course is open to them. It is always bad policy on the part of a Government to shut out judicial enquiries with regard to orders affecting the fundamental rights and liberties of a subject. This would have been a sufficient reply to Sir Abdur Rahim's argument to which no cogent answer was given.

With regard to unlawful, revolutionary or anarchical associations we have already pointed out that secs. 120A and 120B of the Indian Penal Code furnish very effective means of coping with such associations. If we referred to the notable trials that have taken place in Bengal in the course of the last fifteen years, we would find that it is by public trials and not by executive orders that such unlawful associations were eventually broken up. Then we have secs. 121, 121A, 124A, 153A of the Penal Code, which are all formidable weapons in the hands of the executive to cope with offences committed or contemplated against the State or public tranquillity. We maintain that it is by judicial trials that offending persons may be brought to book under the provisions of the Code of Criminal Porcedure and the Penal Code and that is, as past experience has shown, the most effective means for the maintenance of law and order. Interference with the rights and liberties of citizens by executive order only promotes public discontent.

While Sir Hugh Stephenson chiefly quoted the argument considered by the Repressive Laws Committee, he did not place before the Council the definite conclusions at which the Committee arrived. We shall therefore conclude by reproducing them. In fact the Committee accepted the recommendations of Lord Sinha, who was then the Governor of Bihar and Orissa, in the following terms :—

"Our recommendation follows that made by the Bihar and Orissa Government :—'Subject, however, to the reservations temporarily made in favour of the Seditious Meetings Act and Part II of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, which cannot be abandoned until the present tension created by the non-co-operation movement has been relieved by the action of its leading promoters. His Excellency in Council desires again to emphasise the importance of removing from the Statute Book as far as possible all special laws of this character, so that the Government of India under the reformed constitution may proceed with a clean slate. At the same time, however, His Excellency in Council is conscious that in the future the need for special powers may again arise.'"

The Committee thereupon observed :—

"In view of the grave situation which exists and which may become more serious, we also think that it would be prudent to defer actual repeal of these Acts until such time as the situation improves. Many of us hope that it may be possible for the Government to undertake the necessary legislation during the Delhi session. We can make no definite recommendation on this point at present. We trust that the repeal of these Acts may be expedited by a healthy change in the political situation. The duration of retention rests in other hands than ours."

It now rests for the Central Legislature to give effect to the recommendations of the Repressive Laws Committee. If they do, the Governor-General, who accepted the recommendations of the Committee, will surely give his assent to the repeal of these remnants of the repressive laws.

THE UTBANDI ACT.

Bengal Act X of 1923.

(By Radharomon Mukerjee, Vakil, Berhampore.)

Utbandi—peculiar tenancy.

The utbandi tenancy is a peculiar tenancy confined to particular districts [Nadia and Murshidabad and Jessore (1)]. And "in view of the fact that the utbandi problem is a local one, affecting a few districts only and having little connection with the main principles underlying the General Amendment Bill proposed by them," the committee, appointed to consider the amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, "recommended that the matter should be dealt with by separate legislation," and they themselves formed a sub-committee to draft a separate Bill for the purpose, which has been passed as an Act.

Meaning of "utbandi."

The term "utbandi" is said to be due to the fact that under this system of tenancy, the land at the end of the season or of the period of the lease, may be fallow on account of the exhaustion of its strength, no one coming forward to take lease of it.

Description of tenancy.

The tenancy has been described as follows :—" The holding is not fixed either in area or in position, but consists of a variable parcel or parcels of land ascertained by a measurement or inspection made at least once a year. The rent is fixed for each year or season in respect of 'the land thus ascertained to have been in the cultivation of the raiyat.' The rent, however, is regulated not, as in the case of the ordinary halhasili land, by a lump payment in money for the land thus cultivated, but by the appraisement of the crop on the ground and according to its character and so far it resembles the tenancy under the Bhaoli system."

Its advantage to raiyat.

The utbandi raiyat had thus the advantage, which an ordinary raiyat had not, namely, that he was not liable to pay rent for the years he could not cultivate the land and was liable to pay rent only for the portion of his holding which he could actually cultivate during the year.

Legal only in districts where custom prevails.

It may be pointed out that the cultivation of land under the utbandi system is legal only in those districts where the custom prevails. Elsewhere it is illegal. So that if a plot of land is let out to a tenant under the conditions of the utbandi tenancy in a district where such tenancy is not customary, it cannot prevent the raiyat from acquiring occupancy right inspite of the contract to the contrary.

Reason of custom.

The reason behind such a local custom was that lands in some parts of these districts being of bad quality exhausted their productive power with the growing of crop in a particular season.

(To be continued.)

(1) The Committee Report mentions only the first two to which the Act has added the third.

NOTES

Release of Mahatma Gandhi.

The release of Mahatma Gandhi on the morning of the 5th of February last is a very wise and humane move on the part of the Government. It would be an affectation to say that the Government of Bombay and the Government of India have not been influenced by public sentiment and it would be equally so to deny that his illness and the present state of his health had not evoked a very wide-spread sympathy for him and was not also a determining factor in coming to the decision that the Government did. If in the present circumstances the Government has released him in response to public opinion in India, it is to the credit of the Government and not at all otherwise. That the release took place on the morning that a resolution for his release was to have been moved in the Legislative Assembly at Delhi does not at all detract from the merits of this wise act of statesmanship. Surmises are rife as to why he was released on the particular day and not earlier. But those who are acquainted with the working of the constitutional machinery in this country will discern in it no attempt on the part of the Government at producing any dramatic effect.

Although the Provinces in India have not attained political autonomy, the Government of India, since the Government of India Act of 1919 came into operation, regard such Governments, as represented by the Governor and his Council as autonomous. They would not ordinarily dictate to the Local Governments any policy with regard to which the responsibility is primarily that of the Local Government. For instance, the prosecution of the Ali brothers or of Mr. Gandhi was not dictated to by the Government of India but was done at the instance of the Government of Bombay. It may, no doubt, be the case that before the Local Government came to any such momentous decision, an exchange of views took place between the Local Government and the Central Government, and the Government of India, which is invested with statutory powers of superintendence over Local Governments, assented to the decision of the latter but they would not dictate to it any course of action. Assume that the Bombay Government disagreed with the Government of India with regard to the wisdom and propriety of the prosecutions referred to, the Governor of Bombay could hold direct communication with the Secretary of State for India just as the Governor-General and then the decision as also the responsibility would be that of the Secretary of State.

If one views the release of Mr. Gandhi in its constitutional light the apparent delay or coincidence of his release with the date of debate in the Assembly will be evident. The Government of India and the Government of Bombay must have been in communication on the subject since or even before a date was fixed by the Governor-General for a debate on the resolution. The date of the debate was originally fixed for the 4th of February. On that day it was postponed to the 5th. We are informed by Reuter that there was a Cabinet meeting in London on the 4th when some Indian questions were considered. Even if the Bombay and the India Government had come to the unanimous conclusion that Mr. Gandhi should be released, in a matter of such importance, the Government of India would not act without obtaining the assent of the Secretary of State for India and hence the release of Mr. Gandhi was announced after the assent of the Secretary of State was received sometime on the 4th of February. The announcement in the Daily Herald, the labour organ, that the release was the act of the MacDonald ministry lends support to our view.

The Legal Equality of States.

In the British Year Book of International Law, 1923-1924, appears an article on the Doctrine of Legal Equality of States which we commend to our readers. There is much in it with which we do not agree, but we cannot withhold our appreciation of the matter-of-fact style and close reasoning which mark the presentation of the writer's case. The thesis which he sets out to prove is that (1) the doctrine of the legal equality of states is a redundant theoretical abstraction, the rights and rules, which are usually deduced from it, being in fact deductions from the principle of independence; (2) the doctrine is opposed to the facts of international life; and (3) as an ideal, it is dangerous and retrogressive. In municipal law, as the writer himself points out, there is no such thing as the legal equality of persons. On the contrary, "women, children, dukes, bachelors, doctors and idiots respectively have rights conferred upon them . . . . . by rules which apply to them only and create for them special privileges, duties or disabilities." From this one may be tempted to argue that the doctrine of inequality of states will not be such an anomaly in international law as it may appear at first sight. But the argument is as unsound as it is based on a false analogy. The municipal law even in a country governed on democratic principles has to be obeyed by every subject of the state: it does not depend on his individual consent for its validity. But a rule of international law derives its binding character from the fact that the state in question has expressly or tacitly consented to be bound by it and it is a notorious fact that the consent will not be given, unless equality is conceded. Such an attitude may be characterised as perverse and may not be supported by the facts of international life. But there it is and may not be discounted by those who are anxious to see the expansion of the reign of law in the relations of states.

The writer of the article appears to think that the acceptance of the principle of equality by the system of "international constitutional law" which is developing round the political institutions set up by the League of Nations will be a political danger to the latter. We, on the contrary, think that nothing else will so seriously interfere with the growth of the League and of its auxiliary institutions as an open repudiation of the principle of equality. The Minority Treaties of 1919 (noticed on pp. 101-114 of the present volume) have materially cut down the principle in the case of the new states seeking recognition, e.g., Poland, Czech-Slovakia. But any one acquainted with the facts of international life will readily admit that not before many years have passed, these states will resent the infraction of the principle and seek to establish their legal equality.

The doctrine of equality of states has played and will play the same part in international law as the doctrine of equality of men has played and will play in national politics. No one knows whether all men are equal or not. Still, it is the continuous reiteration of this principle which has secured for those who occupy the lower ranks of society many of the rights the latter possess. And so it is with the doctrine of equality of states which has secured for the smaller states many of the rights they possess to-day. If it is desired that the League of Nations should continue as an effective instrument for securing international justice, it is essential that the larger states should not acquire an undue predominance at the expense of and to the prejudice of the smaller ones; and this result could only be secured by an express recognition of the principle of equality. The distinction between positive law and principles of legislation is feasible within the boundaries of the state. But in formulating the rights and rules which are to govern the relations of states, one cannot observe a hard and fast line of demarcation between the two. The doctrine of the legal equality of states is one of the postulates of international law. Exceptions will have to be made in its application to the actual facts of international life. But in our opinion that will be a much sounder procedure than an out and out repudiation of the doctrine.

Application for restitution consequential upon reversal of decree—Limitation.

We draw the attention of the profession to the judgment of a Full Bench of the Patna High Court in Balmakund Marwari v.

Basanta Kumari Dasi, [1924] Pat. 33. It illustrates to what extent the time and energies of Judges and legal practitioners may be taken up and incidentally also how unnecessarily and wastefully the purses of the litigants may be depleted in order that at the end of it all to arrive at the best guess as to what the legislature might be supposed to have thought as regards a class of cases which it failed to provide for expressly for the simple reason that the matter escaped its attention. There is no doubt that applications for restitution consequential upon the reversal of a decree which has been executed are generically indistinguishable from applications for execution; and there is no reason why in regard to limitation the former should be governed by the fixed three years provided by Art. 181 whilst the latter should be governed by Art. 182 which permits an indefinite extension of this period beyond the initial three years by steps taken in the interval in aid of execution, limited only in cases of money decrees to a fixed 12 years. The decisions in the various High Courts, as the judgment shows, are conflicting, and it is high time that the law in regard to both kinds was made uniform by expressly making Art. 182 applicable to applications for restitution consequential upon the reversal or variation of a decree which has been already executed.

THE UTBANDI ACT.

BENGAL ACT X OF 1923.

(BY RADHAROMON MUKERJEE, VAKIL, BERHAMPORE.)

Char and dearah lands not only land held under it.

It is not a fact, as is sometimes supposed, that the char and dearah lands are the only class of lands usually held under the utbandi system. The Bengal Tenancy Act, while treating the two separately, lays down similar rules regarding the acquisition of occupancy right in such lands, and for having it declared that such lands have ceased to be char or dearah land and thereupon all the provisions of the Act shall apply to them.

Acts X of 1859 and VIII of 1869, B. C., treated utbandi same way as raiyati.

Under the Act X of 1859 and Act VIII of 1869, B. C., if the raiyat paid rent for the period he could cultivate, and did not pay when he could not do so, or paid only for so much land as he could cultivate in any year, the holding and the cultivation for more than twelve years, though discontinuous, gave him a right of occupancy. These Acts thus made no distinction between utbandi and ordinary raiyati land so far as regards the acquisition of occupancy rights therein.

Bengal Tenancy Act treats them differently.

The Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885, has made material alteration of the law on this point. In this respect the utbandi land is dealt with in the Act differently from ordinary raiyati land in which, by sec. 21 a settled raiyat has a right of occupancy, no matter how short a time he has held it. Sec. 180, however, prohibits the acquisition of an occupancy right in land ordinarily let under the custom of utbandi, until that particular land has been held for twelve years continuously. A right of occupancy, therefore, cannot be acquired in a piece of land held on that system if the possession of it has not been continuous for the period of twelve years.

Reviews.

THE BRITISH YEAR BOOK OF INTERNATIONAL LAW, 1923-24. (Published by Henry Frowde and Hodder & Stoughton, London).

Presents a collection of well-informed articles on some of the present-day topics of international law and notes of cases decided by international tribunals as also reviews of books dealing with international law and politics. The articles on "The Doctrine of Legal Equality of States" and "The Protection of Minorities" will be of special interest to Indian students. The get-up of the book is perfect.

SANJIVA ROW'S INDIAN RAILWAYS ACT (ACT IX OF 1890). By S. K. Rangachariar, B.L., Vakil, Trichinopoly. Second Edition 1922. Law Printing House and Lawyers' Companion Office, Madras.

A new edition of this work has been issued after five years chiefly owing to the death of the author. The scheme of the work is similar to those of Sanjiva Row's annotations. The important elements of the sections which have been the subject-matter of judicial interpretation have been put down in the annotations in the form of catch-words and decisions thereon have been set out very briefly. The amendments to the Act have been noted up to 1919 while the case-law has been brought down to the middle of 1922. As the Indian Railways Act follows the English Act closely, a summary of English decision given in appropriate places will be found useful. The work begins by giving in brief, the rules of interpretation of statutes and also references to the parliamentary statute which have a bearing on the constitution and powers of some of the Railway Companies in India. Some of the more important ones are given in the appendix as also the Rules relating to the Indian Act. This is a very useful and well-got-up edition of the Railways Act.

SANJIVA ROW'S INDIAN REGISTRATION ACT (XVI OF 1908), SECOND EDITION. By P. Hari Rao, B.A., B.L. Law Printing House and Lawyers' Companion Office, Madras.

Owing to the death of Mr. Sanjiva Row, a second edition of this annotated work has also been published after some time. The present editor, while keeping to the general scheme and plan of the work, has incorporated into it the changes in the law up to the middle of 1922 and also all important decisions up to that date. The Introduction which covers 72 pages gives a historical sketch of the course of legislation on this subject since 1864 as also the conflict of decision that have led to subsequent changes in the law including that effected by Act XV of 1917. The scheme of the work is to dissect the sections into a series of catch-words and insert below them the points of decision relating to each. It cannot properly be called a commentary on the Act, but all the same as numerous cases are cited below each section it will be found useful by practitioners in hunting up references to the case-law on the subject. The get-up of the work like that of its companion volumes is attractive.

SANJIVA ROW'S GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT AND THE INDIAN MAJORITY ACT. By A. K. Nanniah, B. L., Vakil, Trichinopoly. Third Edition, 1922. Law Printing House and Lawyers' Companion Office. Madras.

The scheme of this revised edition is the same. The case-law has been brought down to June 1922. Some of the older Acts as Act of 1858 relating to Bengal minors. Act of 1864 (Bombay minors) are given in the appendix. The Vakils of Trichinopoly seem to be a very industrious class and we are indebted to them for more annotations than to lawyers of any other locality.

The Lawyers' Companion Office has also issued supplements to the following Acts for bringing the legislative changes and case-law relating to them up-to-date on the scheme of other publications already noticed. This will enable the possessors of the old volumes of these annotated Acts to bind up those with the supplement and bring them up-to-date.

The Indian Contract Act.
The Specific Relief Act.
The Easement Act.
The Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.
The Land Acquisition Act.
The Law of Arbitration.
Law Relating to Marriage and Divorce.

NOTES

Lord Olivier, if made a life-peer.

India would be naturally interested in the new Secretary of State, Sir Sidney Olivier, being created a peer of the realm immediately upon the advent of the Labour Government. Last Thursday, the 6th inst. one of our daily contemporaries published a special telegram from its own correspondent, dated London, the 5th, that—

"In view of the dislike of Socialists to the hereditary principle it is pointed out that the three new Labour peers—Sir Sidney Olivier, Secretary of State for India, Brig.-General Thomson, Secretary of State for the Air Ministry, and Mr. Sidney Arnold, Under-Secretary for the Colonies—are all life peers."

There is no doubt about the fact that Mr. Ramsay MacDonald must be feeling ill at ease about the attitude of the House of Lords towards his Government, or what it might be even though he has included in his Cabinet so striking a personality as Lord Haldane, perhaps the most outstanding figure among the peers, save the Earl of Balfour. Lord Chelmsford is in the Cabinet also, and his only qualification when he was appointed the Viceroy of India eight years ago, was that he had no past. To successfully fight for the solution of social and international problems from the point of view of the new Government within the walls of the gilded chamber is a difficult, nay, impossible task even for Lord Haldane. It is not at all unnatural therefore that the Premier is anxious to strengthen the hands of his supporters in the upper chamber by the elevation to peerage of persons of proved intellectual eminence and administrative capability such as Sir Sidney Olivier, or Brigadier-General Thompson. Sir Sidney would undoubtedly be a valuable acquisition to the House of Peers and would add materially to the strength of the Labour Party there. But can it be that he has been made a life-peer? We have hitherto had no confirmation of the report and in the absence of further details connected with his life peerage we would be inclined to question its accuracy on constitutional grounds. A similar mistake was made in the newspaper press with regard to Lord Sinha, when he was made a member of the House of Lords as Under-Secretary of State for India but the peerage conferred on him is hereditary and not for life.

The House of Lords, it is well-known, is composed of—(1) the hereditary peers of the United Kingdom; (2) hereditary peers who are not hereditary Lords of Parliament, comprising (a) the 16 representative peers of Scotland elected by the Scotch peers for each Parliament, and (b) the 28 representative peers of Ireland elected by the Irish peers to sit for life; and (3) peers who are Lords of Parliament for life, but transmit no peerage or Lordship of Parliament to their heirs, i.e., (a) the 26 spiritual peers, and (b) the four Lords of appeal in ordinary. There is no place in the English constitution for life peers other than law-lords, a rule steadfastly adhered to since 1858. In the early days when the constitution of England was still in the making much difficulty was experienced in bringing about harmony between the House of Lords and the House of Commons, when they differed. Two facts in the past history of England are cited as indicating the method of securing harmony. The first belongs to a period when the theory of the subordination of the Lords was not developed any more than it was accepted, when the personal will of the monarch was a potent factor dominating the conduct and action of the executive. In 1711, Queen Anne created twelve new peers to secure the passage of a Bill through the Lords. And a threat was held out to create as many peers as would be necessary to ensure the passage of the Reform Bill of 1832, to which course, the great Duke of Willington offered opposition with all the vehemence at his disposal in a speech in the House of Lords that "if this be a legal and constitutional course of conduct, there is no doubt that the constitution of this House and of this country is at an end." As is well-known to all students of English history, the peers yielded and passed the Reform Bill and thereby helped to firmly establish the theory of the subordination of the House of Lords. A similar threat was held out by Mr. Gladstone when he re-introduced his Franchise Bill in unaltered form after the Lords had thrown it out in 1884. The peers thought better of the situation and decided not to allow him to use all the power which the constitution of England furnished in order to carry his bill to its final passage.

Mr. Gladstone could not have meant that he desired to overcome the opposition of the Lords to his Re-distribution Bill by the creation of enough life peers, for he could not possibly be forgetful of the case of Sir James Parke created Baron Wensleydale by Lord Palmerston of whose Cabinet Mr. Gladstone was himself a member, as Chancellor of the Exchequer, in 1858. A committee of the Lords reported against the power of the Crown to admit life peers to Parliament, which it attempted to do in the case of Baron Wensleydale. Consequently, the Queen on the recommendation of the Premier had to make the peerages conferred upon both the distinguished lawyers, Parke and Pemberton Leigh, hereditary, to enable them to sit and vote in the House of Lords as Lord Wensleydale and Lord Kingsdown. We have it on the authority of Anson that "the authority of the Crown to create peers for life with a right not merely to possess rank, precedence, and the other attributes of peerage, but to sit and vote as Lords of Parliament, was called in question in the year 1858 in the Wensleydale Peerage Case. It was then held that the Crown had no such power." "Life peerages, except in the case," says Lord Halsbury, "of spiritual peers and the four Lords of Appeal in ordinary, cannot be created by the Crown so as to confer a right to sit and vote in the House of Lords." That is the last word on the subject of the creation of life peers in England. Neither Mr. Ramsay MacDonald nor the Crown has any constitutional power to create a life-peer and so we presume that Lord Olivier has been made a hereditary peer.

Is India the most litigious country in the Empire.

The English Law Journal states: "One interesting fact which the Judicial Committee's list scarcely ever fails to disclose is that India is the most litigious part of the King's Dominions beyond the seas. Of the twenty-eight appeals awaiting hearing by our Imperial Court of Appeal, no fewer than nineteen are from the Indian Courts. Canada contributes but three cases to the list and Australia but two . . . . Of the four Crown Colonies, Malta supplies two, Gibraltar and St. Lucia one each." The above only discloses what ignorance regarding India exists even amongst lawyers in England who are expected to be better informed about the Empire than other classes of Englishmen. It never struck the writer that India has a population of over 315 millions, while Canada a little over 8¾ millions, Australia a little over 5½ millions, New Zealand not over 1¼ millions, South Africa a little over 7 millions of whom the Europeans are only 1½ millions. This at once demonstrates the fallacy of drawing inference from such data that India is the most litigious country in the Empire. It should further be noted that the Dominions have by legislation considerably restricted the right of appeal to the Privy Council. It is of interest also to note that Gibraltar has only a population of 17,327 and Malta a population of 2,18,510. Further comment is superfluous.

The Betting Vice.

Betting in England has assumed such scandalous dimensions amongst the common people that a commission was appointed to enquire and suggest remedies. The Committee has recently issued a report in which they observe: "Work in our mills and factories is stopped and damaged by the amount of time given to the discussion and thought about betting." Then the report comes to the finding "that the betting habit has spread and is spreading; that it is practised by the wives and children of working men; and, in fact, it is a cancerous growth on the body politic." We ought to take a warning in India, as the vice seems to be on the growth in our big cities. Our Provincial Legislatures ought to be on the alert and they would be well-advised in tackling such social evils and promoting social wellbeing of the people by suitable measures instead of frittering away all their time and energy in political polemics.

The majority of the English Committee are not in favour of suppressing all betting by legislation. It is for limiting the number of betting places by requiring them to be licensed and providing that all bettings in such places are to be carried out by stamped tickets thus restricting betting and at the same time enabling the State to derive a revenue therefrom. The minority report, however, does not approve of the suggestion and we believe that every honest citizen will agree with them that the vice requires a more drastic remedy and should be put down with a strong hand. Our English legal contemporary takes the same view and says: "Betting has, in truth, become one of the greatest of national evils, and it is idle to expect to cure it otherwise than by drastic police action and such an alteration in the law as would make it compulsory for weak-kneed Magistrates to impose the penalty on street book-makers and their agents. It would on the whole do more good than harm to make it illegal for anyone to carry on the business of book-makers under heavy penalties. Gaming in itself may be merely unsocial; but professional gaming deserves a much greater condemnation." That legislation for the stamping out of this evil is effective, is proved by the fact that cotton-gambling houses were swept away from Calcutta by special legislation.

THE UTBANDI ACT.

Bengal Act X of 1923.

(By Radharomon Mukerjee, Vakil, Berhampore.)

It thus, as the sub-committee observe, "retards the acquisition of occupancy rights and restricts the application of ordinary raiyati rights in any part of the country where the custom prevails in the lands ordinarily, and for the time being let under that custom."

No necessity for continuing system.

The cultivation of these lands during the period of over hundred years, (under the British Rule), intermittent though it might be, has, however, very much improved the nature and quality of their soil and their fertility, and the pressure of a growing population has very much increased the demand for land for the purpose of cultivating it. "The system has"—as the sub-committee rightly point out—"now largely developed in practice into a species of settled cultivation in which it is undesirable to restrict the acquisition of ordinary raiyati rights or to retard the acquisition of occupancy rights." There is therefore no necessity now for allowing the custom to continue and for keeping these lands as a class separate from the ordinary raiyati holdings. "A change in the law is therefore called for."

Proposal to convert utbandi into raiyati holding.

The committee recommended that the law should be so modified as to enable utbandi tenancies to be converted into ordinary raiyati holdings, and the Act accepted such a principle.

Utbandi should have been declared illegal where land of good quality.

To effect this object all that is required is to declare that the custom of cultivation under the utbandi system shall no longer be legal and to lay down that the cultivator who now holds land under such a system shall have the ordinary raiyati right in it, so that if he is already a settled raiyat of the village, he shall have the right of occupancy, and, if not, he shall have the right of a non-occupancy raiyat therein. This should of course have been done in those cases where land has reached the same condition as ordinary raiyati lands. The sub-committee, however, in their report, did not propose to, and the Act does not, make any provision for prohibiting the said custom.

On the other hand, they both contemplate in their proposals the continuance thereof.

Provision for converting utbandi into raiyati rent.

They, however, adopt the round-about and circuitous method for effecting the same object by providing for "the commutation of utbandi rents into ordinary raiyati rents somewhat on the lines of sec. 40, Bengal Tenancy Act." They have laid down that "a uniform annual rent" should be fixed in the first instance in place of the varying rent payable in respect of the utbandi lands, and "when an utbandi rent has been converted into a uniform annual rent for any lands, such lands should cease to be deemed to be held under the custom utbandi and the raiyat should hold them as an occupancy raiyat."

Rules for effecting the same.

They lay down elaborate rules for fixing uniform annual rent in respect of the utbandi lands.

Distinction between occupancy and non-occupancy holdings.

And in doing so they draw a distinction between those lands in which the raiyats have already acquired the right of occupancy and those in which they have not yet done so. In the first case they point out "there is no reason why any application for conversion should be refused." In such a case, under the present law, the raiyat acquiring the right of occupancy has the right to have the produce-rent (usually) payable by him commuted into money-rent under sec. 40. And under the Bill for amending the main Act, the under-raiyats (including those who are now described as *Bhag-chases) are also proposed to be given the same right. There is therefore no reason for changing the law or for making any special provisions, as the sub-committee proposed and the Act does, "laying down the rules for the fixing of uniform annual rent in respect of utbandi lands."

Utbandi raiyat usually pays produce rent and not money rent.

It may be stated here that the utbandi raiyats are required very often to pay rent in kind, and in this respect they are like ordinary raiyats who hold land under the Bhaoli system. In the view of the Committee, however, the rent payable in respect of these lands is generally money-rent. They have stated "that utbandi rents are money rents and not the produce rents contemplated by sec. 40." We, however, fail to understand why the committee found that the rent is money rent and not produce rent.

Money rent payable by him lower.

Money rent, however, when payable by the utbandi raiyat is often lower than the rent payable by the ordinary raiyat in view of the fact that the land held by him is usually of bad quality. The improvement of the land, by his own labour, unaided by the landlord, entitles him equitably to claim a lower rent.

Utbandi and raiyati land placed on same footing re. enhancement general hardship on raiyat.

The Committee and the Act, however, place such land on a footing of equality with the raiyati land and lay down the same rules for enhancing or reducing its rent by applying to it the rules applying to ordinary occupancy holdings. This will work hard upon the raiyat.

Plots of different qualities treated alike.

In the second case, to save the landlords from having the worst lands thrown on his hands by the tenant making a selection only of the best lands he has cultivated during a cycle of cultivation they provide that application for the purpose must include all the lands cultivated by the raiyat "during the preceding period of six years." This may be advantageous to the landlord but will be extremely disadvantageous to the raiyat. There is no ground for compelling the raiyat to take lease of plots of bad qualities.

Premium to be paid to landlord.

To have the utbandi land converted into raiyati holding, the raiyat however, is required to pay to the landlord a premium equivalent to "a fixed multiple" (for the present three times) "of the rent payable in instalments not exceeding three." "As, however, the compulsory payment of premium might prevent the raiyat from applying for conversion," he may in lieu thereof pay an additional rent of 20 per cent.

For which there is no reason.

But as we have already stated, the landlord having no part in improving the land he has no right to claim the premium and the committee had no justification for making the proposal.

(Concluded).

* The Government have however, assured the public that the proposal regarding the Bhag chases will be dropped.

HIGH COURT HOLIDAY LIST.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

DEAR SIR,

The list of holidays for Civil Courts in Bengal for the current year is a remarkable document. Retrenchment is the order of the day, and retrenchment in the matter of holidays seems to have been carried out with a vengeance. For several important religious festivals of the Hindus for which the Courts had been getting holidays, since perhaps the beginning of the British rule, they are to be closed no more, as if, by keeping them open on these days, the whole problem of financial crux is solved at once. It is a pity that in framing this year's list, little heed has been paid to the religious sentiments of the public. For instance, we are no longer to have a holiday for Sivaratri, though that is an occasion for observing total fast; those of us who have to perform the Doljatra had henceforth better be content with a day's holiday leaving the ceremony to take care of itself on the next day. Eclipses are to be deleted from the Hindu religious code and so on. One thing in particular seems to have been lost sight of altogether. Mofussil Courts are not so many offices consisting of a number of clerks merely; they are offices, no doubt, but something more. They have to deal with outside public and cannot possibly do any work without them. Yet one wonders how work can go on, if suitors cannot make their appearance at the sacrifice of their religious observances. We trust vigorous protests will come forth from all parts of the country, and memorials will be submitted for an immediate revision of the list so as to include festivals like Sivaratri, Bengali New Year, second day of Dol, Rathajatra, etc.

Yours faithfully,
JOGENDRA KUMAR NIYOGI, Pleader, Manikganj.

RESTITUTION APPLICATIONS WHETHER "MISCELLANEOUS CASES."

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

May I crave the hospitality of your columns and request you to insert the following few lines in your journal.

An application for restitution under sec. 144 of the C. P. Code is treated in this District as a miscellaneous (judicial) case. As such a case must needs require a judicial inquiry. It appears that in General Rules and Circular Orders of the Appellate Side of the High Court (Vol. I, pp. 245 to 247, Chap. X) there is what purports to be an exhaustive list of cases which should be included under the head "Miscellaneous (Judicial)" cases, but strangely enough applications under sec. 144, C. P. C., do not find place therein.

Clearly a separate suit is now barred by the express terms of sub-sec. (2) and an "application" for restitution is no longer one for execution of the Appellate decree. This section, therefore, having barred a separate suit and having simplified matters by omitting all reference to execution as was provided for in the old Code of 1882 (sec. 583) it seems clear that a decree cannot follow otherwise than upon the finding or a judicial determination which can hardly be arrived at unless the "application" is registered and numbered as miscellaneous case. Apparently, therefore, the rule-makers seem to have omitted to include cases under sec. 144 in the list referred to above and if such be the case the attention of the Hon'ble High Court should be drawn to it forthwith.

Yours truly,
HEMENDRA NATH DUTT, B. L.,
Pleader, Chittagong.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before SUHRAWARDY, J. CIVIL RULE NO. 948 OF 1923. DELARUDDI HALDAR and another, (Plaintiffs) Petitioners v. DEDARBUX MOLLA, (Defendant) Opposite Party. The 16th January 1924.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), sec. 25—Revision—Civil Procedure Code of 1908, Or. 17, r. 1, sub-r. (1)—Adjournment costs, order for immediate payment—Dismissal in default, if proper.

The Plaintiffs-Petitioners instituted a suit in the second Court of the Munsif at Alipore invested with jurisdiction of Court of Small Causes against the Opposite Party. Upon the Petitioners' application for adjournment on 25th June 1923, the Court directed them to pay down a certain sum of money to the Opposite Party as adjournment costs then and there: and on the Petitioners' failure to comply with the said order the learned Munsif rejected the Petitioners' application and dismissed the suit for default:

Held—The order dismissing the Petitioners' suit for default, upon his failure to pay down the adjournment costs then and there, at the time of the order for such adjournment without giving him sufficient opportunity to enable him to carry out the Court's order, was improper and ought not to have been made; the order of dismissal was therefore set aside and the rule made absolute.

Dhanipram v. Murli Mahto, (1909) 36 C. 566; 13 C. W. N. 535, followed.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before SUHRAWARDY AND PAGE, JJ. CIVIL RULE No. 809 OF 1923. F. D. BELLEW, Tenant (Petitioner) v. L. ELLTHE and another, Landlords (Opposite Party). The 22nd January 1924.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), sec. 115—The Calcutta Rent Act (III of 1920, B. C.), sec. 15—Standard rent, fixation of—Tenant's application, if can be dealt with after his ejectment pending the application.

The Petitioner Bellew made an application in October 1922 to the Controller of Rent, Calcutta, under sec. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act (III of 1920, B. C.) for standardisation of rent in respect of the premises occupied by him as the Opposite Party's tenant. The Petitioner was ejected from the premises in question in execution of a decree in or about the middle of June 1923. Then in July 1923 the Opposite Party applied to the Rent Controller, Calcutta for dismissal of the Petitioner's application made under sec. 15 which was then pending, on the ground that the relation of landlord and tenant had ceased to exist between the parties. The Controller of Rents, Calcutta acceded to the said application of the landlords, Opposite Party. The Petitioner then applied under sec. 115 of the Code of Civil Procedure for setting aside the Controller's said order:

Held—The Petitioner was entitled to proceed with his application under sec. 15 of the Calcutta Rent Act for fixation of standard rent although the relation of landlord and tenant had ceased to subsist between the parties. Rule made absolute.

Dr. Mohendra Nath Rai and Babu Lolit Mohun Sanyal for the Petitioner.

Babu Bepin Chandra Mallik for the Opposite Party.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before RANKIN AND MOOKERJEE, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2365 OF 1921. RAMESH CHANDRA MITRA, Plaintiff, Appellant v. DAIBA CHARAN DAS and others, Defendants, Respondents. The 22nd January 1924.

Transfer of non-transferable occupancy holding—Sub-lease by transferee to raiyat—Abandonment—Repudiation—If landlord entitled to eject transferee.

The facts material to this report are as follows:—

Raj Mohan and Sonatan held the suit lands as occupancy raiyats under the Plaintiff. In execution of a money decree as well as a mortgage decree obtained against them the entire holding was sold and purchased by Defendant No. 1 Daiba Charan Das. Raj Mohan and Sonatan then took a sub-lease of the entire lands under the transferee, the Defendant No. 1, and continued to remain in possession of some culturable plots and homestead forming part of the lands of the tenancy. They no longer paid rent to the Plaintiff, though there was no proof of refusal by them to pay rent. Plaintiff did not recognise the auction-purchase of the Defendant No. 1.

Plaintiff sued the transferee, the Defendant No. 1 for khas possession of the holding. The raiyats Raj Mohan and Sonatan were not made parties.

The Munsif of Narail on the above facts relying upon Dayamayee's case (42 Cal. 172) and the case in 17 C. W. N. 1105 held that there was an abandonment, and gave the Plaintiff a decree for ejectment against the transferee. On appeal, the District Judge of Jessore relying upon the cases in 20 C. W. N. 610 and 24 C. W. N. 117 held that there was no abandonment, and dismissed the suit. Against the decision of the District Judge, Plaintiff preferred this second appeal:

Held—That upon the findings there was in law no abandonment or repudiation of the tenancy, and the landlord was not entitled to eject the transferee.

24 C. W. N. 117; 28 C. W. N. 300 followed. I. L. R. 33 Cal. 531; 9 C. W. N. 379 not followed.

Unless the landlord has a right to present possession he cannot maintain ejectment suit against a tenant's transferee, and the only remedy which the landlord can get against the transferee would be a declaration that the transferee has got no title to the land as against him.

Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur and Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen for the Appellant.

Babu Trailakyanath Ghosh for the Respondents.

H. C. S. Appeal dismissed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY AND SUHRAWARDY, JJ. APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2131 OF 1921. JOGNESWAR SIKDAR, Plaintiff, Appellant v. NIBARAN MANDAL and others, Defendants, Respondents. The 3rd January 1924.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 21, rr. 90, 92—Validity of sale, if can be questioned by way of defence in a suit for possession, when no application made under Or. 21, r. 90—Non-transferable occupancy holding, if liable to be sold in execution of money decree obtained by a person who is not the landlord.

The facts material to this report are as follows:—Plaintiff brought this suit in the Munsif's Court at Narail for recovery of possession of certain lands on declaration of his title thereto. Plaintiff based his title on auction-purchase of the lands in execution of a money decree against the Defendants. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 contested the suit, and their defence, inter alia, was that Plaintiff acquired no title by his purchase and that processes of attachment and sale proclamation were not served, and they came to know of the auction sale for the first time after the institution of the present suit.

The Munsif dismissed the suit. On appeal by the Plaintiff, the Additional District Judge of Jessore affirmed that decision and held that the Plaintiff did not acquire any title by his auction-purchase in execution of the money decree and that the writs of attachment and sale proclamation were not served, and the lands were sold at an inadequate price.

Plaintiff thereupon preferred this second appeal, and it was contended on his behalf that Plaintiff acquired a good title by virtue of his auction-purchase of the non-transferable occupancy holding in execution of the money decree, and the case of Kenaram Pal v. Golam Nabi Mandal, I. L. R. 50 Cal. 508 was relied on, and it was further contended that the Defendants were not competent to challenge the sale in this suit inasmuch as they did not seek the remedy offered to them by Or. 21, r. 90:

Held—That the Plaintiff must succeed on both the grounds, and the appeal was allowed and the suit was decreed with costs in all the Courts.

The provisions of Or. 21, r. 92 preclude a judgment-debtor from asking a Court in such a suit as this to go into questions which affect nothing but the regularity of the sale. The penalty imposed on a negligent judgment-debtor is set out in the above rule and it is that the Court shall make an order confirming the sale and thereupon the sale shall become absolute. This amounts to a judicial determination that none of the objections exists on which the validity of the sale could have been questioned.

Rai Bahadur Surendra Chandra Sen and Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen (for Babu Nanindra Chandra Sen) for the Appellant.

Babu Tarakeswar Pal Chowdhry for the Respondents.

H. C. S. Appeal allowed.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before PANTON AND MOOKERJEE, JJ. S. A. No. 2415 OF 1921. KRISHNA CHANDRA SAHA and another, Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, Appellants v. LALIT MOHON PODDER and others, Plaintiffs-Defendants Nos. 3 and 4, Respondents. The 28th January 1924.

Lower Appellate Court's finding without evidence--Interference by High Court in second appeal.

The Plaintiff brought a suit against the Defendants for the partition by metes and bounds of homestead lands and houses other than buildings built, owned or possessed by respective parties. The Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 only appeared and filed written statements. The suit was decreed ex parte for the partition of the property by a Commissioner in terms of the prayer in the plaint. Both the Commissioner and the learned Munsif in his final judgment gave the Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 among other allotments a gully mentioned as B7 in the map of the Commissioner holding that the Defendant No. 3, the rival claimant of B7, had no documents to show that it was his The Lower Appellate Court gave the ground-floor gully to Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and the upper-room upon the same to Defendant No. 3. In second appeal it was contended that the finding of the Lower Appellate Court was unsupported by any evidence or reason :

Held—That the Lower Appellate Court having disturbed the finding of the first Court without giving any reason, the case should be remanded.

Babus Gunada Charan Sen and Satish Chandra Choudhry for the Appellants.

Babus Gopal Chandra Das and Bhuban Mohun Saha for the Respondents.

S. C. C. Appeal allowed; Case remanded.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before GREAVES AND CHOTZNER, JJ. CRIM. REV. No. 1023 OF 1923. GOBINDA CHANDRA ROY, Accused, Petitioner v. ABDUL RASHID, Complainant, Opposite Party. The 31st January 1924.

Indian Penal Code, secs. 482 and 486--Counterfeiting trade mark.

The complainant was the manufacturer of a washing soap called "Gandhi" Brand Soap. He charged the accused with having counterfeited his trade mark which was the word "Mahatma" at the top, the figure of Gandhi in the middle and the word "Gandhi" at the bottom. He alleged that he had exclusive right to that brand of soap. The accused the proprietor of the Indian Soap Company was the manufacturer of a washing soap called Gandhi Brand Soap. He had the figure of Gandhi in the middle and the word Gandhi at the bottom. On the reverse side of the soap the name of his firm appeared; whereas on the reverse side of the complainant's soap the following words appeared : "A. S. M. Eshak 100 Clive Street, Calcutta." The defence was that he was not guilty, that the complainant could not have any right to the said soaps, that there were at least 8 or 10 kinds of Gandhi Brand Soaps in the market :

Held—That the complainant having failed to substantiate his exclusive right to the soaps as required by sec. 478, I. P. C., the conviction could not stand.

Messrs. P. L. Roy, S. Roy and Babu Satindra Nath Mukerji for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. N. Chaudhuri and Babus Probodh Kumar Das and Narendra Nath Mitter for the Opposite Party.

NOTES.

Civil Justice Committee—Law's delays due to Courts being undermanned.

We have been asked by the Civil Justice Committee to offer our suggestions for the prevention of delays in the administration of civil justice. We must at the very outset ask the Committee not to miss in their detailed questionaire the real cause of law's delays. We can speak from personal knowledge that its chief cause, so far as it exists in the Presidency of Bengal, is that the Civil Courts in the Mofussil are undermanned. The Munsifs and the Subordinate Judges in the Districts are very hard-worked officers. It will be no exaggeration to say that they are simply sweated. There is no foundation for the charge that they come to the Courts late. On the contrary many of them are known to work till late hours in the evening. It is a well-known fact that the health of many Munsifs and Subordinate Judges breaks down in the prime of life and they are as a rule a short-lived class. Many members of the Provincial Judicial Service are known to work even after their health has broken down. If there is any congestion in their file, it is not because of any want of ability or slackness on their part but because the volume of work that each officer is expected to do is beyond human capacity to dispose of properly and expeditiously. It would, perhaps, be beyond the capacity of the Civil Justice Committee to enquire into the state of the files of Munsifs and Subordinate Judges in the Mofussil. We would therefore suggest to them that they should ask the High Courts and the Local Governments to enquire into the matter and if satisfied that the Courts are undermanned they should recommend that steps be taken for providing an adequate number of judicial officers to cope with the current work and arrears. If this is done we shall hear less of law's delays. There are, no doubt, some secondary causes that contribute to the delay in the disposal of contested and defended suits but we shall deal with this question separately. The fundamental question is, however, more financial than judicial.

Appropriation of judicial revenue for general purposes.

It is a well-known fact that the Government of Bengal prior to 1922 used to make a net profit of close upon a crore of rupees or more out of revenue derived from the Civil Courts: from court-fees and judicial stamps, about 90 lakhs and from process-fees about 18 lakhs, on an average. Since the enhancement of the rate of court-fees and judicial stamps, the net profit of the Local Government from this source must have increased to two crores or more while the expenditure on account of administration of civil justice in this Presidency has only increased by about 10 lakhs, which is chiefly due to some improvement in the pay and prospects of judicial and ministerial officers and not to any substantial increase in the number of such officers. H. E. the Viceroy who on assumption of his office announced that the watch-word of his administration in India would be to do "justice" all round, has not had his attention drawn to the great hardship that has been inflicted on the poor suitors for civil justice almost all over India, owing to the enhanced taxation on justice, the only exception being a favoured few who belong to the more prosperous class of litigants and resort to the Original Side of the High Courts in the Presidency towns for justice.

The Meston Settlement and its Effect.

The Local Governments are not to be blamed for this bleeding of the litigants and sweating the judicial officers. For this the Meston Settlement of the apportionment of revenue between the Central and the Provincial Governments is largely responsible. The Local Governments have to appropriate almost the whole of the enormous surplus derived from the dispensation of tardy justice for meeting the ordinary charges of general administration. The Civil Justice Committee may very well invite H. E. the Viceroy's attention to this fact, for, it is the financial stringency of the Province that is standing in the way of the Local Government appointing an adequate number of judicial officers to cope with the current judicial work and preventing congestion and delay in the disposal of suits in the Mofussil in Bengal. As the scope of the Civil Justice Committee is to suggest the grant of relief to poor litigants, it will also be competent for them to draw the attention of Sir Basil Blackett, the Finance Member, who proposes shortly to engage in an enquiry for a more equitable readjustment of taxation, that the taxation on justice in this country is perhaps the most unjust and iniquitous.

Process-serving, delay in and abuses of.

Next to the Courts being undermanned, the present system of process-serving in Bengal is responsible for much hardship and delay in the disposal of suits in the Mofussil. The present system of service of processes by Civil Court peons is far from satisfactory. The principal drawbacks of the system are the following :—

(1) The peons have to travel long distances for serving processes in the interior of the district, where they are not well-acquainted with the people and often do as they are told by the identifier who accompanies them on behalf of the interested party.

(2) The service of the process, especially on a party who, it is alleged, cannot be found, is often unsatisfactory, and manipulation of service by an interested party is not uncommon.

(3) When the peon goes all by himself he usually exacts something from the person served. It is therefore not uncommon that for a consideration he may not serve the process properly or not at all and make a false return.

Suggested remedy of such abuses.

Delay in the service of the processes naturally causes delay in the disposal of suits. The remedy that we would suggest is that the Civil Court processes should be served by the joint agency of the Post Office and the President Panchayet of village unions. The processes may be sent to the Panchayet by registered post and as he knows the village people and may avail himself of the services of the village chowkidar, he may serve the processes much more satisfactorily and return the same by registered post to the Court. He is a much more responsible and respectable person than the Civil Court peon. When he is elected by the unions he will be still more responsible. Service by him would be much more satisfactory and less expensive. The Panchayet and chowkidars may be paid a small fees for such service. It would not increase the cost of litigation and it may result in saving of money and time. The process fees often leave a large surplus to the Local Government and there is scope for giving relief to litigants in cost of litigation as well.

Pleadings and legal training.

We shall next say a few words about pleadings, practice and procedure of Courts, which may to some extent be said to contribute to the delay in the disposal of suits in the Mofussil Courts. The pleadings in Mofussil Courts cannot be said to be all that may be desired. They are often prolix, especially the written statements, in which all possible and impossible objections and defences without a shadow of justification are pleaded. This we attribute to pleaders being enrolled in Courts without any previous training in the practice and procedure of the law Courts. As a remedy for this we would suggest that graduates in law should not be enrolled as legal practitioners before they have passed a public examination held either by the State or the High Court for testing their practical knowledge in drafting, conveyancing and in the practice and procedure to be followed in the framing and the conduct of the suit at its different stages. Before the candidates are allowed to appear in such examinations they should be required to serve a period of apprenticeship for two years as an articled clerk of a pleader or vakil of at least ten years' standing. This apprenticeship should not be nominal. The articled clerk should appear with the pleader in Court and a note of such appearance should be kept by the peshkar or Bench clerk. To entitle the candidate to appear at the examination he must produce a certificate from the District Judge that he has completed his period of apprenticeship and that during the period he has appeared in Court in a certain minimum number of suits and worked with the pleader with whom he is articled. If legal practitioners are enrolled after they have passed such qualifying examination, we shall get better trained lawyers and the pleadings, practice and procedure in the Mofussil Courts will considerably improve. The profession is now overcrowded and, we believe, such reasonable restrictions for securing efficiency and checking the indefinite growth of untrained lawyers will be welcomed by the public and lawyers as well. If the Munsifs are then recruited from amongst such trained lawyers after some practice in Court and some further test, the judiciary also will attain a higher degree of efficiency.

Supervision of the High Court.

It is a fact that even contested suits on the Original Side of the High Courts are much more quickly disposed of than similar suits in the Mofussil. Further, sales and execution proceedings in the High Courts are seldom attended with such trouble as are incidental to such proceedings in the Mofussil Court. This is due to the solicitors, counsel, and Court officers being well-acquainted with the proper way of framing suits and conducting them and Courts not countenancing frivolous objections. It is also largely due to precision in drafting, pleading and the regularity of practice and procedure followed on the Original Side at every stage of the suit and, let us add to the fact that on the Original Side, there is a sufficiency of Judges and a well-paid and well-trained ministerial staff. If the High Court Judges from the Original Side could make time to visit the districts, sit in the Courts and guide the judicial officers with regard to practice and procedure, a great deal of good work might be done in improving the administration of justice in the Mofussil. But for this we shall require more Judges of the High Court, and that again in the present state of our provincial finance we cannot afford. As for the present system of supervision by requiring the Civil Courts to submit periodical returns, it is open to serious objections. We have often commented upon them and need only say that it is neither fair to the officers or the suitors concerned nor conducive to the proper administration of justice. Direct supervision is always preferable to such indirect supervision.

Tinkering of the laws and procedure.

We would not advise the Committee to suggest any tinkering with the laws or procedure for accelerating the speed of justice and not its quality. The High Court has powers under the Code of Civil Procedure to frame or amend the Rules and Orders. Unfortunately the Rule Committees seldom meet and so far as we are aware, they have done nothing in this direction. Lawyers serving in it are expected to do honorary work and Judges to work after Court hours. Such work cannot be done unless one can devote his time and attention to it. This again would mean expense. We would leave it to the Legislatures and the High Courts in the Provinces to make the necessary changes in the practice and procedure after due deliberation.

Appeals.

We would on no account curtail the existing rights of appeal and power of revision. They serve to keep the lower judiciary up to the mark. Such curtailment may result in denial of justice in many cases and promote discontent. "It is not enough that justice should be done but people must feel that justice is being done." Appeals thus serve the purpose of safety valves against discontent and injustice done by officers working at a high pressure.

Law Reports and legal journals.

In connection with the question as to whether private reports are helpful or otherwise to the administration of justice, we would say from our experience extending over 27 years that they are of great assistance to the legal profession and the judiciary. For instance, the Privy Council and the High Court decisions which we report earlier than the Government Law Reports are not only helpful in the quick disposal of cases but prevent appeals which would otherwise have been preferred. The rent law cases which we report are found particularly useful in the Mofussil. Then we do not merely report the cases but comment on them, discuss them when necessary and suggest changes in the law and criticise legislation. This is alike helpful to the judiciary and the Legislature. Reports which are run on the lines of the English Law Journal and the English Law Times in India should be encouraged and by no means discouraged.

Correspondence.

To

The Editor, "Calcutta Weekly Notes."

Sir,

With reference to the correspondence of Mr. Rajendra Nath Ghosh on sec. 16, Bengal Tenancy Act, published in the 28 Calcutta Weekly Notes at p. viii, I beg to submit for publication in your much esteemed journal the following observations.

Sec. 16, Bengal Tenancy Act, is ancillary to sec. 15 inasmuch as it enacts a penal provision of law to secure compliance with the provisions of sec. 15. The objects of this section are, as given in Messrs. Finucane and Amir Ali's Bengal Tenancy Act, 2nd Edition, p. 108, "to secure (1) to the landlord notice of the succession and tender of the landlord's fee and (2) to the Collector early and accurate information to enable him to keep up official registry of permanent tenures."

It is evident that secs. 15 and 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act are enacted for the benefit of the Collector and the landlord and not of the tenant, though the tenant can, in a suit for rent, take shelter under these sections for the laches of the succeeding tenure-holder. Thus the questions raised by your correspondent are irrelevant. So long as the fact remains that the succeeding tenure-holder has not complied with the provisions of sec. 15, the Court will not allow him to recover by suit, distraint or other proceeding any rent payable to him as the holder of the tenure, either of its own motion or on the pleading of the tenant Defendant, whatever be the time of his attornment or whatever might have been the result of a previous suit or proceeding.

Yours truly,
Lalit Mohan Indra, B.L.,
Pleader.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

Civil Appellate Jurisdiction. Before Walmsley and Mookerjee, JJ. M. A. No. 368 of 1922. MATHURAPUR ZEMINDARY CO., LD., Appellants v. BHASORAM MUNDUL and others, Respondents. The 14th February 1924.

Civil Procedure Code, Or. 21, r. 16—Assignee before decree, if assignee of decree by operation of law.

The Appellants were the assignees of one Mr. Henesey who had transferred his entire interest in his zemindary together with all sums due and to be due from the tenants as also other sums payable to him. At that time several rent suits were pending decision in the trial Court. No substitution was made or sought for by the Company in those suits and the same were allowed to proceed in the name of the last proprietor Mr. Henesey. Decrees were ultimately passed in favour of Mr. Henesey. Thereafter the Company filed execution petitions for executing the said decrees on their own behalf, on which the Respondents took various objections of which the following was the subject-matter of this appeal: whether the decrees obtained by Mr. Henesey could be put into execution by the Company as transferees without having the said decrees being transferred in their favour in writing, or, in other words, whether Or. 21, r. 16 was a bar to the application. The Trial Court overruled the objection and allowed the execution to proceed. On appeal the same was reversed. Hence the appeal. The learned vakil for Appellants contended that the Appellants were transferees by operation of law and so Or. 21, r. 16 was no bar to the application and relied upon 25 C. W. N. 863.

The Respondents contended that as between the parties to this case the question of transfer by operation of law could not arise:

Held—That the execution petition was barred under Or. 21, r. 16.

Messrs. N. N. Sen Gupta, Counsel and Apurba Charan Mukherji, Vakil for the Appellants.

Mr. Debendra Nath Bhattacherji for the Respondents.

NOTES

Lord Olivier's Statement.

Lord Olivier's statement, while it shows considerable grasp of the facts which constitute the present political situation in India and of the causes responsible for it, has disappointed the vast majority of our countrymen in so far as it has failed to present a constructive programme for advancing the cause of free citizenship and representative institutions. As regards the Reforms, he has made it clear that he is not in a mood to amend them now and that the appointment of a Royal Commission or the calling of a Conference for that purpose is not to be thought of. It cannot be gainsaid that there is a considerable body of public opinion in favour of the appointment of a Royal Commission. The amendment of the Reforms is being called for not only by the Swarajists but by Moderates, Nationalists and Independents as well. We believe Lord Olivier has missed the first opportunity he had of ranging on the side of Government the forces of moderation by his refusal of a Royal Commission.

Lord Olivier appears to have been considerably exercised over the position of Indians in Kenya—a position of social and political inequality imposed upon them by the Colony and upheld by the authorities at Whitehall. He looks forward to an honourable solution and advises Indian settlers in Kenya meanwhile to bear their troubles in patience. That is all the Labour Government are prepared to do for the present.

Age of Consent Bill.

Dr. Gour's measure for the amendment of sec. 375 of the Indian Penal Code has re-opened the controversy over the age of consent which was settled in 1891. A good few of our readers will recall the heated controversy which followed the introduction of Sir Andrew Scoble's measure raising from ten to twelve the statutory age minimum for consummation of marriage. Dr. Gour's Bill proposes to raise the age from twelve to fourteen. A measure like the present long overdue should have been welcome universally, but the debate in the Assembly shows that there is a considerable feeling of opposition against it. Some appear to think that the Legislative Assembly, constituted as it is, is not the proper organ for passing a measure which affects vitally the religious and domestic life of the people. Others again opine that the proposed measure is far too much in advance of public opinion. There is a consensus of expert medical opinion based on vital statistics that the death rate among women and children is attributable in some measure to an early consummation of marriage and that the raising of the age from twelve to fourteen will have an immeasurably beneficial effect on India's womanhood and the children. We are aware of the existence of a strong body of opinion against the intended measure, but we should like to point out that it is one of the functions of our legislators to influence public opinion. The Bill has been referred to a strong and representative Select Committee. We hope their endeavours will not be fruitless.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The Hilary sittings commenced on the 25th January, two Boards being constituted, one of which is hearing Canadian appeals and the other appeals from India.

The latter is presided over by LORD SHAW and sitting with him are LORD PHILLIMORE, LORD YOUNGER, SIR JOHN EDGE and LORD SALVESEN.

There are 19 Indian appeals in the list, 5 from Bombay, 4 from Madras and the rest more or less evenly divided among the other provinces.

January 25, 28. An appeal from Lower Burma was first heard, Veerappa Chetty v. Arunachellam Chetty, the only question for determination being whether or not a mortgage was void for want of consideration. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Narasimham appeared for the Appellants.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and G. S. Sanders for the Respondent.

The following judgments have been delivered, the appeal being allowed in each case.

LAW'S DELAY.

To

THE EDITOR, CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES.

SIR,

The Civil Justice Committee is busy in examining witnesses to find out the root cause of law's delays in our country. Some of the witnesses before the Committee have gone so far as to suggest in a way that judicial officers not forgetful of their old school-boy days play truants from their posts of duty and with a view to throw dust in the eyes of their superiors, make notes of their hours of attendance in their diaries, which, to use a very mild expression, are not very accurate. Some witnesses, on the other hand, attribute law's delays to the lawyers' inordinate love of lucre which prompts lawyers to take unnecessary adjournments of cases from day to day, judicial officers aiding and abetting them in the pursuit of such unlawful gain. There are others who trace delays to a conspiracy between ministerial officers and litigants in bringing about indiscriminate adjournments of cases to which judicial officers play the role of indifferent spectators. But as a matter of fact a real diagnosis of the situation is not to be found in any of these extreme views.

From my experience of the Mofussil Courts I venture to throw out the following suggestions which in my humble opinion may go a great way towards minimising law's delays.

(1) If we take a statistics of the amount of work that is actually done by a judicial officer during the year we see that he has to do much more than what is possible for a man to do. He works against time, paying little regard to his health with the result that he becomes a physical wreck in the prime of his life. There should be an estimate of the amount of work which it is possible for a judicial officer to do during the year properly and expeditiously and statistics should be prepared of the average number of cases of the Courts of each district and the number of judicial officers should be fixed in proportion to the amount of work in each district and the territorial jurisdiction of an officer should be fixed on that basis.

(2) The present system of recruitment of Munsifs is extremely defective and should be discontinued. There should be a competitive examination for the appointment of Munsifs. A pleader of at least five years' standing with some workable knowledge of law and procedure would be eligible to go in for such examination.

(3) A graduate in law should undergo practical training for two years as an articled clerk with a pleader or vakil of at least 12 years' standing before being enrolled as a pleader.

(4) The ministerial staff should be better trained and more generously paid.

(5) Services of processes should be made more effective by requiring the peons to have invariably the signatures and thumb-impressions of witnesses in the returns, and the aid of village panchayets and chowkidars should be sought for, as far as possible, who would also be required to put their signatures or finger-impressions in the returns, and the system of affidavits of services by identifiers should be put a stop to, as being useless for all practical purposes and tending to cause unnecessary delay in the disposal of cases.

(6) All prolixities in pleadings and frivolous pleas and objections should be strongly discouraged.

(7) Execution proceedings should be expedited by doing away with the necessity of service of notice for settling the terms of sale proclamation and by introducing the system of issuing simultaneously the writ of attachment and sale proclamation which should be served not only on the land in question but also on the judgment-debtor personally.

Yours truly,
GANGA CHARAN DUTTA, B.L.,
Pleader, Nawabgunj.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

ORDINARY ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION. Before C. C. GHOSE, J. IN THE GOODS OF MARCUS ROBERT COX, deceased. The 25th January 1924.

Practice—Appointment of guardian for infant heir of deceased Christian before grant of Letters of Administration—Sec. 217 of the Indian Succession Act.

Difficulty has arisen owing to the absence of the word "minor" in sec. 217 of the Indian Succession Act. Cases are coming up, in which the deceased died without leaving a widow but has left minor children and the brothers or sisters of the deceased have applied for Letters of Administration. Under sec. 30 of the Succession Act, the estate, in such a case, goes to the children and under sec. 203, they alone are entitled to the grant. But being minors no grant can be issued to them.

In a case like this, if governed by the Probate and Administration Act, we issue grant to a person who applies and gets himself first appointed guardian of the infant children under sec. 33 of the Probate and Administration Act.

The corresponding section of the Indian Succession Act is sec. 217. But there the word "minor" does not occur. It may reasonably be assumed that this was an oversight on the part of the Legislature, for, one can think of no cogent reason for exclusion of the word from this section and for its inclusion in sec. 33 of the Probate and Administration Act.

It is submitted that sec. 225 of the Indian Succession Act would not apply to a case like the present but contemplates a case of emergency where there is a risk of the assets being dissipated and that sec. 217 should be availed of for purposes of a grant in this case by following the English procedure as laid down in 1 Will. Exors. 11th Edn., p. 392. The passage runs as follows:—"If the person appointed sole executor, or he to whom, in case of intestacy, the right to administration has devolved under the Statutes, be within age, a peculiar sort of administration must be granted, which is called an administration durante minore aetate. In the former case, it is obviously a species of administration cum testamento annexo . . . . In Cartright's case the intestate died leaving four grand-children, whereof one was of age, and the other three were minors. The case was argued before the two Chief Justices and the Chief Baron who granted it to the mother as guardian to the three, durante minore aetate, though it was strongly urged that she, that was of age, being capable ought to be preferred."

In Tristram and Coote's Probate Practice, 15th Edn., the following passages occur:—

"So also in the case of one or more residuary legatees or devisees, if all be under age, or in an intestacy, if all the next of kin be under age, the Court will make a grant to some person limited until one of the minors or infants attains the age of twenty-one years." (Page 145).

"The minors' and infants' next of kin, as before stated, if there be no testamentary or other lawful guardian, have the preferential right of assuming their guardianship, and minors are under a corresponding obligation to elect their next of kin for such purposes in preference to all others." (Page 149).

The parties, in many cases, refuse to go to the Administrator-General of Bengal because of the fees he charges and it would be a hardship if in the case of small estates, parties are compelled to go to him, when there are competent persons available to manage the estate during the minority of the heir.

Our r. 33, p. 420, provides that we should follow the English practice when our Acts or Rules do not provide for any special case arising in Probate and Administration matters.

So we have ample authority for adopting the English practice.

The petition in one of these matters is laid before your Lordship for your Lordship's ruling as to whether we should follow the same practice in a case coming under the Succession Act in which the heirs are minors, as we do in a case governed by sec. 33 of the Probate and Administration Act, as if the word "minor" had been inserted in sec. 217 of the former Act.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION Before SUHRAWARDY AND CHOTZNER, JJ. S. A. No. 2364 OF 1922 (WITH RULE No. 31 OF 1921). WAFUZUDDIN PRAMANIK, Defendant, Appellant v. MAHAMUD BALAKI and others, Respondents. The 27th February 1924.

Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 153—Suit for rent—What is amount of rent annually payable—Competency of second appeal.

The Plaintiff brought a suit for recovery of rent alleging that he and the pro formâ Defendants were jointly entitled to a 4 annas share. The suit was valued at Rs. 9-11 ans. out of which half was said to be due to the Plaintiff and the pro formâ Defendants jointly and out of which the Plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to a half-share. The defence was (1) that the collection of rent for the 4 annas share was joint with another person who had a 13 gandas share and (2) that the Plaintiff had other brothers who were co-owners with the Plaintiff and as such the Plaintiff was not entitled to sue without joining his brothers. During the pendency of the suit the pro formâ Defendants filed an application to be joined as co-Plaintiffs and full court-fee for the 4 annas share was paid.

The learned Munsif who was specially empowered under sec. 153, Bengal Tenancy Act, gave effect to both these contentions of the Defendants and dismissed the suit accordingly; and the application of the pro formâ Defendants was refused.

Against this decision the Plaintiff alone preferred an appeal by making the principal Defendant and the pro formâ Defendants Respondents.

The lower Appellate Court decreed the appeal and the suit holding on both the points in favour of the Plaintiff. The principal Defendants preferred a second appeal and also obtained a Rule under sec. 115, C. P. C., as it was thought that there was some doubt as to the competency of the second appeal. In the memorandum of second appeal and the application under sec. 115 the Plaintiff and pro formâ Defendants were made parties. But as there was no proper service upon some of the pro formâ Defendants they were not proceeded against, as it was thought that they were not necessary parties.

On behalf of the Respondents two preliminary objections were taken, (1) that no second appeal lay, and (2) that the pro formâ Defendants not having been proceeded against the appeal and the Rule, were both incompetent for defect of parties :

Held—(1) That a question as to the amount of rent annually payable was not involved in the case, and therefore the suit being valued at less than Rs. 50 no appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge, (2) that although no appeal lay to the Subordinate Judge a second appeal lay to the High Court, (3) that the appeal was not incompetent for defect of parties as the Plaintiff was the sole Plaintiff-Appellant in the lower Appellate Court (17 Cal. 489 F. B. and 34 C. L. J. 569 distinguished). The appeal was allowed and Rule discharged.

Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur and Babu Satis Chandra Chowdhury for the Appellant.

Babus Mahendra Nath Roy and Monmatha Nath Roy for the Respondents.

NOTES

The Berars.

The vexed question of the Berars has come up again. As our readers are aware, the Nizam is pressing for the restoration of the province to him alleging that his father was "rushed" into signing the "assignment in perpetuity," and that he had no right to do it at all. It will be outside the scope of our journal to launch into a discussion as to the circumstances of the transfer of the Berars to the Government of India. But we take this opportunity to point out that the question is not merely a question between the two Governments. The wishes of the people should be consulted before any decision is arrived at. The province should not be regarded as a mere patrimonium either of the Government of India or of the Nizam, but as a community of individuals who have got something to say as to how and by whom they should like to be governed. The Allies at the Peace Conference proceeded to break up old kingdoms and constitute new ones; and the procedure they followed was the Referendum which showed a scrupulous regard for the principle that the opinion of the majority of the people is one of the primary considerations to be kept in view in the decision of all questions relating to cession or transfer of territory from one sovereignty to another.

Protection of Minorities.

As the result of the Peace Treaties, quite a number of new independent states have come into existence. They were practically created by the Allies and in recognising them, the latter have imposed on them certain obligations with regard to minorities. The Allies in constituting new states proceeded on the principle of nationality. But the application of this principle led to its violation in many cases and "something had to be done for the violated minorities both in the interests of the sacred doctrine itself and in order to impart something of stability to the new settlement." This is the origin of what are known as the Minority Treaties which have definitely imposed obligations on certain states, e.g., Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Jugo-Slavia and many others, to protect the fundamental rights of their respective racial or linguistic or religious minorities. Thus, to give one example, Poland has agreed with the Allies that "she will assure full and complete protection of life and liberty to all inhabitants without distinction of birth, nationality, language, race or religion" and that "all inhabitants shall be entitled to the exercise, whether public or private, of any creed, religion or belief whose practices are not inconsistent with public order or public morals."

The Minority Treaties are no doubt in theory, at any rate, an infraction of the independence of the states concerned. The latter accepted the obligations imposed by them only when they found that the Allies were not prepared to recognise them otherwise, and we are afraid that they will do their utmost to nullify them at the earliest opportunity. It cannot be gainsaid, however, that the Allies were actuated by the best of motives and that in many of the states, such limitations, as they sought to impose on national sovereignty, are an absolute necessity.

Law's Delays.

In one of our previous issues, we discussed some of the causes which are responsible for the delay in the administration of civil justice and suggested a few remedies. We pointed out that there was some laxity in the drafting of pleadings by our lawyer friends in the Mofussil and that the Mofussil Courts are, generally speaking, more dilatory in the despatch of cases than Courts in the Presidency towns. No doubt the dilatory habits of the suitors in the Mofussil are to some extent responsible for the dilatory procedure in the Mofussil Courts. But if the Courts and the lawyers in the Mofussil observe the business-like ways of the judges, attorneys and counsel on the Original Side of the High Court and the Vakils on the Appellate Side, matters would soon be quite different. We are surprised to find that some practitioners in the Mofussil believe that complicated questions of law seldom come up before the Original Side. If they watched for a few days how expeditiously complicated commercial suits, involving questions of contract, bills of exchange, company law, mortgage suits, suits relating to easements, testamentary and intestate succession, matrimonial and other suits are disposed of, it would be a lesson to them in law and procedure and also with regard to examination and cross-examination of witnesses over which very little time is wasted.

ADVOCACY v. HONESTY.

Boswell asked Doctor Johnson whether he did not think "that the practice of the law in some degree hurts the nice feeling of honesty." To whom the doctor replied: "Why no, sir, if you act properly. You are not to deceive your clients with false representations of your opinion: you are not to tell lies to a Judge." Boswell: "But what do you think of supporting a cause which you know to be bad?" Johnson: "Sir, you do not know it to be good or bad till the Judge determines it. I have said that you are to state facts fairly; so that your thinking, or what you call knowing, a cause to be bad must be from reasoning, must be from your supposing your arguments to be weak and inconclusive. But, sir, that is not enough. An argument which does not convince yourself, may convince the Judge to whom you urge it: and if it does convince him, why, then, sir, you are wrong, and he is right. It is his business to judge; and you are not to be confident in your own opinion that a cause is bad, but to say all you can for your client, and then hear the Judge's opinion." Boswell: "But, sir, does not affecting a warmth when you have no warmth, and appearing to be clearly of one opinion when you are in reality of another opinion, does not such dissimulation impair one's honesty? Is there not some danger that a lawyer may put on the same mask in common life, in the intercourse with his friends?" Johnson: "Why no, sir, everybody knows you are paid for affecting warmth for your client; and it is, therefore, properly no dissimulation: the moment you come from the bar you resume your usual behaviour. Sir, a man will no more carry the artifice of the bar into the common intercourse of society than a man who is paid for tumbling upon his hands will continue to tumble upon his hands when he should walk on his feet."

DOES OR. IX, C. P. C., APPLY TO EXECUTION PROCEEDINGS?

BY G. SWAMINATHAN, B.A., B.L., VAKIL.
Tiruvalur (S. India).

An attempt is made in this article to examine with reference to the chief decided cases the applicability of Or. IX, C. P. C., to proceedings in execution.

If at all Or. IX should apply to applications under Or. XXI, it should be by virtue of sec. 141, C. P. C., which runs thus:—

"The procedure provided in this Code in regard to suits shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of Civil Jurisdiction."

Does the term "proceedings" in the section include execution applications?

Let us refer to the history of the section. The first para. of sec. 647 of the Code of 1882 corresponded to the present sec. 141, C. P. C. It ran thus:—

"The procedure herein prescribed shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of Civil Jurisdiction other than suits and appeals."

Under this section, the Calcutta High Court decided that sec. 647 did not apply to execution proceedings (1) while the Allahabad High

(1) I. L. R. 18 Cal. 685.

Court held that it did (1). Then an explanation was added by an Act of 1892:—

"This section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees, which are proceedings in suits."

In this state of the authorities, the Privy Council had to consider the question in Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (2). It is necessary to examine this decision at some length, for, some High Courts in India seem to think that an authoritative pronouncement has been made on the subject. The facts of the case are important. The Appellant (decree-holder) put in an application for execution on 20th August 1885. On 5th January 1886, his pleader represented to the Court that his application might be struck off the file for the time being; whereupon the Court passed an order that the petition was dismissed "for default." The decree-holder put in a second application on 24th August 1888, to which the judgment-debtor objected saying that, as the decree-holder's prior application had been dismissed, he was debarred by sec. 373 read with sec. 647 of the old Code from making a fresh application on the very same decree. The Subordinate Judge construed the order of dismissal in the light of the circumstances mentioned above and held that permission to bring a fresh application later on ought to be inferred as having been given to the decree-holder and that therefore sec. 373 was no bar. The High Court differed from the Subordinate Judge on the question of construction of the order and held that the order should be construed as it stood and felt bound by the decision in Sarju Prasad and another v. Sita Ram (1), to uphold the judgment-debtor's contention. The decree-holder having appealed to the Privy Council, Lord Hobhouse, delivering the judgment of the Judicial Committee, observed:—

"Their Lordships have only to say that they think the Subordinate Judge right in reciting the whole of the record of 5th January 1886 which embodied the Pleader's statement in order to get at the true meaning of the order."

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

At page vii of the current volume of your esteemed journal Babu Rajendra Nath Ghosh. B.L., pleader, has raised several questions with reference to sec. 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The points are certainly of common occurrence in our Courts and I beg to offer my way of their solution for favour of your publication. The points raised are: (1) Can the objection under the section be raised by the tenant who has taken settlement from the tenure-holder after the succession has opened out? (2) Can the objection be raised in a subsequent suit if it had already been raised in a previous suit but was negatived owing to the landlord's compliance with the provisions of the law or not given effect to on account of the waiver on the part of the tenant in the suit? I deal with the objections in the order stated.

Sec. 16 occurs in Chap. III of the Act headed "tenure-holders" under a sub-head "other incidents of the tenures." The whole chapter deals with the rights and liabilities of tenure-holders as such and the only solitary instance in which any reference is made to the persons holding under them is to be found in this section. The reference is not by way of dilating upon the incidents of the holdings of such persons but by way of imposing a disability upon the tenure-holders themselves under certain contingencies. Read in this light, the meaning of the section becomes clear. It does not matter when or under what circumstances the tenure-holder did let out his land, the disability is always there. He must comply with the provisions of the law or he is debarred from realising rent from his tenant. Sec. 15 of the Act is a reminiscence of the old idea which casts a duty on a person succeeding to a tenure to get his name recorded in the office of his landlord on payment of the suitable nazarana. I need not recount the old history of the subject here but it would suffice to point out how this idea is maintained in the Patni Regulation. The bar set up by the section under review was enacted for the benefit of the landlord of the tenure-holder to ensure prompt realisation of the "landlord's fees" and the recording of the name of the succeeding tenure-holder. This consideration would, I submit, make my reading of the section sufficiently clear.

The second question raised is, in my humble opinion, involved, as to part of it, in the principles of res judicata applicable to rent suits. If there had been a finding in the former suit that the landlord had complied with the provisions of the law I do not see any intelligible principle under which the tenant can be permitted to raise the same question over again in the subsequent suit. The question of "waiver," however, requires some consideration. If in the former suit the Court distinctly left the question open I do not see any bar to its re-agitation in the subsequent suit. The tenure-holder suffered such a finding to be recorded in the former suit and he cannot reasonably complain if he be involved in the same consideration again in the subsequent suit. But if in the former suit the finding had only been to the effect that the objection had been waived without any further reservation, the case stands on a different footing. The question, however, becomes simplified if we now turn to the section itself for the solution. The section, as it appears, casts an imperative duty on the Court. As soon as it is apprised of the fact that there had been a succession by way of inheritance it must hold its hands till the provisions of the law have been complied with. It can be satisfied that it had been so complied with from the finding in the former suit to that effect. But if there be no such clear finding, I do not see how the Court can be asked to negative the objection from the mere fact that the tenant chose on the former occasion not to press it. The section, as I have shown above, was not enacted for the benefit of the tenant but to impose a disability on the tenure-holder. The section does not confer any right on the tenant which he is at liberty to waive or relinquish. The conduct of the tenant in the suit is beside the point except as a rule of evidence. He can either admit or not that the provisions have been complied with. In the former case no further proof is necessary. But in the latter, I do not see how the tenure-holder can escape the penalty in the section except by showing that he has done what the law requires him to do. The waiving of the objection lies not with the tenant. It, if possible, could only have been done by the landlord of the tenure-holder, whose interest alone the section is intended to safeguard. I can waive my own privilege but it is absurd to speak of my waiving the privilege of a third person. In my humble opinion, the tenure-holder has got to show that he has complied with the provisions of the law although in the previous suit the tenant waived the objection and the Court did not find then that the tenure-holder had done what the law required him to do.

Yours truly,

NARANATH MUKERJI,

Munsif,

Magura, District Jessore.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY, J. CIVIL RULE No. 711 OF 1923. KALACHAND DE, Decree-holder, Petitioner v. RAM PROSAD and another, Opposite Party. The 22nd January 1924.

Provident fund deposit in Railway Company, if attachable in execution—Civil Procedure Code (1908), sec. 115.

The Petitioner, in execution of a money decree obtained against the Opposite Party No. 1, applied to the Munsif of Chittagong, the Court executing the decree, for the attachment of the provident fund deposit lying to the credit of his judgment-debtor, the Opposite Party No. 1, in the hands of his employers, the Assam Bengal Railway Company, the Opposite Party No. 2, when he ceased to be the servant of the Railway Company, the Opposite Party No. 2.

The learned Munsif having rejected his said application on the 6th March 1923 on the objection of the Railway Company, the Opposite Party No. 2, on the ground that the said deposit could not be attached under their provident fund rules the Petitioner obtained a rule:

Held—The provident fund deposit lying to the credit of the Opposite Party No. 1 in the hands of the Railway Company the Opposite Party No. 2, was not attachable under Or. 21, r. 48 or any provision of the Code in execution of a decree against the former. Secretary of State v. Raj Kumar Mukherjea, (1922) 27 C. NOTES

The Rent Act.

The Calcutta Rent (Amendment) Act of 1924, recently passed by the Bengal Legislative Council, is an instance of hurried legislation and as such requires immediate revision. The principle of control is now universally accepted in this country as well as in England. It is justified on the ground that landowners enjoy a monopoly. There is always overcrowding in cities like Calcutta and the land being limited, it is idle to suppose that the rule of supply and demand can establish fair relations between the landlord and the tenant. The demand is always on the increase and the supply can never compete with it. Temporary causes, such as excessive trade depression, may bring about an apparent equilibrium between supply and demand, but in a growing city such equilibrium will be disturbed in no time.

It has been said that it is only recently that such Acts have been passed and that also on account of the abnormal conditions due to the war. But it is a misfortune that the legislature did not interfere earlier. The tenants suffered, but the legislature perhaps because of the predominance of the landlord element in it or of the novelty of the question never relieved them. The evil that existed from before became so glaring during the war that control of rents became a matter of absolute necessity. But the control must be reasonable. It must proceed on economic lines. It must go to the extent of preventing the enjoyment of monopoly rights by landlords and no further. There could be no question of favouring one section of the people at the expense of the other. The landlords are not criminals. They have done nothing wrong by investing their money in building and so providing accommodation for others. Legislation must not deprive them of their normal profits and must not discourage future building operations. Unfortunately the present legislation indicates that the motive was to punish the greedy landlords. If the landlords are greedy, punish them by all means, but let the punishment fit the crime. And let it not recoil on those who inflict it.

The new Act is to remain in force for three years. This is necessary to establish stability. Tenants would not like to go to Court unless they feel sure that they would be able to enjoy the fruits of their labour. Ordinarily it takes about 4 or 5 months to get the decision of the Rent Controller. It takes another 6 months if there is an application for revision. So the better part of the year is taken up in getting the remedy, and he must be given some breathing time to enjoy it. The dearth of cases before the Rent Controller and the general desire on the part of the tenant not to take the shelter of the Court, are due to the pronouncement of the late minister that the Act would not remain in force after 31st March 1924.

The Act does not apply to premises the rent of which exceeded Rs. 250 per month or Rs. 3,000 per annum on 1st November 1918. One wonders what led the legislature to limit the operation of the Act in this way. If the landlords are profiteers, surely the landlords of big houses are big profiteers. Perhaps it has been assumed that with regard to houses of higher rents there is no scarcity and fair and equitable rent could be secured by the supply and demand for such houses. But this is not so. The Report of the Housing Committee does not warrant such a conclusion. Besides, many curious results will follow and there will be no inducement to build small houses. What is to happen if the premises are first let after 1st November 1918? Suppose a tenant pays Rs. 450 in respect of a house consisting of two flats, the standard rents of which are Rs. 250 and Rs. 200 and the tenant is occupying the lower flat and has sublet the upper flat. Now the tenant not being protected by the Act may be called upon to pay Rs. 550 or to vacate. If the tenant vacates the premises, the tenant of the upper flat is to vacate for he is a sub-tenant and as such not entitled to protection. If the tenant pays Rs. 550, he cannot increase the rent of the upper flat which is standardised and he will have to pay Rs. 300 for the lower flat. And generally if the tenant is not protected, all his sub-tenants have a precarious existence irrespective of the rent they are paying. This of course could be remedied by extending the definition of tenant so as to include sub-tenant and this should be done immediately.

Perhaps the most unjust character of the Act is shown where it does not allow any increase in the rent over the standard rent as defined in the principal Act. Suppose the rent of a house in November 1918 was Rs. 100. Under the Act, the landlord cannot get anything more than Rs. 110 up to the month of March 1927, i.e., an increase of 10 per cent. in 9 years. What about the amount spent in repairs, the increase in tax and depreciation? The landlords must have normal profits, and what was normal profit in 1920 cannot be so in 1927 when prices have gone up uniformly. If the landlord had invested the money in mortgage, he would have easily got a return of 12 per cent. with compound interest without impairing his security in any way.

Equality before the Law.

The decision of the Supreme Court of the Transval in the "colour bar" appeal is not only of grave importance to South Africa, but also has a more general bearing. The question before the Court was the validity of a Regulation purporting to be made by the Executive under the Mines, Works and Machinery Act, 1922. The Regulation provides that:

The operation of, or attendance on, machinery shall be in charge of a competent shiftsman, and in the Transval and Orange Free State Provinces such shiftsman shall be a white man. The Supreme Court have declared that this provision is ultra vires inasmuch as neither in the enabling Act nor anywhere else is there any lawful authority for discriminating between white and black. Two points call for notice. The first is that the decision has been given by the Court of a country where the colour problem is exceedingly serious, and, therefore, it forms a notable testimony to the impartiality of British justice. . . The other point is that once more a Court of Law has called the Executive to account for straining an enabling statute. In this country, the judgment of the Court of Appeal in the Art O'Brien case is still fresh in the public memory. It is a sound rule of our law that where any disability is to be imposed on any individual or class of individuals, it must be imposed by the express words of a statute, or by necessary implication. Enabling statutes may be a necessary evil, but at least the Courts can keep a jealous eye on regulations purporting to be made under them. Of course, as Lord Shaw pointed out in his memorable dissenting judgment in Zadig's case, once the right of the Executive to set aside or suspend the basic principles of the law is admitted, the dispensing power may be exercised in ways by no means welcome to those who first invoked it. . . . . . .

Law Journal.

DOES OR. IX, C. P. C., APPLY TO EXECUTION PROCEEDINGS?

BY G. SWAMINATHAN, B.A., B.L., VAKIL. Tiruvalur (S. India).

Thus on the facts they agreed with the Subordinate Judge and might have allowed the appeal without going into the question of law raised in the case. But his Lordship went on:—

"But they do not further examine that question; because their decision must be rested on the more general ground that the ruling in Sarju Prasad v. Sitaram (1) is erroneous. . . Their Lordships think that the proceedings spoken of in sec. 647 include original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianships and so forth and do not include executions . . . . But having regard to the controversies which have arisen and the difference of opinion between the various High Courts, their Lordships have thought it right to state their opinion that the Act of 1892 does nothing more than express the true meaning of the Civil Procedure Code."

It will thus be seen that though it was unnecessary for their Lordships to have gone into the question of law especially when on the facts they could have allowed the appeal, their opinion regarding the decision in Sarju Prasad v. Sita Ram (1) is certainly not an obiter dictum. Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (2) does certainly overrule Sarju Prasad v. Sita Ram (1). The effect of the latter decision has been stated thus: "That sec. 373 is properly applicable to execution proceedings . . . . and that a decree-holder who is not desirous of proceeding with an application for execution is in the same position as a Plaintiff who desires to withdraw from that suit." So this Privy Council case lays down only the two following propositions and nothing more, viz., that sec. 373 is not applicable to execution proceedings and that execution proceedings do not come within the purview of sec. 647, C. P. C. The reason why their Lordships hold that "proceedings" in sec. 647, C. P. C., excludes execution proceedings would appear to be twofold: (1) The execution chapter is long and self-contained; (2) The Civil Procedure Code and the Limitation Act would appear to contemplate successive and concurrent execution applications. We may perhaps add one more reason. The marginal note, "Miscellaneous proceedings" taken with the history of the section, would appear to indicate that the legislature intended sec. 141 to apply only to those proceedings indicated by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, such as guardianship, probate, etc.

Mr. Narasimham for the Appellant.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondent.

January 29th, February 4th and 5th.—Durga Devi v. Shambu Nath (Lahore).

Messrs. L. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh appeared for the Appellants, while Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes appeared for the Respondents.

It raised a question as to the validity of an adoption by a Kashmiri Brahman of a boy of 17 after the performance of the latter's "upanayana." There was a further question of limitation. Judgment was reserved.

February 1st.—Marwadi Ramjivan Nevatia v. Bhikaji & Co. (Bombay) concerned a mercantile contract for longcloth. The Appellants as buyers claimed to reject certain of the bales tendered by the Respondents. There was a clerical mistake in the contract as to the numbers put on the cloth by the mill. The trial Judge held that the goods tendered were not the contract goods. His decision was reversed by the High Court. The appeal was dismissed.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and M. R. Jardine for the Appellants.

Sir Geo. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.

February 5th.—Judawan Prosad v. Shatruhan Prasad (C. P.) related to the validity of an adoption which the Judicial Commissioners, reversing the trial Judge, held to be proven. The appeal was dismissed. Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Respondent.

February 7th, 8th and 11th.—Kalyanadappabin Iyanna Desai v. Chanbasappabin Dadappa Desai (Bombay) arose out of a suit for the recovery of watan lands. The main question in the appeal was whether Art. 118 or Art. 144 of the Limitation Act applied. Judgment was reserved.

Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

Mr. W. Wallach for the Respondent.

February 12th.—Sahu Ram Kumar v. Muhammad Yaqut (Allahabad) related to the construction of a building contract.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Wallach for the Respondent.

LORD SHAW delivered the judgment of the Board (LORDS BLANESBURGH* and SALVESEN), dismissing the appeal.

February 12th.—Nasrat Ali v. Gunlam Sarwar (Oudh). This appeal was dismissed on the preliminary point that as there were concurrent findings of fact no appeal lay to His Majesty in Council.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dube for the Appellants.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and E. B. Raikes for the Respondents.

February 14th and 15th.—Mahomed Rahmitulla Haji Joosab v. Esmail Allarakhia (Bombay). In this appeal money was paid into Court by a mortgagee to comply with a conditional decree obtained by his mortgagor, whereby, on the latter paying to the present Appellant certain sums, the mortgagor should become entitled to property at Kurla. The present Respondent was also a transferee of the mortgagor's interest and contended that he was entitled to the benefit of the payment into Court. The Appellant alleged that the Respondent was not a representative under sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and that the payment into Court having been withdrawn by the payer the condition in the decree had not been satisfied. Judgment was reserved.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and G. Douglas McNair for the Respondent.

February 15th.—Malraju Venkata Rama Krishna Rao Garu v. Koppuravanvi Sriramulu (Madras). This was a suit to recover possession of property, the defence pleading that the suit is barred by limitation. The suit properties had been alienated by a Hindu widow and there was conflicting evidence as to the date of her death. The High Court held that the Plaintiffs had failed to discharge the onus of showing that the suit was brought in time and dismissed it. The Plaintiffs appealed to the Privy Council. Appeal dismissed.

Mr. Narasimham for the Appellant.

Mr. Parikh for the Respondents.

February 18th and 19th.—Seth Hukum Chand v. Raja Ram Bahadur Singh (Patna). The Appellants as representatives of the Digambari sect of Jains brought this suit against the zemindar of Palganj for specific performance of a contract for the lease of Paresh Nath Hill. The trial Judge held that the contract was a complete one, the High Court on the other hand was of opinion that the intention was that the contract should not be complete until an agreement embodying it should have been signed. The contesting Respondent represents the Sitambari community who later received a conveyance of the hill from the Raja of Nowagarh and the statutory manager of the Palganj Estate and was then brought on the record as a Respondent to the present appeal. At the close of the Appellant's argument the Board stated that they would consider the advice that they would tender to His Majesty and at present did not call upon the Respondents' counsel for an argument.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellants.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents.

The Board which had consisted of LORDS SHAW, BLANESBURGH, SALVESEN and MR. AMEER ALI was strengthened by the addition of SIR LAWRENCE JENKINS who also sat on the hearing of the following case.

Secretary of State v. Roy J. N. Chowdhury (Bengal). This was a suit to cancel the assessment on certain alluvial lands.

The argument on behalf of the Appellant is proceeding.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and K. Brown for the Appellant.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondent.

G. D. M.

* Lord Blanesburgh is the title which has been assumed by Younger, J.

NOTES.

Law's Delay and the Civil Justice Committee.

The very meagre reports of the proceedings before the Civil Justice Committee which are appearing in the press leave one in doubt as to whether the Committee is being materially assisted in tracing to their roots the causes and influences which are operating to clog the administration of civil justice in British India. So far as it is possible to form any idea of the drift of the evidence which is being given before the Committee, most witnesses appear to be more ready to put forward remedies than to search for causes, and when they are questioned about causes, the answers take the familiar form of laying the blame on somebody else. Pleader witnesses are apt to lay the blame on judicial officers, their unbusinesslike habits, habitual shirking of duties, want of proper training, incapacity to exercise supervision over their staffs and so on, whilst legal practitioners are charged with protracting litigation for entirely personal ends and the ministerial staff is charged on all hands with being corrupt, the serving peons coming in for the largest share of obloquy.

We do not wish to discourage the idea of improving the method of recruitment of Munsifs and giving them preliminary training in judicial work. But we are decidedly of opinion that there is nothing seriously wanting in the capacity and calibre of the present personnel of the service, so far at any rate as concerns Bengal. Similarly the idea that pleaders as a body are selfishly obstructive must be entirely put aside for individual members of the bar who show this tendency can certainly be effectively controlled by judicial officers who are not altogether weak and incompetent. The root causes of the delay and obstruction which retard business in the Civil Courts lie elsewhere than in the personal factor whether in the Judge or in the legal practitioner. They are, we firmly believe, inherent in the present system. Having given the matter our closest study, we consider it our duty to point out some of these causes which, we are convinced, are part and parcel of the present system. Unless these causes are removed, any change aimed merely at speeding up the trial of cases, e.g., by docking a notice here or shortening the procedure there or making that compulsory which in the interest of fair trial should be left to the discretion of the Court to be exercised with reference to the special facts of each case, will so far from bringing any relief aggravate the evils of the existing system.

Though the causes appear to be many, upon closer analysis they really resolve themselves into one and this is that Civil Courts, at any rate in this Province, are grievously undermanned as regards the number of judicial officers employed. From the administration reports it appears that the volume of litigation is steadily increasing, but not only has there been no increase in the number of judicial officers commensurate with this progressive expansion of work, but latterly from motives of false economy leave vacancies even have not been regularly filled up, so that officers on duty have been required not only to tackle as they best may without extrinsic assistance the increase of work which the general increase in the volume of litigation has put on them but also the work of officers on leave. From 1917 to 1920, the receipts from civil litigation in successive years have been Rs. 1,47,56,574, Rs. 1,49,02,371, Rs. 1,66,84,507 and Rs. 1,68,61,146, showing an increase of nearly 20 lacs in four years—a sure index of the rapid increase of judicial business. The general desire for retrenchment of expenditure by Government is no doubt largely responsible for this state of things. On the other hand, the High Court has not relaxed its demand that the judicial officers under its control must justify their existence by the quantity of work they may 'turn out' within a given time. When the number of officers is more than sufficient, or even 'just sufficient, to cope with the amount of work they have to do, the quantitative test may work well enough for the purpose of speeding up the slow or the indolent. But when the work is in quantity obviously beyond the capacity of the number of workmen employed, the system becomes from the point of view of the employer pure and simple slave-driving, and must from the point of view of the employee appear to justify the sacrifice of quality to quantity, and when it concerns the exercise of judicial functions, place a premium upon hasty and unconscientious work, which is just what deprives it of all value intrinsically and in the eyes of the public. From the point of view of the public it becomes a serious menace to law and order; for the more hasty a Judge is the more does litigation become a game of chance, a gamble which satisfies neither party, as hasty work necessarily involves larger interference in appeal which not only adds to the uncertainty of the issue but involves greater delay and expenditure in the long run to the parties; and if this should be the condition of things, not in a Court here or a Court there but in all the Courts in a Province acting under the selfsame impulse of grinding out results by the hour or the minute, it will not be long before the public will lose all faith in the quality of the justice they may expect from these Courts. The litigants have now to pay considerably enhanced court-fees for what in the circumstances is bound to be poorer service, and this because the Government needs money, upon which the proper manning and staffing of the Civil Courts should be a first charge, for purposes which have no relation whatever to civil litigation. What good can possibly be expected from improvements in the methods of recruitment and training of judicial officers, if the system remains what it is?

Our description of the present system as tending to slave-driving is, we wish to emphasise, not at all a fanciful one. It is not unusual for a judicial officer to be praised for the quality of his work which he is assured is above the average and for being a hardworking and conscientious officer, at the same time that he is told that he is slow and cannot expect the usual promotion unless he shows a larger out-turn. What again, we ask, is to be said of a system which compels a District Judge to circularise when a new arrangement for removing congestion in a certain kind of work is about to be taken up that serious consequences will follow to the officers concerned unless the figures of disposal during a stated period should prove satisfactory to the High Court?

That too many adjournments are granted in pending cases is a general complaint. Some witnesses sought airily to explain it away on the ground that the pleaders have an interest in getting these adjournments because it means more to them in the way of fees and also that senior pleaders having work in too many Courts take repeated adjournments so as to be able to attend to work spread in a number of Courts, and suggestions have actually been thrown out that the remedy lay in doing away with the concentration of too many Courts within the same area. The diagnosis equally with the remedy proposed so obviously savours of quackery that we have no fear that the Civil Justice Committee will be led away by it. The fact of the matter is, and this has been pointed out by several witnesses, that there being more work and more cases than a Court can possibly cope with, more cases than can be taken up are habitually listed for the day. The Court and the pleaders as well as the parties all know that the majority of them will have to be adjourned. Complaints have been made that the parties do not bring witnesses and are otherwise not ready on the day fixed for hearing. Bringing up witnesses and getting ready for the hearing mean expenditure and unless one is sure that the case will be taken up on a particular day, one does not like to throw away money, even if there was enough money all round to throw away in this useless manner, not to speak of the loss and harassment caused to the witnesses. It has been stated that the judicial officers themselves do not look into these matters of adjournments which are arranged by the parties and the Court's peshkars between them. The officers who insist on personally looking into this work of unavoidable adjournments lose more time for real work and necessarily make a poorer show statistically than the officers who do not—and it is statistical results upon which their promotion depends. So in more ways than one does the present system of extracting more work quantitatively from officers than they can humanly perform lead to delay and slackness of supervision tending to corruption amongst the ministerial staff, and general demoralisation which affects judicial officers, legal practitioners, the ministerial staff and the litigant public alike. This aspect of the matter is so important, that it will need more detailed examination, and this we propose to do in subsequent issues.

One of the questions in the questionaire is "Has the multiplication of law reports interfered with speedy justice?" We have been assured by many judicial officers that they cannot afford time to read either text-books or reports and very few reported decisions are in fact seen to figure in the judgments of Mofussil Courts which come up for consideration in revision or appeal before the superior Courts.

DOES OR. IX, C. P. C., APPLY TO EXECUTION PROCEEDINGS?

By G. Swaminathan, B.A., B.L., Vakil. Tiruvalur (S. India).

The next question that arises for consideration is what is meant by execution proceedings. Do all applications put in under Or. XXI constitute execution proceedings?

Let us take an application under Or. XXI, r. 90. Is it a proceeding in execution? Does Or. IX apply to such a proceeding? A Special Bench of the Patna High Court consisting of Atkinson, Coutts and Manuk, JJ. has unanimously held in Bhubaneshwar Prasad Singh v. Tilakdhari Lal (1) that Or. IX, r. 9 does not apply to a proceeding under Or. XXI, r. 90. The authorities for and against the proposition are collected in the judgment. But unhappily they are not discussed, and the reasons for the decision are not given. This decision purports to follow the following cases: Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (2), Asin Mandal v. Raj Mohan Das (3), Haricharan Ghosh v. Manmath Nath Sen (1), Balasubramania Chetty v. Swarnammal (2), Bharat Chandra Nath v. Iasin Sarkar (3) and Krishna Chandra Pal v. Protap Chandra Pal (4).

(1) 4 Pat. L. J. 135.
(2) I. L. R. 17 All. 106.
(3) 18 C. L. J. 582.

We have seen that Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (5) does not define what is meant by execution proceeding. Krishna Chandra Pal v. Protap (4) is a decision of the Calcutta High Court in 1906 when the explanation added by the Act of 1892 was in the Civil Procedure Code. Balasubramania Chetty v. Swarnammal (2) deals with the applicability of Or. II, r. 2 to an application under Or. XXI, rr. 98 and 99. Bharat Chandra Nath v. Iasin Sarkar (3) does not deal with an application under Or. XXI, r. 90 but with an objection preferred by the judgment-debtor to an execution application. Asin Mandal v. Raj Mohan Das (6) and Haricharan Ghosh v. Manmath Nath Sen (1) have been expressly referred to in Deljan Nichaa Bibee v. Hemanta Kumar Ray (7) which is a case on all fours with Bhubaneshwar Prasad Singh v. Tilakdhari Lal (8) but decided contra.

Their Lordships Chatterjea and Chapman, JJ., observe (7):—

"An application for setting aside a sale under sec. 47 and Or. 21, r. 90 is not an application for execution. It is a miscellaneous proceeding in which the auction-purchaser is the principal interested party. I do not think that a proceeding of this kind is excluded from the purview of sec. 141, C. P. C."

They distinguish Asin Mandal v. Raj Mohan (6) and Haricharan Ghosh v. Manmath Nath Sen (1) in the following manner:—

"Both these rulings are careful in stating that all the provisions of Or. IX are not applicable. Some of the provisions may therefore apply and the judgment of the learned Chief Justice in Haricharan Ghosh v. Manmath Nath Sen (1) (which deals with an application under Or. XXI, r. 100) contains a clear indication that the interests of justice must have an important bearing in the matter. 'It is not as though there was any necessity in the interests of justice that the provision of r. 13 of Or. IX should be applicable to proceedings in execution, because the order is not conclusive, but is subject to the right of the person aggrieved to bring a suit.' In the present case the order is conclusive, there is no regular suit."

See Or. XXI, r. 92 (3):—

"No suit to set aside an order made under this rule shall be brought by any person against whom such order is made."

Deljan Nichaa Bibee v. Hemanta Kumar Ray (1) is followed by another Division Bench in Bhuban Behary Nag Mazumdar v. Dhirendra Nath Banerjee (2). Under the circumstances the Full Bench decision in Bhubaneshwar Prasad Singh v. Tilakdhari Lal (3) is not of much value. And it is no wonder that Das, J. of the Patna High Court, has recently (4) thought it fit to express "I consider that the decision in Bhubaneshwar Prasad Singh v. Tilakdhari Lal (3) needs re-examination."

With regard to Or. XXI, r. 100, the Patna High Court has held consistently in a series of cases (5) that Or. XXI, r. 100 is not an application in execution proceedings, but is an original matter in the nature of a suit inasmuch as it is a proceeding instituted by one who is not bound by the decree for the release of property attached in execution of the decree and is in the nature of a summary suit and that therefore Or. IX did apply. It is on this ground chiefly that Das, J., distinguishes in Sheo Nandan Chaudhury v. Debi Lal Chaudhury (4), the decision in Haricharan Ghosh v. Manmath Nath Sen (6).

Yet another aspect of the case is presented to us by the remarks of their Lordships of the Madras High Court at p. 475 in Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettia (7).

"Orders in execution which come under sec. 47, C. P. C. are decrees as defined in sec. 2, C. P. C. and hence ex parte orders passed in execution are ex parte decrees and Or. IX. r. 13 provides generally for the setting aside of ex parte decrees and not only for the setting aside of ex parte decrees which are not also orders passed under sec. 47 in execution proceedings."

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

February 21st, 22nd and 26th.—The hearing was continued before LORDS SHAW, BLANESBURGH, SALVESEN, MR. AMEER ALI and SIR L. JENKINS of the appeal of The Secretary of State v. Roy J. N. Chowdhury (Bengal). The Government contend that there has been an accretion to the Appellant's lands in the Sunderbans which is liable to assessment. The Respondent contends that the survey maps are inaccurate and do not conform with the provisions of the Act under which the survey was held. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Secretary of State.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Dubé for the Respondents.

February 25th and 26th.—Kodothambu Nair v. Secretary of State (Madras). This appeal relates to certain "Kumri" lands in South Kanara. The Appellant as Karnavan or managing member of a Nayar Tarwad brought the suit against Government for a declaration of his right to hold the lands and for an injunction and other relief. In 1905 after survey operations, Government offered a rough patta to the Appellant in which the plaint "Kumris" were excluded. The suit was brought in 1913. Government contend that it is barred by limitation. The Respondents, on the other hand say that after 1905 there were negotiations with Government as to the property in the lands and that limitation did not run till 1911 when Government finally decided on the exclusion.

There is also a question of adverse possession.

The argument for the Appellant is not yet concluded.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Narasimham for the Appellants.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.

The following judgments have been delivered.

February 22nd.—Nabi Bakhsh v. Ahmad Khan (Lahore). Appeal dismissed.

February 26th.—Mt. Durga Devi v. Shambu Nath (Lahore). Appeal dismissed.

NOTES

Law's delay and the Civil Justice Committee.

We explained in our last issue how the increase of judicial work in the province has made it impossible for the number of judicial officers now employed to cope with the same, and how this circumstance coupled with the insistence on the test of quantity of work got through, irrespective of its quality or merit, must inevitably lead to deterioration in the quality of the work performed, and how in particular it swells up the cause list and leads to the ordering of that list from day to day being left to the ministerial staff, unless the judicial officer happens to be so conscientious that he is prepared to waste a good deal of his time in arranging the list himself at the sacrifice of his own prospects of promotion. The lack of supervision over the ministerial staff manifests itself not merely in the Judges in the Mofussil leaving to their Peshkars the ordering of the day's work other than the cases which are going to be taken up and heard; the District Judge who is supposed and expected to exercise supervision over the work of subordinate judicial officers cannot really find sufficient time to devote to this work and has to rely for this purpose mainly on his Sheristadar.

Now it never was contemplated by the High Court or any other authority that the District Judge's Sheristadar should supervise the work of Subordinate Judges and Munsifs, either de jure or de facto, and the result is in the highest degree prejudicial to the morale of the subordinate judicial service. Again the District Judge is de jure in charge of all matters of administration relating to the nazarat, record-room, copying department, etc. In fact he cannot look into these matters as effectively as the nature of this work demands without trenching upon his own judicial work. On the other hand, to relieve the District Judge of what judicial work he does in order that he may attend more completely to these matters of administrative business would be impracticable and expensive. We would suggest that the entire administrative work in each District be made over to a Subordinate Judge or a senior Munsif, and as the statistical test cannot in the very nature of things be altogether put aside, we would suggest further that the officer so employed should be required to note in his diary the time devoted to administrative work so that the same may be counted as work in the monthly statements.

That such a change is likely to have the best of effects in purging the administrative side of judicial business in the Mofussil of slackness and corruption has been demonstrated by an experiment recently tried in one of the districts. A member of the subordinate judiciary being placed in charge of the nazarat found unaccountable delays in the issue and service of processes. He naturally inferred that not habitual sloth but corruption and private arrangements between parties and peons and other officers for a consideration were the causes of the holding over of the processes and he hit upon the plan of distributing processes to peons by lottery on the day following that on which they were filed. There was great commotion in the nazarat and vigorous protests and representations were made to the District Judge who, however, fortunately refused, in this instance, to be led by his Sheristadar. The new scheme is working admirably and we see no reason why the experiment should not be given a wider trial, since nothing but good can come out of it.

We have had reported to us several instances of old appeals having to be adjourned on the day of hearing because the record had not arrived from the record-room. How can this happen unless one supposes that supervision, so far as the record-room is concerned, does not exist and the matter is left entirely to the sweet will and pleasure of the men in charge? Such incidents would, we believe, be things of the past if a Subordinate Judge or a senior Munsif were placed in charge of the administrative work under conditions outlined above.

We are convinced that the High Court does not, and in the existing circumstances cannot, exercise proper supervision over the work of the subordinate judiciary. The Judge in charge cannot possibly devote much time to this work, and we mean no disrespect when we say that the Registrar has ordinarily not sufficient experience to perform this work satisfactorily. The work in consequence is really left to clerks who have neither the capacity nor the experience needed for it. The excessive exaggeration of the disposal test, to the disregard of every consideration of quality or merit, is, we believe, in a great measure due to this mere secretariat supervision which is the only kind of supervision which exists. It is very desirable, we think, that the English Department should requisition the services of a Subordinate Judge or an experienced Munsif to assist it in supervising and appraising the work of judicial officers in the Mofussil. Such an officer should be appointed a Deputy or Assistant Registrar in the English Department and in order that he may not lose touch with conditions in the Mofussil, the tenure of his office should be reasonably short, so that another officer with up-to-date Mofussil experience may replace him at the end of his term.

The services of such an officer would be available for other purposes also if the High Court should choose to utilise them. Take the Rules and Circular Orders which the High Court frames for the regulation of judicial work in the Mofussil. The High Court no doubt does its best after trying to procure all possible information from the proper quarters in framing these regulations. But through want of intimate personal knowledge of affairs in the Mofussil the Rules often fail to come up to requirements and sometimes in trying to remove one kind of difficulties create others. The services of a judicial officer with first-hand experience of Mofussil conditions would be immensely helpful in framing and shaping the Rules and Circular Orders. In another issue we shall try to furnish practical demonstration of the beneficial effect that is likely to follow in this direction from associating a Subordinate Judge or Munsif in the work of the English Department.

Journal of Comparative Legislation.

The Journal of Comparative Legislation and International Law, for February, contains many interesting articles and notes. This issue opens with an article on "Ireland's money claim against Great Britain." Then follows an article on "The Legislative Council of New Zealand." It is interesting to note that New Zealand has the status of a self-governing Dominion, with a House of Representatives elected by universal suffrage, every adult male and female being entitled to a vote while there still exists a nominated Legislative Council, which exercises the functions of a senate or revising chamber. The House of Representatives deals mostly with questions of finance, administration, etc., but the Legislative Council does a good deal of spade work in legislation through its Statute Law Revision Committee. In 1914 a statute was passed for reconstituting the Legislative Council on an electoral basis but up to now no effect has been given to it by the House of Representatives. The Governor has the power to nominate the members of the Legislative Council but in practice he does so on the recommendation of the ministers who are responsible to the House of Representatives. This shows how an imperfect constitution may be made to work on thoroughly democratic lines. New Zealand is so jealous of her own autonomy that she refused to join the Australian Commonwealth and she is now considered as one of the most economically developed and politically progressive members amongst self-governing British Dominions.

The article on the constitution of Egypt by Mr. Norman Bentwich will also be found very interesting and instructive by Indian readers. Egyptian constitution has been framed not exactly on the model of the British constitution; a good deal of the conceptions of continental constitutions, notably French and Ottoman, have been embodied in it. The first section declares that "Egypt is a sovereign state, free and independent. Its right of sovereignty are indivisible and inalienable. Its Government is an hereditary monarchy with representative institutions." The Chamber of Deputies is to consist of members, not below the age of thirty, elected by universal male suffrage. The senate is to consist of men of learning and high distinction not below the age of 40, of whom 2/5ths are to be nominated by the King and 3/5ths to be elected by universal suffrage. The ministers need not be members of either House but are to be wholly responsible to the Chamber of Deputies. The King's power of veto and emergency legislation exists but constitutional limitations on both have been provided by conferring powers on the Egyptian Parliament to override them. The constitution safeguards the rights and liberties of the Egyptian subjects very jealously.

Amongst the other articles of interest, the one on "Custom in Punjab" by N. H. Prenter, I.C.S., shows, how order has been evolved out of chaos. Prof. Keith in his article on "Imperial Constitutional Law", points out that the last Imperial Conference has left the claims of the self-governing Dominions to conclude treaties and agreements with other sovereign states to where it was. The validity of what are called "non-treaty agreements" has been recognised with the safeguard that if by any such proposed agreements, the interests of any other parts of the Empire are likely to be affected, they are to be consulted. Amongst the Notes some important Indian topics such as "the creation of an Indian Bar," "the Place of Hindu Law in Comparative Jurisprudence," find place. The present issue of the Journal is an eminently readable one.

DOES OR. IX, C. P. C., APPLY TO EXECUTION PROCEEDINGS?

This decision distinguishes the observation of Mookerjee, J., in Sreepaty Charan Chowdhury v. Shamaldhone (1) that Or. IX does not apply to execution proceedings on the ground that it is mere obiter, but unhappily relies on Krishna Chandra v. Protap Chandra (2) which as we have pointed out already is a decision under sec. 647 when the explanation was clear. However the reasoning of their Lordships is convincing and Subbiah Naicker v. Ramanathan Chettiar (3) is certainly authority for applying r. 13 of Or. IX to orders under the execution chapter which will have the force of decree by virtue of sec. 2, C. P. C.

The Lahore High Court has got out of the difficulty by calling in aid sec. 151, C. P. C. In Bholu v. Ram Lal (1), Shadi Lal, C. J., delivering the judgment of the Court, observes:

"We are of the opinion that the procedure relating to suits is not applicable for execution . . . . . There is, however, nothing in the Code to restrict the inherent power of the Court to pass such orders as may be necessary for the ends of justice . . . . . It was only in the exercise of this inherent power that the Court could dismiss for default an application for execution. Now if the Court has an inherent power to pass an order of dismissal, there is absolutely no reason why it should not possess a similar power to set aside the dismissal if the ends of justice render it necessary to do so. . . . We see no reason in principle for holding that the mere circumstance that an alternative remedy may be open to the decree-holder should prevent the Court from exercising its inherent jurisdiction if the circumstances of the case require its exercise," as for example, if the second application is barred by limitation. Unhappily the facts of the case are not reported.

We may reconcile the various decisions examined above thus:—

1. The term "proceedings" in sec. 141, C. P. C., excludes execution proceedings and as such, 2. the provisions of Or. IX cannot apply to execution applications. 3. But applications under Or. XXI, r. 100 and the like partake more of the nature of miscellaneous proceedings than of execution proceedings and so the provisions of Or. IX will apply to such proceedings. 4. In cases where by force of sec. 2, C. P. C., orders under sec. 47 are decrees, r. 13 alone of Or. IX will apply. 5. The guiding principle in all cases is the meting out of justice, to see if the party in default has still open to him any remedy by way of suit or otherwise. 6. If the alternative remedy is barred by limitation, sec. 151, C. P. C. is to be resorted to, to give him relief.

CONSTRUCTION OF SECS. 15 AND 16 OF THE BENGAL TENANCY ACT.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

Your esteemed correspondent at page vii of the current volume raised two main ques-

(1) 15 C. L. J. 123.
(2) 3 C. L. J. 276.
(3) I. L. R. 37 Mad. 462.

(1) 2 Lah 66.

tions relating to construction of sec. 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. Both these questions have now been ably answered by my learned brother of the Bengal Service at page lxxv of the same volume.

So far as Bihar is concerned where the Hindus are governed by the Mitakshara law, another question which frequently crops up before the Mofussil Courts and is pleaded as a bar in rent suits, is the meaning of the word "succession" as applicable to the Mitakshara joint family. In other words, does sec. 16 apply to a tenure in which there was accession to the interests of the surviving members of a joint Mitakshara family caused by the death of an individual member?

It is plain that in a joint Mitakshara family, if one member dies, there is only accession to the interest of the surviving members and there is no succession of the interest from the deceased member to the surviving members. See Golap Ch. Sastri's Hindu Law, 4th Ed., page 249.

The word "succession" was interpreted by Ameer Ali, J., in I. L. R. 23 Cal. 912 with reference to the Succession Certificate Act (VII of 1889) and by Brett and Coxe, JJ., in I. L. R. 34 Cal. 929 with reference to the Succession (Property Protection) Act (XIX of 1841), and it was ruled therein that those Acts were not applicable to Hindus governed by Mitakshara law on the ground that the word "succession" did not include survivorship

In sec. 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the word used is "succession" and there seems to be no reason why this word would have a different significance. It is difficult to imagine that the Legislature meant to exclude this section from operation in Bihar in cases of families governed by Mitakshara law; and it is possible that the word "succession" was loosely used as succession both by survivorship as well as by inheritance. But as pointed out in I. L. R. 34 Cal. 929 at page 932, the term does not, in any sense of the language, include survivorship. The following observations of their Lordships of the Full Bench in 22 C. W. N. 1 at page 41 may be relevant:—

"There is no presumption, however, that general words are not used in a general sense. The presumption is the other way. The general rule for the construction of statutes is that the Legislature means what it says. The words best declare the intention." Hence, according to my opinion, the word "succession" as used in secs. 15 and 16 of the Bengal Tenancy Act should have the same significance as in Hindu law.

I do not find any ruling directly in point cited in any of the well-known commentaries of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In Narain v. Gajo, 2 Pat. L. J. 701, the point arose before the lower Courts but did not arise before their Lordships and hence there was no occasion for their Lordships' decision. The facts, however, are interesting and may be stated. One Debi Prasad held a certain land on an Istamrari Mokarari tenure and, on his death it "passed" by survivorship to his sons who omitted to have their names registered under sec. 15 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and who instituted rent suits. The tenants in their written statements at first objected that the suits would not lie, so long as secs. 15 and 16 were not complied with, but the objection was not seriously pressed in the Court of first instance and decrees were obtained inspite of it. During the pendency of appeal to the District Court, the sons of the tenure-holder complied with the aforesaid sections but the learned Judge of the District Court held that the suits were barred by sec. 16 and allowed the appeals of the tenants. Their Lordships, Sharfuddin and Roe, JJ., applied the principle enunciated in the Full Bench decision in I. L. R. 23 Cal. 87 and ruled that the Plaintiffs having complied with the aforesaid provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, pending appeal, were entitled to recover the rents sued for. Thus, it is clear that there was no actual decision on the point whether tenure-holders who were entitled to the tenure by right of survivorship were debarred from recovering rents without complying with the aforesaid section.

As the point is of great importance to the proprietors of estates, it may well be discussed by you or any of your esteemed correspondents in the columns of your valuable journal.

Yours truly,
KHETTRA NATH SINGH,
Munsif.

Editorial Notes—

REPORTS (See Index.)

Sir Thomas Richardson, Kt.

Sir Thomas Richardson, who has for many years been on the Bench of the Calcutta High Court, carries with him the best wishes of all branches of the legal profession and the ministerial staff of the Court. He is a member of the Indian Civil Service. After having served as a Magistrate and a District and Sessions Judge, he came to the High Court. His connection with the Court has been more intimate than of many of his brother civilian Judges. He like the late Sir Thoby Prinsep was for many years the Registrar on the Appellate Side of the High Court. He also acquired considerable administrative experience as an Under-Secretary in the Judicial Department and later on as the Legal Remembrancer to the Government of Bengal. In the course of his service he studied for and got called to the Bar. On the Bench he has been uniformly courteous to all, and his patience, regard for justice and sound knowledge of law have won for him the golden opinion of all. That the Calcutta Bar entertained him at a dinner last Friday testifies to the high regard in which he has been held by the members of the Bar. We wish him health, peace and happiness amongst his own people at home at the close of a long and meritorious career in India extending over 37 years.

The Finance Bill, its rejection and certification.

The Viceroy and Governor-General has this year certified the Finance Bill for reasons very different from those that he pleaded in justification of certifying the provision in the Finance Bill for the doubling of the salt-tax last year. The Legislative Assembly last year thought that enhancement of salt duty was both unnecessary and inadvisable. Those who opposed the measure did so on the ground that it was possible to balance the budget by retrenchment and that the deficit was more apparent than real. They maintained that no tax is to be imposed or enhanced without the assent of the Assembly, that the power of certification was meant to be exercised by the Viceroy as an extraordinary or emergency measure and that His Excellency was not entitled to impose any taxation by certification. This view received considerable support from constitutional lawyers both in this country and in England. If once such limitations were imposed by convention, the voice of the Assembly would have been supreme with regard to such matters. But we apprehend that the action of the Assembly this year in throwing out the Finance Bill altogether without any discussion might result in a set back instead of a progressive advance of the Indian constitution towards Dominion Status.

We are of opinion also that the Legislative Assembly was ill-advised in rejecting in toto the demand for grants in respect of customs, income-tax, salt and opium. The customs form the largest source of Government of India's revenue; income-tax comes next. Salt and opium are also important sources of revenue. Although we believe that these last two sources of revenue will have to disappear in course of time, yet they cannot be got rid of without making adequate provision for replacing them from other sources or by the retrenchment of military and other expenditure. But we must say that the refusal of the demand for grant for customs and income-tax even by way of protest was hardly justifiable. If the vote were given effect to by the Viceroy and Governor-General, the effect would be that the customs and income-tax staff would have to be abolished and the offices closed and the Government of India would be left without any resources for carrying on the administration or paying for the defences of India.

The Swarajists surely did not desire to bring about such a result. Their vote being meant merely as a protest, evidently they relied upon the Viceroy's power of certification in adopting the course they did. But we are afraid they did not realize the disservice they have thus done to the cause of constitutional progress in India. They have furnished a weapon in the hands of those who are opposed to India's constitutional progress. They will say that such drastic action on the part of the party of progress in India shows that the day is yet far off when members of the Indian Legislature would develop a sense of responsibility and that the power of certification should in no way be curtailed or interfered with by Parliament. The arbitrary manner in which some of the most essential demands for grants were rejected by the Bengal Legislative Council, would also justify their restoration by the Governor of Bengal by certification and the same plea will be put forward for the retention of such power by the Provincial Executive as well. Thus the net gain of the Swarajist policy in the Council has been very doubtful and if it leads on to the setting back of the hands of the clock, it will be very unfortunate.

We have been asked by some, if there is any special provision in the Government of India Act for the Governor-General in Council to frame and introduce a Finance Bill in the Assembly. There is none. But none is needed, for the Finance Bill is just like any other Bill or proposed measure of legislation. It is a well-established rule of the British constitution that no proposal for the appropriation or the raising of any revenue can be made, except by the Crown. This was intended to prevent members of Parliament indulging in extravagance with regard to public revenue for private ends. The rule has served as a safeguard against such possible abuses of public funds for over two centuries. Sec. 67A (2) of the Government of India Act embodies the same provision and provides that no proposal for appropriation of revenue can be made except by the Governor-General, who represents the Crown in India. The same section in cls. (5) and (6) provides that the demands for grants, except in respect of certain reserved heads, should be submitted to the Assembly and may be reduced or disallowed by the vote of the Assembly. According to Parliamentary practice the Assembly can curtail but not increase expenditure under any head. It is the privilege of the Crown to propose any increase and the Assembly, like Parliament, can only assent, reduce or disallow it. The Council of State cannot discuss or vote upon any demand for grants.

At the presentation of the Budget, leave is sought by the Government for the introduction of a Finance Bill in the Assembly. After demands for grants are finally voted upon by the Assembly, the Finance member moves that the Finance Bill be taken into consideration for the imposition, renewal or reduction of the necessary taxation for meeting the expenditure for the coming year. Some taxes like the income tax, certain custom tariffs, duty on salt, postal rates, etc., are only imposed by legislation for a year. Unless these are renewed annually by legislation, the bulk of the Imperial revenue cannot be lawfully collected. The Assembly would be quite justified in amending the Finance Bill by the reduction or disallowance of certain items of taxation which they consider excessive or objectionable. But after having sanctioned the bulk of the expenditure, with the exception of some arbitrary refusals already mentioned, they were not justified in throwing out the Finance Bill without consideration, resulting in the wholesale disallowance of taxation. In acting as they did, they furnished a justification for the retention of the extraordinary powers of the Viceroy to sanction expenditure arbitrarily disallowed and to impose taxation and legislation by certification under secs. 67A and 67B of the Government of India Act. It is, however, a bitter irony of fate that the Viceroy, who in utter disregard of reason and very likely acting under the mandate from Whitehall, doubled the duty on salt last year, had, this year, to eat the humble pie in his unenviable seclusion, and restore the salt duty to its former figure, unasked and unsolicited, by the same process of certification by which he had enhanced it. The Swarajists may be unreasonable but the Government of India in their dealings with reasonable people had hardly ever been less unreasonable. Those who sow the wind must expect to reap the whirl-wind. We hope both the Government and the Swarajists will now benefit by their mutual indiscretion and the world will continue to be governed by sound common sense.

Law's Delay and the Civil Justice Committee.

We explained in our last issue the circumstances inherent in the existing system which make the exercise of supervision over the ministerial staff in the Mofussil an impossibility, and this necessarily leads to delay and corruption. As regards supervision of the judicial work of Judges in the Mofussil, what there is of it is vicious in principle and demoralising. As a remedy we suggested that in each District a Subordinate Judge or a Senior Munsif be charged with the duty of keeping the ministerial staff up to the mark and that a member of the judicial service of the same grade be associated in the work of the English Department in the High Court to assist the Judge in charge to examine the judicial work of Judges in the Mofussil and in the proper drafting of Rules and Circular Orders.

That there is room for improvement in the method of drafting the Rules and Circular Orders and that this can be best secured by appointing a member of the Subordinate Judiciary as an Assistant or Deputy Registrar in the English Department, we now proceed to show by reference to concrete instances. Take as one instance r. 53, Ch. X, p. 255, of Vol. I of the High Court's Rules and Circular Orders, according to which it is expected that all rent suits should be disposed of within three months. Now the large bulk of these suits are filed on one day, the day which is known as the tamadi day. It is not owing to perversity that landlords wait till the last day to institute these suits. The agricultural tenants are as a class not very affluent and, in the majority of cases, they fall into arrears because they cannot pay and suits are not instituted before the tamadi day, in the expectation that the tenants will anyhow scrape up the amount before that day, and thus relieve the landlord of the necessity of incurring the cost of instituting suits which merely save the claims from being time-barred, the chances of recovery by judicial process remaining as remote as ever. The position does not generally improve by getting decrees, and the landlords, but for the law and the Circular Orders which compel them to be diligent, would prefer to give a fairly long tether to the tenants so as to give them a chance of paying up amicably, for to press the legal remedy to its limits often means throwing away good money after bad. The result is a sudden accumulation of work in the Sherista of the landlord and in those of the pleaders who have to file these suits, near the tamadi day, with the inevitable consequence that the filings are often unaccompanied by a proper number of copies of plaints and written processes, and court-fees and process fees in many cases fall short of the required amounts —all which defects it takes time to detect and remedy. To throw cases out on the ground merely of such defective compliance with the technical requirements of law and practice would be harsh as well as unjust. Where these requirements have been complied with, the service of summonses may fail for various reasons, and then again the Defendant who has been served may, even when he has no defence, ask for time to put in written statements if only to gain time and time has to be given. The result is that for months after the tamadi day, a hundred to a hundred and fifty of these cases may figure on a Munsif's daily list and very few cases are ready to be taken up in sufficient time to enable the Courts to comply with the Circular Order. Attending to these cases which are on the list because one or other of the preliminary conditions have not been complied with, wastes the Court's time and gives the ministerial staff just the opportunity they want and should not have to arrange the daily list for the Court.

It has been suggested that no Plaintiff should be given more than 15 days' time from the date of filing to put in deficit court-fees. We are as a rule averse to the discretion of Courts in these or other matters being cut down by rigid rules, but in this instance we think a general rule (which it will be open to Courts to depart from in very special circumstances) may very well be enforced, in the public interest. It has been suggested further that no rent suit should be registered unless the deficit court-fees, the processes, the process fees and copies of plaints have been filed, and that the age of the case for the purposes of the Circular Order should run from the proposed date of registration of the plaint after all the above conditions have been fulfilled and not from the date of filing the plaint or payment of the deficit court-fees, as the case may be, as at present. This it is expected, will materially reduce the crowding of the daily list with derelict cases which merely delay and obstruct the proper work of the Judges and thus indirectly deprive the ministerial staff of the opportunity they now enjoy of arranging matters with the parties to the detriment of the orderly administration of justice.

Then again if rent suits must be disposed of quickly, why instead of imposing an artificial time limit of three months should not the Munsifs be allowed to fix a special day for the disposal of rent suits as they are allowed to do in regard to Small Cause Court cases and Miscellaneous cases? What has been stated above makes it perfectly clear that hundreds of rent suits appearing for months on the daily list day after day must hamper other judicial work without materially expediting the trial of these suits. The special difficulties which attend these suits, specially after the tamadi day, cannot be attended to incidentally in each case as it comes up, but can be satisfactorily dealt with only if exclusive attention is given to these groups of cases and this requires that they should have a special day allotted to them. We would suggest therefore that in the note to r. 51 of Chap. I of the High Court Rules and Circular Orders, the words "rent suits" be added after the words "Small Cause Court cases," so that rent suits may be taken up by themselves and may not have to be taken up nominally every day only to be adjourned to make room for other suits.

These are but two instances of defective drafting of High Court Rules and Circular Orders due to want of acquaintance with local conditions. If the services of a Subordinate Judge or Senior Munsif were available in the English Department, not only these but very many other defects would be brought to the notice of the Judges and the necessary improvements effected without delay and without long correspondence and consultation with local officials, which in the long run fail to be quite effective.

Notes of Cases.

In the case of Gibson v. Reach, [1924] 1 K. B. 294, the owner of a house sub-let to a spectator for one week a window which commanded a view of the street along which certain processions passed along with the use of the room for £5 as rent. It was held that the window and room were a "place of entertainment" and the owner was the proprietor of the entertainment and was liable to pay the entertainment duty under the Finance Act of 1922.

"Nothing is to be done which creates even a suspicion that there has been an improper interference with the course of justice." The application of this principle is strikingly shown in the case of The King v. Sussex Justices, [1923] 1 K. B. 256. In that case there was a collision between a motor vehicle belonging to M and one belonging to W. M was prosecuted before the Justices for dangerous driving. At the conclusion of the evidence the justices retired to consider their decision, and their acting clerk who was a member of the firm of solicitors who were acting for W in a claim for damages against M for injuries received in the collision, retired with them in case they should desire to be advised on any point of law. The Justices convicted M and it was stated on affidavit that they came to that conclusion without consulting the acting clerk. The conviction was set aside as it was held to be improper for the acting clerk, having regard to his firm's relation to the case, to be present with the Justices when they were considering their decision.

In the case of Havana Cigar and Tobacco Factories, Ltd. v. Oddenino, [1924] 1 Ch. 179, there was a dispute as to whether the words "Corona Cigar" meant a particular brand of cigar manufactured by the Plaintiff Company or a cigar of a particular shape and size. The Court on the evidence held the words to be ambiguous in meaning and granted an injunction restraining the Defendant, his servants and agents from selling or supplying a cigar not of the "Corona" brand, unless it was first ascertained that the customer did not require a cigar of the "Corona" and no other brand, or unless it was made clear to him by word of mouth or otherwise that the cigar supplied was of a brand other than the Plaintiff's brand.

NOTES

Ministers' Salary.

Now that the Bengal Legislative Council has disallowed any sum for the Ministers' Salary the question may arise in case the Ministers continue in office what salary, if any, they are entitled to. Sec. 52 of the Government of India Act, 1919, which deals with the appointment and salaries of ministers is as follows:—

"The Governor of a Governor's province may, by notification, appoint Ministers, not being members of his Executive Council or other officials, to administer transferred subjects, and any Minister so appointed shall hold office during his pleasure.

There may be paid to any Minister so appointed in any province the same salary as is payable to a member of the Executive Council in that province, unless a smaller salary is provided by vote of the Legislative Council of the province."

Now the Bengal Legislative Council has not voted a smaller salary and therefore it may be argued that the Governor is free to pay the ministers the same salary as is payable to a member of the Executive Council. The vote of no salary does not amount to a vote for smaller salary. It may amount to a vote of want of confidence but that is quite a different matter. If the minister remains in office without resigning inspite of this vote of censure or whatever it may amount to, no smaller salary having been voted, it may be argued that under this section the Governor would be justified in paying the minister the salary of a member of the Executive Council.

But sec. 72D creates a difficulty. Under that section the salaries of ministers have got to be submitted to the vote of the Council in the form of demands for grants and the Council may assent, or refuse its assent, to a demand, or may reduce the amount, etc. So it seems that the power given under sec. 52 must be controlled by sec. 72D. Now under sec. 72D if the amount is not voted, the Local Government, in case of a demand relating to a reserved subject, upon the certificate of the Governor that the expenditure is essential to the discharge of his responsibility, may allow the expenditure. Under sec. 72D (b) the Governor shall have power in cases of emergency to authorise such expenditure as may be in his opinion necessary for the safety or tranquillity of the province, or for the carrying on of any department. It seems that to justify payment of salaries to the ministers, after what has happened in the Bengal Legislative Council, the conditions of this sub-section should be satisfied. It is for the Governor to say whether any necessity has arisen as laid down in this sub-section and there is no appeal from his decision. Now, if the ministers are willing to continue without any salary there is no need to take the aid of this sub-section. If they threaten to resign then two courses may be open, viz., either to pay them the salaries to which they are entitled under the combined operation of sec. 52 and sec. 72D (b) or to allow them to resign and nominate new ministers and put their salaries to vote again. The latter course is preferable if the disallowance of salary could be taken as indicating want of confidence in the present ministers. The possibility of managing the transferred departments without the aid of ministers should also be considered. It seems that sec. 72D, sub-sec. (b), should be taken advantage of only in exceptional cases and it is difficult to see how the present condition would justify recourse to it. Surely the safety and tranquillity of the province have not been threatened and the departments could be carried on with the grants already voted.

Law's Delay and the Civil Justice Committee.

In previous issues we tried to show how the present system of supervision over the work of the Judges in the Mofussil, in seeking to get more work out of them than they can possibly dispose of, so far from securing that end, really obstructs and hampers business, needlessly piling up the cause list with cases and leading in the result to slackness of supervision over the ministerial staff and consequent corruption and general demoralisation in the judicial administration. Not the least deplorable feature of the present system is the part which, as previously alluded to, the Judge's sheristadar is enabled to play in deciding the fates of Subordinate Judges and Munsifs in the matter of their promotion and preferment. It is the sheristadar at whose suggestions cases are transferred from one Court to another; it is he who attends on the District Judge at the examination of the files and the records and prepares the statistics of disposal and puts them up before the District Judge. In the performance of either of these functions there is considerable scope for conferring favours and influencing the opinion of the District Judge in favour of or against a particular officer. Thus, to take the first mentioned function, viz., the distribution of cases. In the District of Bengal, one or other of two tests of efficiency has been known to prevail. In appraising the work of Subordinate Judicial Officers, some District Judges go by the number of contested cases disposed of: others by the number of witnesses examined in such cases. A Subordinate Judicial Officer has only to get into the good books of the sheristadar to have the largest number of cases possessing the desired characteristic passed to his file. The sheristadar may thus make it impossible for a particular Judge to make a good statistical show as against another. Incidentally it may be mentioned that in a district where the number of witnesses examined is the determining factor, a Judge who is more knowing than his colleagues may seek to equalise his record with theirs or even excel them by pressing the parties to examine more witnesses than is necessary. This currying of favour with the sheristadar by highly placed judicial officers and these sordid devices to produce a brave show statistically to avoid being left behind in the race are as degrading as they are reprehensible; but human nature being what it is, how can one hope to do away with them unless one strikes the evils at their very root?

The files and records are kept by clerks, but the Judges are expected to see that they are properly kept. As we have explained clearly this supervision over the work of the clerks cannot, owing to the pressure under which the subordinate judiciary has to work, be anything near complete and perfect, and it is always possible to pick holes and to charge the shortcomings to the inadequacy of the Judge's supervision. Now a sheristadar who has made up his mind to favour Judge A at the expense of Judge B has only to draw the pointed attention of the District Judge to specific defects in Judge A's files overlooking similar or worse ones in B's. The statistics of disposal themselves admit, as all statistics do, of varied interpretations. As a result of the distribution of cases it may be possible (without the officers in question having any control over the matter) to get something like the following results:—

Court.	Rent suit.	Money suit.	Title suit.	Total.	Witnesses.
1	15	3	5	23	90
2	5	1	8	14	60
3	10	5	6	21	80

Now Court No. 1 has disposed of the largest number of contested suits with the largest number of witnesses, but the number of title suits disposed of by him is the fewest. The sheristadar has only to draw pointed attention to the large number of disposals and witnesses if his object be to cry up Court No. 1. On the other hand it is just as easy to belittle his work by pointing to the small number of title suits disposed of by him. The probabilities are that all three officers have been equally diligent and expeditious, but who is to be declared the prize-boy may nevertheless depend upon hints and suggestions plausibly and tactfully thrown out by the sheristadar. The report which the Judge prepares (without of course consulting or discussing matters with the officers concerned) with the doubtful assistance he gets from the sheristadar is in due course sent to the High Court. It is this "confidential" report which finally determines the future prospects of the members of the subordinate judicial service.

To point to the evils of a system in operation is however an easier task than to suggest effective remedies. But as we have said the evils pointed out far from being negligible are in point of fact undermining the morale of the subordinate judiciary. Some remedy must be found for it. The statistical test cannot be dispensed with altogether. The quality test too, if it merely means the extent to which the judgments of a Court are affirmed or reversed in appeal, has its dangers. Some Judges cultivate the habit of writing appeal-proof judgments to perfection. Besides reversal of a trial Court's judgments on facts is often no conclusive test of its worthlessness. Again a Judge who keeps his files in meticulous order is not necessarily a good Judge. We would be very suspicious of the Judge who paid too much attention to externals. For the generality of cases, we would suggest that no reports adverse to a Judge should be made or recorded, nor should any such report be allowed to interfere with the normal course of his promotion without giving him first full opportunity to meet the charges made against him in the report.

But this by itself will not suffice when it is a question of giving special promotions, for instance when selection is to be made for promoting Subordinate Judges to District and Sessions Judgeships. This should never be done upon a comparison only of the confidential reports from District Judges. The number of officers amongst whom the selection has to be made being not large, it should be possible to call for and examine some of their files in the English Department. It is here that the assistance of a member of the subordinate judiciary, who may be appointed a Deputy or Assistant Registrar in that Department, may prove invaluable. But we are of opinion that the time has come when this examination of the work of selected officers for promotion to District Judgeships should no longer remain a matter of merely departmental interest and inquiry. We would suggest the constitution of a Board, consisting of the Judge in charge of the English Department and the senior Vakil Judge (these being expected to be most conversant with judicial business in the Mofussil), a representative of the subordinate judiciary (the officer who, as we have suggested, should be appointed a Deputy or Assistant Registrar in the English Department) and two outsiders. These latter should be lawyers of standing and experience who command public confidence. Their presence will act as a wholesome corrective to the wholly departmental view which the other members may not unnaturally take of the matter. At present there is no means by which outside criticism, the fresh outlook of interested and observant outsiders and the point of view of the outside public can be brought to bear upon the manner in which judicial business is conducted in the Mofussil. The choice of the proposed lawyer members of the Board remaining with the High Court there is absolutely no reason for apprehending that any but responsible men will be selected to work on it. If our scheme for the appointment of such a Board be adopted it will have the healthiest effect upon the morale of the subordinate judiciary, who would seek to qualify for promotion by sound and conscientious work and not through the grace and favour of the sheristadar or even of the District Judge; and if, besides, every officer against whom an unfavourable report has been made be given an opportunity to show that it is not justified, we believe the backstairs manipulations of the sheristadar and the evils attendant thereon will be things of the past. Those in authority have no idea of the bitterness with which self-respecting members of the subordinate judicial service resent the prevailing sheristadar-rule in the service. Many of the best officers prefer to suffer permanent eclipse in the matter of promotion and preferment, rather than pay court to half-educated and not always well-mannered members of the ministerial staff, who have the ear of the District Judges, but who would be far better employed in looking after the subordinate staff and to the convenience of the litigant public and in seeing that the processes of the Court are enforced and executed with promptitude and despatch and without corruption and without the levy of those unauthorised tolls which make litigation so near a nightmare to all except those who resort to it as a profession.

Introduction.

The question which I propose to discuss in this article is whether there is any presumption that a property standing in the name of a female who is a member of a joint family governed by the Dayabhaga School of Hindu law, belongs to the family, and is not her stridhana property.

The necessity for such a discussion arises from the two recent decisions of the Calcutta High Court, Pratap v. Sarat, 25 C. W. N. 544 : s. c. 33 C. L. J. 202 (1920) and Bhubanmohini v. Kumudbala, 28 C. W. N. 131 (1923)—which lend support to the conclusion that the property should be presumed to be a stridhana property of the female, and not the joint property of the family.

Presumption of joint property in Hindu family.

As the normal state of a Hindu family is one of jointness in mess, worship and estate, the presumption is that all property, including acquisitions made by a joint member, is joint family property. And this is not rebutted by merely shewing that it is purchased in the name of that member. The same rule applies equally to a joint family governed by the Dayabhaga as to one governed by the Mitakshara.

Its foundation in case of Mitakshara family—Co-parcenership.

The foundation of such a presumption in the case of a family governed by the Mitakshara has been well-stated by the Madras High Court in an early case, Narayana v. Krishna, I. L. R. 8 Mad. 214 (1884) :—"When a family lives in co-parcenery, the presumption which exists in the case of male members, arises from the circumstance that they are co-parceners." In other words, it is only in the case of the male co-parceners that the presumption arises. Hence, there is no presumption where the disputed property stands in the name of a non-coparcener, whether male or female.

In case of Dayabhaga family—Co-ownership.

Co-parcenership, however, implies such co-ownership in the family property as arises by birth. In the case of the members of a family governed by the Dayabhaga, there is no right by birth, although there is co-ownership in the family property, which accrues to its members upon the death of their common ancestor. And it is on the basis rather of co-ownership than of co-parcenership, that the presumption can apply to the members of such a family. This is the view taken by the Calcutta High Court in the case cited below.

Illustrative case of family of father and sons—Distinction between Mitakshara and Dayabhaga.

Thus, in the case of a Mitakshara family, a son is a co-parcener with the father, and any property acquired in the name of either is presumed to be the joint property of both. In the case where the Dayabhaga applies, the father and his sons cannot form members of a joint family. There is really no joint family during the father's life-time, as the sons do not acquire any interest in the family property by birth, and are not co-parceners with the father in respect of it. Hence, in such a family, there is no joint ownership between the father and the sons as there is between the sons themselves upon the death of their father. And the ordinary presumption applicable to the case of a joint family does not apply to the case of the former, though it does to the case of the latter. Hence, it was held by the Calcutta High Court in the case, Sarada v. Mahananda, I. L. R. 31 Cal. 448 (1904), [the head-note of which is incorrect. (See Ram v. Kusum, 4 C. L. J. 56, also Pratap v. Sarat, above), though followed in Govind v. Radha, I. L. R. 31 All. 477 (1909)]—that if a property stand in the name of one of the brothers during the life-time of the father, the burden of proof rests on those who assert that it in reality belonged to the father.

Different view of Privy Council.

Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, however, in the case, Parbati v. Baikuntha, 19 C. L. J. 129 : s. c. 18 C. W. N. 428 P. C. (1913), did not choose to accept that view of the matter. In that case, three brothers admittedly formed a joint family governed by the Dayabhaga law, and the disputed property was purchased in the name of the youngest of them, during the life-time of the father. It was contended that as the conveyance stood in his name the Court ought to presume that it was his self-acquired property. Their Lordships held that, in the absence of any evidence that he had any separate funds, or that the property in dispute was purchased with money belonging to him, the presumption is clear and decisive that it was acquired by the father in the name of the son and not the self-acquired property of that son. In other words, it was the joint property of all the brothers.

Possession no test.

It may be pointed out here that in the Calcutta case referred to above it appears that the disputed property was "in the exclusive possession" of the brother "from a long time anterior to the death of the father." But this fact was not regarded by their Lordships to be of any weight or to be worth any consideration at all in deciding the question of presumption. For it has been laid down in Taruk v. Jogeshwar, 11 B. L. R. 193 (1893), that "if one of the members of the family is found to be in possession of any property, the presumption would be, not that he was in possession of it as separate property acquired by him, but as a member of the joint family."

Membership joint family, basis of presumption.

Thus, membership of the joint family is the essential condition for raising the presumption, and not co-parcenership, nor co-ownership, nor even possession of the property.

It does not arise in case of stranger.

Hence in the case of one, however, who is not a member of, but is a stranger to, the family, the foundation of the presumption does not exist, and any property standing in his name must be presumed to be his own exclusive property. So, it has been held by the Calcutta High Court in an early case governed by the Dayabhaga, Dossee Monee v. Ram Chand, 7 W. R. 249 (1867), per Shumboonath Pundit, J., that the presumption of Hindu law (as to jointness in property) cannot apply to a case "where a property is claimed through a son-in-law, who appears only to have lived in the house of his father-in-law, and not to be" (a member) "of joint family, and" (had no interest in its) "funds in any legal sense of the term." But if it is claimed through his wife (a daughter of the family), and if it be "established that the family were still joint, or at least joint up to the time of its acquisition," the onus is thrown on him who claims a separate purchase.

Difference in interest of members does not affect presumption.

Membership of a family implies certain rights the most important of which are the co-parcenership or co-ownership in the family property, maintenance out of its income, and residence in the family dwelling house. Of all persons living together in the family, some have no right to the joint property of the family but only the right to reside in the family and to be maintained out of its income that is in a limited sense the right of possession only. But as pointed out by Justice Dwarka Nath Mitter in the Calcutta High Court in the case, Chunder Nath v. Kristo Komul, 15 W. R. 357 (1871):—"No difference in the nature of the interest possessed by the different members can affect the presumption with which we have to deal." Thus, where a property stands in the name of a member of a family, who is a co-parcener or a co-owner, the presumption is that it is a joint property of the family: where the property stands in the name of a member who is not a co-parcener or a co-owner the presumption is still the same.

Joint property only of those who are co-owners.

Hence, a property standing in the name of a member of a joint family, co-parcener or non-co-parcener, being presumably a joint property of the family, it is a joint property of those members who have joint right to the family property, that is to say, who are co-owners or co-parceners in respect of it. Those members of the family, therefore, who have no such right or interest in the family property can claim none in the property acquired or held in their name, merely because they are members of the family in the comprehensive sense explained above.

Others are presumed to be Benamdars of family.

In their cases a different presumption arises, namely, that they are the benamdars of the joint family, and that they hold it or it was acquired or held in their names for the benefit of the joint family. I have sufficiently discussed the matters in my book on 'The Law of Benami,' pp. 91-92.

Presumption in case of purchase in name of Mitakshara female.

In the light of the above principles let us consider the question which we propose to discuss. In a family governed by the Mitakshara, as their Lordships of the Madras High Court stated in the case already referred to:—"The ladies are not in an undivided family co-parceners." Nor can they be co-owners. Hence, the very foundation of the presumption of jointness in property is wanting in their case. There is the further ground stated by their Lordships, viz., "whatever property they acquire by inheritance and gift is their separate property." and there is no reason why any property which they otherwise acquire should not be considered their stridhana. As explained by the Calcutta High Court in the case, Dakhina v. Jagadishwar—2 C. W. N. 197 (1897):—"The Court held that there was no presumption that property standing in the name of a female member of a joint family was joint property, because she could hold property of her own and the presumption from co-parcenership did not arise as she was not a "co-parcener." As pointed out by their Lordships :—"There is not, so far as we are aware, any case in which it has been held that when property stands in the name of a female member of a Hindu family, it is to be presumed that it is the common property of the family, nor is there any ground on which such presumption could be founded." It may, therefore, be broadly stated that in no case governed by the Mitakshara the presumption can arise where the property in dispute stands in the name of a female member of a joint family.

Presumption in case of purchase in name of Dayabhaga female where she is co-owner.

In a family governed by the Dayabhaga, however, the females may, under certain circumstances, be co-owners. Thus, the mother, the wife, or the daughter inherits the share in the joint property of a male member of the family to whom she is so related, on his death, although when he is himself alive all of them are merely entitled to maintenance out of the family property and in some cases residence in the family dwelling house. In the former case, she becomes a co-owner in the family property along with the other surviving male members of the family, though she may ordinarily have a limited interest lasting only during her own life. Her position is practically similar to that of a male co-parcener of a Mitakshara family. And any property standing in her name may reasonably be presumed to be a joint family property. (1)

Where she is not so.

Where, however, she is not a co-owner, the basis of the presumption which exists in the case of a Mitakshara male co-parcener or a Dayabhaga co-owner, male or female, does not exist (1).

Still member of family.

But in her case there is the other fact which should be taken into consideration, but which is often ignored or overlooked, viz., that she is still a member of the joint family, which may raise the same presumption in her case as well. This was pointed out by Justice Dwarka Nath Mitter of the Calcutta High Court "one of the greatest masters of Hindu law who have ever administered justice in this country" [Nobin v. Dokhabala, I. L. R. 10 Cal. 686 (1884)] in an early case Chunder Nath v. Kristo Komul, 15 W. R. 357 (1871). In that case, the property in dispute was purchased in the name of a female at a time when she and her minor son were living together with the Plaintiff and his sister-in-law as members of a joint family. It was argued that the presumption of joint acquisition arising from the circumstance of a Hindu family being joint and undivided is not applicable to this case, inasmuch as the party in whose name the disputed property was purchased, was a female, and as such had no proprietary right in the family estate while her son was alive, who was the heir-at-law of her deceased husband.

Opinion of Dwarka Nath Mitter, J.

In reply to this argument his Lordship pointed out :—"That (she) was one of the members of the joint undivided family is beyond all questions; and although her interest in the family estate was not of a proprietary character, there can be no doubt whatever that she was entitled to be, and was in point of fact, maintained at the time in question out of the proceeds of that estate. The wives and mothers of the members of a joint undivided Hindu family, so long as they continue to live in the family and are supported out of its income, are just as much members of that family as their husbands and sons; and as unity of possession is one of the essential characteristics of a joint undivided Hindu family, no difference in the nature of the interests possessed by the different members thereof can affect the presumption with which we have to deal." "The circumstances of the case," in his Lordship's opinion, "are sufficient to raise the presumption that the property was purchased with the common funds of the joint family and for the benefit of all its members;" and "the presumption of joint acquisition cannot be rebutted by the mere fact that her name was used in making the purchase." And referring to the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council relied on in support of the contrary view, [Jowala Buksh v. Dharum Singh, 10 M. I. A. 511 (529) (1866)]—which his Lordship distinguished on several grounds, with which we are now not directly concerned, his Lordship pointed out the following passage in that very decision : "That the lady in her own time was the sole recorded proprietor of the talooks in ordinary case might be a circumstance of little moment, (even in a Mitakshara family with which they were dealing) because it has been ruled and is consistent with reason that one member of a joint Hindu family may be so recorded on behalf of the family."—which, in his opinion, "conclusively shewed" that "in their Lordships' (of the Judicial Committee) opinion the mere fact of the registration of (her) name in the Collector's books would not have, under ordinary circumstances, afforded any presumption whatever of her independent right and exclusive possession."

(1) Vide Author's "The Law of Benami," New Ed. 94-95.

Followed in later case.

This view has been accepted by a later decision of the Calcutta High Court, Nobin v. Dakhobala, I. L. R. 10 Cal. 686 (1881), where the question argued was "whether property acquired in the name of a Hindu lady, a member of a joint family, is presumably joint property or not." The property in this case was found standing in the names of two ladies, members of a joint Hindu family, and widows of deceased members of that family. Their Lordships following the decision of Mitter, J., quoted above, distinguishing the case, Chowdrain v. Tarini, 11 C. L. R. 41 : s. c. I. L. R. 8 Cal. 545 (1882), which, it was argued, was in conflict with it, and pointing out that "we are not aware that view has ever been questioned until now," laid down that "a wife, a member of a joint Hindu family, is, as regards the property held in her name, in the same position as her husband with respect to property acquired in his name, and subject to the same presumption in favour of the joint family." Thus, in a Dayabhaga family, any property standing in the name of a female member of the family who is, however, not a co-owner of the family property is also to be presumed to be a joint property of the family.

Joint property only of co-owners, male or female.

It is, therefore, joint property of those members male or female, who have joint right to the family property, in other words, who are co-owners in respect of it. And those in whose name it stands having no such right or interest in the family property can claim none in it.

LONDON NOTES.

(From our Correspondent.)

The arguments were concluded in Kadoth Ambu Nair v. Secretary of State (Madras) on February 29th and judgment was reserved.

The Board did not sit again until March 6th, when Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. E. B. Raikes obtained special leave to appeal to the Privy Council in the case of Hari Kumar Dey v. H. V. Low & Co. (Bengal).

An appeal from Madras, Raja Br. Narasingerji Gajanagerji v. Raja Pannganti Parthasaradhi Rayanim Garu, was heard on March 6th, 7th and 10th by a Board composed of Lords Atkinson, Blanesburgh and Shaw, Sir John Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali.

The main question for decision was as to whether a transaction embodied in two documents was an absolute sale with an agreement to reconvey, or was in fact a mortgage. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. Clauson, K. C. and Narasimham for the Appellants.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent.

The Board did not sit on March 11th and 12th but constituted as before, they are now (March 13th) hearing arguments in Sri Raja V. V. S. Jagapati Br. Garu v. Sri Poosapati Venkatapati Raja Garu (Madras). The question for determination is whether the Appellant is entitled to recover from a trust fund certain monies advanced to the Respondents to enable them to prosecute a claim to the Vizianagram estates. The Respondents contend that owing to the failure of the Appellant to supply the money they were forced to a compromise in the proceeds of which the Appellant is precluded from sharing owing to his breach of contract. The appeal is part heard.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C., DeGruyther, K. C. and Narasimham for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Brown for the Respondents.

The following judgments were delivered on March 13th, Md. Rahimtulla v. Esmail Allarakhia (Bombay). The appeal was dismissed.

Kalyandappa Bin Ayappa Derai v. Chabasappa Derai (Bombay). The appeal was allowed.

Review.

-COMMENTARIES ON THE CODE OF CRIMINAL PROCEDURE (ACT V OF 1898) as modified up to 1st September 1923. By P. Ramanathan Aiyar, Vakil, Trichinopoly, Madras.

Of all the new editions of the Code of Criminal Procedure that we have received, this is the most copiously annotated. The scale on which the annotation proceeds has up to now enabled the author to bring out only the first volume which covers only 250 sections. As considerable changes have been made in most of the important sections, the text of the old sections, when very largely altered, have been set out in extenso as prefatory to the annotations. We also find there large extracts not only from the report of the Select and the Joint Committees but also from speeches in the Legislative Assembly. The annotations are of the usual style, giving references to the case-law and setting out the points of decision with reference to the important elements of each section. Where the law has been changed to remove conflict between the interpretations by different Courts, such reference will be found useful. But where the law has been changed independently of such conflict, it remains to be seen how far the old cases would be found useful. It is in the working of the Code that doubts and difficulties will arise and a new crop of case-law will gradually evolve out of such process. The labour that has been bestowed by the author in the work under review is deserving of the highest praise. The work when completed will prove a very valuable book of reference. The annotations on 250 sections cover nearly 1000 pages.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before GREAVES and DUVAL, JJ. CR. REV. No. 87 OF 1924. JABBAR ALI and another, Accused, Petitioner v. EMPEROR. The 10th March 1924.

Criminal Procedure Code, secs. 235 and 239—Mis-joinder of Charges.

This was a Rule granted on the 29th of January 1924 against the conviction and sentence on appeal, passed by the Additional District Magistrate of Mymensingh, confirming the conviction but reducing the sentence passed by N. G. Ray, Deputy Magistrate of Netrokona, under secs. 457, 380, I. P. C., on the Petitioners.

The facts of the case are briefly as follows :—On the early morning of 11th July 1923 there was a burglary in the house of one Lalit Topedar of village Bangla within the P. S. Netrokona, District Mymensingh. The same night two other thefts with house-breaking were alleged to have been committed, one in the same village of Bangla and the other in a different village Durgasram. No thief was caught in the act. Subsequently Jabbar Ali and Montaz were arrested and put to stand their trial under secs. 380 and 457 of the I. P. C. The trial Court found them guilty under both the sections and convicted them under both which was confirmed by the Appellate Court.

It was urged, that the joint trial of the two persons Jabbar Ali and Montaz, upon the facts stated above, was bad in law, being vitiated by mis-joinder of charges inasmuch as the three thefts as aforesaid, each complete by itself, could not be regarded as one transaction and hence sec. 239, Cr. P. C., as it stood before the new amendment would not apply. In support of this proposition a decision reported in 10 C. W. N. 32 was cited:

Held—That the trial was vitiated by the misjoinder of charges. Sec. 235 did not apply as the three burglaries were three completed acts and as such they were three separate transactions. The conviction and the sentence were set aside.

The Rule was made absolute.

Babu Radha Benode Pal with Babu Bhupendra Kishore Basu appeared in support of the Rule.

No one appeared on behalf of the Crown to show cause.

NOTES

Civil Justice.

We publish in another column a letter containing a number of suggestions on the topics now occupying the attention of the Civil Justice Committee. Coming, as they do, from a member of the Subordinate Judicial Service, the suggestions deserve careful consideration. But it has to be premised that they are our correspondent's individual opinions and on many points they are not the opinions of the large majority of his colleagues in the service, so far as we have been able to ascertain, nor do we see our way to agree with all of them.

For instance, his proposal that all rent-suits should be assigned to one Court is not, in view of the large number of rent-suits, a practical proposition. This proposal, if accepted, will lead to greater delay in disposing of such suits. Besides, to be confined exclusively to one class of work is not good for the Judge himself, though this objection may be got over by not allowing a Judge to occupy himself with this kind of work only, for, say, more than a year. The real objection is that the number of such cases will compel a distribution of such work amongst a number of officers and concentration of such work in one or two Courts will afford no real relief either to the Courts or to the litigant public. At any rate the scheme we have suggested, viz., of appointing special days for rent-suits, should be given a fair trial before any scheme of concentration of all rent-suits in one Court is taken up, even for experiment. If it is to be taken up at all, we would prefer that the two schemes be tried in different districts so that the results of both may admit of rational comparison.

We do not agree with our correspondent in the matter of a wider extension of summary methods of trial specially in rent-suits. Summary methods of trial do not satisfy the litigants and the very fact that in our correspondent's view the decisions in such suits should not be allowed to operate as res judicata, shows that he himself is not unapprehensive of the greater risks of miscarriage of justice attending on such trials. The fact of the matter is that the public do not share the confidence which the Judges themselves naturally have in their own infallibility, and our own experience of the way in which small causes are disposed of, whether in the city or in the mofussil, rather dispose us to agree with the point of view of the public than of the Judges themselves.

As regards the enhancement of the jurisdiction of the Munsifs, we are unable to see how this can relieve congestion or speed up work. If Munsifs were officers who had more time than work and more time than they knew what to do with, the suggestion would have practical value. But things being what they are, it has none. We have no doubt that a senior Munsif can manage judicial business as efficiently as a junior Subordinate Judge, the one being a Subordinate Judge and the other a Munsif depending on the accident of the former having entered the service somewhat earlier than the latter. Can you, we ask, in fairness, put a Sub-Judge's work on a Munsif, without offering him a Sub-Judge's pay? As it is, the percentage of Sub-Judges in Bengal is already low compared with that of other provinces. We have not heard of any suggestion for abolishing the Sub-Judge's grade altogether from motives of economy and reducing them to the rank of Munsifs. But that is exactly the direction to which the logic of the proposal will be found to point on close examination.

Our correspondent would like to see the very method of composing civil disputes as crystallised in the Code fundamentally altered, and we can assure him that he is by no means alone in holding this opinion. We ourselves have had misgivings on the point, but pending the discovery of a more satisfactory method, all one can hope to do is to improve the existing system wherever possible, and that is the task upon which the Civil Justice Committee is, we believe, engaged at the present moment. Of the several methods of deciding disputes hitherto tried, divination is now out of question. The choice lies between fighting with sticks and (taking the existing method at its worst) chicanery. The latter is at any rate more allied to law and order than the former, and one has to be careful, in suggesting changes, to see that people are not thrown back upon the argument of the sticks. It is a large subject, larger perhaps than our correspondent has realised. It is certainly not one which can be usefully discussed without collecting data regarding methods obtaining and being tried in other countries, in and outside the British Empire, not omitting Bolshevik Russia.

PRESUMPTION IN CASE OF PROPERTY PURCHASED IN NAME OF FEMALE MEMBER OF DAYABHAGA JOINT FAMILY.

By Radharomon Mukerjee, Vakil, Berhampore.

Females presumed to be benamdars of joint family.

In their cases, as we have already stated, and as against them another and a different presumption arises, namely, that they are mere benamdars of the joint family for whose benefit the property is allowed to stand in their names. As observed by Justice Dwarka Nath Mitter in the same case :—" So far as the ordinary and usual course of things is concerned, the practice of making benami purchases in the names of female members of the joint undivided Hindu families is just as much rife in this country as that of making such purchases in the names of the male members, and the presumption against separate acquisition is no less strong in the former case than in the latter." With reference to this matter, however, their Lordships of the Madras High Court observed in the same case from which we have already quoted :—" Although it is not unusual for property to be transferred in the name of a female member to protect it from the creditors of the male members, or to place it beyond the risk of extravagance on the part of the male members, such dealings are exceptional and can afford no ground for a general presumption."

Radical divergence of views—their grounds explained.

It may be pointed out that the opinion of the Calcutta High Court is based not merely on the prevailing practice of making purchases or holding properties in the names of the female members as in the names of the male members, but also upon the fact that, owing to the females living in the family and being supported out of its income like the male members, both of them thus have "unity of possession" in the joint property of the family, and are equally members of the joint family. With the Madras High Court, however, the prevailing practice of keeping the properties in the names of the female members carries no weight, as also the fact that the females are as much members of the family as the males. And further, the view expressed by the Madras High Court is based upon the distinction between the rights of those members of a joint family who are co-parceners and those who are not so. But, according to the Calcutta High Court, "no difference in the nature of the interests possessed by the different members thereof can affect the presumption" of joint acquisition, which arises from the mere fact that the lady lives in the family and is maintained out of its income, and is only in that sense a member of the family. Thus, according to the Madras High Court, in a Mitakshara family, the presumption is based on the fact of co-parcenership, while according to the Calcutta High Court in a Dayabhaga family, it is founded on the mere fact of union or living together in the family and maintained by it. Hence, there is a radical divergence of views between the two High Courts on this point. (Vide Author's "The Law of Benami," pp. 92-95).

Above cases not considered in recent decisions.

It was unfortunate that the decisions of the Calcutta High Court and of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council quoted above were not cited at the Bar, nor otherwise brought to the notice of their Lordships, on both the occasions of the hearing of the two cases recently decided and referred to at the beginning of this article.

Contrary view taken—ground or authority in support.

In the first of these cases, Protap v. Sarat, 33 C. L. J. 201: s. c. 25 C. W. N. 544 (1920), where the disputed property stood in the name of a daughter-in-law of a family, that learned and erudite Judge of the Calcutta High Court, Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, held quite the contrary view that it was "erroneous" to presume that "because a property stands in the name of a daughter-in-law, she is not the beneficial owner." His Lordship has not been pleased to give us any new or additional grounds, except the general ground, nor has he quoted any direct authority, except the Madras case, both of which we have already discussed. In the other case—Bhubanmohini v. Kumudbala, 28 C. W. N. 131 (1923), in which several brothers along with their mother formed a joint family, and the disputed properties stood in the name of the mother, their Lordships (of whom Justice Sir Asutosh Mookerjee was one) observe:—"We may usefully recall that, as pointed out by the Judicial Committee more than once, there is no presumption that a property standing in the name of a Hindu female, who is a member of a joint Hindu family, belongs to the joint family, and is not her stridhan property. . . . . . ." And their Lordships have further been pleased to point out:—"The same principle will be found recognised and applied by all the other High Courts," and then follows a list of the decisions in which this has been done.

Distinction between cases of joint family and where there is none.

But before discussing these decisions it is necessary to bear in mind that there is a distinction between the case we are considering now, namely, where there is a joint family and a property is acquired in the name of a female who is related to a male member of such a family, and a case where there is no joint family, but a male person lives separately from his other relations, and a property is acquired in the name of one of his female relations. This distinction has been pointed out by their Lordships of the Calcutta High Court in the cases of Nobin v. Dakhabala, I. L. R. 10 Cal. 686 (1884) and Dakhina v. Jugadishwar, 2 C. W. N. 197 (1897). As observed by their Lordships in the 28 C. W. N. case:—"We cannot overlook that there are numerous instances of cases in the reports where purchases in the name of female members have led to controversies—whether the acquisition was for the benefit of the lady or of the person who found the money." Even when it is proved that though the property stands in the name of a female, the purchase-money was advanced by her male relation with whom she lives, the claim is often made that it is really a case of gift to her whereby she has acquired an absolute proprietary interest in the property. But that will depend upon the intention of the person paying the price, the onus of proving which lies on the party setting up such a claim. The real controversy, however, arises when no evidence as to the source of purchase-money is forthcoming. Then the matter will depend upon the question whether property purchased in wife's name is not presumed to be husband's but wife's property; from the mere fact that the property stands in her name the presumption arises that she being the ostensible owner, is also the real owner of the property. The most typical instance of such a case is where the property is acquired in the name of the wife. In the absence of any evidence shewing that the husband supplied the funds with which the property was purchased, the fact that the purchase was made in the name of the wife does not lead to the presumption that the property belonged to the husband and not to the wife. Even where there is evidence that the husband furnished the purchase-money, the presumption in English law is that the purchase was made by way of "advancement" to her, while according to Indian law, the presumption is that it is a case of benami purchase. I have fully discussed the matter in my book on "The Law of Benami," pp. 86-89.

Cases cited do not support the view taken.

This question was dealt with in some of the cases cited in the last of the recent decisions of the Calcutta High Court—Bhubanmohini v. Kumudbala, 28 C. W. N. 131 (1923), in support of the proposition that a property standing in the name of a female member of a joint family should be presumed to be her stridhana property, for which they are no authority. This will appear clear to any one who takes the trouble of going through them. On the other hand, they support the view that as between the husband, or a person claiming through him, and the wife, the presumption is that a property standing in the name of the wife belongs to her and not to her husband.

Chowdrain v. Tarini, 8 Cal. 545.

Thus in the case of Chowdrain v. Tarini, I. L. R. 8 Cal. 545 (1882) [which was reversed on the facts by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in Dharani Kanta v. Krishto Kamini, I. L. R. 13 Cal. 181 (1886), but the view of law taken in it still holds good—vide Mayne's Hindu Law and Usage, 9th Ed., 630, Woodroffe's "The Law of Evidence, 7th Ed., 661"]—their Lordships expressed their unwillingness "to accept the bare proposition that, in the absence of any evidence to shew the source from which the purchase-money was derived, there was a presumption that property purchased in the name of a Hindu wife is the property of her husband, and acquired with his money," and pointed out—"In our opinion there was no presumption one way or the other, and that the burden of proof in each particular case must depend upon the pleadings and the position of parties as Plaintiffs or Defendants." In other words, the mere fact of the property being acquired in the name of the wife is no presumptive evidence of the property being the property of the husband.

Nobin v. Dakhabala, 10 Cal. 686.

This was explained to be the law applicable to a case where the question arose as between a husband (or a purchaser at a sale in execution against the husband) and the wife, and not to the case we are now discussing, in a later Calcutta case—Nobin v. Dakhabala, I. L. R. 10 Cal. 686 (1884). This case is already sufficiently discussed.

Ran Bejai v. Inderpal—26 Cal. 871 P. C : s. c. 4 C. W. N. 1 P. C.

Hence their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ran Bejai v. Inderpal—I. L. R. 26 Cal. 871 : s. c. 4 C. W. N. 1 P. C. (1899)—held that the mere fact that the widow of a rich husband, who had died possessed of considerable property, was found after his death, in possession of a property of the acquisition of which no account was given, raises no presumption that it belonged originally to her husband.

Thakro v. Gunga Parsad—10 All. 197 P. C.

The same principle was held to apply to case in which it does not appear that there was any ancestral property of the family, and the disputed property was, during the life-time of the husband and on the eve of his second marriage, mutated in the name of the wife. In a suit by the son claiming the property as the heir to his father, it was held that the allegation that it belonged to his father's estate and that the mother's name was only used benami by the father, it was held that the property was given to the wife for her own benefit. It is thus clear that under the peculiar facts of the case the presumption did not arise. Thakro v. Gunga Parsad—I. L. R. 10 All. 197 P. C. (1887).

Narasumma v. Srinivasa—33 Mad. 112.

In the case of Narasumma v. Srinivasa—I L. R. 33 Mad. 112 (1909)—the wife had mortgaged a certain property in her own right, which was claimed by the son as belonging to the father. Their Lordships of the Madras High Court relying upon the Privy Council decision in Ran Bejai v. Inderpal—I. L. R. 26 Cal. 871 P. C. held that there was no presumption of law that the property found in the widow's possession was originally that of her husband, and placed upon the son the onus of proving that the property had vested in the father through whom he claimed it.

Motivahoo v. Purshotam—29 Bom. 306.

In the case of Motivahoo v. Purshotam—I. L. R. 29 Bom. 306, a Hindu widow had brought a suit against the executor of her husband's Will for a declaration that she was the sole owner of a house which was purchased in her name but was subsequently otherwise disposed of by her husband in his Will. Their Lordships of the Bombay High Court held "a purchase by a husband in the name of his wife did not raise any presumption of a gift to the wife or an advancement for her benefit." It thus appears that in this decision the Bombay High Court goes against the view that a property standing in the name of a Hindu female (wife in this case) should be presumed to be her separate stridhana property.

Ram Narain v. Muhammad—26 Cal. 227 P. C.—3 C. W. N. 113 P. C.

Of the other cases cited by their Lordships in the 28 C. W. N. case, that of Ram Narain v. Muhammad—I. L. R. 26 Cal. 227 : s. c. 3 C. W. N. 113 P. C. (1898)—is not at all to the point. For, there the purchase that was questioned had been made, not in the name of a female, but in the name of a male, stranger to the family.

Nityamani v. Lakhan—43 Cal. 660 : s. c. 20 C. W. N. 522.

In Nityamani v. Lakhan—I. L. R. 43 Cal. 660 : s. c. 20 C. W. N. 522—24 C. L. J. 1 P. C. (1916) where the question raised was whether a property purchased in the name of a lady was taken by her as its absolute owner, or as a mere benamdar for her husband, their Lordships of the Judicial Committee, finding that "at this distance of time it was hardly likely that evidence would be forthcoming on either side to establish or rebut conclusively" "the fact of the source whence the consideration came," on a consideration of all the circumstances of the case, held that it was a benami purchase. Here it appears that the onus could not be thrown on party who claimed that the wife was a benamdar for the husband to whom the property belonged, inasmuch as it was impossible for him to discharge it at that distance of time.

Mahammad v. Bharat—23 C. W. N. 321 P. C.

In Mahammad v. Bharat—23 C. W. N. 321 P. C. (1918)—where in execution of a mortgage decree the mortgaged property was purchased in the name of the mortgagor's wife, their Lordships of the Privy Council placed upon the party who claimed that the purchase was benami, the onus of proving the fact, overruling the decision of the Allahabad High Court in Bharut v. Mahammad, 31 Ind. Cas. 586, which had placed on the wife, or the person claiming through her, the burden of proving that she had any private means, and held (the onus not having been apparently discharged) that the purchase was a benami transaction.

Basor v. Leakat—23 C. W. N. 841 P. C.

In Basor v. Leakat—23 C. W. N. 841 P. C. (1919)—a Mahamadan purchased certain property in the name of his wife, who, on his death, granted a mukurari to his heirs, who, in their turn, mortgaged the mukurari. The mortgagee purchased the property in execution of his decree, and sued for possession. Their Lordships, without going into the question of onus, held, upon the evidence, that the wife's purchase was benami. This analysis of the decisions cited in the two recent cases. 25 C. W. N. 544 : s. c. 33 C. L. J. 201 and 28 C. W. N. 131—shew that the decisions of the Privy Council did not support the proposition; and the only decision which directly supports it, is the case, Narayana v. Krishna, I. L. R. 8 Mad. 214, which we have already discussed. It remains only to point out that that was a case of a joint family governed by the Mitakshara law, which, as we all know, unlike the Dayabhaga law, is extremely loath to recognise the personal property of individual members of the joint family. That this was the ground of decision in that case will appear clear from the following remarks of Sankaran Nair, J., in Balamba v. Krishna, 37 Mad. 483 (1913):—

"In the Madras Presidency, at any rate, there is an increasing disposition to make provision for the benefit of a person's wife and children, including daughters as against his joint family, to whom his property would survive at his death, or as against his male heirs." And "accordingly" it was so held in that case. The Calcutta High Court also observed with reference to that case in Dakhina v. Jagadishwar, 2 C. W. N. 197 (1897): "The case . . . went much further in the opposite direction than it is necessary to go . . . (where) there is no question of a joint family," and, held that "there is no presumption of law that a property acquired by a Hindu widow after her husband's death forms part of her husband's estate." It thus appears that their Lordships drew a distinction between a joint and a separated family, and did not fully approve of the opinion of the Madras High Court even though the family was joint and she was no coparcener.

Conclusions.

The conclusions which we reach as the result of the above discussions may be summarised as follows:—

(1) That there is, so far as we are aware, no decision of the Privy Council in support of the broad proposition that "there is no presumption that a property standing in the name of a Hindu female, who is a member of a joint Hindu family, belongs to the joint family, and is not her stridhana property," or, at least those of them cited in 28 C. W. N. case do not support such a proposition.

(2) That according to the previous decisions of the Calcutta High Court, the presumption in such a case is that it belongs to the joint family, and therefore those members of it who are co-owners in respect of the family property, have joint right in it.

(3) That if the person in whose name the property stands be a female and a co-owner in respect of the family property the presumption is as stated in (2) above. If she is not a co-owner, and yet a member of the joint family, in the sense that she lives in the family and is maintained by it, then the presumption is that she is a mere benamdar of the joint family and as such has no right to the property.

(4) That if there is no joint family, the presumption is that she, being the ostensible owner of the property, is its real owner, in other words, that it is her stridhana property.

(5) That the above propositions apply only to a case in Bengal, at least where the parties are governed by the Dayabhaga:

(6) That where the parties are governed by the Mitakshara, the case in 8 Mad. 214 is still the leading authority, according to which there is no presumption that it belongs to the joint family, but there is the contrary presumption that it is her stridhana.

(7) That in this respect there is divergence of views between the Calcutta and the Madras High Courts, and that there is no reason to apply the law laid down in the Madras case to a case in Bengal. That the other High Courts do not go against the Calcutta decisions, nor do they favour the Madras view.

(Concluded.)

LONDON NOTES.

(From our Correspondent.)

The Judicial Committee finished their list last week and reserved judgment in the appeal of the Midnapur Zemindary Co., Ltd. v. Kumar Naresh Narayan Roy (Bengal).

The following criminal petitions were dismissed :—Manzur Husain v. King-Emperor and Mal Singh v. King-Emperor. Mr. Dubé appeared for the applicant in the former petition. In the latter the applicant was represented by Mr. Eastwood. Mr. Kenworthy Brown appeared for the Crown in each case.

A Board has been constituted for the hearing of two Indian appeals which have been placed in a supplementary list for April 1st. At the conclusion of these appeals which are both to be argued ex parte the Court will rise and will probably sit again on May 1st.

CIVIL JUSTICE.

To

The Editor, "Calcutta Weekly Notes."

Sir,

Your critical remarks on the Administration of Civil Justice form illuminating and refreshing reading and encourage me, with a due sense of my own limitations, to pursue the subject a little further.

To start with, it is reasonably expected that something may be gained by simplification of procedure. To use the post interchangeably with, and as supplementary to the ordinary machinery for the service of some of the processes (as is being actually done by Judicial Officers on their own initiative); to link up administratively the Union Board as the outer bureau of the Civil Court for receiving and answering inquiries; to simplify the procedure for the representation of minors by making the appointment of the guardian ad litem follow the service of the usual notices by peon and post, supported, if necessary, by an inquiry of the Union Board; to permit Munsifs and Sub-Judges to appoint their own commissioners of local investigation, and so forth, are among the obvious suggestions on this head. The present long-drawn scheme of process-service for compelling the attendance of witnesses, often availed of or permitted as a means to keep the pot boiling, may be cut down to a summons and a penalty notice by post when our Civil Courts are in a position to observe a stricter time-table than in the present conditions of business they are able to do.

In the next place, improved rules and methods of business may help us to tackle with the heavy seasonal mass institutions more efficiently than now. Your suggestion to set apart one day in the week exclusively for rent suits is good, but I would carry it further by a more thorough-going division and re-adjustment of duties whenever practicable. It is worth considering whether rent files may not with advantage be concentrated in one Court; also, when the strength of the staff permits it, whether an officer may not be appointed, for whole or part time, to discharge the functions of a Registrar, and take in hand the preparatory stage of proceedings in all classes of suits, leaving the rest to work unhampered at the lists of ripe cases according to the prescribed time-tables.

A word or two upon re-adjustment of jurisdictions and regarding the service may come in appropriately here. There is no reason for instance why in such areas at least where more than six years have elapsed since the final publication of the record-of-rights, rent suits up to certain fixed values should not be tried by the summary method, subject to the important qualification that judgments in these suits shall not be res judicata on questions of title to land. It would be advisible to give enlarged general jurisdiction to Munsifs on a graduated scale up to Rs. 5,000 at least, to be balanced by an extension of Small Cause Court powers up to Rs. 500 in the case of Munsifs, and at least Rs. 1,000 in the case of Sub-Judges. The Presidency Small Cause Court has jurisdiction up to Rs. 2,000 and there is no reason why the Provincial Judiciary should not have half as much. The present strength and efficiency of the Sub-Divisional Bars make it inexpedient that all important Civil business should be concentrated at the head-quarters, with all the trouble, expense and delay that it necessarily means to the litigant public. It is not good, moreover, that 80 per cent. of the services should be condemned to a limited range of work for the best part of their lives, to their almost inevitable moral stagnancy, and necessary economic loss to the State. The existing scale of jurisdictions was virtually fixed over sixty years ago, and the price of land having gone up four times, at least, and the value of the rupee having gone down proportionately since then, even to maintain the same scale now for Munsifs, it has got to be quadrupled in terms of its present money value. I know your susceptibilities, sir, on the questions of rights of appeal and summary powers, but, on these points, with the greatest respect, I should beg leave to differ.

The undue partiality for figures in estimating judicial work is another weakness in the present system. The approved principle of appraisement is something like this—25 contested suits, good; 20, fair; 15, not satisfactory. Very easy arithmetic this but it holds the field, because it is so easy. Seldom is an attempt made to get at the facts behind the figures, or take the figures in their proper curves, and in relation to what goes before and after. This means a certain perversion of judicial standards and values. Figures are abstractions, and to be helpful in their concrete applications, not one but several sets of figures have to be used in mutual check, and co-ordination. Besides, I would deprecate the application of any elaborate calculus of judicial work for departmental purposes, even if it were possible to devise one free from all just objection. Nothing is really so little amenable to inquisitional scrutiny of this type, nothing suffers so much by it. When a certain file has been known to afford sufficient occupation for one man year in year out, I would put him in charge of it, and leave him to manage it the best he can, and would not interfere with him so long as he gives public satisfaction at his post, and keeps to the time-tables prescribed by the High Court, irrespective of his out-turns from month to month. It is the High Court (and on the point I should like to lay the greatest stress) which should set the pace of work, and then the Judge, the pleader, and the litigant may be all expected to fall into step together, and the personal equation of the situation will be reduced to a minimum. It is a pity that as the legislature is inclined to trust to the inherent discretion of the Judge the more and more, the cry should be raised in certain quarters for drawing the bonds of departmental surveillance and control all the tighter.

But the main problem after all is how to temper civil justice with the right kind of social and moral seasoning. Our Civil Procedure Code is cast in the mould of the principle (to employ a variant of a well-known philosophical adage) that strife is the father of justice, and in its anxiety to make the conditions of the fight perfectly equal opens the door wide to any extent of litigiousness and pettifogging, and abuse of the processes of Court. The effect of this in a society that used to be ruled mainly, and is still inclined to go, by precept and authority, has been to a considerable extent of a disintegrating and corrosive character: it has greatly weakened some of our fundamental virtues, while bringing some of our latent temperamental weaknesses very much to the surface. Perhaps to begin with this could not be helped. But it is time to apply the needful corrective, by allying the moral and recuperative forces of society more firmly with the Court of law. We have to see that the oath be not treated as a polite formula for concealing the truth, pleadings an art of equivocation and denial, the law-suit a respectable dissipation or fashionable folly and the Court itself a permanent focus of irritation round which the forces of village faction may always rally anew. Your suggestion for improved training in the theory and art of pleadings is good, but I would deprecate the introduction of a highly specialised, and, therefore, expensive agency for that purpose in the moffussil. I think the type of men who are employed as our pleaders' clerks at present contain material out of which, by suitable forms of training and tests as provided by the Bar Council of the future a class of vernacular conveyancers and draftsmen may be recruited good enough to answer all our ordinary needs. But after all it is a matter of detail. The real reform will consist in enlarging the bounds of arbitration, and bend the individual will to the mandate of the social conscience. It is not the place to go very closely into this matter here; it will be presumptuous in me even to try it. Suffice it to say that the evolution of a comprehensive act of arbitration, and its synthesis with the Civil Procedure Code, is one of the most important tasks which faces the legislature of the future. It is not inconceivable that subject to necessary safe-guards and limitations it may be competent to the Court of the future to refer certain cases to arbitration even when all the parties do not agree. An inducement to arbitration may be offered in the shape of a partial remission of the court-fee. It is matter for serious thought (herein again respectfully deferring to your views) how far the existing rights of appeal may not, in a select class of cases (e.g., those relating to custom and usage and rights founded thereon, or arising out of certain kinds of tort), be surrendered with advantage for a trial with assessors preferably chosen from the Bar, whose verdict, subject to all just reservations, will be final on matters of fact. All that and much else in the same line has to be seriously thought over by all who wish well of the country and its administration of civil justice in the future.

With one or two remarks I should close. When Mr. B. Chakraverty in deposing before the Civil Justice Committee said that Munsif and Sub-Judge were in the habit of dawdling away their time in chambers, or Mr. Akhil Chandra Dutta questioned their capacity to take down depositions in English they either failed to take account of the actualities of the situation, or committed the two common error of facile generalisation, which even great minds are not always able to avoid. Nothing would please the service better if Mr. Chakraverty could really secure the, to them all too easy, hours of 11 to 4-30 with half an hour for recess in between. Again Mr. Dutta while he hit a real weakness of the present system, the employment of a foreign medium as the Court language, was undoubtedly mistaken in supposing that the handicap on judicial officers in having to record depositions in English was any greater than the handicap on pleaders—(I mean no offence) to argue in that tongue.

It is not by nagging criticisms like this that the prospects of reform are likely to be advanced. It must not be forgotten that the Provincial Judiciary and the Bar have between them built up on the whole a sound tradition of civil justice—patient, labourious, pains-taking and remarkably pure. Let us beware how by hasty word or impatient judgment, we cripple our mutual usefulness, or in our desire for surface smartness impair that public confidence which makes the Civil Court one of the most trusted departments of the State. Let us all pull together, making allowances for each other's limitations, and the limitations of the situation, so that the future of civil justice in the country may be bright, and yet brighter.

Yours faithfully,
RASBIHARI MOOKERJEE,
Munsif.

NOTES

The Report of the Bar Committee

The Indian Bar Committee, although they have not recommended the abolition of the dual system or the dual agency as asked for by the vakils, have gone a long way to meet what has been with the latter a long-standing grievance. Their recommendations are practically the same as was suggested by us in these columns for the enrolment of vakils as advocates. If their recommendations are given effect to either by legislation or by rules framed by the High Courts, the present disability of the vakil Bar to practise on the Original Side of the High Court would practically disappear. The Committee have made the following specific proposals :—

(1) that vakils of not less than ten years' standing shall be entitled to be admitted at once to practise on the original side;

(2) that vakils of less than five years' standing shall similarly be entitled to be admitted after they have read for one year with an advocate, approved by the Court, practising on the original side. During that year they should be allowed to plead, but not to act, on the appellate side or in the subordinate courts;

(3) that vakils of less than five years' standing shall similarly be entitled to be admitted on the same terms and subject to the same restrictions, but shall in addition pass an examination, to be prescribed by the Court, in commercial law and practice on the original side;

(4) that the rules for the admission of vakils shall provide that a Bachelor of Laws who wishes to practise on the original side of the High Court as well as on the appellate side shall, after passing the examination for the degree of Bachelor of Laws, read for one year with an advocate or attorney, approved by the Court, practising on the original side, and pass an examination, to be prescribed by the Court, in commercial law and the practice on that side. A vakil admitted on these terms should be entitled to practise on the original side in accordance with this scheme;

(5) that the name of a vakil admitted to practise on the original side shall be entered on a special list. A vakil should be entitled at any time to have his name removed from that list, but a name once removed should not be restored to the list;

(6) that as regards practice on the original side, vakils and others entitled to practise on that side shall all be subject to the same rules;

(7) that vakils whose names are on the special list shall be subject to the same restriction as barristers when practising on the appellate side or in the subordinate courts;

(8) that proposals (1) to (3) shall remain in force for seven years from the date when the scheme comes into force, that proposals (4) to (6) shall remain in force for seven years or until they are modified whichever is the longer period, but that proposal (7) shall remain in force for seven years and shall then cease to have effect unless the High Court, if there is no Bar Council, or the Provincial Bar Council with the approval of the High Court otherwise determines.

The Bar is naturally apprehensive that if these proposals materialise, their interests will suffer very largely owing to the number of practitioners on the Original Side increasing suddenly and out of all proportion to the amount of work which is available there. For ourselves we do not believe that a large number of vakil practitioners will avail themselves of the privilege of appearing on the Original Side. A few seniors and juniors among them will, but not many. Vakils having a fairly good practice on the Appellate Side will not consider it safe to give up their privilege to act and plead on the off chance that they may build up a more lucrative practice on the Original Side. Direct contact with the client which the rules of their profession allow will not be sacrificed lightly.

The Bar Committee have recommended that their proposals with regard to vakils should apply equally to attorneys with this difference that no attorney should be required to pass a further examination, and, that those of less than ten years' standing should be required, instead of reading with an advocate, to abstain from acting in any Court for one year. We do not think that the Committee were well-advised in dropping the condition as to reading with an advocate in the case of attorneys of less than ten years' standing. In our opinion, an attorney who wants to be an advocate should, beside abstaining from acting in Court for one year, give up his interest in his firm and read for one year with an advocate. Unless he gives up his interest in his firm, mere abstention from acting in Court will not prevent him from carrying on in the office the work of an attorney during the period of his probation.

The Bar Committee have decided to recommend that on the Original Side an advocate should have the option of appearing and pleading only (in which case he would do so on the instructions of an attorney) or of appearing, pleading and acting in the same manner as vakils now do, but that he should not be entitled to do both. They have proposed accordingly that if any advocate wishes to act on the Original Side, he should give an undertaking not to appear and plead on the instructions of an attorney. We think that this proposal is equitable and will go a long way to help the junior barrister, provided he is given the liberty to give up acting and to resume his original right of appearing and pleading on the instructions of an attorney. Resumption of the original status has been recommended in the case of vakils and attorneys and there is no reason why it should be denied to barristers.

THE EGYPTIAN CONSTITUTION.

(a) The old order of things.

Nominally a dependent on Turkey, between 1879 and 1883 Egypt was under the dual control of France and Great Britain. In the latter year, however, Great Britain intervened after Arabi Pasha's rebellion, and since then practically governed the country until 1923. The British occupation, at first regarded as temporary, by force of circumstances and through Egypt's misfortune, became firmly established, and the predominant position of Great Britain was formally recognised by France by the Anglo-French Agreement of the 8th of April 1904. The French, German and other Governments also asserted to very considerable modifications in the international arrangements established in Egypt for the protection of foreign land-holders, the modifications being embodied in a Khedivial Decree annexed to the agreement. The British Government in its turn gave an assurance to those Powers that their commerce with Egypt should enjoy most-favoured-nation treatment for thirty years.

There was a British Agent at Cairo, who had a seat in the Council of Ministers, in which, with the Khedive rested the real legislative authority. There were, however, provincial councils for local affairs. In July 1913 the previously existing General Assembly and Legislative Council were amalgamated into one, termed the Legislative Assembly. This body consisted of 89 members, of whom 66 were elected and the rest nominated by the Khedive on the advice of the British Agent. The whole system of representation was at the same time improved by the introduction of elections in two degrees, with one elector-delegate for every 50 inhabitants. In the event of a minimum representation not being secured at the elections, an Organic Law required the Government to secure such representation. The Legislative Assembly was given a certain power of initiative which was not possessed by its predecessors, but certain matters were reserved from the Assembly, such as the service of the Civil List, and all questions concerning foreign Powers and the relations of Egypt with them.

The judicial system was somewhat complex, the Consular Courts trying cases of crime brought against foreigners, and civil cases between foreigners of the same nationality, while the native Egyptian Courts were occupied with civil actions between Egyptians and crimes by them. There were also Courts of religious law for Mahomedans. Mixed tribunals which were instituted in 1875, dealt with civil actions between persons of different nationalities, or between Egyptians and foreigners, and to some extent with criminal offences of foreigners. They were set up for a period of five years and renewed periodically for periods of five years. The chief religion is that of Islam, Moslems numbering over 10,000,000, but there are about 8,00,000 Christians, of whom over 7,00,000 are Copts with the Patriarch of Alexandria at their head. In 1917 about 7 per cent. of the population over 7 years of age could read and write; the remainder were illiterate, though progress was being steadily made. In 1906 the Supreme Council of Education was reconstituted and a department of Agriculture and Technical Education established, and in 1910 local education, apart from the many Government Coptic and Moslem schools that there were, was handed over to the Provincial Councils.

(b) The new order of things.

From the old to the new order of things which was promulgated by a royal rescript on the 19th of April 1923 as the constitution for the "kingdom" of Egypt and establishing a constitutional monarchy therein has never been witnessed in the history of any country except those which have passed through the catastrophe and disaster of a revolution. The organic law of Egypt of 1883 was modified by several subsequent enactments, the most important of which was that of 1913 which brought into being a new Legislative Council with powers wider than the previous legislature ever possessed. This Council held its first session in 1914. The great European war following close upon its heels prevented it from becoming an effective body and in fact from holding any further sessions. Negotiations for the framing of a reformed constitution were kept up ever since and about the time of the famous announcement of Mr. Montagu in 1917 regarding Indian Reforms the Egyptian demand as voiced by the greatest Egyptian of the day, Zaglul Pasha, for freedom and independence grew in volume, firmness and resoluteness.

(c) The Rights of Man.

By the first clause of the instrument of the constitution Egypt is declared to be a Sovereign State, free and independent. Its sovereignty is recognised to be indivisible and inalienable and its Government to be a hereditary monarchy with representative institutions. The most important of the clauses, however, in the instrument of the constitution is that which declares the Rights of Man, rights of the Egyptian people. It lays down that "nobody may be arrested or put in prison, except in accordance with the prescriptions of the law, and that domicile is inviolable, except that a search may be carried out in the cases prescribed by law, that correspondence is secret, except in cases prescribed by law, that press is free within the limits traced by the law of the land, that preventive censorship is forbidden, that right of teaching is free, provided that the teaching is not contrary to public order, and that the right of association is unfettered subject to the control of the ordinary law of the country." It must not be supposed that there are any special laws for the control of these fundamental Rights of Man. The constitution further provides that all Egyptians are to be regarded equal in the eyes of law and that they shall enjoy civil and political rights irrespective of race, language or religion. To public functions of the kingdom, Egyptian nationals alone are admitted, foreigners being taken in only in exceptional cases and on sufferance. It may be of interest to us here to know that the number of foreigners in the service of the Egyptian Administration, notwithstanding the fact that millions of European monies are invested on the soil and the industries of the kingdom, is being rapidly reduced with a general provision under the constitution enabling all foreign officials who desire to retire from the service, to do so on special terms of compensation. Advantage no doubt has been taken of this provision by a small minority of foreign officials in Egypt mostly by those who have nearly earned their pension, even though the amenities of official life are not half as agreeable as they are in India.

(d) The Petition of Right.

All Egyptians and citizens of the Kingdom have an inherent right to petition public authorities in the case of expulsion from Egyptian territory or of imposition of a penalty of general confiscation of property, or interference with the liberty of one's conscience which is held absolute. One of the cardinal principles of the constitution is the provision for compulsory elementary education for children of both sexes. It is to be free in all public "muktabs" or infant schools.

(e) The source of Governmental authority.

There is a special chapter (Chap. 3) in the Egyptian constitution which deals with the distribution of the powers of the State. It lays down as a fixed principle that all powers of the State emanate from the nation and eventually leads the sovereign authority into the hands of the king who must act with and not apart from the people, a principle held by jurists all over the world to be the fundamental basis of constitutional monarchy. The conversion of Egypt from absolute to constitutional monarchy is the latest example in political science of how constitutions shape themselves when made, not granted!

(f) The Legislative Power.

The Legislative power of the Kingdom is vested in the king acting with the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies, exception being made in the case of emergent legislation authorised by the king by Decree during an interregnum between two sessions of Parliament so that immediately upon the meeting of the next session of Parliament, and in such a case it has been enjoined that an extraordinary session shall immediately be convoked, the legislation by decree shall be submitted for approval. If approved it finds its place upon the Statute Book, if rejected it stands spent-out and ceases to have the force of law.

(g) The Executive Power.

King Fuad is recognised to be the supreme head of the State. It is in the name of the king that all laws of the realm, which must, to have their force, be sanctioned by him, are promulgated. There is a power of veto residing in the king but it is restricted to such narrow limits that it is surprising to know that he is powerless for a Bill voted by Parliament but not approved by him may upon his request within one month be re-examined by the legislature and passed again by a majority of two-thirds in each Chamber. It then acquires the right to be recognised as law and must be promulgated. Should it fail to obtain the requisite majority it may be brought up again in a subsequent session of Parliament when the normal rule of the simple majority will be sufficient for its acceptance by the king who otherwise exercises all executive powers together with the Council of Ministers.

(h) The King.

When so advised by his Ministers the king may dissolve the Chamber of Deputies or the lower Chamber and may also adjourn not beyond a month a session of Parliament. A repetition of adjournment of Parliament in the same session is not permissible without the consent of both Chambers. An extraordinary session of Parliament under circumstances such as we have seen before or when necessity has arisen for the declaration of martial law or as the French call it etat de siege, or when an absolute majority of either Chamber requires him by vote to call it, is convoked by the king who as in every other monarchy is the fountain head of all titles and ranks. That is not all. The king is responsible for the organisation of all public services. A point of great constitutional importance is to be noted here and that is that as the king has got the power to declare martial law when necessary it is incumbent upon him to immediately bring such declaration to the notice of Parliament for them to maintain or cancel it even if he should have to convene an extraordinary session of it for such purpose.

Of the military forces of the Kingdom the king is the supreme commander. Except an offensive war which can neither be commenced nor carried on by him without the consent of Parliament all wars are begun, as peace terminated and treaties concluded, by him but not so as to enter into any alliance offensive or defensive, or into preferential commercial relations or into such a pact as might involve the modification of the territory of the State or a devolution of its sovereign rights, or a modification of a charge on the public treasury, or any infringement of public or private rights of Egyptian citizens. All these lie exclusively within the sphere of activity of Parliament.

The Ministers through whom the king exercises his powers are appointed and dismissed by him. Though the throne of Egypt is secured to the heirs in the dynasty of Mahomed Ali, the succession to it is regulated by a rescript of April 1922 and by a procedure which must receive the sanction of Parliament. Into its details we need not enter beyond mentioning the fact that failure on the part of a successor to the throne to take the constitutional oath involves a forfeiture thereof and entitles the Ministers as a Council to exercise the constitutional powers vested in the king.

(i) The Ministers.

At the head of the administrative services placed the Council of Ministers from which a foreigners and members of the royal famil are excluded. The Council which is a cabin acts on the principle of joint responsibility of Ministers some one or other of them alon with their President must be held accountabl for every act of the king in connection with affairs of State. Unlike any other country the world the Egyptian Ministers may or may not be in either Chamber of Parliament, an if they are not their right of free access either Chamber and to address it wheneve they deem it necessary is fully recognised the constitution. A vote of want of confiden in the Ministry can be moved in the low Chamber only which alone by a majority two-thirds may decide to impeach a minister f any offence committed in the exercise of l functions. An alternative mode of bringi a minister accused of mal-administration mal-practice to book, is prescribed by requi ing him to take his trial, after the Fren fashion, before a special Court of Justice com posed of 16 members—8 including the Pres dent being judges of the highest native Cou and 8 senators drawn by lot—who must divided in the proportion of not less than 3 to 1 for a conviction under the Penal Code of Egypt.

(j) The Parliament.

The Parliament is composed of two Chambers. one upper, being the Senate, and the lower, called the Chamber of Deputies.

The Senate :—The Senate is composed of elected and nominated members in the proportion of three-fifths and two-fifths respectively. The elected members are returned from among ministers, diplomatic representatives, Presidents and members of the Court of Appeal or Tribunal of equal rank, general attorneys of the State, heads of the order of Advocates, officials of the rank of Director General or higher, whether active or retired, the higher ranks of the Moslem Ulema, ex-Deputies of Parliament, who have been members of two legislatures, owners of property paying an annual tax of £ E 150 or persons having an annual income of not less than £ E 1,500 and concerned in financial, commercial or industrial enterprises or following one of the liberal callings, by the three Mudirias or provinces or Governorates of Alexandria, Cairo, and the Canal Zone on the basis of a member to every 1,80,000 inhabitants or a fraction thereof representing not less than half that number. A senator holds office for ten years, half their number being renewed every five years. The President of the Senate is nominated by the King but the Vice-Presidents are elected by the members for a term of two years only.

The Chamber of Deputies :—Entirely an elected Chamber on an universal male suffrage basis; the Chamber of Deputies is the more important of the two Houses of Parliament. Members are returned by the three Governorates, each 60,000 inhabitants or a fraction of their number representing not less than half having the right to return one Deputy who must be at least thirty years old and is entitled to hold office for five years irrespective of the mandate of his electors. The Chamber elects its own President and Vice-Presidents. It is the duty of the King to summon the meeting of Parliament in the month of November each year for an ordinary session extending over at least six months. In default the Parliament, the two Chambers of which must sit simultaneously whether in ordinary or extraordinary session, may meet of its own right. The usual procedure with which we are familiar in India for the consideration and submission of a Bill obtains under the Egyptian constitution but the quorum for the consideration of a resolution in either Chamber is pretty high. It is half the total number of members of the Chamber concerned.

As in India so in Egypt when the two Chambers have to sit together, the presidency of the Congress—a joint session is so called—belongs to the President of the Senate, and there must be an absolute majority of each Chamber in order that any resolution may be passed.

(k) The Judiciary.

The general principle that Judges of all grades are independent of all authority in the State and are not subject in the administration of justice to any authority other than the law of the land is firmly and clearly established.

(l) Local Government.

The constitution of Municipal and Provincial Councils is almost on a par with Indian conditions under which certain towns and villages have municipalities or unions of their own, and declared by law to be juristic persons. Their organisation and functions are determined by special laws embracing certain principles, but always under the control of the Government.

(m) Finance.

The constitution prescribes that no tax which has been imposed by law can be modified or suppressed except as provided by law nor can any fresh financial liability be incurred without the consent of Parliament. But the most important restriction which our legislators will not be a day too soon to take up in India is that which is imposed upon all concessions having for its object the exploitation of the natural resources of the country, or services of public utility or monopolies. They cannot be accorded otherwise than by special law for a limited time in the form of private legislation which under the constitution has, in the first place, to be placed before a committee having authority to decide whether it shall be submitted to the Chamber at all.

(n) General.

Islam is the State religion and Arabic the official language. Subject to international agreements conducive to social order extradition of political refugees is prohibited. Nothing can be done under the constitution which might affect the obligations of Egypt towards foreign States or the rights which foreigners have acquired in Egypt by virtue of laws, treaties or established practice. The king is without any dispensing power. The power to suspend the constitution may be taken advantage of under one pretext only, namely, in time of war or of a "State of Siege." It is, however, for a temporary period. And a further safeguard against any abuse of the suspending power is that under no pretext whatsoever, can the meeting of Parliament, as laid down in the constitution, be interrupted. Save the fundamental principles which have been guaranteed by the constitution, such as the representative or parliamentary character of the Government, the order of succession to the throne, personal liberty and equality, all other items in the constitution is liable to revision on the motion or initiative of either the King or the Chambers whose decision in a meeting assembled as the Congress is not of any force unless backed by a two-thirds majority of each House present in the proportion of two-thirds of its total strength.

The constitution of which the above is but a bare outline came into full force on the 1st of January last. Under it Egypt is subject to complete parliamentary Government and it is for the Egyptian people now to prove, by the manner in which it will assure the application of the constitution, that it is truly fitted to incur the high responsibilities which she has assumed and was always willing and eager to assume.

Following this, it may be of interest to the readers of this journal to know something of the Soviet Constitution, a short account of which I propose to place before them shortly.

LONDON NOTES.

(From our Correspondent.)

The Judicial Committee have now finished off their supplemental list and do not expect to sit for the hearing of Indian appeals again until May 2nd.

On the 3rd April Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. B. Dubé obtained special leave to appeal from a judgment of the High Court in Bhupendra Narain Singh v. Nurpat Singh. The question involved is whether after the resumption of chaukidari chakran lands a zemindar is entitled to share in the profits arising out of unearned increment on the part of the putnidar by virtue of the resumption proceedings.

Mr. B. Dubé appeared ex parte in an appeal from Allahabad, Lal Singh v. Raghunath Singh. This was a suit to enforce a mortgage. After a short argument, the Board adjourned it for the production of further documents.

April 7th and 8th.—An appeal from the High Court of Bengal by the Imperial Tobacco Co., India, Ltd. v. Bannon was heard on the 7th and 8th April.

Lord Phillimore presided and the following members were also sitting:—Lords Blanesburgh and Darling, Sir J. Edge and Mr. Ameer Ali. The Appellants were endeavouring to prevent the Defendant from selling a quantity of Wills's "gold flake" cigarettes which he had purchased from the Canteen Board at the conclusion of the war. They contended that the public who purchased the cigarettes would be under the impression that they were imported by the Appellants.

Messrs. Clauson, K. C., Mangham, K. C., Kerly, Sebastian and Wood appeared for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Hyam for the Respondent.

Their Lordships reserved judgment.

The following judgments were delivered and the appeals dismissed:—

Kodoth Ambu Nair v. Secretary of State.

Midnapur Zemindary Co. v. Naresh Narayan Roy.

Correspondence.

To

The Editor, "Calcutta Weekly Notes."

Sir,

With reference to the correspondence of Mr. Hemendra Nath Dutt in your issue No. 14 of 18th February 1924, I beg to make the following remarks for the consideration of the numerous readers of your journal.

Sec. 144 of the new Code of Civil Procedure seems to me to refer to execution of an appellate decree when a question of benefit by way of restitution or otherwise arises where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed by the Appellate Court; and the application under sec. 144 starts an execution proceeding and should be registered as an execution and not as a miscellaneous case. In order to appreciate this point it is profitable to advert to the history of the section. Sec. 583 (Act XIV of 1882) corresponding to the present section was inserted in Chap. XLI of the old Code dealing with appeals from original decrees and described in the marginal short note as 'execution of decree of Appellate Court.' In the present Code it could not be retained in the same order inasmuch as appeals are further hearing of the suits and are not matters of execution. But why it is not relegated to Part II, Or. 21 of the new Code dealing with execution, it is not easy to explain. It might come in company with sec. 51 of the new Code (Act V of 1908) dealing with procedure in execution and the powers of Court to enforce execution. Perhaps it was placed in Part XI of the new Code as it had to provide for special modes of execution of appellate decrees where the special circumstances contemplated in sec. 144 had intervened between the passing of the original and of the appellate decrees. This will be clear from the next point that I shall discuss. • • •

The chief object of the legislature is the same both in the old and the new sections, viz., to give the party entitled the benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in an appeal. The difference or the main alteration lies in the fact that, whereas the enabling part of the old section enacts that "such Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal according to the rules prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits" in the new, it is provided : "The Court shall cause such restitution to be made as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed ;" and the section concludes with some specific modes of relief. And this alteration is surely an improvement upon the old section as it did not indicate how the restitution should have been made.

Moreover, if proceedings under sec. 144 be taken as execution proceedings, any question arising between the parties relating to the execution would attract the operation of sec. 47, C. P. C. and the decisions thereon may be tested through the Appellate Courts.

I am strengthened in my opinion by a recent decision of Sir Dawson-Miller, Kt., C. J., Patna High Court reported in [1924 Pat.]133, in which it was held that as regards limitation applications under sec. 144 are governed by Art. 182, Sch. I (Act IX of 1908) which prescribes the period of limitation for the execution of a decree or order of a Civil Court. It is also held by his Lordship that the application under sec. 144 is in substance an application in execution.

Yours truly,
LALIT MOHAN INDRA, B.L.,
Pleader.

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before NEWBOULD AND B. B. GHOSE, JJ. CIVIL REVISION NOS. 886—888 OF 1923—BARADA PRASAD ROY CHOWDHURY, Objector, Petitioner v. FOIJUDDI HALDAR and others, Applicants, Opposite Party. The 1st April 1924.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), sec. 170, cl. (3)—Transferee of whole or part of non-transferable occupancy holding, if has an interest voidable on the sale and if entitled to deposit.

The Petitioner landlord obtained rent decrees against his recorded tenants in respect of non-transferable occupancy holdings and in execution of those decrees advertised the holdings for sale. The Opposite Parties who claimed to have purchased parts of the holdings from the raiyats and who were not recognised by the Petitioner landlord applied to deposit the decretal amounts in Court under sec. 170 cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The Opposite Party in Rule No. 886 of 1923 stated in his application before the Munsif that the raiyats of the Petitioner sold 17 bighas and odd of the holding to one Pitambar Baur, and sold the rest of the holding, 10 bighas and odd to Nanda Kumar Baur who sold his 10 bighas and odd to the Opposite Party, and that the raiyats were no longer in possession. In the other two Rules 887 and 888 the Opposite Parties claimed to be part transferees from the raiyats.

The Petitioner objected to the deposits. The Munsif of Diamond Harbour, by his orders dated the 13th June 1923, allowed the deposits. Against these orders the landlord Petitioner obtained these three Rules. It was contended on his behalf that the interests of the Opposite Parties, either as transferees of the whole or part of non-transferable occupancy holdings were not voidable on the sale but would pass by the sale of the holdings in execution of the decrees against the raiyats, and as such they were not entitled to make the deposits under sec. 170 cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act:

Held—That the Opposite parties were not entitled to make the deposits under sec. 170 cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and the orders of the Munsif allowing the deposits were set aside: The interest of an unrecognised transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding passes by the sale and is not voidable on the sale.

Nalin Behari v. Fulmani, 16 C. W. N. 421; Mahmmad Ismail v. Satyesh Chandra, 26 C. W. N. 170 (notes); Kumar Narendranath Mitter v. Abdul Molla, 27 C. W. N. 175 (notes) followed.

Tarak Das v. Haris Chandra, 17 C. W. N. 163; Ahmadullah v. Hakaru Sahu, 20 C. W. N. 39 referred to and not followed.

Their Lordships inter alia, held as follows: "When the transferee of a non-transferable occupancy holding has not been recognised by the landlord a decree obtained against the tenant transferror would be binding on the unrecognised transferee, and in execution of the decree the interest of the transferee would also pass along with the interest of the transferror and the auction-purchaser gets the interest of both the persons, the transferror and the transferee, who were interested in the holding. It can therefore hardly be said that the interest of the transferee is one which is voidable on the sale and therefore upon the terms of the section it would appear that the transferees are not entitled to make the deposit under sec. 170, cl. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

We are asked on behalf of the Opposite Party having regard to the conflict of decisions that this question should be referred to a Full Bench. But the view we now take has been taken generally in a number of cases and these cases being more recent than the case in 17 C. W. N. 163 we do not think necessary to make any reference to a Full Bench.

Furthermore both of us agree with the reasoning in the decision of one of us reported in 27 C. W. N. 175 (notes) mentioned above. The case in 20 C. W. N. 39 merely follows the decision in 17 C. W. N."

Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur and Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen for the Petitioner.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before M. N. MUKERJI. J. CIVIL REV. No. 385 OF 1923. JATINDRA CHANDRA CHOUDHURI, Decree-holder, Petitioner v. THE RANGPUR BANK, LTD., and another, Opposite Party. The 26th March 1924.

Mortgage of movable without delivery of possession, if legal.

The Petitioner obtained a Small Cause Court decree against the Rangpur Tobacco Company, Ltd. and in execution thereof attached some movable properties. By a deed of mortgage the judgment-debtor the above Tobacco Company had, long before the execution of the decree, mortgaged all its movable and immovable properties to the Rangpur Bank, Ltd. The Bank preferred a claim under sec. 73, cl. (b) of the Civil Procedure Code. This claim was objected to by the decree-holder on the ground that the movables which were in the possession of the judgment-debtor could not be mortgaged as no possession was delivered to the mortgagee the Bank. This objection was overruled by the execution Court:

Held—That having regard to the preamble of the Contract Act and the Transfer of Property Act a mortgage of moveables without delivery of possession is legal (9 C. W. N. 14: 22 C. W. N. 758; 4 B. L. R. 577; 8 Bom. L. R. 344 referred to).

[illegible] Weekly [illegible]

Vol. [illegible] MONDAY, MAY 12, [illegible] [illegible]

The Report of the Bar Committee.

The Bar Committee have been well-advised in dropping the idea of an All-India Bar Council. The proposal for the establishment of an Indian Bar was first made by Lord Haldane giving evidence before Lord Lytton's Committee in July 1921, and was definitely embodied by Mr. Iswar Saran in a resolution which he moved that year in the Legislative Assembly recommending "legislation with a view to create an Indian Bar so as to remove all distinctions enforced by statute or by practice between barristers and vakils." The idea of an Indian Bar or of an All-India Bar Council is attractive but impracticable as the Bar Committee finds. The two chief obstacles in the formation and proper working of such a body are, first: a central body would necessarily have inadequate knowledge of local conditions and a provincial Bar is not likely to submit readily to being governed by a body which would necessarily contain a majority of members insufficiently acquainted with its special needs and difficulties. And secondly, busy practitioners could not be expected to attend frequent meetings of an All-India Bar Council at places far distant from their homes. An All-India Bar Council if set up will in course of time get into the hands of a limited number of men who may use their position irresponsibly.

The Bar Committee have proposed that there should be a Bar Council in every province, and that its constitution should be as follows. The number of members should be limited to fifteen of whom four should be nominated by the High Court of the Province. The remaining eleven should be selected by the advocates of the High Court. It is left to the High Courts of Calcutta and Bombay to determine how many of the eleven should be advocates entitled to practise on the Original Side. Of the eleven to be elected by advocates, the Committee have recommended that six should be advocates of ten years' standing. As regards the powers of the Bar Council, the Committee's recommendation is that it should have power to make rules subject to the approval of the High Court in respect of the following matters.—

(a) The qualifications, admission and certificates of proper persons to be advocates of the High Court.

(b) The powers and duties of advocates.

(c) The conduct of any examination which may be prescribed by it and the fees to be paid for appearing at the same.

(d) Legal education, including the delivery of lectures to students and the fees chargeable therefor.

(e) Matters relating to the discipline and professional conduct of advocates.

(f) Procedure and practice in cases falling within the disciplinary jurisdiction of the Council.

(g) The method of holding elections of members of the Council and all matters incidental thereto.

(h) The meetings of the Council, the quorum necessary for the transaction of business, the election of a President or other officer and the appointment of committees for special purposes.

(i) The period for which a Council, after the first Council, should hold office and the filling of vacancies occurring between elections.

(j) The terms on which advocates of another High Court may be permitted to appear occasionally in the High Court to which the Council is attached and

(k) any other matter prescribed by the High Court.

The Council of Legal Education in England is the sole authority in regard to all matters concerning the admission of Barristers, their qualifications as well as the examinations they have to pass. They prescribe the course of instruction to be followed by students reading for the Bar, and [illegible] University degree is no passport [illegible] Here the state of things is [illegible] degree with some other [illegible] lutely essential. The Bar [illegible] proposed any alteration [illegible] that they have suggested that the Bar Council may make some arrangement "to supplement the education the students receive at the Universities by the provision of practical training or lectures on the procedure of the Courts and the duties of members of the legal profession." In our opinion, the ideal which the Bar Council should have in view is its complete independence in matters relating to the admission of men to the Bar and the examinations they have to pass. The University should have nothing to do with the profession. Under the present arrangement the work of the University materially suffers because of the arrangements it has to make to meet the needs of those who intend to join the legal profession.

Disciplinary powers of a limited character have been proposed to be given to the Bar Council over advocates. The Committee have recommended that the Bar Council should have power either of its own motion or on complaint or on reference by the High Court to inquire into all matters of the kind referred to in secs. 12 and 13 of the Legal Practitioners Act, breaches of rules and other improper conduct in which an advocate is concerned, and make a report to the High Court with a recommendation as to what action should be taken by the Court. The existing disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Court is maintained but the Court will be bound, before taking disciplinary action against an advocate, except in regard to contempt of Court and the like, to refer the case to the Bar Council for enquiry and report. For ourselves we should like to see the existing disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Courts taken away and vested in the Bar Councils. But we have our doubts whether a provincial Bar Council will be found strong enough to exercise their disciplinary jurisdiction in cases where it ought to be. So far as our experience goes the existing Bar Associations have not shown much keenness in exercising their influence in matters where it ought to be, as for example, touting by members of the professions. There are no grounds for hoping that the Bar Associations when converted into Bar Councils will prove more jealous of the etiquette of the profession or of its integrity than they have hitherto been. We know that during recent years there have been a few cases where the action taken by some High Courts against certain members of the profession under the disciplinary jurisdiction has not given satisfaction to the public and the profession and may have been prompted by considerations of an extra-judicial character. But so long as the members of the profession remain unmindful of the duties they owe to it, individually and collectively, so long, we are afraid, the existing disciplinary jurisdiction of the High Courts will have to continue.

ADMINISTRATIVE WORK BY JUDICIAL OFFICERS.

To

The Editor, "Calcutta Weekly Notes."

Dear Sir,

Your editorial notes of the 31st March and 14th April 1924, ably point out the defects of the present system of allowing the return of judicial work of the subordinate judiciary of a district to pass through the District Judge's Sheristadar. There is also another serious drawback of this system to which I beg to draw the attention of the Civil Justice Committee through your columns. It is the interference by the District Judge's Sheristadar with the administrative work of the subordinate judiciary.

It had been pointed out before the Committee already that the perversity and inefficiency of ministerial officers have something to do with the delay in judicial proceedings. The situation is rendered more complicated by the fact that judicial officers under whom they serve have to write to the District Judge for punishment of their guilty subordinates. These letters are put up before the District Judge by his Sheristadar, the chief ministerial officer of the district. This officer even though he is honest and competent, has a natural sympathy for the amlah reported against, and instead of being an independent assistant of the District Judge in the performance of his functions, he acts in reality as the amlah's advocate in an ex parte hearing so to say. It thus not unoften happens that a clerk whom a Munsif reports against for punishment is rewarded with a promotion, through influence at headquarters. A concrete example may be cited from Howrah. A judicial officer whose official life was simply made miserable by the notorious insubordination and neglect of duty of one of his subordinates, requested the District Judge to suspend him but instead of being punished the man was transferred to a lucrative post in a permanent Court, and it was after writing a strong demi-official letter personally to the District Judge that the Munsif could get the amlah suspended.

Another instance may be added. Considerable delay and difficulty occur in those cases where local investigation Commissioners have to be appointed, for in such cases the appointment is made by the District Judge. Suggestions have already been made, I believe, to empower local Courts to appoint Commissioners direct in such cases, as they can use their choice in appointing a person who is able, prompt and ready to do the work expeditiously, and the time and labour spent in writing to the District Judge, who has no personal knowledge about the Commissioner, for such appointment and the consequent employment of a man who is perhaps not ready to work promptly, can be avoided. The District Judge of Hooghly (which includes Howrah) has on the other hand lately issued a Circular directing the appointment of Partition Commissioners, which had been hitherto done locally, through him. The law does not provide for this and besides causing waste of time, labour and additional expense, it helps the growth of favouritism in the giving away of such commissions. The District Judge himself cannot be reasonably expected to spend his time and energy in scrutinising such matters and the duty must necessarily fall upon his Sheristadar with its consequent evils. The Bar has strongly protested against this innovation.

As similar drawbacks are present in almost every district it is necessary to make a general suggestion for remedying the defect. The best course seems to be, as suggested by you, that the administrative work of the district instead of coming to the District Judge through his Sheristadar, should in future be dealt with by a senior Sub-Judge and only important matters be put up before the District Judge. This officer may be regarded somewhat like the personal Assistant to the Divisional Commissioner, and the time devoted by such officer for such work may be duly noted in his diary for consideration at the time of estimating his general outturn of work. This will not only help better administration of the district but will give a better tone to it and at the same time bring the ministerial officers under stricter discipline and control.

Yours truly,

KHAGENDRA NATH GANGULY,

Vakil, M. L. C.,

Hony. Secretary, Bar Association, Howrah.

COMMITTING MAGISTRATE'S POWERS.

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

As the sufficient grounds for committing to Sessions Court are not, in any way, defined in Criminal Procedure Code, dispute often arises about the power of a Magistrate in cases triable by the Sessions Court. The primâ facie case that warrants a committal is defined in English Law as one "that is sufficient to put the party on his trial for an indictable offence." Vide Stat. 11 and 12 Vic., Ch. 42, sec. 25.

Under the Criminal Procedure Code, it is, however, clear that the enquiring Magistrate is not a mere automaton or a machine just recording the evidence and then making a bundle of papers and sending them up to the Sessions Court holding that the cognizance of the case for actual trial belongs to the Sessions Court. That the Magistrate should exercise his judicial mind and should weigh evidence seems to be clear from secs. 209, 210 and 213 of Criminal Procedure Code. The true principle appears to be expressed in the English statute mentioned above. While nobody disputes that the cognizance of the case for actual trial belongs to the Sessions Court and that no Magistrate can supersede the power of the Court of Sessions, the Magistrate should at the same time see whether in a case there is enough evidence to put a party on his trial following the English principle stated above. Thus when credible witnesses make statements which, if believed, would not sustain a conviction the Magistrate must discharge the accused. As laid down in 5 All. 161, In the matter of Lachman v. Juala and others, "this provision of law is calculated on the one hand, to save the subjects from prolonged anxiety of undergoing trials for offences not brought home to them; and, on the other hand, to save the time of Court of Sessions from being wasted over cases in which the charge is obviously not supported by such evidence as would justify a conviction." Now under secs. 209 and 210, Criminal Procedure Code, a Magistrate is to commit or not as there are or are not in his opinion sufficient grounds for committing. The wholesome provision of enquiry is with a view to find out whether there is at all any necessity for sending up the case to the Sessions Court and which necessity must be found out by "taking all such evidence as may be produced in support of pr[illegible]tion." Vide 208, Cr. P. Code. For the [illegible] legitimate object of a prosecution is to secure not a conviction but that justice be done and the prosecutor is not therefore free to choose how much evidence he will bring before the Court and he is bound to produce all the evidence bearing on the charge and to call anybody and everybody able to give important information by reason of their connection with the transactions. This has been clearly laid down in 10 Cal. 1070, 14 Cal. 245 and F. B. 16 All. 84. As laid down in Rashbeharilal v. Emperor, 12 C. W. N., it is not incompetent to a Magistrate holding a preliminary enquiry into Sessions cases to examine the credibility of evidence adduced in the course of enquiry and such Magistrate should not commit the accused for trial in the Sessions Court if he be of opinion that notwithstanding direct evidence adduced against the accused, the prosecution case is improbable and evidence is unreliable. It has now been settled law that a Magistrate holding a preliminary enquiry would not exceed his jurisdiction if he examines the testimony of witnesses adduced before him in the course of enquiry and it is only by such examination that a Magistrate can ascertain in every case whether there are sufficient grounds for committing or not.

Yours truly,
BAIDYANATH MUKHERJI, M.A., B.L.,
Pleader, Siliguri.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before NEWBOULD AND B. B. GHOSE, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER No. 341 OF 1922. KHAJEH SALAUDDIN and another, (Judgment-debtors), Appellants v. MUSSAMMAT AFZUL BEGUM and another, (Decree-holder and Judgment-debtor), Respondents. Heard 9th and 10th April 1924. Judgment 10th April 1924.

Limitation Act, Art. 183—Order transmitting decree for execution, if "revivor" of decree—Guardian appointed in suit, if remains guardian for execution.

Johura Begum obtained a decree for her dower money against her two minor children and her minor step-son in the Original Side on 24th February 1909. Upon application for transmission of the decree for execution by the Respondent, Afzul Begum, assignee of the decree, the Master made an order on 17th May 1920 that the certified copy of the decree and a certificate of non-satisfaction, signed by a Judge, be transmitted to the Court of the District Judge of Dacca for execution. The latter transferred the same to the 1st Court of the Sub-Judge, Dacca, for execution.

Application for execution was then made on 2nd December 1921 and the judgment-debtors were described in it as represented by Babu Anil Nath Basu, Solicitor, High Court, who was appointed the minor's guardian ad litem in the original suit in which the decree sought to be executed was passed. In this execution case the judgment-debtors' money in the hands of Mr. H. C. F. Myer was attached; upon Mr. Myer's objection to execution under secs. 47 and 151, C. P. Code, the learned Subordinate Judge decided that Mr. Myer had no locus standi under sec. 47 as the existing guardian ad litem had not been removed or retired under Or. 32, r. 11. But still he went into the merits of the case and decided the issue of limitation against him.

Held—That the guardian ad litem appointed in the original suit does not continue as such without a fresh appointment during the execution proceedings.

Kinsman v. Kinsman, [1831] I. R. & M. 622 referred to and followed.

Sec. 51 of Act IX of 1879, B. C., referred to.

That the order made by Master, Original Side on 17th May 1920 for transmission of decree for execution did not operate as a revivor under Art. 183., Sch. I of the Limitation Act (IX of 1908).

Chatterpat Singh v. Rai Bahadur Saitu Sumarilal [1916] 20 C. W. N. 889: [illegible] C. 903; 23 C. L. J. 645 (F. B.) followed and referred to.

Mr. B. L. Mitter and Babu S. N. Guha for the Appellants.

Babu Probodh Chunder Das for the Respondents.

NOTES

The late Sir Courtenay Peregrine Ilbert.

Sir Courtenay Peregrine Ilbert's death, which took place on the 14th instant, will recall to many minds the great unrest and agitation which followed the introduction of the Bill associated with his name. It was during the viceroyalty of Lord Ripon who, in many respects, was much in advance of his times. The noble Lord conceived the idea of racial equality between Indians and Europeans, and, under his inspiration, Sir Courtenay introduced a Bill in the Council in 1883, one of the provisions of which enabled an Indian Magistrate to try a European British subject. The European community strongly resented the measure and organised an agitation on a large scale, characterised by a display of personal feeling against the Viceroy. Members of the Bar and other branches of the legal profession took part in the agitation and for a time the relations between some members of the profession and others became strained. The Europeans succeeded in their objective. The provision conferring on an Indian Magistrate the power of trying a European was withdrawn and Lord Ripon resigned.

Sir Courtenay after having served his time as Law Member returned to England where he came to be employed in several responsible capacities till he was appointed Clerk to the House of Commons in 1903. "He has died full of years," as a Calcutta contemporary puts it, "nearly half a century after the stormy episode of the Ilbert Bill; the tranquil autumn of his life is symbolical; and the smooth passage of the Racial Distinctions Bill last year affords a gratifying illustration of the extent to which the European community in this country has freed itself from the prejudices which wrecked Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty."

The Tariff Bill.

The Tariff Bill which comes up for consideration during the last week of this month before the Assembly is a measure of considerable importance in that it recognised the principle of "discriminating protection" for Indian industries. We do not wish to go beyond the scope of our weekly by discussing the merits of the Bill, but we take this opportunity to congratulate the Government on the strength and independence they have shown by introducing the present measure in compliance with the wishes of the Assembly.

Byron and the Law.

The following extract from our London contemporary, The Law Journal, will be of interest to those of our readers who still retain their interest in English poets:—

So widely and fiercely did Byron wield his satiric lash that it would have been surprising if the law and lawyers had escaped it. The author of 'Don Juan'—the centenary of whose death is being celebrated to-day—spared, indeed, neither the law nor those who practise it. English literature may be searched in vain for a more disagreeable sketch of a legal adviser than that of Don Alfonso's attorney:—

With prying snub-nose and small eyes he stood,
Following Antonio's motions here and there,
With much suspicion in his attitude,
For reputation he had little care;
So that a suit or action were made good,
Small pity had he for the young and fair;
And ne'er believed in negatives, till these
Were proved by competent false witnesses.

The only consolation that solicitors can obtain from reading Byron is that he is equally harsh in his treatment of barristers. They, too, are presented as strife-mongers rather than as peace-makers. In an earlier adventure of Don Juan the lawyers, we are told, 'did their utmost for divorce,' but the husband's death put an end to their labours.

He died, and most unluckily, because
According to all hints I could collect
From counsel learned in these kinds of laws
(Although their talk's obscure and circumspect),
His death contrived to spoil a charming cause.

. . . .

Lawyers need not, of course, take seriously Byron's treatment of them in his great satiric poem. The members of other professions, including the Church and Medicine, would be their companions in sombre protest if they did. . . .

AWARD BY ARBITRATOR NOT APPOINTED BY COURT WHILE SUIT PENDING.

The decision of the Calcutta High Court in the case of Mahmud Sheikh v. Messrs. Kankinarah Co., Ltd., reported in 28 C. W. N. 634 deals with an important point in the law of arbitration.

The facts were that the parties to a suit filed a petition for compromise on certain terms and the remaining matter in difference between the parties was referred to the arbitration of three persons named in the petition of compromise and reference. One of the arbitrators having refused to act, the other two arbitrators co-opted another member to which course the parties consented.

The Defendants applied for setting aside the award. It was held that the award could not be set aside though the addition of the co-opted arbitrator was made without the intervention of the Court.

It is well-settled law that "where parties to a litigation desire to refer to arbitration any matter in difference between them in a suit, in that case all proceedings from first to last are under the supervision of the Court"—29 Cal. 167 at 182 P. C. Primâ facie, therefore, no arbitrator can be appointed quite independently of the Court; secs. 4 and 5 of the Second Schedule of Civil Procedure Code provide apparent exceptions. Sec. 4 relates to cases of difference of opinion and we are not concerned with the same in the present case. Other exceptional cases are mentioned in sec. 5, e.g., when on refusal by an arbitrator to act, any party serves the other party with a written notice to appoint an arbitrator and in compliance with such notice an appointment is made by the party so called upon. No such thing happened in the case under consideration. Sec. 5 (1) also provides for a case where the arbitrators are empowered by the order of reference to appoint an umpire and fail to do so, in which case any party may serve the arbitrators with a written notice to appoint an umpire. No such thing happened either. The order of reference is not stated to have contained any powers to the arbitrators to co-opt a member: no written notice has been mentioned. The words "empowered by the order of reference" are somewhat significant. They seem to make it necessary that the power must be contained in the order of the Court and not in mere subsequent agreement or acquiescence of the parties. Sec. 6 also points in the same direction. It says: "Every arbitrator or umpire appointed under paras. 4 and 5 shall have the like powers as if his name had been inserted in the order of reference." It shows that an arbitrator or umpire has no power unless his name is in the order of reference. In certain exceptional cases the law itself provides the procedure which must be followed in order that in the eye of the law subsequently ascertained names should be deemed to be in the order of reference.

It may be said that sec. 6 is simply intended to define and not to confer jurisdiction. Be that as it may, sec. 5 (2) provides that in case no appointment is made in accordance with sec. 5 (1) the Court may make an appointment. That does not seem to leave any room for appointment by the arbitrator on the mere consent of parties not given in compliance with the written notice mentioned in sec. 5. The Court observed: "I cannot adopt the view that the omission to move the Court under sec. 5 (2) of the Second Schedule of the Code of Civil Procedure rendered the award a nullity." Two reasons are apparently assigned for this rule. One, that the foundation for proceedings in arbitration is the consent of the parties. As to this, it must be said that the foundation is the consent of the parties' plus an order of the Court. If either is absent then the award as an award is bad unless the award itself is accepted by all parties when it would amount to an adjustment of the suit. The order of Court is not dispensed with by any provision of law. Even in the exceptional cases mentioned in secs. 4 and 5 the "Order of Court" element is preserved by a fiction so to speak because the name is deemed to be "inserted in the order of reference." In short as to the personnel of the arbitration tribunal, the order follows the petition, and jurisdiction follows the order. As to the argument that some other law may validate such an award, the answer is thus supplied by Rankin, J., in 49 Cal. 608:—"It is difficult to see what point there is in the second schedule saying or meaning that arbitration must be done in a particular way if, according to some other law or principle, it may still be done in another way."

The second reason given in support of the judgment under consideration is: "As an award it could be set aside only on one or more of the grounds mentioned in sec. 15 and it is not alleged that any of the grounds exist." This does not seem to be correct because one of the grounds mentioned in sec. 15 is "being otherwise invalid" and the Defendant contended that the award was invalid. However, sec. 15 is not necessarily exhaustive. It may be that sec. 15 contemplates a case of an award by properly appointed arbitrators.

The objection in the case was an objection going to the very root of the jurisdiction of the three persons purporting to act as arbitrators together. In connection with sec. 11 of Indian Arbitration Act, it has been repeatedly held that questions of jurisdiction often arise which are not covered by the section. Questions of jurisdiction have always been very strictly dealt with and in the case of a pending suit the Court retains seisin except to the extent it parts with the same to an extra-judicial tribunal.

The point involved in the case has been the subject of serious diversity of judicial opinion both in the past and recently. The better view seems to be that the existence of a suit and the absence of an order of Court clothing the co-opted gentleman with jurisdiction is an effective objection to the validity of the award and the Defendants would seem to have been entitled to take up such a position although they consented to the co-option. As Rankin, J., observed in a similar case (25 C. W. N. 127): "Their law is better than the principles of their conduct."

THE LAW OF EVIDENCE IN BRITISH INDIA. By M. C. Sarkar and S. C. Sarkar. Second Edition. Re-written and re-arranged by S. C. Sarkar. M. C. Sarkar & Sons, 90/2 1, Harrison Road, Calcutta. 1924.

The Indian Evidence Act which codified the English law of evidence (with modification here and there) for British India is not a text-book but a statute, and it was inevitable that, during more than a half-century it has been in force in this country, it should be subjected to meticulous examination and interpretation by the High Courts and the Privy Council. The learned writer of the foreword, himself a High Court Judge, expresses surprise that this should have been so, and seems inclined to lay the responsibility for it on the reporter rather than on the Judges themselves, whose platitudes, according to him, are solemnly recorded as authoritative expositions of the statute. [illegible] responsibility really rests on the highly abstract character of the legal rules themselves, which Sir James Stephen's innovations have rather aggravated than diminished, so that glosses are necessary at every step to enable the judiciary and the legal practitioners in presenting their cases before the Courts to apply them with a reasonable approach to the intentions of the framers of the statute. This in itself is a sufficient justification for the excessive amount of case notes which have found their way into the commentary and the present editor deserves the thanks of the public interested in the proper administration of justice in this country for the very conscientious, comprehensive and exhaustive manner in which he has sought to work up the relevant judicial decisions, Indian and English, into his notes. That he has not merely contented himself with noting up recent decisions and incorporating them in the text of the previous edition is so much the more to his credit. The result is a marked increase in bulk, which is to be regretted. More attention, we hope, will be paid in future editions to compression, for brevity, if it is the soul of wit, is also the essence of a good commentary. The danger of all bulky treatises is that you cannot see the trees on account of the wood, a difficulty which is only partially got over by a carefully prepared subject index such as we have got in the present case. The appendices to the present edition include a list of places to which the Act has been specially applied, extracts from the proceedings of the legislature embodying elucidatory observations by the originator of the Act, Sir James Stephens, and from his Introduction to the Act and the texts of the Indian Oaths Act, the Banker's Books Evidence Act and the section of Act XIX of 1853 and Act X of 1855 which confers on a party a right to sue in damages a person who being summoned fails without lawful justification to give evidence. We have no doubt that the commentary revised and enlarged as it has been in the present edition will prove of real assistance to Judges and legal practitioners.

THE LAW OF GIFT IN BRITISH INDIA. By Bimala Charan Law, M.A., B.L., Calcutta and Simla: Thacker, Spink & Co. 1924.

This little Book collects in one place the law of gift (i) as applicable to Hindus, (ii) as applicable to Mahomedans and (iii) as contained in the Transfer of Property Act. It is, we are glad to observe, not a mere collection of texts and case notes, but an intelligent attempt to co-ordinate them into a coherent commentary, which with the assistance afforded by marginal notes and a subject index is bound to be of use to legal practitioners. In the appendices are collected the Sanskrit texts bearing on the Hindu Law of Gifts, the relevant sections of the Stamp and Registration Acts, and a model form of a deed of gift. The book is all that can be desired in the matter of mechanical execution.

SUPPLEMENT TO THE FOURTH EDITION OF SEN'S BENGAL TENANCY ACT. By Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur, B.L. Calcutta: Das Gupta & Co., Publishers and Book-sellers; 64/3, College Street, 1924. Price Rs. 3-8.

No statute comes up for consideration before Courts of law in the three provinces in which it is applicable oftener than the Bengal Tenancy Act and no commentary of the Act is called into requisition to aid Judges and legal practitioners in administering the Act more frequently than Mr. Sen's. Even Mr. Sen's untiring industry cannot, it seems, keep pace with the development of the case-law round and about the provisions of one of the most difficult statutes which Courts of law are called upon to interpret and administer daily, if not hourly, in places where it is applicable. By issuing this interim collection of case-notes and comments (always acute and to the point) he has supplied a widely-felt want. Besides the notes and commentaries, the reader will not fail to notice the new price-lists, the subject index and the addenda of cases which were decided when the supplement was passing through the press, the statement of repeals and amendments and the quite attractive get-up of the compilation. The supplement will undoubtedly serve its purpose and save the legal practitioner the trouble of hunting for references in Indexes and Digests until the publication of the next edition of the commentary which the supplement itself shows must be in active preparation.

THE PROVINCIAL INSOLVENCY ACT (V OF 1920). By Mahim Chandra Sarkar Rai Bahadur. Third Edition By Subodh Chandra Sarkar, B.L.: M. C. Sarkar and Sons. 90-2A, Harrison Road, Calcutta, 1924.

We cannot speak too highly of the untiring industry of Mr. Sarkar, which has enabled him to revise and bring up to date practically simultaneously two commentaries on two enactments, one the Evidence Act and the other the Provincial Insolvency Act. Yet Mr. Sarkar is full of regrets for the delay which has taken place in bringing out this third edition of the latter book. However, what delay there has been is more than made good by the quality of the revision to which it has been subjected. We have tested the notes and found them up-to date and informing. The inclusion of the Rules of the several High Courts and an addenda of cases which were decided during the preparation of the present edition contribute to the making of the commentary as complete as one may desire it to be. The get-up of the publication is commendable.

THE CIVIL COURT PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE. By Atul Chandra Ganguli, M.A., B.L., Member, Bengal Civil Service (Judicial). Third edition: Calcutta Weekly Notes Printing Works, 3, Hastings Street, 1924. Price Rs. 4-12.

This is a greatly enlarged edition of a compilation which has established its usefulness by creating and supplying a demand which can be properly met by itself. There are certain new features in the present edition of which the most notable are the incorporation of portions of the Bengal Court Fees and Stamp Acts and the addition of a number of new plaints and written statements and chapters on "The Laws of Everyday Reference" and "Practical Hints for Cross-examination of Witnesses in Civil Cases." The addition of matter in both the English and the Bengali parts has necessarily increased the bulk of the book. It would be impossible without trenching unduly on our space to state in detail all the variety of materail which has been collected in it. Suffice it to say, that the wants of the beginner in practice in particular have been closely studied and supplied with thoroughness and insight. In the present edition, the compilation will without doubt maintain the hold it has secured as a practical guide for lawyers and students in the Mofussil.

The late Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri.

It is with a sense of profound grief that we have to record the death of Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri who was connected with the Calcutta High Court and with public life for the last thirty-eight years. Although he was ailing for some time, no one apprehended that the end was so near. His sudden death is such a great shock to us that we find ourselves unable to pay a worthy tribute to his memory in this issue. We, therefore, publish a report of what was mentioned in Court, and also a sketch of his career published in the Indian Cyclopaedia some years ago with some additions and bringing it up-to-date.

Law's Delay and the Civil Justice Committee.

We have been receiving so many communications on the subject that we find it impossible to make room for all of them within the limited space available in our columns. We are consequently, much against our inclination, driven to make some sort of selection amongst them, and we wish it to be understood by our correspondents that we do so not because we do not value the suggestions contained in them or fail to appreciate the time and labour spent by them in framing them. In view of the pressure on our space, we would not be justified in publishing in these columns suggestions which merely confirm what we or our correspondents have already previously expressed. But we propose to give publicity to every fresh suggestion of value we come across in these communications and publish as many of them as we consider desirable in extenso with our own remarks on them, for or against, as may appear proper.

We desire to draw particular attention to the communication which appeared in a previous issue (p. cxviii) from Mr. Khagendra Nath Ganguli, Vakil, M.L.C., which gives practical illustration of the evils which follow from leaving the supervision of the ministerial staff and the appointment of Civil Court Commissioners for local investigation in the hands of the District Judge, which really means leaving these matters in the hands of his Sheristadar. We do not know if these evils are prevalent in the same degree in other provinces. But its prevalence is so well established in this province that we think that the matter should receive the attention of the High Court at once without waiting for the recommendations of the Civil Justice Committee.

In one of our previous issues, we took exception to the sweating of the subordinate judiciary which follows through leaving leave vacancies unfilled—which, we thought, was prompted by motives of economy. Thereby, it is said, we suggested that the blame for not filling up these vacancies rested on the Government or the High Court—a suggestion which, we are told, is not altogether fair to the authorities. It is, we are told, at the instance of specially zealous District Judges that these vacancies remain unfilled. If a District Judge says that he can get the work done by a depleted staff and takes the responsibility for the same, it is not for the High Court or the Government to force additional officers on him. There is justice in this comment, but we say that the High Court should take care to satisfy itself that the judicial work of the District is not sufficient to occupy the time and energies of the full complement of officers before acceding to the District Judge's proposal to work with a reduced staff. In any case, the District Judge who justifiably puts forward such a proposal for sanction does no more than his duty and should not get any special credit for getting such a proposal through when it is justified by the circumstances of his District, whilst such a proposal should be unreservedly condemned where the circumstances do not justify it. Getting work done by others by pressure does not prove one's own merits as a judicial officer and we should be glad if it was expressly recognised that this will not be counted in his own favour in the matter of special promotions.

Mr. Rasbehari Mookerjee whose letter we published and commented on in a previous issue will excuse us for not printing in extenso his reply in view of its length. But we take this opportunity to note that his suggestions about the extension of the jurisdiction of the Munsifs had in view not the levelling down of Sub-Judges to the rank of Munsifs but that of levelling up the Munsifs to the rank of Sub-Judges. His idea, he says, "is of one uniform cadre of judicial officers, with graded jurisdictions, on the usual provincial scale of pay, with a select grade of Civil Judges of District rank, wielding reserved jurisdiction and appellate powers." As regards his proposal to confer summary powers in dealing with rent-suits, he writes: "Given the right sort of officers (and I admit that that is an important qualification)," the innovation can only result in saving of time and clerical labour, and he adds "given the right spirit of administration, I am confident there will be no lack of the right sort of men." Well, what is this "right spirit of administration?" And how are the "right men" to be discovered and who is to discover them? In this imperfect world, it is safer, we think, in framing a system, not to count upon super-spirit and supermen.

In conclusion, Mr. Mookerjee points out that we were in error in supposing that he had suggested a "fundamental alteration" in the method of trial as enacted in the Civil Procedure Code. What he stood out for was, he says, the "seasoning" of the Code, by increasing the scope (if we understood him aright) of arbitration through Court—some sort of compulsory arbitration, which itself appears to us to be a contradiction in terms. "Arbitration," he writes, "is in the air, and it cannot be in the interest of good administration to let the idea work in antithesis to, or rivalry with the Civil Court. The provisions about arbitration in the Code were thrown into the form of a separate schedule with the express intention of re-enacting them on comprehensive lines in the future." But we cannot imagine that the framers of the Code of 1908 ever dreamed of compulsory arbitration. Even at the present day, when consent of the parties is the indispensable foundation of an arbitrator's jurisdiction, does not Mr. Mookerjee's own experience tell him that the almost invariable issue of such a proceeding is a strenuous endeavour on the part of the defeated party to nullify the award and to re-start the case before the Court? No: this idea of solving civil disputes by arbitration is too airy to come within the range of practical politics. Trial with jurors is nearer the mark, but the trend of forces in England, the home of jury trials, is in the direction of doing without them in civil litigation.

Reciprocity in the matter of execution of decrees of British Indian Courts and Courts of Feudatory States.

Mr. M. Rama Chandra Rao, B.A., B.L., Advocate and High Court Vakil and Member, Mysore Legislative Council, about a year ago, moved a resolution in the Mysore Legislative Council recommending that as, according to the existing law, ex parte decrees against non-resident Mysore subjects passed by the Courts of British India and of the C. and M. Station, Bangalore, are not executable in the Mysore State and also as ex parte decrees passed by Mysore Courts against non-resident British Indian subjects and subjects of the C. and M. Station, Bangalore, are not executable outside the Mysore State, necessary steps be taken by legislation or otherwise to rectify the existing law so that the inconvenience and hardship which people are now put to may be removed at an early date. There is no question that the law in this matter is, as was laid down by the Privy Council in the Faridkote case, I. L. R. 22 Cal. 222, that in a personal action a decree pronounced by a Court of a Foreign State in absentem, that absent party not having submitted himself to its authority and not owing allegiance to that State, is by private international law a nullity; and there is no question also as to the inconvenience and hardship that follow from it or the encouragement to fraud this law lends to dishonest foreigners who are free to enter into business relationship within the State and profit by them without the inconvenience of having to meet the obligations arising therefrom except when it may suit their own sweet will and pleasure to do so. The Mysore Government, it appears, promised to give the matter due consideration.

However as the question interests not merely the Mysore State and its inhabitants but also the Government of India and British Indians as also the other Feudatory States and their subjects, the Government of India must obviously be the principal party to any arrangement which may be expected to lead to a satisfactory solution of the problem. Mr. M. Rama Chandra Rao has therefore been seeking to ventilate the matter in British India also, in order that a practical solution of the difficulty may be reached as speedily as possible. As Mr. Rao points out, in order to escape liability for a transaction effected in one territory, a man has only to cross the border and not appear in a suit which may be filed in the other territory for the enforcement of all obligations arising out of that transaction. The recent Reciprocity Bill (No. 15 of 1924) introduced into the Indian Legislative Assembly which seeks to make decrees passed in Great Britain and the Dominions executable in British India will not meet the situation. There is, we agree with Mr. Rama Chandra Rao, even greater necessity for creating reciprocity between India and the British Indian Protected States than between Great Britain and its Dominions and British India. It is time, we think, that the matter was taken up by some member of the Legislative Council. It should be possible to devise a bill which whilst providing proper safeguards may bring in reciprocity of the kind demanded as between at any rate the more advanced Feudatory States and British India, reserving, it may be, power in the Executive Government to extend it to other territories.

THE LATE SIR ASUTOSH CHAUDHURI.

Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri, Kt., Barrister-at-law, Advocate and ex-Judge of the High Court, Calcutta, came from an old zemindar family of Haripur, Pabna, a member of which, Dewan Ram Deva Chaudhuri, the reputed founder of the Natore Raj family, obtained great distinction at the time of Nawab Murshid Quli Khan, the founder of Murshidabad. On his mother's side he was descended from the Roys of Bág (Kasinathpur), Pabna, who trace their descent from one of the twelve Bhuians of Bengal who were territorial magnates and wielded large political powers in Mohammedan times. His father, the late Durgadas Chaudhuri, was a scholar of the Hindu College, and a pupil of Captain D. L. Richardson, and one of the earliest members of the subordinate executive service in Bengal. He practised at the Calcutta Bar for more than thirty years, and during that time was identified with many of the important cases on the Original and the Appellate Side of the Court.

After passing through the usual preliminary course of education, at the Krishnaghur Collegiate School, attended and graduated at the Calcutta University where he was the last student to take the B.A. and M.A. degrees simultaneously.

In 1881 he went to England and entered St. John's College, Cambridge, remaining there until 1885; he graduated in Mathematics in 1884, and in the Law Tripos in 1885. He was for some years one of the editors of the College Magazine, 'The Eagle,' and was one of the founders of the Society of Indian students known as the Mujlis.

At Cambridge he competed for a prize poem on Savarnarola, which was greatly admired for the command he displayed over the English language.

At Cambridge, he was contemporary with Sir J. C. Bose, F.R.S., one of the most celebrated scientists of the day. His inclinations as a young man ran in the direction of literature and most of his spare time at St. John's was devoted to its study.

On his return to India in 1886, he had to face severe competition, and for a time experienced all the vicissitudes of a beginner. There was also at that time some prejudice against Bengali barristers. His talents, however, were appreciated quite early in his career and his work at the Bar speaks for itself.

Outside his profession, he took the keenest interest in politics and as Honorary Secretary to the Bengal Land-holders' Association, he exercised considerable influence. He strongly opposed the partition of Bengal and drafted a representation for the Association which the then Viceroy, Lord Curzon, characterised as the ablest and strongest produced by the opposition. As President of the Bengal Provincial Conference held at Burdwan in 1904, he delivered an address on the political situation of the day, the text being "A subject race has no politics," which created a public discussion in the press of India lasting over a year. Much notice was taken of it in European papers. He meant by it that a subject nation could attain its political and economic salvation by self-help and self-reliance. He believed more in constructive work than in platform politics.

He was a firm believer in the Swadeshi movement for which, however, he claimed no political significance. He was of opinion that the industries of India should be encouraged, and on principle claimed for the country rights similar to those enjoyed by the Colonies. As an elected Fellow of the Calcutta University, he took the keenest interest in educational matters, and was closely identified with the 'National Council of Education' with which Dr. Sir Gurudas Banerjee, C.I.E., late Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University was also associated.

During the Partition days and the Swadeshi movement he was chiefly instrumental in acquiring the Banga Laxmi Cotton Mills, which had been originally started with Bengal capital but had passed into the hands of Bombay merchants.

In 1912, after the Partition of Bengal was annulled, at the zenith of his reputation as a public man and a leader of the Bar, he was offered a judgeship of the High Court at the instance of Sir Lawrence Jenkins, the then Chief Justice of the Calcutta High Court. The acceptance of a judgeship meant an enormous sacrifice of income, yet he accepted it from a sense of duty, although he knew that he would not be able to serve for full time and earn full pension. He retired from the Bench in 1920 at the age of sixty.

REFERENCE AT HIGH COURT.

Tributes to the memory of the late Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri were paid by both Bench and Bar shortly after 1 o'clock when all the judges assembled in the Chief Justice's Court room which was crowded with members of the various branches of the legal profession as well as the general public.

Mr. S. R. Das, Advocate-General, Bengal, said it was with a deep sense of regret and sorrow that he had to announce the death of Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri. Sir Asutosh had been in bad health for the last few months but his death was unexpected and came as a shock to them all. Sir Asutosh was born in 1860 and belonged to the well-known Chaudhuri family of Haripur in the District of Pabna. Early in his life he showed promise of a brilliant career. He was a distinguished graduate of the Calcutta University, taking his B. A. and M. A. degrees in the same year. He then proceeded to Cambridge and joined St. John's College. There also he had a brilliant career and was a favourite pupil of the late Dr. Ruth. After taking his M.A. and LL.D. degrees at Cambridge, he joined the Bar in 1886. His career at the Bar needed no word from him because it was well-known to every one here. Sir Asutosh had a very extensive practice and in cross-examination and advocacy he had few equals in his time. Despite his extensive practice he devoted a good deal of his time to other works, political and social, which he considered to be for the welfare of his country. He was also keen on art and music in which he was considerably helped by the late Lady Chaudhuri. They all had recollections of the musical entertainments and soirees which they had in Sir Asutosh's house. At the request of the late Sir Lawrence Jenkins when he was Chief Justice, Sir Asutosh left a lucrative practice in 1912 and was raised to the Bench. His Majesty the King-Emperor conferred the honour of Knighthood on him in 1917 and he retired from the Bench in 1920, Sir Asutosh's cheerful and genial disposition, his generous hospitality and his genuine and real culture endeared him to all who had the pleasure of knowing him while his acquaintance was not limited to the narrow circle of the Bar but extended to a very much wider circle. Lady Chaudhuri's death was a great and severe blow to him and he did not seem to have recovered since her death. Sir Asutosh's death was a great personal loss to many of them as well as a great loss to the country at large.

The Hon. Dr. Dwrkanath Mitter desired on behalf of the vakils of this Court to join in the expression of deep sorrow at Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri's death. Sir Asutosh, who was a leading member of the Calcutta Bar, was appointed a Judge of this Court in 1912. In that capacity he endeared himself to the members of the profession by his two great virtues of patience and uniform courtesy. Outside the High Court, before he was raised to the Bench the members of the profession recognised his services to the country. Sir Asutosh took a very active part in the political life of India before he was raised to the Bench. But of all his qualities Sir Asutosh would best be remembered for his goodness of heart and disposition. He was one of those men of whom it might be said that he had no enemies. To Sir Asutosh the words of the poet could fittingly be applied "that even his failings lean to virtue's side."

In the death of Sir Asutosh the legal profession had lost one of its brilliant jewels and the country was poorer by his death.

Mr. J. C. Dutt said that Mr. Mohinimohan Chatterjee, President of the Incorporated Law Society, was overcome by feelings of personal bereavment as Sir Asutosh was related to him and he had therefore requested Mr. Dutt to represent the Incorporated Law Society on this mournful occasion. On behalf of the Society he associated himself with every word that had fallen from the Advocate-General and Dr. Mitter.

The Chief Justice said that his learned brothers and he desired to join in the expression of regret which had been so eloquently made by the Bar at the death of Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri. The last news which he received of Sir Asutosh's illness was that he was better and that there was every hope of his recovery. The result was that the news he received that morning had come as a very considerable shock to most of them. Sir Asutosh belonged to a well-known and highly respected family and his death would be mourned by a very large number of friends. But Sir Asutosh's death would be regretted not only by his friends but he would be missed by the general body of the public throughout Bengal, for he was prominently in the public eye for many years.

Before Sir Asutosh became a Judge he was well-known not only on account of his position at the Bar but also on account of the interest which he took in public affairs. In 1912 Sir Asutosh was appointed a Judge of this Court, sat till 1920 and retired. During these eight years every one would agree that he did much useful work in the Court. Sir Asutosh's knowledge of the customs and habits of this country and his experience in and familiarity with the business and commercial life of Calcutta was a very great asset to him in the administration of justice. After his retirement he again took a prominent part in public affairs and there was no doubt that his death would be felt as a great loss in Bengal.

Sir Asutosh was a high-minded gentleman, kindly, hospitable and of genial disposition, not only to the members of the profession but to all those who knew him. His brethren on the Bench were privileged to be numbered among his friends and his lamented death was deeply regretted by them all. His Lordship asked the Advocate-General to convey their sense of deep sympathy to the members of Sir Asutosh's family. The Advocate-General represented to him that morning that the death of Sir Asutosh was felt so acutely by the members of the legal profession that it would be regarded as a proper thing that the Court should adjourn that day. Having regard to the fact that Sir Asutosh was so prominently connected with the Court and was so universally esteemed not only in the profession but by the public at large, his Lordship thought it would be right to adjourn the Court for the day.

SOME PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS FOR EXPEDITING TRIAL OF CIVIL SUITS IN BENGAL.

By Satis Chandra Basu, Subordinate Judge, Suri.

1. Case of Minor Defendants:—

(i) The notice for the appointment of a guardian, and the summons for the hearing of the suit, may be issued simultaneously. If the proposed guardian does not express his willingness to act as such or refuses to act, and it is therefore necessary to appoint a pleader or an officer of the Court as guardian, it will not be necessary to serve a formal summons upon him, it will enough to hand over a copy of the plaint to him and inform him of the date of hearing.

(ii) Where the proposed guardian is the natural guardian of the minor and a very near relation, e.g., a parent or a grand-parent or an elder brother, it may, except in special circumstances, be presumed that he is willing to act as guardian although he has not expressly intimated his consent, so as to prevent the waste of time and money by the appointment of a stranger as guardian. Very often the guardian does not appear in the case, not because he is unwilling to act as such, but because he has no defence to take.

2. Service of Summons:—

One of the causes of the delay in the proper service of summons is that when the peon goes to the house of the Defendant or the witness, the latter may be temporarily absent from home, it may be for a few hours or a few days. Under the existing system the peon cannot afford to wait or to call again, and he affixes the summons to his house. The consequence is that the Court thinks the service to be not sufficient and orders issue of fresh summons. If the service of summons be entrusted with a local agency its man may call again when the Defendant or the witness returns home, and serve the summons personally upon him.

This local agency may be either the Union Board, or the President of the Chowkidari Panchayat, or better still, a peon of the Court stationed in the mofussil more or less permanently for serving processes in a defined small local area. The peon or the identifier need not come to Court to swear his affidavit, but the President of the Union Board or of the Panchayat or the Chairman of a Municipality may be authorised to administer oath for such affidavits; and the processes and the returns may be sent to and by the peon by registered post.

As an additional precaution a copy of the summons may be sent to the person to be served therewith by registered post with stamp paid for acknowledgment.

3. Attendance of Witnesses:—

Witnesses have often to come from long distances or make difficult journeys leaving their ordinary avocations or other important business at home. So they are naturally unwilling to attend unless there is a fair chance of the case being taken up. Under the present system of fixing a large number of cases each day (which the Courts are compelled to do in order to get sufficient work, as there is no knowing in how many cases the parties will apply for adjournment) such assurance can rarely be given. I would therefore suggest the following remedies:—

(i) Establishment of Courts at a larger number of stations, so that parties or witnesses may not have to travel long distances. In some stations there are as many as four, five, or even seven or eight Munsifs' Courts. Instead of centralising all these Courts at one station, some new stations may be opened and some of these Courts may be removed there. The ideal station, in my opinion, would be one with not more than two Munsifs.

Similarly I think there need not be in any place more than one Subordinate Judge exercising civil powers. Where there are more than one such Sub-Judge in a District, they may be stationed at some of the outlying Munsifis with powers to receive appeals.

(ii) Examination of those witnesses who may attend instead of waiting for the day when all the witnesses of both the parties may find it convenient to come. I think there cannot be any serious objection to the trial of cases "piece-meal" in this way. The circular of the Hon'ble High Court against "piece-meal" trial appears to be based not so much upon any apprehension of hindrance to the fair trial of the case, as upon the harrassment to the parties if the hearing of several ready cases go on simultaneously devoting only a part of the day to each case. The only objection that may be advanced against such a course is that it may open a way to the fabrication of evidence for filling up gaps that may be discovered in the evidence of the witnesses already examined, or for reconciling discrepancies. To my mind the danger in this respect is not very great, at any rate the advantage of this mode of examining witnesses will more than counterbalance the disadvantages. The party who is to begin will know that any witnesses whom he may be able to produce will be examined the same day and he will get, on sufficient cause being shown, further time to bring his other witnesses, and the other party will rest assured that he need not bring his witnesses until the former has finished, as is done in the trial of criminal cases.

If the witnesses know that they will be examined on the first day they attend Court and will not have to come again and again, they will all be able to come without any inconvenience if the hearing extends over two or three dates, and it will not be necessary to adjourn a suit for more than two or three dates on the ground of non-attendance of witnesses.

If this system be followed the number of cases fixed for a day may be greatly reduced, thus relieving the Court of much useless work in the way of fixing dates, writing orders, etc., and reducing the harrassment of the parties to a minimum.

(iii) Allowing sufficient compensation to the witnesses who attend Court but have to go away unexamined. The party in default should be made to pay it at once irrespective of the final result of the suit. This will have a two-fold beneficial effect—it will encourage witnesses to come to Courts and discourage a party from taking adjournment on flimsy grounds.

4. Stricter check on the dilatoriness of the parties in such matters as ascertaining the correct address of a Defendant, citing witnesses, applying for the commission, etc.

5. Rent Suits filed on the "Limitation Day":—

Whatever tinkering may be done in the way of relief by fixing particular days in the week for the trial of the large number of such suits instituted on a single day in the year, or by assigning particular officers to try them, no appreciable expedition can be obtained unless the number of Courts with the necessary complement of ministerial officers and peons be temporarily increased for some months in the year. But this does not seem to be feasible from the administrative point of view.

The only remedy that may be suggested is the modification of the law of limitation for rent suits. Instead of making the period of limitation (whatever it may be—three years or four years) run from the end of the year, it should be made to run from the end of each quarter in which any instalment of rent falls due. This will insure more equable distribution of the suits instituted throughout the year.

6. Execution Proceedings:—

I see no harm in the simultaneous issue of the notice under Or. XXI, r. 22, notice under Or. XXI, r. 66 and the writ of attachment of immovable property. There are many places in which the notice under r. 66 is seldom taken any advantage of. In such places this notice may be dispensed with, and attachment and sale-proclamation may be issued simultaneously. This procedure will shorten the pendency of an execution case by several months.

7. Objections to Execution:—

Courts may be enjoined to try these objections as quickly as possible. Many of them are so flimsy that they may be disposed of on the very day they are filed, if only the Courts can make time to go through them.

Courts may be empowered to reject summarily objections which are filed untimely with the apparent intention of making the sale-date pass, so that after the ultimate rejection of the objection, the sale cannot be held without a fresh proclamation which takes about two months.

8. Applications for setting aside Sales:—

It often happens that a judgment-debtor who has appeared in the execution case and got the sale postponed on the promise to pay off the decretal amount, when he fails to do so and the sale takes place, comes forward with an application under Or. XXI, r. 90, on the ground of non-publication of the sale-proclamation. Rules may be framed to the effect that when a judgment-debtor is aware of the execution proceedings he cannot be allowed to raise such objection after the sale has taken place, and that if he takes such objection before the sale he himself should make arrangements for the due publication of any fresh sale-proclamation that may be ordered and that on his failing to do so the sale will take place on the adjourned date without any other proclamation and that no further objection on this score would be listened to.

9. Indirect Stay of Suits:—

Sometimes it happens that an appeal is preferred against an interlocutory order and the Appellate Court calls for the whole record thus preventing further prosecution of the suit till the appeal is disposed of, though that interlocutory order may have nothing to do with the merits of the original suit. In such cases the Appellate Court should direct the parties to file copies of the necessary papers, or direct the trial Court to send only such documents or copies of papers which are necessary for the hearing of the appeal, without interfering with the progress of the suit in the meantime.

10. Insufficiency of the Number of Courts:—

The number of Courts now existing may be said to be just sufficient, if not insufficient, for the trial of the cases in the dilatory way now prevailing. If the trial of suits be expedited in any way, they would not be able to cope with the work, and extra hands would be necessary, at least for sometime till the old cases are disposed of.

ADMISSIBILITY OF DEPOSITION NOT READ OVER TO WITNESS.

To

The Editor, "Calcutta Weekly Notes."

Sir,

In the case of Emperor v. Nabab Ali Sarkar, decided by their Lordships, Mr. Justice Suhrawardy and Mr. Justice Cuming, and recently reported in I. L. R. 51 Cal. 236, it has been held that the deposition of a witness which was not read over to him is inadmissible in evidence in a subsequent judicial proceeding under sec. 80 of the Evidence Act, and that oral evidence of the same is inadmissible under sec. 91 of the same Act. It was assumed in that ruling that the deposition should have been recorded under Or. XVIII, r. 5, Civil Procedure Code. But it was not pointed out to their Lordships that the suit in which the witness was examined was a rent suit, and under sec. 148 (f) of the Bengal Tenancy Act only a memorandum of the evidence under sec. 189 of the old Civil Procedure Code (corresponding to Or. XVIII, r. 13 of the present Code) was to be made, whether an appeal was allowed or not. Such a memorandum is not required to be read over to the witness, and it is good evidence under sec. 80 of the Evidence Act. Moreover as the law does not require the evidence to be recorded in full, oral evidence of what the witness actually deposed to would not be barred by sec. 91. However the ruling gives the opinion of the learned Judges as to the admissibility in evidence of a deposition which should have been recorded under Or. XVIII, r. 5, but which was not read over to the witness. I may further point out that under the orders of the Local Government all Munsifs and Subordinate Judges in Bengal now take down depositions in ordinary appealable cases, not exactly under Or. XVIII, r. 5, but under sec. 138 of the Civil Procedure Code.

Yours truly,
S. C. BASU,
Sub-Judge.

Suri,
18-5-24.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before M. N. MUKERJI, J. CIVIL REV. NO. 943 OF 1923, RASH BIHARI MAJUMDAR, Petitioner v. KUSUM KUMARI GUHA and others, Opposite Party. The 29th April 1924

Auction-purchaser at revenue sale, if may apply for withdrawal of attachment of surplus sale-proceeds by mortgagee, after sale set aside—Civil Procedure Code, sec. 151—Court's inherent jurisdiction.

Estate No. 6394 of the Faridpur Collectorate was sold for arrears of revenue and purchased by the Petitioner in the name of one Bepin Behari Das, pleader. The defaulter's application before the Commissioner for setting aside sale proved unsuccessful. Meanwhile Opposite Party No. 1, mortgagee of the estate, brought a suit on the mortgage in the Bhanga Munsif's Court and prayed for a lien on the surplus sale-proceeds," which were attached before judgment, and there was a preliminary decree and a final decree on 11th March 1921. Meanwhile suit No. 1 of 1920 was instituted by the defaulters in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Faridpur, which was ultimately decreed and the sale set aside on the 5th March 1921 and the Petitioner was declared entitled to a refund of the purchase money. The Collector having refused refund in view of the attachment by the Munsif's Court at Bhanga, the Petitioner auction-purchaser prayed in the Munsif's Court for an order of withdrawal of the attachment under sec. 151, C. P. C. The Munsif held that the mortgagee being no party to the suit in the Subordinate Judge's Court, the order was not binding against him, and the applicant being no party in the mortgage suit had no locus standi to make the application :

Held—That the application being under sec. 151 for the ends of justice, the question of locus standi can hardly arise.

The sale being set aside the original security re-vested in the mortgagor, and the mortgagee was in a position to fall back upon his original security, and had no more lien on the sale-proceeds which no longer represented the interest of the mortgagor.

The order of attachment was therefore withdrawn.

Babu Surendra Nath Das Gupta (II) for the Petitioner.

No one appeared for the Opposite Party.

NOTES

The late Sir Asutosh Mookerjee.

The gloom in which the demise of Sir Asutosh Chaudhuri had plunged the public had scarcely time to abate, when it was overwhelmed on Monday morning last by the newspaper announcement of the death at Patna of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee. Sir Asutosh Mookerjee retired from the Bench only the other day, in all but full possession of his usual bodily vigour and carrying with him the universal desire that, freed from the trammels of office, he would be able to use his great powers of brain and body, undimmed by age and undiminished by use, in rearing up and rehabilitating the political life of Bengal and through Bengal of India. But the Fates have ordered otherwise, and Bengal stands to-day bereft of her noblest son and stunned by a blow of well-nigh incalculable magnitude. Monday morning, when his remains arrived by rail at Howrah, witnessed a scene unparallelled in the history of this City. The usual communication between Howrah and Calcutta could not be re-established owing to a break-down of the mechanical arrangement of the bridge; but members of the public from High Court Judges to clerks in offices and schoolboys took whatever other means of transport were available to cross over in order to obtain a last glimpse of the departed, so large a space did his great personality fill in the thoughts of the population, irrespective of rank and education. This spontaneous exhibition of love and reverence on the part of the general public was suitably responded to by his Lordship the Chief Justice immediately ordering a complete closing of the Court and its offices for the day. The bier was practically taken possession of by the crowd which led it, very appropriately, first to the Senate House of the Calcutta University, to which Sir Asutosh had given of his best, and followed it in procession to the burning ghat at Kalighat, which in the evening presented a spectacle not likely to be repeated within the life-time of the present generation.

Tributes to the memory of the great departed are being paid all over the country, and the newspapers are ringing with expressions of unfeigned sorrow from every quarter. In other columns of this issue will be found those paid on Monday last at the Patna High Court and on the following day at the Calcutta High Court. Nearly every aspect of the deceased's public activities has been suitably recognised in the speeches made on those occasions, and all that remains for us to do at the present moment is to stress the fact which is apt to be overlooked in all such notices of a man who stood for nearly forty-years as the very embodiment of brain, life and power, that his heart was even larger than his brains. The public feel not merely that they have lost a leader, but a friend. The student population of Bengal in particular have lost in him one who loved them as no one else in Bengal has done since the passing of Pundit Vidyasagar. To them and to the members of his bereaved family we offer our sincerest condolence.

The late Mr. Satish Chandra Ghose.

In the Calcutta High Court, mention was also made on Tuesday last of the death of Mr. Satish Chandra Ghose, a senior vakil, who until recently was a member of the Legislative Assembly and had retired from practice only about two years ago. He was a son of the late Sir Chunder Madhab Ghose. We offer our sincere condolence and sympathy to his family.

Civil Justice—Sheristadars and Commissioners of Partition.

Several communications have been addressed to us commenting on the letter of Mr. Khagendra Nath Ganguli, Vakil, M.L.C., published at p. cxviii of this volume. Considerations of space prevent us from publishing them in extenso, and so we must content ourselves with noticing the points sought to be made in them. One is that the Sheristadar virtually acts as the personal assistant to the District Judge in matters relating to the administrative side of his duties, and simply transferring these duties from the District Judge to a subordinate Judge will not improve matters, for the Subordinate Judge himself will have to depend upon the Sheristadar in the same way as the District Judge now does, if he is to combine these duties with the discharge of his ordinary judicial functions. As one correspondent says, it is not surely proposed to appoint a senior Munsif or a Sub-Judge as the Judge's Sheristadar or personal assistant for these purposes. We are afraid Mr. Ganguli's critics have missed his point, which, if we understand it aright, is that under the existing system, the performance of administrative duties does not count for statistical purposes (that is to say, in estimating the amount of work to be credited to a particular officer in the returns), and the result therefore is that these duties are neglected and the Sheristadar is left to his own devices without any real supervision, and as the judicial duties of a District Judge are ordinarily too multifarious to admit of his sparing much time for these duties, the suggestion has been put forward that a senior Munsif or a Sub-Judge should be made primarily responsible for them in each district, and (this is important) that he should be allowed to note in his diary the time actually spent from day to day in the performance of these duties, and that this time, for statistical purposes, should be counted as of equal value to time spent in bonâ fide judicial work. Under this scheme the Judicial Officer in question will be expected to go into these matters himself instead of merely countersigning the opinions of the Sheristadar.

The other points made by our correspondents relate chiefly to the order recently issued by the District Judge of Hooghly withdrawing the power hitherto exercised by subordinate Judicial Officers to appoint Partition Commissioners in cases tried by them. It is stated that formerly commissions used to be issued by subordinate Courts indiscriminately upon the suggestion of the pleaders engaged in the case without due inquiry as to whether the person proposed had sufficient knowledge of surveying and without caring to see that the same person was not appointed Commissioner at the same time, in two or more cases. It is further stated that appointment by the District Judge ensures (1) that the Commissioner is an expert in surveying and (ii) that all pleaders with knowledge of surveying get work in rotation, because the District Judge has got a list of pleaders with knowledge of surveying graded according to qualification, and appointments are made by him with reference to this list: and that therefore the practice introduced by the District Judge of Hooghly makes for efficiency and more equitable distribution of work and also eliminates favouritism.

We do not doubt that the circular has been issued with the best of motives. But we fail to see why if appointment with reference to a list has these virtues, each subordinate Judicial Officer should not be (if they are not already, as we understand they are) provided with this list of pleaders possessing the requisite knowledge of surveying; and as to the same pleader being appointed Commissioner at the same time in several cases, this can be avoided by simply enquiring of the appointee if he has been already engaged in similar work in connection with a case or cases in other Courts. The circular in question does not prevent a pleader of Hooghly from being appointed a Commissioner of Partition in a case which is being tried at Howrah. On the other hand, cases are not unknown where the very object of a local investigation ordered by a subordinate Court has been frustrated by the delay incurred in getting the Commissioner appointed by the District Judge. The idea of fair distribution of work by an authority whose very detachment, in the matter of personal contact, from the candidates is a 'guarantee against favouritism, though it looks so attractive on paper, is a dilusion when it comes to practical application. Why cannot a Munsif or a Sub-Judge who can be trusted to hold the balance even as between the parties to a suit be trusted also to be fair in the matter of appointment of Commissioners? In any case a Munsif or Sub-Judge at Howrah never appoints a pleader of Hooghly as Commissioner to partition property at Salkea or Uluberia and thereby saves the parties the trouble and expense which must otherwise be thrown away simply to establish effective business contact between the parties and the Commissioner. This is just one of those cases where decentralisation is preferable to centralisation from every point of view. And if the personal factor is bound to come into play in such matters, the public, at any rate, would prefer this to be the subordinate judicial officer's rather than the Judge's Sheristadar's.

THE LATE SIR ASUTOSH MOOKERJEE.

REFERENCE AT THE CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Eloquent and sympathetic reference to the memory and career of the late Sir Asutosh Mookerjee was paid at the High Court on Tuesday, the 27th May, when prior to the work of the day being taken up, all the Judges assembled in the Chief Justice's Court room, which was packed with members of the various branches of the legal profession as well as the general public.

Mr. S. R. Das, Advocate-General, on behalf of the Bar said :—" It is only a few months since your Lordships and the members of the legal profession assembled to bid farewell from the Bench to Sir Asutosh Mookerjee, and to wish him a happy and a long life during his retirement. No one then imagined that we should so soon meet again to bid him an eternal farewell and to mourn his loss. I wish it had fallen to a better man to represent the Bar on this occasion; I feel I am not capable of doing justice in giving expression to the irreparable loss the country has suffered.

Sir Asutosh Mookerjee was born on 20th June 1864. In 1879, at the age of 15 he matriculated, standing first in the whole University. In 1884, at the age of 20 he graduated with high honours in mathematics. In 1885 he took his M.A. degree, standing first in the whole University in mathematics. In 1886, he sat for the Premchand Roychand Studentship, which was then the most difficult and the highest examination in any subject, and succeeded in winning the handsome scholarship attached to it. He again sat for the M.A. degree in Physics and passed successfully. He then took up the study of law and attended the law lectures at the City College where the present Lord Sinha was one of the lecturers. He also attended the Tagore Law Lectures and for three successive years won the gold medal awarded for proficiency in the subject of the lectures. While still quite a young man, he joined the Asiatic Society of Bengal and his contributions in mathematical subjects attracted the attention of Professor Cayley of Cambridge, on whose recommendation he was nominated a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh.

In 1888, he took his B.L. degree, and was enrolled as a vakil of this Court. He served his articles under the late Sir Rashbehari Ghose. He continued the studies in law even after he joined the High Court, and in 1894 he received the degree of Doctor of Law from the Calcutta University. In 1898 he was appointed Tagore Law Professor. In the meantime, he had been taking a keen interest in the University, and in 1899 he was elected to represent the University in the Bengal Legislative Council, where he did much useful work in connection with the then Calcutta Municipal Bill. On the Bill being passed he was nominated by the Government a member of the Corporation of which, I believe, he continued to be a member till his elevation to the Bench. In 1901, he was re-elected to the Council and in 1903 he was elected by the members of the Bengal Council to represent them in the Council of the Governor-General, where he took a very active part in the discussions on the new Universities Bill. In 1904, he was appointed a Judge of the High Court.

His activities had covered a wide field while he was building up a large practice, and we all know the labour and time which that involves. But he made time in spite of his practice to take an active and a conspicuous part in the work of his University, in politics and in municipal affairs. He would even devote his spare time to the solution of mathematical problems, which was one of his hobbies. On his elevation to the Bench he was obliged to give up his activities in political and municipal affairs and devoted his entire attention, outside his judicial duties, to the University. In 1906, he was appointed Vice-Chancellor, the second Indian to be appointed to that high Office, the first having been the late Sir Gurudas Banerjee. He continued to occupy that position for a number of years. In 1907 he was elected president of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, an office to which he was subsequently repeatedly elected. In 1908, he was temporarily relieved of his duties as a Judge, and placed on deputation in connection with the re-organisation of the Calcutta University, a task which he took up with his characteristic zeal and thoroughness. In 1909, he was elected president of the Trustees of the Indian Museum, and at about the same time he became president of the Board of Sanskrit Examiners in Bengal. He was also the founder and president of the Mathematical Society of Bengal which has given considerable encouragement to the study of that subject in Bengal. There is one other matter that I must mention before I come to his retirement from the Bench. It was due to his persuasive eloquence and his great work at the University, that the late Sir Tarak Nath Palit and Sir Rashbehari Ghose were induced to make such munificent donations to the Science College attached to the University.

A history of his life would not be complete without a mention of the very bold step he took in giving in marriage his widowed daughter. A thoroughly orthodox Hindu in all matters he did not hesitate to risk social persecution when he saw the sad state of his daughter, a widow from childhood. In December 1923, he retired.

I have now related in very bald terms the main features of the life of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee. Can mere words, however graphic, speak more eloquently of his life and work than the bare facts I have stated? It is only a man of extraordinary talents, of extraordinary industry, of great forcefulness of character, burning with a zeal to make his life of some use to his fellowmen, who could have within the short space of 59 years accomplished all that I have related to you.

We have had, and we have among us, men who have risen to high fame in the one particular line in which they have specialised. We have, and have had, great physicists, great chemists, great educationists and doctors and lawyers of great eminence. But I know of no one who has taken part in such varied activities as the late Sir Asutosh Mookerjee and in every one of which he occupied a prominent position. He was barely sixty years, when he died. Bengal—nay India, hoped he had still before him many years of activity for the benefit of his country. But it was not to be. A great man has passed away and we can only bow to the decree of Providence.

Babu Basanta Kumar Bose, President of the Vakils' Association, said that he had seen many Indians of very great intellect, but he had never seen a greater mathematician, or a greater lawyer or a greater Judge than Sir Asutosh Mookerjee. Bengal had lost one of its most brilliant sons in modern times.

Mr. Mohini Mohan Chatterji said:—On behalf of the Incorporated Law Society of Calcutta and generally of the attorneys of your Lordship's Court, I desire, with your Lordship's permission, to associate myself with every word of the warm and eloquent tribute to the memory of the late Sir Asutosh Mookerjee. The suddenness with which he was struck down by the hand of death while engaged in professional work is an impressive reminder, that in life we are in the midst of death. Sir Asutosh Mookerjee's courageous, persistent and whole-hearted labour in many spheres of usefulness evoked, as was natural, a diversity of estimation, but every unlovely thought directed towards him was burnt to ashes on his funeral pyre in the presence of a gathering, unprecedented on such an occasion a gathering which represented all sorts and conditions of men, irrespective of caste, creed and sect. But the assertion may be made with some confidence, that his memory is, and will long continue to be, an altar flame to enkindle his countrymen with enthusiastic and pure-hearted devotion to the good of others.

His Lordship the Chief Justice said:—As the learned Advocate-General has said, it is not six months since we assembled in this Court on the occasion of the retirement from the Bench of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee. We then paid a tribute to his great ability, his untiring energy, his unceasing work, and we expressed the hope that, though he was retiring from the Bench, his life would be spared for many years so that he might serve his country in other capacities. Our hopes have been shortlived for we are here to-day mourning his sudden death.

There is no doubt that his death, as far as our human limitations enable us to judge, is a great calamity. I think that no one will deny that Sir Asutosh stood prominent among his fellow countrymen. He was the greatest Bengalee of his generation. I do not think I should be wrong if I were to say that in many respects he was the greatest Indian of his day

When he retired from the Bench he was in full possession of his great faculties, his mind was indeed a store of knowledge. He was of ripe experience, his energies appeared to be unabated, and his health, though temporarily not so good as usual, was not such as to cause his friends any anxiety. Now India and Bengal are suddenly bereft of his services—services which might and probably would have been invaluable to the country in many respects. The cause of education in all its branches has lost a staunch friend and an untiring advocate. What the Calcutta University, to which he ungrudgingly devoted so much of his life, will do without him, it is difficult to imagine.

It has been stated that it was probable that he would take part in politics. His knowledge, experience and powers of debate would have stood him in good stead and might easily have led him to a prominent position in public life, which would have given him an opportunity of influencing the future of this province, and perhaps of India itself. The loss, therefore, which the country has sustained through the death of Sir Asutosh Mookerjee is indeed a severe one. It will be difficult, if not impossible, to find any one who will adequately fill the gap caused by his death.

We deeply regret his death for reasons of a public nature, we mourn the loss of a friend with whom we have been intimate for many years. We venture to extend our sincere sympathy with the members of his family in the great affliction which has so suddenly and so unexpectedly befallen them."

REFERENCE AT THE PATNA HIGH COURT.

Tributes to the memory of the late Sir Asutosh Mookerjee were paid both by the Bench and the Bar of the Patna High Court on Monday, the 26th of May, at about eleven, when the Judges assembled in the Chief Justice's Court room which was packed with members of both branches of the legal profession as well as the general public. As a mark of respect the Chief Justice ordered suspension of further business for the day.

Mr. P. C. Manuk, President of the Bar Association, said that the painful duty which devolved upon him as the President was to announce to their Lordships the death of a very distinguished member of the legal profession Sir Asutosh Mookerjee. It had been so very sudden and unexpected that they could hardly realise that that commanding intellect was no more.

Referring to his varied qualities, Mr. Manuk said that endowed by nature with a great and commanding intellect he made study and industry the hand-maidens of that intellect with the results that he showed in many fields of activity. As a vakil of the Calcutta High Court he rapidly climbed the steps of the professional leader.

As a man his amiable disposition and his genial smile endeared him to all with whom he came into contact and disarmed even those with whom he had of necessity to disagree in the course of his public career. All who opposed him either in profession or in public affairs felt that he was a foeman worthy of one's steed who fought hard but fair. When he retired from the Bench the eyes of his countrymen were fixed upon him, for they expected, and rightly expected, his guidance in the stirring political times in which they lived when the old order in India was yielding place to new.

He then on behalf of the Association tendered to the bereaved widow and children and to all those near and dear to him expression of deep condolence with them in their sorrow which Providence would help them to bear. Concluding, he thanked the Chief Justice for having assembled the Full Court to mark the passing away of so commanding a figure in the modern history of India.

Mr. Sheo Saran Lal, President of the Vakils Association, stated that the judgments of Sir Asutosh were monuments of legal lore and research. As an ardent educationist, he was for many years the Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University and for many more years, as a leading member of the Syndicate, he guided its destinies with energy and thoroughness so characteristic of the man. As an erudite scholar and man of great culture, he was both deeply interested and versed in History, Art, and Archaeology of India, and as a philanthropist, his generosity to every deserving cause, both public and private, was well-known. India could ill-afford to lose so early so great and so worthy a son. But India, his dear ones and friends must bow to the inscrutable decrees of Providence.

The Chief Justice, Hon. Sir Thomas Dawson-Miller said :—"On behalf of Bench I desire earnestly to express our deep regret at the sorrowful event which you and Mr. Manuk have referred to in such moving terms. Only a few days ago Sir Asutosh Mookerjee was amongst us taking an active part in our discussions and to all outward appearances, in full vigour of his manhood. Thought of death must have been as remote from his mind as it was from the minds of those with whom he was in daily intercourse. To-day with appalling suddenness he has passed away from us for ever, but the memory of his great personality remains so strongly impressed upon us all who have been so intimately associated with him in these last months of his life that it is difficult to believe that he is no longer with us. The shock of his sudden death has been so great that it is hardly possible yet to realise the full force of the loss which not only his friends but the whole of legal profession, I may say the whole of India, has sustained by his untimely death. On behalf of the Bench I desire to express our profound sympathy with Lady Mookerjee and his family who have been left behind to mourn his loss. Out of respect to his memory, the Court to-day will be closed for further business.

LAW'S DELAY.

To
THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

You appear to have opened the hospitable columns of your journal for ventilation of opinions about law's delay and to have ably and comprehensively dealt with the subject in the editorial notes of your journal in many of its issues. As the main points may be clouded by the volume of matters introduced in connexion with the subject, I would venture to make the following suggestions, though most of them are not new and original, by way of summary of the leading points tending to minimise delay in the dispensation of justice in Mofussil Courts :—

(1) Registration of plaints—I would suggest, as you have done, that the filing of process fee, copies of plaints and the first processes should precede the registration of plaints.

(2) Service of processes :—

I would venture to differ from you on this subject and am of opinion that service through the agency of Post Office and panchayats may not be as effective and satisfactory as desired. Corruption is not the monopoly of Civil Court peons and opportunity and lack of proper control may make postal peons and Chowkidars as corrupt, if not more. Judicial Officers shall have no control over them and will find it very difficult to mete out punishments to those in fault. The strictness with which the process-servers are now dealt with on account of the orders on the subject by the Hon'ble High Court and District Judges has minimised the evil to a great extent and my experience for 17 years as a Munsif and for 7 years as a pleader has shown that instances of suppression of processes are much rarer now than they were before. I would therefore suggest that the service of processes should be kept in the hands of trained process-servers under the control of Judicial Officers, with this exception that processes requiring service outside the jurisdiction of individual Courts should be served through the agency of Post Office. Much delay is caused in service of processes outside the jurisdiction of individual Courts and suitors find it very difficult to procure identifiers in distant places and to appear when the process-servers mind to serve the processes entrusted to them for a period. Service of processes may be made highly effective if it can be made obligatory on persons served with processes to sign their names or put their thumb-impressions.

(3) Adjournments :—

Judicious adjournments after due regard to the state of files and convenience of parties may minimise the delay. The suggestions that pleaders as a rule, cause delay or that Judicial Officers cannot record depositions properly are not worthy of notice.

(4) Distribution of work :—

(a) I do not think that the allotment of a special day for disposal of rent suits or assignment of all rent suits to one Court is likely to be of any help in the matter. There are some Courts which have to deal mostly with rent suit and there are others which have to deal with rent suits as complicated as title suits. The fixing of dates of hearing of rent suits should be in the discretion of the presiding officers and any rigid rule on the subject may hamper the orderly progress in disposal of suits.

(b) I would suggest that all provincial Judicial Officers should be known as Subordinate Judges or Deputy Judges 1st and 2nd grade and that Subordinate Judges 1st grade with appellate powers and powers of Assistant Sessions Judges should be posted in important Sub-Divisions in order to have civil and criminal appeals quickly disposed of and to prevent congestion in District Courts. This arrangement is likely to minimise delay in appeals and to help decentralisation.

(5) Execution proceedings:—

Issue of registered card to every judgment-debtor in case of execution sales is likely to be of great advantage for prevention of institution of cases for setting aside sales on the ground of fraud and irregularity; and processes of attachment and sale proclamation, if allowed to be simultaneously issued in all cases, may expedite the disposal of execution cases to some extent.

Yours truly,
SHASHI JIBAN SEN,
Munsif, Kasba.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before GREAVES AND CHAKRAVARTY, JJ. S. A. No. 586 OF 1922. KRISHNA MOHON CHOWDHURY, Plaintiff-Appellant v. GOUR SUNDER CHOWDHURY and another, Defendants-Respondents. The 1st May 1924.

Specific Relief Act, sec. 42—Suit for declaration without consequential relief—Court-fees ad valorem, when to be paid—Court Fees Act, Sch. II, Art. 17.

The Plaintiff instituted a suit to have a solenama and a decree based thereon in a partition suit declared null and void and inoperative as having been obtained by undue influence, coercion and fraud. The Defendants raised the question whether the suit was maintainable without the payment of ad valorem court-fee and also whether the suit was bad under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act as the plaint disclosed no consequential relief. Both Courts held that ad valorem court-fee was to be paid and further held that sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act was a bar and dismissed the suit. In second appeal it was contended that the suit as framed was maintainable with a court-fee of Rs. 10 and the question regarding the plea in bar under sec. 42 did not arise at that stage (cited 27 C. W. N. 972 : s. c. 37 C. L. J. 499):

Held—That the plaint as framed should be registered on a court-fee stamp of Rs. 10, as the case came under Art. 17, Sch. II of the Court Fees Act and no ad valorem fee was necessary; that the question as to applicability of sec. 42 of Specific Relief Act could not be decided before the plaint was registered.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before SUHRAWARDY AND GRAHAM, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 32 OF 1923. KHETRA MOHAN DAS (Defendant No. 1), Appellant v. BISWA NATH BERA and another, (Plaintiff and Defendant No. 2), Respondents. The 2nd April 1924.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), sec. 6 (e)—Assignment of right to sue for accounts, if valid and enforceable in law.

Plaintiff purchased two mouzas from Defendant No. 2 in Falgun 1327 A. S. together with his right to call for accounts, and papers and also to recover the sum of money which would be found due to him from the Defendant No. 1 who was his gomasta upon taking accounts. The suit out of which this appeal arose was brought by the Plaintiff-Respondent against the Defendant No. 1 the gomasta of Defendant No. 2 for accounts and papers, etc., from 1310 to 1327 A. S. and also for recovery of the sum which would be found due by the Defendant No. 1 upon taking such account. The Defendant No. 1 was liable on the basis of a security kabuliyat executed by him in favour of the Defendant No. 2 in Kartick 1306 A. S. to submit all papers, accounts and also to pay all moneys found due by him upon such accounts being taken.

The trial Court decided that the transaction was a transfer of this Defendant No. 2's mere right to sue and that it was unenforceable and inoperative under sec. 6 (e), Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). The suit was dismissed. The lower Appellate Court determined that the transaction was a transfer of the Defendant No. 2's right to recover from the Defendant No. 1 a specific sum of money that would be found embezzled by him upon taking accounts and remanded the case to the primary Court for taking accounts (Or. 41, r. 23):

Held—(a) Mere right to sue for account as also that for money which might be found due upon taking such account are both unassignable under sec. 6, cl. (e) of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882).

(b) Mere right to litigation cannot be transferred.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before PEARSON AND GRAHAM, JJ. M. A. No. 313 OF 1922. HARIPADA HALDAR and others, Judgment-debtors, Appellants v. BARADA PRASAD ROY CHOWDHRY and others, Respondents. The 8th May 1924.

Limitation—Application to set aside sale—Application under sec. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, if cognisable under sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Art. 166, if governs all applications to set aside execution sale—Art. 166, if applies to an application to set aside sale under sec. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The facts material to this report are as follows:—The decree-holder Respondent Barada Prosad Roy Chowdhry in execution of his rent decree put up the jama of the judgment-debtors Appellants and their co-sharers to sale, and it was purchased by Jadunath Sarma in July 1918. In August 1920, that is, more than two years after the sale, three of the judgment-debtors, the Appellants, applied to set aside the sale under Or. 21, r. 90, sec. 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and sec. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The question arose whether the period of limitation would be three years under Art. 181, or 30 days under Art. 166 of the Limitation Act. The Appellants relied on sec. 18, and Art 181 of that Act to bring it within time. The Respondents contended that Art. 166 was applicable and the application was barred. The Munsif of Diamond Harbour held that the application was barred under Art. 166, and dismissed the application. On appeal by the Appellants, the Additional District Judge of 24-Parganas affirmed the decision of the Munsif, and dismissed the appeal. Against this order of the Additional District Judge the Appellants preferred this appeal, and also filed an application for revision in the alternative. A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the Respondents to the competency of the appeal on the ground that in so far as the application was one under sec. 173, Bengal Tenancy Act, no appeal lay either to this Court or to the Court of first appeal.

As their Lordships dismissed the appeal on the merits they did not decide the preliminary objection, or pass any order on the application for revision:

Held—That the application was barred under Art. 166 of the Limitation Act, and the decision of the Courts below was affirmed.

Under the old Limitation Act, Art. 166 was restricted to a particular class of applications, but as now worded is very much wider and quite general in its terms governing all applications to have an execution sale set aside. An application under sec. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is cognisable under sec. 47 of the C. P. C., and Art. 166 of the present Limitation Act governs such an application.

Chandmani v. Santomani, 1 C. W. N. 534; Satish v. Nishi Kanta, 46 Cal. 975: Chandrama v. Maharaja of Burdwan, 38 I. C. 209 referred to.

Babu Hiralal Chakravarti for the Appellants.

Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur (with Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen) for the decree-holder Respondent.

Babu Manmatha Nath Roy for the judgment-debtors Respondents Nos. 5 and 6.

Birthday Honours.

Amongst the birthday honours recently announced, the Knighthoods conferred on Mr. Justice Newbould and Mr. Provash Chandra Mitter, Vakil, and lately a Minister of Bengal, are of interest to the profession on this side of India. We offer our hearty congratulations to both.

Valuation for jurisdiction—A plea for reform of the law.

The decision reported at p. 710 of this volume (Saroda Sundari Bosu v. Akramanessa Khatun) aptly illustrates the unsatisfactory state of the existing law for determining the valuation of suits for purposes of jurisdiction. This was a suit for redemption brought in the Munsif's Court, apparently because the principal money stated to be due on the bond was below Rs. 1,000. Objection to the competency of the Court was taken by the Defendant on the ground that the amount actually due on the bond would upon adjudication be found to be above Rs. 1,000, and that though for purposes of court-fees the Plaintiff was entitled to value the suit at the figure stated in the bond as the principal amount secured, sec. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act did not require the valuation for purposes of jurisdiction in redemption suits to follow that for the purposes of court-fees. This quite logical interpretation of the law found favour with the Munsif and ultimately with the High Court. The Munsif accordingly proceeded to decide what was due on the bond—the very issue of the suit on the merits—for the purpose of seeing whether he had jurisdiction to try it. He found that the amount due would exceed Rs. 1,000, but as his jurisdiction was limited to claims up to Rs. 1,000, he had no alternative left but to return the plaint for presentation to the proper Court, though if his jurisdiction had not been limited, the finding would have enabled him to pass his decree in the suit.

The Plaintiff appealed, and the lower Appellate Court was of opinion that the valuation for jurisdiction should follow that for purposes of court-fees, and so without going into the question of what amount was actually due to the Defendant on the bond the said Court remanded the case for trial to the Munsif. The High Court, as observed before, did not accept the lower Appellate Court's view of the law. But the lower Appellate Court was not asked, as according to strict law it might have been, to find what in its view (that Court being the final Court of facts) was actually due on the bond. The High Court accepting the Munsif's finding on the point ordered that the plaint be returned to the Plaintiff for presentation in the proper Court. And so (mark this) was avoided the possibility of the lower Appellate Court finding on the evidence that the amount actually due was less than Rs. 1,000 and taking the very logical course of remitting the case to the Munsif for finding again on the same or perhaps fresh evidence what amount was due on the bond for the purpose of passing a decree in the suit, and the further possibility of that Court finding again on the merits that the amount due was above Rs. 1,000 and again returning the plaint for presentation to the proper Court, for it is perfectly arguable that the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the preliminary issue of jurisdiction being on a collateral issue was not res judicata; and this view would receive support from the further consideration that if the findings for the purpose of jurisdiction by the Appellate Court were binding as res judicata for all purposes, the Appellate Court would be competent to pass a decree in the suit for the amount found due upon appeal on the question of jurisdiction, and a remand for trial on the merits would be unnecessary. It might no doubt be argued with reason that on the question of valuation for purposes of jurisdiction, the decision of the Appellate Court would be final, so that the trial Court would have jurisdiction to dispose of the case on the merits, and having jurisdiction to decide on the evidence, his decision that the amount actually due was over Rs. 1,000 would be intra vires, however anomalous and illogical it may appear to be. One may thus find oneself driven to an illogical situation by the very endeavour to be strictly logical. In the present case, the High Court accepted the Munsif's finding that the amount due was above Rs. 1,000, and ordered the plaint to be returned to be presented in a Subordinate Judge's Court. This, it may be taken, has finally determined the question of jurisdiction, but does not prevent the Subordinate Judge who shall try the suit from finding that the amount actually, or as the judgment says "ultimately," due is less than Rs. 1,000. Then again, it may be asked, is it open to the Court in arriving at a finding for purposes of jurisdiction as to what may be ultimately due on the bond to regard pleas of payment or other pleas for reducing the amount? We cannot think if the matter had been put before the Division Bench at the hearing of the case, they would have held that for determining such questions as the court-fee payable or the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain a suit, regard can be had to anything except the allegations in the plaint. The written statement of the Defendant and the allegations therein can have nothing to do with such questions.

The law cannot be satisfactory which makes it possible for bonâ fide litigants to exhaust their resources and waste their own time and the Courts' in striving to reach a solution on a more or less academical issue before they are enabled to come to grips upon the matter in dispute. To be sent from Court to Court and back again like battledores and shuttlecocks is not a dignifying spectacle from whatever point of view the matter is viewed. The game has to be terminated in most instances by a tour de force performed in the name of logic as was done in this case and in Chanderbodan v. Sheodhar, 18 C. W. N. 380, and the final result may nevertheless be as illogical as ever.

The point we desire to establish is that this is one of those cases where an arbitrary rule is more conducive to justice than strict conformity to logic. What litigants want is a definite "rule of the road" to Courts and not a rule of logic to be applied in each case by anticipating results which ex hypothesi must be uncertain. Claims for accounts and mesne profits prove mints of money to legal practitioners but veritable morasses to litigants. In the class of cases of which the one under notice is an illustration, let it be laid down once for all that the amount to be taken for determining jurisdiction is the principal money stated on the bond, or, the same with interest calculated up-to-date without regard to pleas available in reduction of the amount—one or the other, it does not matter which. As regards suits in which mesne profits or accounts are demanded, let the Plaintiff's valuation be accepted as conclusive for this purpose whatever the ultimate decision of the Court. Valuation for purposes of court-fee calls for some reasonable approach to precision to satisfy the claims of the State, but there is no earthly reason for wasting time and money on questions of valuation for purposes of jurisdiction.

PART I.

ESTOPPEL AGAINST CONSENTING REVERSIONERS.

BY D. R. VAIDYA, SUB-JUDGE, 2ND CLASS, KHANDWA, C. P.

"A Hindu reversioner has no right in presenti in the property which the female owner holds for her life. Until it vests in him on her death, should he survive her, he has nothing to assign or to relinquish or even to transmit to his heirs. His guardian cannot bargain with it or bind him by any contractual engagement in respect thereto." (Amrit Narayan Sing v. Ganga Sing, I. L. R. 45 Cal. 590 P. C.).

The interest of a Hindu reversioner is a mere possibility and comes within the prohibition of sec. 6, cl. (a) of Act IV of 1882. Under sec. 2 of the said Act, "nothing in the second chapter of this Act shall be deemed to affect any rule of Hindu, Muhammadan or Buddhist law." Sec. 6, indeed, occurs in the second chapter. If there is any rule of Hindu law authorizing dealings in reversionary rights, the prohibition in sec. 6 (a) will not apply. It has been held that Hindu law is against traffic in spes successionis. (Bai Parwati v. Dayabhai, I. L. R. 44 Bom. 488: Macleod, C. J.). It will thus be seen that dealings in reversionary rights come within the prohibition of sec. 6 (a), and the statutory law of India has outlawed all such transactions. It is not open to Courts to disregard the prohibition.

Dr. Gour in his commentary on the Transfer of Property Act says: "This clause merely prohibits a transfer of a mere possibility. It does not prohibit a contract for its transfer in future, in which case a deed intended to operate as a transfer in praesenti may still be used as an executory contract, of which specific performance might be enforced in a properly constituted suit and subject to the law governing it. Generally speaking such agreements are not void merely because they happen to be made at a time when the interest of the executant is merely one in expectancy, and the Courts in England, as well as in this country, have enforced them on the ground that the executant is bound in foro conscientiæ to make good his promise when he obtains an estate in possession." The same learned Doctor observes: "In the face of the positive prohibition here enacted there is no room for the application of the doctrine of English equity which upholds an assignment of such interests if made for a valuable consideration. In this respect the rule here enacted is different, since Indian law recognizes no distinction between law and equity, and the transfer once prohibited cannot be legalized by any rule of equity or equitable considerations" (pp. 120, 136, 142, Vol. I., 4th Ed.). It appears, in justice to Dr. Gour, that he is merely quoting opinions of others without giving us the benefit of his own opinion, unless we are to gather it by his quotations without comment.

We have now the high authority of the Rt. Hon. Syed Ameer Ali that not only bargaining with reversionary rights but even contractual engagements in respect thereto are prohibited. Sec. 23 of the Indian Contract Act contains this prohibition against contracts, as sec. 6 (a) of Act IV of 1882 contains the prohibition against transfers. Contracts which are forbidden by law or which defeat the provisions of any law are under that section no contracts at all. When we uphold such agreements, we but compel indirectly the doing of such things as are directly prohibited by law. To be consistent one must outlaw both executed and executory contracts with respect to reversionary rights. Amrit Narayan's case expressly enunciates this prohibition as being one both against contracts and transfers.

We must understand the reason of the prohibition. Napier, J., said: "The then existing next heir who may be in impecunious circumstances and prepared to lend himself to any arrangement for the sake of some ready money by which the greater part of the property will be diverted from the person who at the falling in of the estate would be entitled to the whole." (Chinnaswami Pillay v. Appaswami Pillay, I. L. R. 42 Mad. 25.)

There is an element of justice in the rule which upholds these transactions, if supported by valuable consideration and if no undue advantage is taken of the needy, thoughtless reversioners. It also appeals to one's sense of justice that a man should not be allowed to back out of his solemn transactions and that he should be compelled to make good his promise. In fact this very element of justice has biassed the opinion of good judges against the consenting reversioners. Learned Judges are found trying to get out of the prohibition.

We must first consider our attitude towards minors. Transactions by infants are outlawed altogether. There is nothing unjust if we uphold their bargains provided there is valuable consideration flowing into the minors' pockets and no undue advantage is taken of the infant. But nobody would think of doing that. Why? The reason is this:—For a few fair bargains by minors, there are bound to be such a large number of unfair bargains that there need be no enquiry at all into their propriety. For all practicable purposes, these judgments primâ facie are so true and just that it is better to ignore the small number of fair bargains. It will do us no good if we peep into the huge dustbin of the far too large a number of unfair bargains, the few may be sacrificed that the too many may not even have a chance of audience in Courts.

The choice of a principle is thus no easy task. We have to choose only between two evils. It is always better to choose the lesser evil. Let us fully bear in mind that the chosen principle is not an unmixed good and that it is but the least evil chosen. If that is done, we will be able to hold on to it. We shall be able to shut our eyes on the small element of justice in the discarded rule only when we firmly take hold of the reason of our choice. If this is done, there will be possible the most loyal obedience to the statutory prohibition.

Exactly like infants is the case of reversioners. They are not knaves but only fools. They come before Courts not as breakers of law but as innocent victims of cunning people. They do not come there to blow up the law Courts, but seek its august powerful protection against the rapacity of the world. They do not want "to blow hot and cold in the same breath," "to back out of their solemn pledges," they seek law's protection as against their indiscretion and thoughtlessness. Courts of law ought to throw their cloak of protection round these grown up infants and not insist on the plighted pound of flesh being torn from their limbs. Only this angle of vision will set it right.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

May 7th.—The hearing of Indian appeals by the Privy Council was expected to commence last week but no satisfactory Board could be formed; in the result a Board has been sitting only for the hearing of Crown Colony appeals where principles of English law are applicable.

The Indian list contains 16 appeals, and as the Court will rise for Whitsun at the beginning of June, time is short. It is to be hoped that they will not be compelled to have two Boards sitting simultaneously.

There are five appeals from Patna, three from Bombay and two each from Allahabad and Lower Burma, the remainder being contributed by Bengal, Oudh, Madras and Lahore.

An interesting question is raised in an appeal from Bombay as to whether the reversioner to the estate of an intestate Hindu who left his mother as heir, is disqualified from inheriting because he had murdered the woman.

The list on the whole does not appear to be a heavy one.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before SUHRAWARDY AND DUVAL, JJ. S. A. No. 840 OF 1922. KALI PRASANNA KAR and others, Plaintiffs-Appellants v. MD. EASIN and others, Respondents. The 21st May 1924.

Bengal Tenancy Act, sec. 52—Enhancement of rent for the increase in area—Sec. 30, cl. (b)—Enhancement of rent for rise in price of staple food crops.

The Plaintiffs instituted a suit for enhancement of rent on the grounds of increase in area and rise in the price of staple food crops with respect to an occupancy holding which comprised some demarcated plots of mal lands and portion of homestead land and tank held jointly with other co-sharer tenants. The lower Courts granted enhancement of rent on the ground of increase in area only. The Plaintiffs preferred this second appeal and contended that the demarcated parcels of land and the portions of homestead land and tank constituted a holding within the meaning of sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and as such rent was liable to be increased:

Held—That the demarcated parcels of land and the portions of homestead land and tank did not constitute a holding within the meaning of sec. 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

NOTES

O'Dwyer v. Sankaran Nair.

The impeachment of Warren Hastings is one of the causes celebres in connexion with British rule in India. And so is the recent case of O'Dwyer v. Sankaran Nair. As in the one, so in the other, the official whose conduct was in question has been upheld. It is not for us to say whether there has been a miscarriage of justice. We have not got a complete record of the evidence which was led at the trial. Nor have we any idea as to how the case for the defence was actually put before the jury. But this much we are bound to say that the Plaintiff in choosing his forum in London did not give his opponent a sporting chance. The events complained of happened in the Punjab. A large number of witnesses were examined on commission. Evidence on commission is not so satisfactory as evidence actually given in open Court. Even a judge finds it difficult to follow and often finds it boresome. How much more so must have appeared the evidence of witnesses taken here on commission before an English jury. We think if the object of Sir Michael O'Dwyer in launching this action was to retrieve his reputation as an efficient Governor and a kind-hearted gentleman, the verdict which he has obtained will prove to him valueless.

Sir Sankaran had from the beginning a very great difficulty to contend with. The judge showed a marked bias for the Defendant. He mixed up legal and political considerations and his observations to the jury clearly show that he wanted the jury to weigh not merely the evidence actually before them, but also to take an imperial view of the case as a whole. In a case like the present it may be humanly impossible to separate the two aspects. Assuming, however, that had the trial Judge observed a studied silence throughout the trial, the verdict would have been the same as actually given, still we think Mr. Justice McCardie was ill-advised in taking the course he did. Judging from the reports which appeared in the newspapers, the political views to which he gave free expression in the course of the trial were of a pronouncedly partisan character. We have heard of judges who used to force the verdict they wanted out of the jury. We do not say Mr. Justice McCardie is one of them, but we cannot help saying that his conduct throughout the trial has caused intense pain to those who are anxious to keep the fountain of justice pure and undefiled.

Commissioners of Partition, who should appoint.

Mr. Jitendra Nath De, pleader, Hooghly, writes with reference to our criticisms of the recent circular of the District Judge of Hooghly taking away from subordinate Courts the power hitherto exercised by them to appoint Commissioners for partition in suits pending in their own Courts, that in the list prepared by the District Judge, "survey-knowing pleaders of the Sub-Divisions including the Sadar, have been grouped separately," so that as a rule "a commission of Howrah goes to a pleader of that Court first, but when all the survey-knowing pleaders of a certain Sub-Division are engaged and none of them is found free to execute a fresh commission, a pleader of a different Sub-Division is appointed to execute that commission to expedite the matter." Thus, "so long as the services of a local pleader are available, no commission is issued to a pleader of another Sub-Division." This is very re-assuring, so far as it goes. But what we cannot understand is why the subordinate Courts themselves cannot be left to work this list on the same principle and must be required to refer every case calling for the appointment of a Commissioner to the District Judge?

"Because," says Mr. De, "it is not possible for all the Courts to enquire every time whether a certain pleader has already been engaged and is executing commission of another Court." Why not? "Moreover," says Mr. De, "by the present system introduced, all the survey-knowing pleaders would get equal number of commissions without even asking for the same," whereas "if every Court would appoint Commissioners only enquiring from a pleader whether he has got any work in his hand, the result would be that the work cannot be distributed evenly." If this be the real motive of the circular, what is there in it except hair-splitting arithmetic masquerading as justice? If to-day three Commissioners are wanted for the Courts at Howrah and one only by the Courts at Hooghly and there are two survey-knowing pleaders, not fully occupied, in the Howrah list, would it be such a calamity to appoint one of them to two of these commissions that to avoid this a pleader from Hooghly must be inducted to Howrah to take one out of his hands, whatever the resulting inconvenience to the parties? If this exaggerated sense of equality be not checked and restrained in time, it would not be long before Judges would be thinking of making rules for the equal distribution of professional work amongst the pleaders practising in their Courts.

Mr. De, in the course of his letter, gives us the interesting information that commissions have sometimes been issued by the District Court of Hooghly to pleaders of the Alipur Bar even, "for expediting matters"! He would have us believe that this was because the hands of the local experts were just then so full that foreign talent had to be imported to prevent a deadlock. Mr. De will pardon us if we cannot persuade ourselves to accept this explanation of what appears to us to constitute on the face of it the strongest condemnation of the policy of centralisation which is being pursued at Hooghly, and perhaps elsewhere, in the matter of appointment of Commissioners. May we inquire, if it is never the case that of two persons in the same list, one shows greater ability and despatch in this kind of work than another and why in such a case the former should not, within the same time, get more work of this kind than the latter? It is not as if the parties have no say in this matter, and they may surely be trusted to see that their vital interests in the suit are not jeopardised by mere favouritism on the part of the Judge.

PART I.

ESTOPPEL AGAINST CONSENTING REVERSIONERS.

BY D. R. VAIDYA, SUB-JUDGE, 2ND CLASS, KHANDWA, C. P.

Courts in India appear to refuse to put their cloak of protection round these reversioners. They throw it round pardanashin ladies and infants. Justice demands that reversioners though grown up, should be protected. Manu has observed: "For a man destitute of knowledge is, indeed, a child, the sages have always said 'child' to an ignorant man." (Ch. 2, 146-148, 150-156, S. B. E.). Judges should assume this attitude of mind towards reversioners. They will not then be misled by the element of justice in the discarded rule. If the discarded rule contains a small element of justice, the accepted rule of prohibition contains a far greater element of justice in it. The decisions in India show a regrettable tendency against these prayers of reversioners. There is nothing at the bottom of this attitude except the fact that the true reason of the prohibition is not appreciated. Once this is done, no attempts will be made to get round statutes, no hair-splitting distinctions without any difference will be made; many inconsistencies and conflicts of opinion will be avoided; and the tangle would be straightened.

The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court, in Mahadeo Prasad Sing v. Mata Prasad (I. L. R. 44 All. 44), after exhaustively reviewing the case-law on the point, arrived at the conclusion that the consenting reversioner is estopped. They referred to Amrit Narayan's case and observed: "No one can dispute that the right of succession of a reversioner is not a transferable right," and yet they said that no question of estoppel arose in that case! The learned Judges of the same High Court, in the Full Bench case of Fatesing v. Thakur Rukmini Ravaji Maharaj, [1923] All. 387, All-India Reporter, affirmed this view. Here again the learned Judges referred to Amrit Narayan's case in these terms :—" Undoubtedly this is authority for the proposition that when he joined in the execution of this deed on the 12th of May 1905, Fatesing possessed no interest in the property therein referred to, which he could assign or relinquish; his right became concrete only on the demise of Mt. Munian, until then it was a mere spes successionis, without in any way questioning the correctness of this principle. . . . . ." The reasons which led the learned Judges to arrive at a conclusion contrary to that in Amrit Narayan's case appear to be conveyed by the following passage in the judgment :—" We have examined this document and we find that it is drawn up in the strongest possible terms. The two executants purport to renounce whatever rights and relinquish whatever interests they might conceivably possess under the Hindu law in respect of the property covered by the deed of gift : but they do even more than this. They expressly covenant that at no time hereafter will either of them or their heirs, successors or representatives, set up any right or claim whatsoever to the property." One can legitimately enquire if this is any reason at all. The strong terms do but express in so many words what in fact is implied in the simply-worded deed. On the contrary the strong terms leave no doubt that the deed shows a clear dealing in uncertainties and contractual engagements in respect thereto. If the " strong terms " are of any weight at all, they are rather against allowing it. It is like the doings of Excise Authorities who would say : " Mild vintages are allowed, strong ones are banned." The learned Judges found support for their view in an observation of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rangaswami Gounden's (I. L. R. 42 Mad. 523, P. C.), where they said : " Of course something might be done even before that time (death of the widow) which amounted to an actual election to hold the deed good." This is scarcely fair to their Lordships, especially when there are deliberate, considered pronouncements of that high tribunal specifically on this point.

Justice Gokul Prasad, in Ram Dayal v. Mithu Lal, [1923] All. 410 All-India Reporter) said : " Nor could the assent of the next reversioner amount to a relinquishment, because he had no vested interest which could be relinquished." In Narain Singh v. Raj Kumar Sing (I. L. R. 44 All. 428), Gokul Prasad and Ryves, JJ., following Amrit Narayan's case held that the guardian mother could not bargain away her son's reversionary rights.

In Bai Parvati v. Dayabhai (I. L. R. 44 Bom. 488), Macleod, C. J., very properly held that a reversioner, joining in the deed of transfer by the widow, was not estopped. In Basappa v. Fakirappa (I. L. R. 46 Bom. 292), the same learned Judge, with Justice Shah, decided quite the other way, and observed that in the former case the question of estoppel was not argued. The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court observed that Bai Parvati's case certainly decided that a consenting reversioner was not estopped (I. L. R. 44 All. 44). In Bechardas v. Doongersey, [1922] Bom. 437, All-India Reporter, Macleod, C. J., along with Justice Coyajee, held that a reversioner could not relinquish his rights in the life-time of the widow. The learned Chief Justice observed that the reversioner was not estopped. He gave as the reason thereof that there were no acts on faith of his consent. It is humbly submitted that it was not so. There was the will by the widow on the faith of that consent and there ought to have been estoppel on that ground. But there can be no estoppel against the statute and this is the real ground of there being no estoppel. It appears as if the decision was right, though the reason thereof was not right and the end justifies the means!

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

The following business has been transacted by the Privy Council.

May 9th. In the Council Chamber before LORDS SHAW and BLANESBURGH and MR. AMEER ALI. Asharfi Singh v. Bidya Prasad (Patna).

The Appellant claimed a declaration of title to land under a grant from a Hindu widow. The question turned upon the construction of a deed of gift under which the lady came into possession of the property.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and E. B Raikes for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

May 9th. Before the same Board. Jagatput Singh v. Puran Chand (Bengal).

In this appeal there was a question as to whether a suit had been settled by Counsel for both parties during the hearing.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Macaskie for the Appellant.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kyffin for the Respondent.

Appeal dismissed.

May 12th. Before LORDS DUNEDIN, PHILLIMORE and CARSON and SIR JOHN EDGE. Kenchana, K. S. Hosmani v. Girimallappa C. Somasgar (Bombay).

This was an important appeal in which Mr. E. B. Raikes appeared ex parte for the Appellant.

The questions raised were whether a murderer can under Hindu law succeed to, or become a stock of descent for, the estate of the person murdered, and the further question arose whether in the Southern Maharatta Country the son of the paternal aunt is a nearer heir than the daughters of the paternal uncle of an intestate.

Judgment has been reserved.

May 12th and 13th. Ganga Ram v. Natha Singh.

This appeal was also heard ex parte by the same Board.

The Appellant was represented by Mr. W. Wallach.

The question at issue was whether on the construction of a mortgage the interest was a charge on the land. LORD DUNEDIN delivered judgment at the conclusion of the argument allowing the appeal.

In the Board Room before LORDS SHAW and BLANESBURGH and MR. AMEER ALI. Maharaja Kesho Prasad Singh v. Sheo Parqash Ojha (Allahabad).

The Appellant is the present Maharaja of Dumraon. The Respondents are the reversionary heirs of Monohar Ojha who was a co-sharer with the Raja in certain properties. The Appellant based his title on an alienation by a Hindu widow, and the question of legal necessity arose; there is also a question of res judicata.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Majid for the Respondent.

May 12th, 13th, 15th and 16th. In the same Court an appeal was heard from Bengal. Maharaja Sir R. Singh of Darbhanga v. Hitendra Singh.

The dispute arose in execution proceedings in which a Receiver had been appointed by consent. The effect of a compromise was considered and the re-opening of it.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Abdul Majid for the Raja.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. B. Dubé for the Respondent.

On May 13th. Judgment was delivered dismissing the appeal of the Imperial Tobacco Co., India, Ltd. v. Bonnan (Bengal).

May 13th. Mahanu Wahad Lotu v. Khandu Walad Patil (Bombay).

The suit was brought to eject the Appellant from certain lands. His defence was that the title deeds alleged by the Respondent to be deeds of sale were understood by him to be simple mortgages.

Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellant.

Mr. Parikh for the Respondent No. 2.

Appeal dismissed.

Rai Radha Krishun v. Jag Sahu (Patna).

The question for determination is whether, as stipulated in a mortgage deed executed by the manager of joint family property, compound interest is chargeable.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Ramsay for the Respondent.

May 19th and 20th. R. Vaidyanatha Ayyar v. S. Tyagaraja Ayyar (Madras).

This was a dispute as to the management of a religious charity. The Plaintiffs were remote descendants of the founder. The Appellant contended that there was no public trust and that the Plaintiffs had not an "interest" within the meaning of sec. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code to justify their institution of the suit.

Messrs. Upjohn, K. C. and A Majid for the Appellants.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Narasimham for the Respondents were not called upon.

Judicial Vagaries in England.

The unjudicial attitude of Mr Justice McCardie has shocked public opinion in England, no less than it has in India. We have never known a High Court Judge in India to perpetrate such indiscretions. It reminds one of the raw Mofussil Magistrates of days gone by. We have known of magisterial vagaries of many kinds, but if one like this had been perpetrated in India, his achievements would have been handed down to posterity as quite unique. The magisterial vagaries in England that used once to be pilloried by the late Mr. Labouchere in the columns of the Truth, suffered in no way in comparison with the performance of some of their erratic brothers in India. But the British Magistrates except in the big cities are not stipendiaries but well-nourished country gentlemen to whom poaching seemed to be a more heinous offence than wife-beating that resulted in grievous hurt and deserving of more exemplary punishment. The Members of the Indian Civil Service who come out to this country are of a more cultured class and, whatever their shortcomings may be, they are not always lost to all sense of proportion. The name of Mr. Justice Darling was well-known in India for his judicial indiscretions but the recent performances of Mr. Justice McCardie have taken the shine out of him. We invite attention to the following observations in the New Statesman which have been cabled out to India.

Proposed Parliamentary Censure on Mr. Justice McCardie.

Commenting on Justice McCardie's conduct of the O'Dwyer case the New Statesman says: It seems eminently desirable that Parliament should take some notice of this. Otherwise the impression is bound to spread throughout India that Indians cannot hope for justice when they sue or are sued in an English Court. The verdict was inevitable for it seems clear that a technical libel was committed and the damages agreed to are not excessive but the Judge's "obiter dicta" were such as to cast a stain on the English Bench which will not be easily wiped out. "From the very beginning of the trial he made no secret of his prejudice and in his summing up he even went so far as to condemn the Government of India in the strongest terms for having punished General Dyer, despite the fact that the Government of India were not represented in the trial and had been offered no opportunity of producing evidence on which they acted. Whether General Dyer was right or wrong in firing on an unarmed mob, whether he prevented a second mutiny or was guilty of a stupid and gratuitous outrage, we do not know, but we do know that Justice McCardie is guilty of an outrage upon the principles of British justice in saying what he said without even pretending to have heard all the evidence. He cannot be removed from the Bench without a resolution of both the Houses to which the Lords probably would not assent, but a vote of censure in the Commons will be better than nothing and might do something in India to restore confidence in the sense of justice of the British Parliament, if not of the British Courts."

Mr. Lansbury's motion.

Mr. Lansbury M. P. has given notice of a motion in the House of Commons calling attention to the observations of Mr. Justice McCardie in the above case and moving that an address may be presented to His Majesty praying that he may be removed from the Bench. We do not think that anything tangible will come out of the debate on the motion except that it will give an opportunity to the Commons to express their views on the great issues which have been raised by the decision of the jury as well by the observations of the trial Judge in the above case.

PART I.

ESTOPPEL AGAINST CONSENTING REVERSIONERS.

BY D. R. VAIDYA, SUB-JUDGE, 2ND CLASS, KHANDWA, C. P.

Macleod, C. J., distinguished the case of transfer with consent of reversioner from the case of a transfer of the life-estate and that of the reversion. Justice Walsh was satisfied with this distinction. [1922] All. 387 All-India Reporter. In Rama Nana v. Dhondi Mahari, [1923] Bom. 132, All-India Reporter, Macleod, C. J., said: "If then the widow does not convey her life-estate to the next reversioner, for which she is competent, but purports to convey the fee for which she is incompetent, the real result of the authorities is that the conveyance is split up into its component parts and effect is given to that part which is valid." This is a very lucid statement. If the widow transfers her life-estate in so many words, no dispute would arise at all. What frequently happens is this that she conveys the fee. When a reversioner consents to such a transfer, common sense dictates that the consent is to the transfer of the reversion and not to that of the life-estate; because the life-estate can be transferred without anybody's consent. Shah, J., in Basappa's case observed that the fact of joining in the deed of transfer necessarily showed that the reversioner consented to the transfer. If the reversioner in so many words says that he is transferring his reversionary rights, Macleod, C. J. would be satisfied and would not allow him to do that. If instead of doing it, he merely consents to the transfer by the widow of the fee the learned Judge would split up the whole into its component parts, viz., transfer of the life-estate and a transfer of the reversion with consent of the reversioner. From this point of view, the whole transaction would be understood in a right way.

That a reversioner cannot assign, relinquish, or enter into contractual obligations about the reversionary rights is now firmly established. Dayaram v. Bechardas; [1922] Bom. 437 A. I. R., Amrit Narayan v. Gaya Singh, I. L. R. 45 Cal. 510; Anand Mohun v. Gour Mohun, I. L. R. 48 Cal. 536; Ganga Bai v. Hari Ganesh, I. L. R. 45 Bom. 1167; Bhagwati Kuar v. Jugdam Sahai, 2 Pat. L. T. 471. The only dispute is that the same man cannot consent and back out of it. There is no doctrine in support of this view. In Anand Mohun v. Gour Mohun (I. L. R. 48 Cal. 536), Justice Mookerji observed: "There is manifestly a fundamental difference between non-compliance with the formal requisites prescribed for a transaction whereby alienable property is transferred and an attempt to accomplish a transfer of property which has been rendered inalienable by a statutory provision. The Appellant is in a position of similar difficulty when he invokes the aid of the principle of law which is sometimes referred to as feeding the Court by estoppel. But this principle plainly has no application where the contract of assignment refers to property which has been expressly rendered inalienable by the legislature." The learned Judge explored all the grounds available to justify the transaction and held that none was applicable to transfers of reversionary interests. The doctrine of part performance, the doctrine of feeding the estoppel, the doctrine that sec. 6 (a) of Act IV of 1882 excepts Hindu law from its operation, and the doctrine that equity permits what law may not, were all considered and found insufficient to support dealings in reversionary rights. The whole is summed up in the phrase that there can be no estoppel against the statute.

The question is further complicated by the fact that the consenting reversioner may be a female having only a chance of a life-estate. Shah, J., left the effect of consent of such a reversioner open (I. L. R. 42 Bom. 719) Another question which will arise is whether the consent of a reversioner will bind the actual reversioner. Does the consenting reversioner represent the entire body of the reversioners? There is a conflict on this point. See Hasli v. Hira, 4 Lah. L. J. 201, Gulab Thakur v. Fudali, 68 I. C. 566, Nagpur, Darbarilal v. Gobind Ram, I. L. R. 43 All. 558; I. L. R. 44 All. 19; I. L. R. 43 All. 534.

If the reversioner expectant is very likely to realize the present value of his reversion at a large discount, how much more would a female reversioner be inclined to do that. If an old father, expecting to inherit after the life-estate of the daughter-in-law, expects but a short tenure of it, he would sacrifice very valuable future rights for paltry gains in the immediate present.

Often with these cases is mixed up the question of acceleration of the estate. We can imagine that the widow surrendered the estate to the immediate reversioner and that the latter transferred it after that. Whether the transfer is of the whole estate or substantial portion of it and whether the reversioner is a female or male, are then important questions. We may arrive at the same results as on the ground of estoppel but we must remember that it may not be so always. Though we may ultimately arrive at the same result in some cases, we shall better understand the reason therefor. Confusion of ideas may sometime lead to miscarriage of justice. And lastly there may be cases where we shall arrive at the different conclusions and it is here that we must guard against being misled by the question of estoppel.

In fact there is considerable conflict of opinion on the point whether when a reversioner consents to a transfer by a widow, we can understand the composite transaction to mean that the widow surrenders the estate and the reversioner then transfers it. Then there is much conflict on the question whether a widow can be said to accelerate the succession by surrendering her husband's estate reserving a part of it for her maintenance. Then there is conflict of opinion as to whether the immediate reversioner represents the actual remote reversioners. Lastly, comes the question how far acceleration of estate in favour of a female reversioner may help to validate the composite transfer. To it may be added the questions arising from the consent itself being understood as presumptive proof of justifiable purpose for the transfer. I shall deal with all these aspects in my next article.

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

I have read with keen interest in the newspapers the depositions given by witnesses before the Civil Justice Committee about the causes of Law's Delay in the Civil Courts and also your suggestions published in the 28 C. W. N. 65. For myself I have been thinking about this problem for the last 18 years. I therefore beg to submit for publication in your esteemed Journal the following observations:—

I concur with you when you say that "its chief cause, so far as it exists in the Presidency of Bengal, is that the Civil Courts in the Mofussil are under-manned. The Munsifs and the Subordinate Judges in the Districts are very hard-worked officers." I further beg to add that in their attempts to become Assistant Sessions Judges, some of the most conscientious among them undermine their health and others do positive injury to the litigant public in their zeal for speedy disposal resulting very often in miscarriage of justice. Considering the quality and the q[illegible] the work they have to perform daily it is impossible for them to look to every order that is to be passed in every case. These orders are, therefore, necessarily written and practically passed by the ministerial officers, which is the cause not only of delay but of various kinds of well-known mal-practices too common in Mofussil Courts. This can be stopped if the judicial officers can have sufficient time at their disposal to pass these orders themselves with their considered opinions on them. Next and the most important cause of delay and hardship to the litigant is the present system of process-serving in Bengal. By this system a litigant is to supply an identifier to the process-server and to swear an affidavit as to the service of the process exactly in the same words in which the peon has submitted his return. By the letter of the circular the peon has to write his return in the spot. But the letter of this circular is observed only in its breach.

It is now well-known fact that these peons never write these returns on the spot and in the majority of the cases in which they do actually serve the processes on the persons concerned, they are not accompanied by an identifier. Now the prevalent custom is that these peons on receipt of their dues (bribes) supply the litigants with pencil notes of their return. Along with the universal rise of salaries of public officers and the rise of price of staple food crops the peons, now the process-servers, have raised their just (?) dues. The rapacious demands of these peons have now reached to such a height that civil administration of justice is growing unpopular day by day. The poor litigant has no other alternative but to submit to these demands. By our experience we know, they can have no remedy in Court or elsewhere. The High Court rule about the verification of service by Judge's Nazir do not and in the nature of things cannot produce any salutary effect.

There are suggestions from some quarters that these evils can be remedied by serving the processes through post offices or through the President Panchayats. But this, in my opinion, will not remedy the evil but will only change the agency of the evil. The only way, in my humble opinion, to remedy this evil, is to entrust the litigant himself with the service of the processes and the interests of the persons to be served with processes will be safe-guarded by the simultaneous issue of registered post cards from the Courts. A moment's consideration will show that so far as the service of processes upon the witnesses is concerned, it will certainly save time, trouble and expense of the litigant and at the same time remove the causes of fraudulent suppression of the processes. So far as service upon the opponent is concerned, the simultaneous service of registered post cards and the swearing of affidavit by the litigant himself or his agent and apprehension of criminal prosecution for false swearing will, I believe, prevent fraudulent suppression.

Yours truly,
SURENDRA KUMAR GHOSE,
Pleader.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before WALMSLEY AND CHAKRAVARTY, JJ. S. A. No. 343 OF 1922. MRITTUNJOY CHOWDHURI and others, Appellants v. SHYMA CHARAN DE and others, Respondents. The 2nd June 1924.

Rent suit, by landlord against former tenant—Applicability of sec. 153, Bengal Tenancy Act—Whether first appeal lies if decision relates only to relationship of landlord and tenant.

Plaintiff landlord instituted a suit for rent against the Defendants for rent for the year 1280 M. E. at 10 ans. of paddy per year alleging that the Defendants took a verbal settlement for the year in suit. It was alleged further that thereafter the Defendants abandoned the holding. Defendants in their written statement disputed Plaintiffs' title to the land, denied relationship of landlord and tenant and set up one Akhil Chandra Sen as landlord.

The alleged landlord was not made a party to the suit for rent.

The learned Munsif decreed the Plaintiffs' suit holding that there was relationship of landlord and tenant. An appeal was consequently preferred to the learned District Judge. In appeal the landlord Respondent contended that sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was a bar to the competency of the appeal. The learned Judge overruled this preliminary objection on the ground that an appeal lay in this case since admittedly the suit was brought after the relationship between the parties had ceased and the suit had not been instituted by a landlord.

In second appeal by the landlord the learned vakil for the Appellant contended that no appeal lay to the District Judge and sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was applicable [I. L. R. 27 Cal. 827, 16 C. L. J. 360; 1 C. W. N. 605, 1 C. W. N. 119 (notes) and I. L. R. 16 Cal. 870]. The Respondents' vakil relied on Forbes v. Maharaj Bahadur Singh, I. L. R. 41 Cal. 926:

Held That sec. 153 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was not applicable to the present case inasmuch as the Plaintiff was not the landlord of the Defendant at the time of institution of the suit, I. L. R. 41 Cal. 926, referred to.

Babus Chandra Sekhar Sen and Pravath Ch. Dutt for the Appellants.

Babu Hiralal Chakravarty for the Respondents.

NOTES

Censure motion on Mr. Justice McCardie.

Last week we mentioned that Mr. Lansbury had given notice of a motion for moving an address for the removal of Mr. Justice McCardie from the Bench. On his asking for a day and time for the moving of his motion, the Prime Minister replied that the Government had decided that the moving of such a motion would be undesirable. The Prime Minister stated that such motion would only be permitted for discussion in cases of moral delinquency and not for any expression of opinion regarding the action or conduct of the Executive. The Prime Minister is quite right in the constitutional view he has taken. For, otherwise, the Judges would be reduced to puppets and would always be at the mercy of political parties. For preserving the independence of the Bench, free expression of judicial opinion, however unjust, should not be interfered with by the Executive. The proper authority for censuring such observations is the Appellate Court. If Mr. Sankar Nair appeals, it remains to be seen what the Court of Appeal would say with regard to Mr. Justice McCardie's most extraordinary charge to the jury. Mr. Ramsay MacDonald was, however, quite justified in expressing the opinion, which is shared by lawyers and laymen alike, that "the judiciary should guard itself against pronouncements upon issues involving great political consequences which themselves were not being tried." This practically amounts to a censure on Mr. Justice McCardie and the judiciary will do well to bear this always in mind.

The following is a telegraphic summary of Mr. Lansbury's motion and the Prime Minister's reply :—

In the House of Commons Mr. Lansbury asked if the Government would grant time for discussion of his motion asking for the removal of Justice McCardie from the bench in connection with his summing up in the O'Dwyer case.

Mr. MacDonald said that the Government had come to the conclusion that discussion on this subject would only add to the harm done to India by the words complained of.

As regards Justice McCardie it ought in fairness to be borne in mind that the objectionable passage did not occur in the considered written judgment but in the oral charge to the jury delivered at the conclusion of a lengthy and somewhat heated trial and the very form, in which it was couched, showed that the judge was not informed regarding what took place. He affirmed that the Government completely associated itself, with the decision of the Government and not merely of the Secretary of State for India of the day.

He added that, however unfortunate his words might have been, they clearly did not constitute any kind of fault amounting to moral delinquency, which constitutionally would justify Government's action. The Government would always uphold the rights of the judiciary to pass judgment even on the executive if it thought fit It was therefore all the more necessary that the judiciary should guard itself against pronouncements upon issues involving grave political consequences which themselves were not being tried

Mr. Lansbury expressed that he was perfectly satisfied with Mr MacDonald's statement.

Criminal responsibility and Insanity.

Insanity is often put forward as a defence in murder trials. What degree of dementia would excuse one from the criminal responsibility has been a debatable question of very long standing and has quite recently formed the subject-matter of both academic and legal discussion. The Atkin Committee which was appointed by Lord Birkenhead, when he was Lord Chancellor, has given a quasi-legal recognition to "irresistible impulse." But at the same time this Committee, which was composed of eminent lawyers, unanimously reported in favour of the rule in M'Naghten's case which was recently re-affirmed in Rex v. True (16 Cr. App. R. 164). A Bill was, however, framed by Lord Darling, called the Criminal Responsibility (Trials) Bill, for giving legal recognition to the doctrines of "irresistible impulse." This Bill was introduced in the House of Lords and was debated upon during the third week of May and rejected without a division.

Lord Birkenhead who could not take part in the debate in the House of Lords owing to ill health has addressed a letter to the Times on "irresistible impulse," which advances very weighty arguments as to why it cannot be accepted always as a successful plea against criminal responsibility. He asks:—

"In what manner is the defence of irresistible impulse to be shown to the satisfaction of jury? Sane persons from time to time suffer impulses to do wrong. They, as a rule, resist these impulses. If they do not, and if the wrong which they are thus led to do is one forbidden by the criminal law and they are detected in its commission, they are rightly indicted and rightly convicted. It is precisely the same with the insane. They like sane persons, perhaps to a greater degree, are the subjects of impulses to do wrong. Sometimes they give way to them If they give way to them under the influence of delusion, or not knowing right from wrong, or not understanding the nature of the act which they are committing, they are amply protected under the express words of the M'Naghten rules. But insane persons, like sane persons, give way to impulses sometimes with which their impulses have no connection, and knowing well what they are doing, and that it is wrong. In such cases who is to say whether the impulse was resistible or irresistible? Everyone who has any experience of Criminal Courts can well foresee what will happen. Evidence will be tendered to show that in the family of the accused there is some taint of insanity, that the accused conducted himself at times in a manner unusual among persons of his status and education. The absence of motive will be pointed out. It will be urged that the law recognises that a person, though not wholly deluded, not ignorant of right or wrong, not ignorant of the nature and quality of his acts, may be subject to irresistible impulses, and that, if he is so subject, he is excused criminal responsibility. I have the greatest faith in the institution of jury trial. But it seems to me that such a state of the law and such an argument must place a jury, in whose hands for the time being lies the decision of the issue of life and death, in an impossible position."

The Gopinath Shaha case which was tried in the Calcutta High Court Sessions not very long ago would furnish an object lesson as to the contingencies contemplated above by Lord Birkenhead.

Mr. Justice Horridge, addressing the Grand Jury at the Birkshire Assizes on the 26th of May last, said in the same connection, that certain scientific medical persons had lately started a theory that a man should not be held responsible for actions if actuated by an "irresistible impulse." It is, His Lordship said, impossible to put that into working practice. How was a jury to determine whether a man was actuated by an irresistible impulse arising from mental disorder when he snatched an attractive bag from a lady's hand. His Lordship expressed satisfaction that Lord Darling's Bill did not receive any support in the House of Lords. He referred to Lord Birkenhead's letter in appreciative terms and said that "irresistible impulse arising from mental disorder" was seldom advanced except in murder charges, the reason being, he supposed, that imprisonment in a criminal lunatic asylum was often far more serious than any punishment which might be imposed for a less grave crime than that of murder.

PROCEDURE FOR IMPEACHING AWARDS.

This note will be confined to cases arising in connection with the Indian Arbitration Act. The three main classes of cases are when the award is impeached (i) on grounds mentioned in sec. 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act, viz., that the arbitrator or umpire has misconducted himself or that the arbitration or award has been improperly procured, (these grounds will be referred to hereinafter as "misconduct"), (ii) on the ground of want of jurisdiction, and (iii) mixed grounds of misconduct and want of jurisdiction. Questions of procedure are mainly:—(a) When the aggrieved party takes the offensive, whether he can do so by the summary procedure of petition under the Indian Arbitration Act or by a regular suit? (b) In what cases can objections to award be pleaded as a defence?

I.—Misconduct.

(1) If the award has not been filed in Court.

(a) Does a petition lie to set aside the award?

According to an Allahabad decision of Walsh and Ryves, JJ., in Ramkissendass Brijmohan v. Sushil Chandra Dass (All-India Reporter, 1923, Allahabad 31) such an application is not maintainable. The Allahabad view receives indirect support from a Lahore decision in the case of Hiranand Murlidhar v. Fleming Shaw & Co., 4 Lah. L. J. 12, in which Rossignol and Campbell, JJ., say that "sec. 14 details the causes open to the Court after an award has been filed in Court."

(b) A suit is maintainable in such a case for a declaration that the award is not binding. Such a suit lies under sec. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. It was so held in the above case of Hiranand Murlidhar v. Fleming Shaw & Co. Mookerjee and Chotzner, JJ., held in the case of Baidyanath Chattopadhyaya v. Sm. Panchanani Dassi, 28 C. W. N. 140 : s. c. 37 C. L. J. 542, that "it cannot be contended that an award was not valid because the party in whose favour it was had never applied to have it filed in Court. . . . If the award is valid, it is operative even though neither party has sought to enforce it by a regular suit or by the summary procedure." See also Bhajahari v. Behary Lal, I. L. R. 33 Cal. 881. Therefore if the award is challenged, and an application is not maintainable for the purpose, a suit must lie.

(2) When the award has been filed in Court :—

(a) A petition is the proper procedure for impeaching it when the grounds are all covered by sec. 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in E. D. Sassoon & Co. v. Ramdutt Ramkissendass, L. R. 49 I. A. 366 at 373 : s. c. 27 C. W. N. 660, expressed the following opinion · "Any objection to an award on the ground of misconduct or irregularity on the part of the arbitrator ought, no doubt, to be taken by motion to set aside the award." Compare the case of Oppenheim & Co. v. Mohamud Haneef, L. R. 49 I. A. 174 : s. c. 27 C. W. N. 612 ; [1922] 1 A. C. 482, although this case deals with the corresponding English law. See Form No. 67 given in Russell on Arbitration and Award, 11th Edition, p. 666.

(b) Is a suit maintainable in such a case? If not, is it a question merely of costs or must the suit be dismissed?

Whether an application is the exclusive remedy in such cases was expressly left open by Mookerjee and Fletcher, JJ., in Radha Kissen Khettry v. Lachmi Chand Jhawer, 24 C. W. N. 454 : s. c. 31 C. L. J. 283. In this respect the head-note to the report in 31 C. L. J. is inaccurate.

The point came up for decision before Greaves, J., in Suit No. 3428 of 1922, Uday Chand Pannalall v. P. E. Guzdar & Co., and the learned Judge observed: "I think the contention is correct that this application could, under the circumstances, have been made by motion and not by suit. . . . But I am not prepared to say that the suit is incompetent because the application could have been by a motion and not by suit : and in my reading of the decision of the Judicial Committee" in 27 C. W. N. 642 "this has not been so decided. I can well understand that questions as to costs may arise if the more costly procedure is adopted but I am not prepared to say that the suit is incompetent because the procedure by motion might have been adopted . I hold that the suit is maintainable."

On the 14th of January 1924 the same point was dealt with by C. C. Ghose, J., in Suit No. 2463 of 1921, Balmukund Rina v. Overseas Export and Import, Ltd., which was an undefended case. The learned Judge did not treat the question as one merely of costs but dismissed the suit.

On the 29th of January 1924 the aforesaid judgment of Greaves, J., came up on appeal before Sanderson, C. J. and Richardson, J., in Appeal No 61 of 1923, P. E. Guzdar & Co. v Uday Chand Pannalal. The above judgment of C. C. Ghose, J., was also referred to during argument. In the judgment delivered on the 30th January 1924 the learned Chief Justice observed: "I do not think it necessary to express further opinion upon the question of whether the proceedings by way of suits would lie. I agree with the argument which was submitted by the learned Counsel for the Appellants that the proper proceedings was by way of a petition and motion as is laid down by the rules of the Court. But there is really no substance in that point in this case because, as I have already said, the learned Judge treated the matter as a motion and directed the costs to be taxed on that basis." The appeal was allowed on the merits and the Plaintiff's suit was dismissed with costs on Scale No. II (and not merely costs as of an application).

In such a case ordinarily the Plaintiff can get only the costs as of an application if he succeeds and must pay the costs as of a suit if he fails. This is because the Plaintiff adopted a wrong procedure and must suffer the consequences appropriate to the result. Should the suit be dismissed on the ground that the proper procedure is by way of application, then, of course, the Plaintiff would be entitled to proceed de novo by way of application if within time. It may be observed in passing that the period of limitation for such applications is not ten days as prescribed by Art. 158 of the Indian Limitation Act for applications under the Code of Civil Procedure, 1908, to set aside an award.

(3) After the award has been filed and enforced by execution can the aggrieved party move by petition to set aside the award? This point was left open in 49 I. A. 366 at 373. But in many cases on the Original Side of the Calcutta High Court execution has been levied almost immediately after the filing of the award, and applications for setting aside the awards have been entertained after such execution.

(4) Can the grounds under sec. 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act be taken by way of defence to an action on the award? On this point in the Madras High Court there has been difference of opinion, which has been referred to in the judgment delivered in 49 I. A. 174, but their Lordships expressed no opinion on the question whether if the arbitration had taken place in India the defence on the ground of irregularity could have been pleaded. Their Lordships held that it could not have been pleaded in answer to an action on an award governed by the corresponding English law. In the circumstances it would be advisable to take active steps to set aside the award and not stand on the defensive.

II.—JURISDICTION.

When a duly appointed arbitrator exceeds his jurisdiction, the case comes under sec. 14 of the Indian Arbitration Act and the question is regarded as one of misconduct. In the case of awards, the main questions of jurisdiction, briefly put, are: (i) no submission, (ii) void submission, and (iii) no qualification, e.g., when an Asiatic is appointed as arbitrator whereas the arbitration clause requires an European.

When an award is challenged on the ground of want of jurisdiction:—

(a) Does a suit lie to set aside the award?

This matter was at one time the subject-matter of controversy. Rankin, J. maintained that under the Indian Arbitration Act all applications to set aside an award which has been filed should be made by petition, whatever be the ground. See for instance 31 C. L. J. 283 at p. 291. On appeal Mookerjee and Fletcher, JJ., were not prepared to accept this as correct exposition of the law. And it was held that "where the ground of attack goes to the root of the matter and arises as it were before the constitution of the domestic forum, a suit is maintainable for the investigation and determination of the controversy according to the procedure prescribed by the law." See 24 C. W. N. 464. The Privy Council has set the matter at rest by laying down that "where (as here) it is alleged that an arbitrator has acted wholly without jurisdiction, his award can be questioned in a suit brought for that purpose.

(b) The fact that the award has been enforced by execution under sec. 15 of the Indian Arbitration Act is not a bar to a suit to have it declared void and for consequential relief; see 49 I. A. 366 at p. 373.

(c) Does an application lie to set aside an award alleged to have been made without jurisdiction? The matter has not been put beyond all controversy. In the case of Matulal Dalmia v. Ram Kissen Das, I. L. R. 47 Cal. 806, it was contended that there was an interpolation in the contract and an application was made to have the award set aside and taken off the file on the ground that there was no contract between the parties and consequently there was no submission. Greaves, J., tried the matter on affidavits and set aside the award. On appeal Mookerjee and Fletcher, JJ., delivered a very short judgment, the material portion of which is as follows:— "We are of opinion that the question which arises in this matter should be decided in a regular suit. We therefore allow this appeal, set aside the order of the Court below and dismiss the application." Comment has at times been made that the above judgment does not lay down a general rule but dealt with the special nature of the case. But on the other hand this case has discouraged the making of applications for setting aside awards on the ground of want of jurisdiction.

(d) Can an objection on the ground of jurisdiction be raised by way of defence to an action on the award? With regard to the corresponding English law the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in 49 I. A. 174 at p. 180, expressed that "no doubt any defence going to the root of the award—for instance, that the arbitrator had no jurisdiction or that the matter was tainted with fraud—could have been pleaded in the suit."

III.—MIXED GROUNDS.

Where an award is attacked on mixed questions of jurisdiction and misconduct:—

(a) A suit is, of course, maintainable. See 49 I. A. 366 and 24 C. W. N. 454.

(b) Is an application maintainable in such a case? But if Mookerjee and Fletcher, JJ., laid down a general rule in I. L. R. 47 Cal. 806, C. C. Ghose, J., however not only treated an application to be not maintainable where a question of jurisdiction is raised, but dismissed such an application even when the matter was not to be tried on affidavits. This happened in application No. 67 of 1919 re arbitration, Ram Kissen Das Joydayal v. Hulasiram Ramdayal.' In this matter on the 9th April 1919, agreed issues were filed before Rankin, J., and an order was made for affidavits of documents and inspection and thereafter for the placing of the matter on the prospective list of suits. In course of time the matter came up for hearing for all practical purposes as a suit before C. C. Ghose, J., on 6th May 1920. Then a preliminary objection was taken that the application was not maintainable. On the 26th May 1920 the preliminary objection was held to be fatal and the application was dismissed.

Apart from the defensive and confining attention to active steps for setting aside awards, it will appear from the above that the law has become highly technical. It is easy for the litigant to get into the wrong boat: but there is this consolation to him that in most cases all is not lost: he pays costs and then has a chance to go right. He would hardly make a mistake in the second choice.

PROCESS-SERVERS, IF PUBLIC OFFICERS.

To

The Editor, "Calcutta Weekly Notes."

Sir,

I beg to draw your attention to the following lines and shall be much obliged, if you or any of your numerous readers will kindly give them the consideration they may deserve.

I had recently had occasion to file the certified copy of the report and affidavit of the process-serving peon to prove that symbolical possession was delivered to the decree-holder of a piece of land in execution of a rent-decree under sec. 52 of Act VIII of 1869.

My contention was that the peon's report is a public document and that, therefore, the certified copy thereof should go in without producing the peon and his original report and proving the latter through him.

Under sec. 74, sub-sec. 1, cl. (iii) of the Evidence Act, records of the acts of a "public officer" is a public document, of which a certified copy is admissible without formal proof.

Under sec. 2, sub-sec. 17, cls. (d) and (h) of the Civil Procedure Code, a peon, attached to a Munsif's Court, is a "public officer." Therefore, the certified copy of the peon's report was admissible without proof.

The Court, however, refused to admit it, on the ground that a "public officer" under the Civil Procedure Code was not so under the Evidence Act. Moreover, he doubted, if a peon was at all a "public officer" even under the said provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.

I submit that the Court's opinion is erroneous.

The General Clauses Act does not define a "public officer." So, a "public officer" under the Civil Procedure Code, or a "public servant" under the Criminal Procedure Code, must be a "public officer" for the purposes of the Evidence Act as well. Every person, whose duty it is to execute a judicial process, and every person especially authorised to do so as well as every person in the pay of service of Government, is a "public officer."

Is the peon a "public officer" for some purposes only, while he is not so for other purposes? (I. L. R. 22 Cal. 759).

My question is whether a peon, attached to a Munsif's Court, is a "public officer" under sec. 74 (1) (iii) of the Evidence Act read together with sec. 2 (17) (d) and (h) of the Civil Procedure Code, so that his report and affidavit about the service of process in his official capacity is a "public document" and a certified copy thereof is admissible in evidence without production of the original report of the peon and peon's deposition in its support.

Much unnecessary waste of time and money would be saved if my contentions hold good. It may also happen that the peon is dead, or is not available for production at the hearing of a suit or proceeding and the original record may have been destroyed long ago, it causing great difficulties to the ———

I think the peon's report should be declared a "public document" by legislation, in order to make it admissible without proof and necessarily also the certified copy thereof, if it is not already such.

Yours faithfully,
MAHANANDA CHAUDHURI,
Pleader, Habiganj (Sylhet).

VALUATION OF REDEMPTION SUITS.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

In your Editorial Notes at p. 145 you have discussed at length the case of Saroda Sundari Bosu v. Akramanessa, 28 C. W. N. 710 and pointed out the anomalous results that may follow if the jurisdiction for the trial of redemption suits is to depend upon the sum that may ultimately be found due. You have suggested that the valuation for the purpose of jurisdiction should be based either upon the principal money stated in the bond, or upon the same with interest calculated up-to-date without regard to pleas available in reduction of the amount. The first alternative, I may be permitted to say, is open to the objection pointed out in the judgment that the sum ultimately due which may be recoverable by the sale of the land may exceed the limited pecuniary jurisdiction of the Court. The second alternative is not open to the same objection, but it may unduly raise the value of the suit so as to drive the Plaintiff to a higher, and a more distant, and a more expensive tribunal.

I would venture to make a third suggestion, namely, that the market value of the property sought to be redeemed may be taken as the value of the suit for the purpose of jurisdiction. This class of suits is described in sec. 7, cl. (ix) of the Court Fees Act as a "suit for the recovery of the mortgaged property," and in the usual course of things its valuation should be the value of that property. Such a valuation would not, to my mind, lead to any anomalous results. If the value of the property is less than the pecuniary limit of the Munsif's jurisdiction, but the sum found due exceeds that limit, it will be against the interest of the Plaintiff to redeem the mortgage, and ordinarily he would not choose to do so. In such a case the Defendant (mortgagee) may however get a decree for foreclosure or sale. Whether the final decree is for redemption in favour of the Plaintiff, or for foreclosure in favour of the Defendant, it concerns the property only, the value of which is within the Court's jurisdiction, and it is therefore competent to pass such a decree. If, on the other hand, it is a decree for sale, it may be proper to assume that the price fetched at the sale would not exceed the sum at which the property was valued in the plaint, if the valuation was at all accurate. Thus the sale-proceeds which the Court would award to the Defendant would remain within the limits of its jurisdiction. There is no provision in Or. XXXIV of the Civil Procedure Code for passing a decree in such a suit in favour of the mortgagee for the balance of his dues, if the sale proceeds be insufficient to satisfy them fully. R. 6 of that order which is the only rule on the point, deals with a sale taking place under a decree in a suit brought by the mortgagee under r. 4 for the sale of the mortgaged property, and it has no application to a suit for redemption brought under r. 7. Thus the Court will not be called upon to realise, and pay to the Defendant, a sum exceeding its pecuniary jurisdiction.

It may be useful to compare redemption suits with suits for pre-emption coming under sec. 7, cl. (vi) of the Court Fees Act. In both these classes of suits the Plaintiff prays for possession of immoveable property on payment of what may be found due from him. In a pre-emption suit the valuation for jurisdiction is the value of the land, as implied in sec. 3 (1) of the Suits Valuation Act. I think on this analogy also the value of redemption suits may be taken at the value of the property sought to be redeemed.

Yours truly,
S. C. BASU,
Subordinate Judge.

Review.

HINDU LAW. By Golap Chandra Sarkar, Sastri. Fifth Edition. By Rishindra Nath Sarkar, M.A., B.L., Vakil, Calcutta High Court. Eastern Law House, Calcutta, 1924.

This well-known work has grown from a students' hand-book to that of a well-known treatise on Hindu law. The present Editor, the son of its eminent author, has done well in making no material alteration in the text of the work. He has only added notes of decisions that have been given by the Judicial Committee and the Indian High Courts since 1910, when the previous edition was published. While case-law has thus been incorporated, we find that the changes in the law effected by the more recent statutes have not been so embodied in the present edition. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that as they were passed during the progress of the work through the press, the editor has not had the opportunity of incorporating them in the body of the work. For instance, we find him making mention of the recent amendment to the Civil Marriage Act of 1872, but as Dr. Gour's Bill after passing through the Assembly in the early part of 1923 passed through the Council of State towards the end of that year and received assent of the Governor-General later on, the editor could not possibly embody its provisions in the present edition. The same may be the reason for not making any mention of Mr. Sheshagiri Ayer's amendments regarding exclusion from inheritance by reason of certain disabilities under Hindu law, but it would have been better if the legislative measure in this connection had been noticed. The editor may issue supplementary slips in this connection, because it will be some years before a new edition of this valuable work may be expected to be issued. We hope the editor will accept these suggestions which are made from our desire to see the work of his learned father quite up-to-date in all respects. The special merit of the late Prof. Sastri is that being a non-Brahmin, he was able to review the law with regard to some dubious questions of Hindu law and custom from an unbiassed point of view. For instance, he has had the boldness of stating that there is hardly any justification for saying that pratiloma marriage is absolutely prohibited under Hindu law. The recent amendment of the Civil Marriage Act will, we expect, put an end to the controversy on this debateable question. Another question with regard to which we find ourselves in perfect agreement with him is his view in respect of the doctrine of spiritual benefit and the fictitious importance that has been attached to it by certain judicial decisions in connection with questions of inheritance. We have always attempted to purge Hindu law of this legal fiction and Prof. Sastri has demolished it by an able analysis of the authoritative Sanskrit texts bearing on the question. Prof. Sastri's work is not merely a compilation of the rules of Hindu law but he brings to bear on them the light of his research and learning to present some original views, which may not generally be accepted in all cases but will certainly contribute to the better appreciation of some vexed questions of Hindu Law. The get up of the book is excellent and it is also very ably edited.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

Recent decisions not yet reported

(The important cases to be fully reported hereafter.)

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before NEWBOULD AND B. B. GHOSH, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 179 OF 1922. DEBENDRA NATH ACHARJYA and another, Plaintiffs-Appellants v. TRAILOKHYA NATH ACHARJYA, Defendant-Respondent. The 25th March 1924.

Indian Lunacy Act (IV of 1912)—Application to declare a person to be a lunatic and to be appointed manager to the estate, refusal of, by District Court—Appeal to High Court—Alleged lunatic, if a necessary party to the appeal.

The facts material to this report are as follows :—

The Appellants made an application before the District Judge of Khulna under the Indian Lunacy Act for a declaration that their father Purna Chandra Acharjya was of unsound mind and incapable of managing his affairs, and for their appointment as managers to the estate of their father. The application was opposed by the Respondent, one of the co-sharers of the alleged lunatic. In accordance with the provisions of the Lunacy Act the District Judge held an inquisition and came to the finding that the alleged lunatic was capable of managing his own affairs and dismissed the application on this ground. Against this order the Appellants preferred this appeal to the High Court. The alleged lunatic Purna was not made a party to this appeal. A preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the Respondent to the competency of the appeal, and it was urged that Purna was a necessary party and in his absence the appeal was incompetent:

Held—That the omission to make the alleged lunatic a party to the appeal was a fatal defect, and the appeal was held to be incompetent.

After a person has been held capable of managing his own affairs it is absurd to imagine that a Court would pass an order in his absence and deprive him of that right without giving him an opportunity to be heard.

Babu Satindranath Roy Chowdhury for the Appellants.

Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur and Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen for the Respondent.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before NEWBOULD AND B. B. GHOSH, JJ. APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL ORDER NO. 327 OF 1921. CHANDRA KUMAR BOSE, (Defendant), Appellant v. SATIS CHANDRA CHUCKRAVARTY, (Plaintiff), Respondent. The 2nd April 1924.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), Or. 40, r. 1 (a)—Or. 43, r. 1 (s)—Receiver, appointment of, order for, when appealable.

Plaintiff applied for the appointment of a Receiver under the provisions of Or. 40, r. 1 (a) of the Code of Civil Procedure for better management of the mortgaged properties during the pendency of his suit for the enforcement of a mortgage bond. The learned Subordinate Judge of Faridpore passed an order on 21st November 1921 in these terms: "This is a fit case where Receiver should be appointed for better management of the properties. The case be adjourned to 20th December 1921 for further order after the applications are received for appointment of Receiver." This appeal was filed on 9th December 1921 against the said order of 21st November 1921. It appears that two persons were ordered to be appointed, one was named and required to furnish security to the satisfaction of Court and the other was to be appointed after advertisement.

The Respondent's vakil contended that the appeal was premature and not maintainable on the authority of Upendra Nath v. Bhupendra Nath, [1910] 13 C. L. J. 157 and Srinivas Prosad v. Kesho Prosad, [1911] 14 C. L. J. 489, until the order for appointment became final and operative by actual appointment after the security was furnished.

The Appellant urged—This was an operative order, there was an appointment and that the appeal was therefore competent:

Held—That the appointment of Receiver not having been complete and effective within the meaning of Or. 40, r. 1 (a) until security was furnished as directed by the order of appointment, the appeal was premature and not maintainable under Or. 43, r. 1 (s).

Srinivas Prosad v. Kesho Prosad, [1911] 14 C. L. J. 489 at 490, followed.

Babu Brojo Lal Chuckerbutty for the Appellant.

Babu Prokash Chandra Majumdar for the Respondent.

NOTES

Trial by Newspapers.

In England some newspapers which carry on a traffic in sensations for purposes of profit are being brought to book by the Law Courts for publishing opinions and also results of independent inquiries with regard to sensational crimes. It is common sense that such independent inquiries are based on statements, which are worse than hearsay, since they are not made on oath, and the persons making them run no risk of being prosecuted for making false or malicious statements. The publication of such statements or results of non-judicial investigations also result in the mischief that the person accused is prejudiced in his trial. The High Court of England has therefore recently imposed the heavy fine of £1000 on an evening newspaper and also pretty heavy fines on some other journals, which prematurely discussed the details of the "Bunglow" murder case. The Lord Chief Justice took occasion to observe that if the growing evil of trial by newspapers did not cease, the judges would not hesitate to visit the offenders with imprisonment.

Judicial Committee and its power to interpret constitutional questions.

Various questions of constitutional importance have from time to time come up from Canada for interpretation by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. We learn from our legal contemporary of the Law Times that the Government in England has decided to refer an interesting question in connection with the Irish Boundaries Commission to the Judicial Committee for opinion. Our contemporary says: "Owing to the refusal of the Government of Northern Ireland to appoint a representative to the Boundary Commission to be set up under Art. 12 of the Treaty, questions might arise as to whether the Commission could make a valid award, and whether such Commission was legally constituted. The Government have, therefore, wisely decided to ask the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to advise them on these points, availing themselves of the power conferred by sec 4 of the Judicial Committee Act of 1833 which provides that 'it shall be lawful for His Majesty to refer to the said Judicial Committee for hearing or consideration any such or other matters whatsoever as His Majesty shall think fit; and such Committee shall thereupon hear or consider the same, and shall advise His Majesty thereon in manner aforesaid.' It is stated that distinguished judges from the Dominions are to be asked to sit on the Committee, the Chief Justice of Australia has consented to act and it is hoped that a member of the Canadian Bench will also sit. The scope of sec. 4 of the Act of 1833 is very wide, and matters have been considered under its provisions, which are not strictly appealable grievances." The jurisdiction of the Judicial Committee is much wider than that of any other Court in the British Empire including that of the Judicial Committee of the House of Lords. This is because its judicial functions arose out of the executive functions it once exercised as His Majesty the King's Executive Council. Even now its judgments are delivered as opinions advising His Majesty. It is by pr[illegible] and convention that they have come regarded as judgments of the highest C[illegible] Appeal so far as the Colonies and Dependencies are concerned.

Reports of process-servers, how may be made admissible in evidence.

There is much to be said in favour of Mr Mahananda Chaudhuri's suggestion that the reports of process-servers should be made admissible in evidence, for what they are worth, without further proof, in proceedings other than those in which they are made. (Vide 28 C. W. N. clxi). But we do not agree that this object will be attained by simply declaring peons' reports to be "public documents," for, unless and until it is established that the contents of a public document are relevant under some other provision of the Evidence Act, they cannot be proved by the production of the document itself, and sec. 77 of the Act will not be available to let in the certified copy when the original is not admissible. The content of the peons' report would not be relevant under sec. 35 of the Act, even if it was declared to be a public document. The change desired cannot be obtained without expanding the scope of sec. 35. Statements recorded in the course of business, official or otherwise, whenever they refer to matters into which the Court has to enquire may very well be made relevant on the analogy of the provisions of secs. 34, 35, 36 and 37 of the Act. This coupled with a suitable amendment of sec. 74 which will make it clear that records of acts of ministerial officers duly incorporated in the records of public officers, legislative, judicial and executive, are also public documents, will, we think, go a long way towards removing the difficulties alluded to in Mr. Chaudhuri's letter and effect material saving of time and money in judicial proceedings. The suggestion is well worth the consideration of the Civil Justice Committee, who, if we remember aright, did invite suggestions for changes in the law of evidence directed to this end.

PART II.

THE FICTION OF SURRENDER AND THE EVIDENTIARY VALUE OF CONSENT.

BY D. R. VAIDYA, SUB-JUDGE, 2ND CLASS, KHANDWA, C. P.

Mr. Justice Das in R. B. Mansing v. Nawalakhbati (I. L. R. 2 Pat. 607) said : "It is well to remember that, although actual transfers by Hindu widows have, in many cases, been supported by reference to the theory of the relinquishment of the widow's entire interest, there is relinquishment in the true sense of the term, when there is disclaimer by the widow at the time of the death of her husband, or the renunciation of the world by her afterwards, or some act by her which might, in the eye of law, justify the inference that the widow is civilly dead. It is only when the widow is dead, either actually or civilly, that the law steps in and gives the estate of her husband to the next reversioner. But there are cases in the books which are called cases of relinquishment but which are in fact not cases of relinquishment at all, where alienations by Hindu widows have been upheld by arguing from analogy. But analogy denotes only a partial similarity and it does not follow that, because where a widow renounces the world the next reversioner takes the estate by operation of law, there is also a succession by operation of law where, as a result of a transaction not amounting to a relinquishment, properly so called, but capable of being supported by reference to the theory of relinquishment, the estate comes to the next reversioner. But where the widow sells the estate for valuable consideration to the heir or to a stranger with the consent of the heir or enters into an engagement with the heir which has the effect of carrying the estate to the heir or a stranger with the consent of the heir, in other words, whenever the transaction is one not of relinquishment but one capable of being supported by reference to the theory of relinquishment, the title of the heir arises, not by operation of law, but by the act of the transfer on the part of the widow."

When a widow transfers for consideration her husband's estate to the next reversioner or with his consent to a stranger, or makes a gift of it to a stranger with the consent of the next reversioner, we can scarcely say that there is relinquishment by her. In the case of transfers for consideration, we can well say that she has merely converted her estate into cash. It is only in cases of gifts to the next heir that we can say that there is relinquishment. The reason for allowing such transfers to stand on the basis of a relinquishment was well stated by Sir Richard Garth in Nobokishore v. Harinath (I. L. R. 10 Cal. 1102 F. B.), where he said : "It is thus the impossibility of preventing such alienations which supports them." He observed : "If it is once established as a matter of law that a widow may relinquish her estate in favour of her husband's heir for the time being, it seems impossible to prevent any alienation which the widow and the next heir may thus agree to make."

If it were once held that no alienations by widows to the next heir or with his consent to strangers would stand, the people would take care to obtain surrenders by widows, so far as appearances went, and effect transfers all the same. What is the use of following the strict sense of the law? There is, indeed, no logic in calling what is not relinquishment a relinquishment, but strong common sense will dictate that it will be the same thing over again under different names. Every day non-transferable tenant rights are transferred by first surrendering them to the landlord and the landlord reletting it again to the intended transferee. As the landlord cannot be relied upon and prevented from being a colluding party, so the next heir also cannot be prevented from being in the conspiracy. It is, indeed, not strict logic but it is strong common sense to support these alienations on the ground of relinquishment. Fine logic is of no use in the hard matter-of-fact world. What the law will not allow to be done directly, people will effect indirectly and law will have to condone it, and logical consistency will be pedantic only and of no practical effect.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

May 12th, 13th, 15th and 16th. Maharaja of Darbhanga v. Hitendra Singh. These were two consolidated appeals. The Appellant, a decree-holder, sought to have a Receiver discharged. The Receiver had been appointed by consent and had been retained in office under the terms of a consent order. There is a further question of res judicata. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and A. Majid for the Appellant.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. B. Dubé for the Respondents.

May 19th, 20th, 22nd, 23rd and 26th. In the Board Room before LORDS DUNEDIN, CARSON and MR. AMEER ALI. Nayak Vajesingji v. Secretary of State (Bombay).

The suits out of which these appeals arose were brought by the Appellants against Government for declarations that they held the lands claimed as proprietors and not as Government tenants.

The Appellants claim that they and their ancestors have held the lands as proprietors for two centuries first under the Maharatta and then under British rule. Judgment was reserved.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Parikh for the Appellants.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondents.

May 27th. Manzur Hasan v. Md. Zaman (Allahabad).

This appeal was argued before LORDS DUNEDIN, CARSON and DARLING.

The Appellants are members of the Shia Community of Aurangabad and claim the right to use a street which runs at the back of a Sunni mosque for the Moharram procession and to perform the "matam" in a circle close to the mosque. The Board have reserved judgment.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C., Wallach and Fateh Singh representing the Appellants.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. A Majid for the Respondents.

May 27th. Before LORDS SHAW, BLANESBURGH, SIR J. EDGE and MR. AMEER ALI.

Sant Bakhsh Singh v. Mahadeo B. Singh (Oudh).

This litigation is concerned with the under-proprietary rights in the estate of Harha. The Appellants claimed to be put into joint possession of certain villages, but the Court of the Judicial Commissioner reversing the decree of the Subordinate Judge denied possession but granted a money decree. The appeal was dismissed.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Dubé for the Appellants.

Mr. Kenworthy Brown for the Respondent.

May 27th. Sircar Barnard & Co. v. Sm. Barkunarain (Patna).

The High Court whose judgment was upheld by the Board decided against the due attestation of a mortgage deed. The appeal was dismissed.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and Hyam for the Appellants.

May 27th and 28th. Ma San Ban v. Ma Da Tire (Lower Burma).

Properties had been conveyed to the first Respondent with a provision for reconveyance. The first Respondent conveyed to the second Respondent under a similar arrangement, and the Appellants claimed the return of their property. The Respondents contended that the Appellants were not entitled to a reconveyance as they had failed under their original agreement to give possession. Judgment has been reserved.

Mr. E. B. Raikes for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and Pennell for the Respondents.

May 29th and 30th. The hearing was commenced of an appeal from Lower Burma, Kirkwood v. Maung Sin, which raises important questions of succession under the Burmese Buddhist Law. The Appellant is the wife of Col. Kirkwood who some years ago was injured in a railway accident on the East Indian Railway and fought his claim right up to the Privy Council where he was finally unsuccessful.

The argument for the Appellant was opened by Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and The Hon. Geoffrey Lawrence.

Messrs. Dunne, K. C. and E. B. Raikes represent the Respondents. The Court then adjourned until the 19th June.

June 3rd. The Birthday Honours List, published this morning, contains the name of Sir Charles Neish, the Registrar of the Privy Council, who has been made a Knight Commander of the British Empire. This recognition of his services will be welcomed by all who have come in contact with the Registrar, whose unfailing courtesy and tact have smoothed away many a difficulty for solicitors and counsel alike.

Review.

THE CALCUTTA RENT ACT, 1920 (as amended by the Acts of 1923 and 1924). By Mr. M. N. Kanjilal, M.A., LL.B. (Cantab), Bar-at-Law, Advocate, High Court, Calcutta. The Art Press, Calcutta. Price Rs. 9.

The revised edition of Mr. Kanjilal's Calcutta Rent Act is a great improvement on its predecessor in every respect. It is very neatly got-up and ably edited.

As might have been expected the book brings the law on the subject absolutely up to date and is a perfect vade mecum for the practising lawyer. One interesting feature of the book is that it is a compendium of all cases decided in the Courts of Record in England and in this country. This feature will be most appreciated by the busy practitioner.

The lay readers will also find the book not only interesting but also very useful whether he happens to be a landlord or a tenant.

The book is provided with a carefully prepared index.

The texts of the Bombay, Rangoon and English Acts are also given.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before GREAVES AND GRAHAM, JJ. S. A. No. 933 of 1922, KEDAR NATH BASAK, Plaintiff-Appellant v. AMAR CHANDRA CHAKERVERTY and others, Defendants-Respondents. The 26th June 1924.

Suit for ejectment—Notice of ejectment—Lease created before the Transfer of Property Act.

The Plaintiff brought a suit in ejectment against Defendant No. 1 and his sub-lessees on the ground of forfeiture incurred by him for his denial of relationship of landlord and tenant in a previous rent suit. The Defendants pleaded that the tenancy was a permanent one and that there had been no forfeiture, and forfeiture, if any, had been waived by notice to quit which treated the tenancy as subsisting. The learned Munsif dismissed the suit holding that the suit land being within the town of Pabna it was admitted by both the parties that the case was governed by Transfer of Property Act, that there has been no forfeiture and that the tenancy was permanent. The lower Appellate Court found the tenancy to be permanent and that there had been forfeiture, but that the forfeiture was waived by the notice to quit which treated the tenancy as subsisting:

Held—That the forfeiture was waived by the notice to quit which treated the tenancy as subsisting. Doe v. Miller, 2 Carrington and Payne 348.

NOTES

Injunction on the President of the Bengal Council.

Two applications of an extraordinary character were decided by Mr. Justice C. C. Ghose in the course of last week. One of them was for a mandamus, and the other for an injunction, but, in effect, the object of both was to prevent the Supplementary Demand for the Ministers' salaries from being put forward before the Council. The application for mandamus was refused on the ground that the applicant did not satisfy the conditions laid down in proviso (a) to sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act. The application for injunction has been granted pending the disposal of the suit. In making the order, Mr. Justice Ghose has held that the Plaintiffs are competent to maintain the suit and that the motion for Supplementary Demand for the Ministers' salaries is clearly in derogation of r. 94 of the Council Rules. In these circumstances, His Excellency the Governor has prorogued the Council sine die.

An appeal has been preferred against Mr. Justice Ghose's order for injunction and we believe it will be disposed of in the course of this week. It will not be, therefore, proper for us to make any comment on the learned Judge's order or judgment. It may be pointed out, however, that an injunction, such as has been issued in the present case, is perhaps unique in the history of judicial administration. Courts of law in India and the United States have often pronounced particular measures passed by legislative bodies as ultra vires, and has refused to give effect to them. But so far as we know they have not until the present case interfered with the proceedings of the latter. Such an interference is unquestionably of very serious consequence to the legislature and we shall await further enlightenment from the Court of Appeal before giving expression to our opinion with regard to the matter. Quite apart from the question whether we agree with his interpretation of the law or not, we must say that the learned Judge has the courage of his convictions and has shown judicial independence of a very high order, such as is associated with the best traditions of the High Court of Calcutta.

Dominion Government and its meaning.

A telegram sent by Mr. Bruce, the Prime Minister of Australia, on the Empire Day has put our contemporary of the Law Times into pains to offer a plausible explanation. Our contemporary says:—

Mr S M Bruce, the Prime Minister of Australia, sent to Sir Joseph Cook, the High Commissioner for Australia, a cabled message on Empire Day, which contains the following passage, constituting in itself a concise and graphic description of the relations to the Mother Country and to each other, of the members of the Community of Nations which form the British Commonwealth of Nations "The British race," said Mr Bruce, "nurtured to liberty, governs by consent No constitution binds us, no force enthrals us, no fear subdues us We are self-governing partners of a commonwealth of nations" Mr. Bruce's words are a striking illustration of the fact that, side by side with the legal Constitution of the British Empire. an unwritten or a conventional constitution has developed The contrast between the legal position of the Dominions as mere dependencies of Great Britain to be administered not for their own benefit, but for the convenience of the Mother Country, and their actual position in accordance with the conventions of the Constitution of the British Empire as free nations co equal members with Great Britain of the British Commonwealth of Nations, is of the very highest import and furnishes a complete explanation of Mr Bruce's statement, savouring of paradox, in relation to the status of the Dominions. "No Constitution binds us." This apparent inconsistency, but latent harmony, has been elucidated in anticipation by Mr. Lloyd George, speaking in the House of Commons, as Prime Minister, on the 14th December 1921: "What," he asked, "does Dominion status mean? It is difficult and dangerous to give a definition. When I made a statement at the request of the Imperial Conference to this House as to what passed at our gathering, I pointed out the anxiety of all the Dominion delegates not to have any rigid definitions [in Mr. Bruce's words the Dominions do not desire any Constitution to bind them]. That is not the way of the British Constitution. We realise the danger of rigidity, and the danger of limiting our Constitution by too many formalities. Many of the Premiers (of the Dominions and Colonies) during the course of that conference, delivered notable speeches, emphasising the importance of not defining too precisely what the relations of the Dominions were to ourselves. It is something which has never been defined by an Act of Parliament even in this country, and yet it works perfectly. . In practice it means complete control over their own internal affairs without any interference from any other part of the Empire. They are rulers of their own hearths and finance, administration, legislation, as far as their domestic affairs are concerned, and the representatives of the Sovereign will act on the advice of the Dominion Ministers. I now come to the question of external affairs. The position of the Dominions, in reference to external affairs, has been completely revolutionised in the course of the last four years. Since the War the Dominions have been given equal rights with Great Britain in the control of the foreign policy of the Empire. That was won by the aid they gave us in the War. They claim a voice in determining the lines of our policy. At the last Imperial Conference they were there discussing our policy in Germany, in Egypt, in America, our policy all over the world, and we are now acting upon the mature decisions arrived at with the common consent of the whole Empire. The sole control of Britain over foreign policy is now vested in the Empire as a whole. That is a new fact." Mr. Bruce's statement that the Dominions have no constitution cannot be accepted without explanation.

THE FICTION OF SURRENDER AND THE EVIDENTIARY VALUE OF CONSENT.

By D. R. Vaidya, Sub-Judge, 2nd Class, Khandwa, C. P.

The learned Judges of the Madras High Court, in E. Ram Lakshmi v. Doda Nagratnam (1923 Mad. 335, All-India Reporter) have held that there is no relinquishment when the instrument of transfer exhibits a different intention. Logically this is true, but the result of such decisions will be to drive underground what otherwise has come out to the surface. As Batten and Hallifax, A. J. Cs, in Mt. Kushibai v. Mahru Khan (1923 Nagpur 265, All-India Reporter) said very wisely: "In Nobo Kishore's case it was held that a sale by a widow with the consent of the only presumptive reversioner was valid after the death of the widow, for the reason that it could be regarded as a relinquishment of the estate in favour of the next reversioner and as a sale by him after the estate had vested in him. This was approved by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Rangaswami Gounden." This is the most practical way to look at these transactions. Macleod, C. J., in Rama Nana v Dhondi (1923 Bom. 432, All-India Reporter) said: "If a widow by deed conveys her life-estate to the next reversioner, is there any necessity of making use of a legal fiction in order to make the next reversioner the full owner? As pointed out by Benman, J., in Moti Raiji v. Laldas Jebhai (I. L. R. 41 Bom. 93), the true doctrine of acceleration is no more than the English doctrine of merger subjected to the peculiar conditions and requirements of the law of the joint Hindu family. If then the widow does not convey her life-estate to the next reversioner for which she is competent, but purports to convey the fee for which she is not competent, the real result of the authorities is that the conveyance is split up into its component parts and effect is given to that part which is valid. When treated in this way, it may be said that no question arises with regard to the attempted alienation of the fee, which would be as a matter of fact unnecessary for bringing about the merger." These views are sound common sense, if not so sound logic.

Mr. Justice Das would not allow widows whose estate was taken up under the management of the Court of Wards to alienate or accelerate the succession. In this way a minor widow would not be allowed to surrender her husband's estate. For renouncing the world or turning a Bairagi, there is no restriction of age. Child widows are competent to do that. No law can prevent them from doing that. It is no use putting one restriction and not the others. If we say that widows must be guarded against their own indiscretions, there is no end to our tutelage, we shall have to revert to old Hindu law which makes women destitute of any sense and keeps them under perpetual tutelage. If once we allow some sense in widows, we must take the necessary evil of relinquishment.

The alienation by the widow for consideration to the next heir or with his consent to a stranger must thus be allowed on the fiction that there is relinquishment. So also in alienation by the widow by way of gift to a stranger with the assent of the next heir must be allowed on the theory of that fiction. It is making a virtue of necessity. We must frankly be persuaded that such things are impossible to prevent. The gift to the next heir is of course, nothing else than a genuine relinquishment. Looked at from this point we cannot differentiate the case of consent of a female reversioner and that of consent of the male reversioner. If at all we insist on that, the parties will not be averse to procuring the consent of the reversioners until they reach the remote male reversioner somewhere.

The next thing to see is whether the alienation is of the whole interest in the whole of the husband's estate. If the widow does not [illegible] for the whole of the estate we cannot find support in the theory of relinquishment. We must allow these transactions to stand on the theory of relinquishment so far as it is impossible to prevent such transfers. The widow cannot effect a partial relinquishment and hence a transfer cannot stand except on the [illegible] of partial surrender we can forbid it. [illegible] this way we prevent practically preventible transfers and shut the door against devices to [illegible] the estate.

Macleod C. J. in Adiveppa v. Toulappa [illegible] L. R. 44 Bom. 2[illegible] said "Any consideration is sufficient to change acceleration into alienation otherwise door would be opened to all sorts of discussion as to the quantum of consideration." In this case the gift was burdened with the maintenance of the widow. In Rama Nana v. Dhondi Marari (192[illegible] Bom. 1[illegible] All India Reporter) the same learned Judge repeated the warning in the following terms: "It offers a temptation to next reversioners to induce young widows to surrender their life estate in return for maintenance and it will be difficult to draw the line between a promise to pay maintenance and an arrangement which is a device to divide the estate between the reversioner and the widow. If the real test is the complete surrender by the widow of the right to hold the property the loss of the right acting as a deterrent against a too frequent use by widows of the power of surrender so as to favour the next reversioner to the detriment of the more remote who still have a chance of being the nearest when the reversion falls in, it seems to me that if the widow is able to secure her maintenance the forces operating on her mind to prevent her from exercising her power of surrender have been rendered extremely small. The life estate owners hold the estate as it were in trust for the likely reversioners who will acquire absolute ownership."

It must be remarked that when a Hindu widow renounces the world or turns Bairagi, under strict Hindu law a person who adopts this order of life must divest himself of all earthly belongings and depend for his livelihood upon the gifts of nature or charitable fellow men. Rights of any property in such persons are impossible and incompatible with the very theory of it. But the strict letter of the law would be too much for ordinary men to follow and provided the [illegible] reserves only a minimum compatible with their maintenance for the remainder of their life there is no harm. It will indeed take painful enquiry into the quantum of this necessary [illegible] portion. In fact in the case of M[illegible] v. Naulakhbati what was allowed by the Court of Wards as fair maintenance was not considered fair by the parties who stipulated [illegible]. But troublesome is the enquiry [illegible] is no impossible to arrive at a figure which may represent fair maintenance and not a device to divide the estate. The question whether the maintenance allowance ought to permit the minimum to keep body and soul together or to allow living on the standard the parties [illegible] accustomed to is of importance. Strict Hindu law would at most permit the former; modern sense of justice would allow the latter and rightly. Short of a device to divide the estate proper maintenance allowance ought to be allowable.

This proposition has been established in the following cases:

(Sureshwari Misser v. Maheshrani Misrain I. L. R. 18 Cal. 100 P. C.; Bhagwat Koer v. Dhanuk Dhari Prasad 47 M. L. J. 51[illegible] P. C.; Annamalai Chetti v. Varatharajulu Chettu I. L. R. 42 Mad. 8[illegible]; I. B. Mt Supah v. Marutee [1922] Nagpur 187 All India Reporter; Vadlamudi Gopal Krishnaiya v. Vallamudi Gangaaya 52 I. C. 749 Mad., Karuppa Gounden v. Mudali Gounden 13 M. L. J. 36.)

If the widow reserves out of her husband's estate just so much as is sufficient for her maintenance or inadvertently omits to include small items of her husband's property or keeps only moveables which under Mithila law she owns absolutely, we can hold that there is surrender of her entire estate. If the widow transfers her husband's estate not absolutely but by mortgage or lease we cannot invoke the fiction of relinquishment because the widow retains the lessor's interest or the mortgagor's interest. It is only in out and out transfers such as sale or gift that we can invoke the aid of that fiction (Hari Kishen v. Raj Rang Sahai Sing 15 C. W. N. 544). The widow must divest herself of all her right in the whole of her husband's estate so as to attract the doctrine of relinquishment by her of her husband's estate. The exception allowed is of just so much as is sufficient to maintain her. Otherwise there shall be a widow partly dead and partly alive.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before NEWBOULD AND CHAKRAVARTI, JJ. CRIMINAL REVISION No. 39 OF 1924. SURATH NATH GHOSH v. JOGENDRA NATH BAIDYA. The 26th May, 1924.

Criminal case—Witness, examination of, on commission—Purdanashin lady of Satgope caste, whether entitled to be so examined.

In this case the Petitioner who belongs to the Satgope caste applied to the District Magistrate of Howrah for examination on commission of his wife aged 16 who was a witness on his behalf in a case brought by his father-in-law for trespass etc. in the Court of a Magistrate of 1st class at Howrah. The trying Magistrate passed an order to the effect that from what he (the Magistrate) had seen of the father and the husband of the girl he did not think she belonged to [illegible] status of society [illegible] entitle her to claim examination on commission and remarked that if she [illegible] be heard in open Court he (the Magistrate) would be glad to examine the girl in camera. The District Magistrate thereupon rejected the Petitioner's prayer for examination of his wife on commission. The Petitioner thereupon moved the Hon'ble High Court to set aside the order of the District Magistrate on the ground that the Petitioner was likely to be excommunicated if his wife appeared in open Court and that the Petitioner was a man of position and that the order of the District Magistrate being based on no evidence was liable to be set aside. Their Lordships issued a rule calling on the District Magistrate to show cause why the order complained of should not be set aside. The trying Magistrate submitted in explanation (1) that there was no chance of the Petitioner being excommunicated if his wife appeared before him in camera, (2) that the order was not opposed by the father of the girl, (3) that the girl might not speak the whole truth if she were examined on commission at her husband's place as she would then be under the influence of her husband.

Babu Probodh Kumar Das and Babu Kanti Lal Pal for Babu Khitis Ch. Chuckerbutty urged that in view of the ruling laid down in Bhuvaneswari Debi v. Kishori Mohan Banerji I. L. R. 12 Cal. at p. 19 and in view of the status of the Petitioner his wife should be examined on commission and further that the trying Magistrate's order being based upon no evidence but upon mere surmise was liable to be set aside.

Their Lordships NEWBOULD and CHAKRAVARTY, JJ. delivered the following judgment:—

We are not satisfied that the trying Magistrate was justified in holding that the girl in question does not belong to such a grade in society as cannot appear in Court. There is evidence before us to the contrary in the Petitioner's affidavit and that is unrebutted. In any case having regard to the nature of the case we do not think that it is necessary that the girl should be compelled to appear. We accordingly make the rule absolute and direct the District Magistrate to issue a commission for the examination of the witness.

NOTES

The Injunction on the President of the Bengal Council And After.

The High Court of Calcutta has been a centre of extraordinary controversy since the injunction was issued on 7th July restraining the Hon'ble Mr. Cotton from putting before the Council the motion for demand for the ministers' salaries On receipt of the injunction the President announced in the Council that His Excellency had "prorogued" the Council till "this day week" i.e., till the 14th instant Then appeared a notification in the Calcutta Gazette that the Council had been prorogued On this, the Plaintiffs in the injunction suit, alleging that the order on the President was operative during the session commencing on 7th July and that it had been rendered infructuous by the prorogation order, applied on 15th July to Mr. Justice Ghose praying that "it may be recorded that the suit is withdrawn." Before any order was made in this application, one Niranjan Chatterjee applied in the suit to be added as a party Plaintiff. Mr. Justice Ghose considering that the suit was of a representative character has allowed Niranjan to be added as a party and has allowed the original Plaintiffs to withdraw from the suit.

The appeal which has been preferred by the President against the injunction has been fixed for to-day. But two other appeals have been preferred by the original Plaintiffs against Mr Justice Ghose's orders (1) allowing the Plaintiffs to withdraw from the suit and (2) substituting Niranjan in their place Plaintiff and they maintain that these are to be disposed of first. There is also pending before Mr. Justice Ghose an inquiry into the question whether Niranjan has any interest and if he is not colluding with the Defendants as also an application by Mr. Dhirendra Nath Roy, a Zemindar and a Member of the Bengal Council, to be added as a Plaintiff in the suit. It is not for us to speculate as to the motives which lie behind these legal manœuvres. Enough to say that the parties concerned are not sparing themselves to gain an advantage over the other by whatever means law and procedure have placed at their disposal. Those who have no taste for witnessing a mere display of legal wit and subtlety in a Court of law are getting tired of the proceedings and think that His Excellency the Governor was not well advised in proroguing the Council. If the Council had been adjourned, that would have given time for the appeal to be heard, and at the same time left no room for the various applications that have made the matter more complex

Mr. Justice McCardie and Sir Sankaran Nair libel case.

One English contemporary of the Law Journal thus recorded a mild protest against the extraordinary procedure adopted by Mr. Justice McCardie in the libel suit of Sir Michael O'Dwyer against Sir Sankaran Nair :—

"With the political aspects of the action brought by Sir Michael O'Dwyer formerly Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab against Sir Sankaran Nair, once a member of the Council of India, we have no concern in these columns. It is permissible, however to express a regret that a libel case should have been treated as an opportunity of retrying the issues that were before the Hunter's Commission and that the proceedings should have been permitted to assume the importance and length of a State trial No fewer than 26 days—more than half the Sittings—were occupied by Mr. Justice McCardie in presiding over a long drawn out trial

In a subsequent issue of the Law Journal, our contemporary expresses the opinion that the indiscretion perpetrated by Mr Justice McCardie did not amount to anything more than an error of judgment and as such did not call for the exercise of the extraordinary power of Parliament for his removal from the Bench This is what our contemporary says in this connection —

The Prime Minister will be acting wisely and constitutionally if he declines to give facilities for Mr Lansbury's motion for the presentation of an Address for the removal of Mr Justice McCardie from the Bench because of certain observations he made in his summing up in the Indian libel case Whether these observations were relevant and well advised is a question on which we have already indicated our opinion Nobody however with a sense of the fitness of things can fail to dismiss as exaggerated the notion that a mere error of judgment is sufficient to justify such a motion as that which Mr Lansbury is seeking to submit to the House of Commons When some eighteen years ago the conduct of Mr Justice Grantham at the trial of the Yarmouth election petition was impugned by Mr Swift MacNeill the Attorney General of the day—Sir J Lawson Walton—made it perfectly clear that something much more than an otherwise unfortunate utterance was necessary to constitute a ground for censuring a judge He referred to the only two occasions in modern times on which the conduct of a judge has been made the subject of serious attack in the House of Commons When, in 1844, the conduct of Baron Smith an Irish Judge was criticised by the friends of Daniel O'Connell Sir Robert Peel laid down that to warrant a motion of this kind it must be shown that there must be corruption partisanship or moral delinquency and when some years later the conduct of Lord Abinger was attacked by Mr Thomas Duncombe as being unconstitutional and oppressive on the Bench a like attitude was taken by Parliament in deference to Sir Robert Peel's

The alienation by the widow to the next heir either for consideration or without it provided it is of the whole estate must be allowed, because it is impossible to prevent it An alienation by the widow for consideration or without it, to a stranger with the assent of the next all heir or to one of the next heirs with the assent of the others must also be allowed for the same reason But there is one important flaw in the latter case The consenting reversioner is thus allowed to traffic in chances by his giving of consent There must be some interval of time when the next heir is free and his own master If the widow surrenders the entire estate in favour of the next heir and when this surrender is complete, the next heir deals with the estate which has become his, and then it is not open to the objection that it is a traffic in chances People will say what is there in this farce But it must be borne in mind that the element of time is of utmost importance in these cases The next heir becomes free when the estate once vests in him, his consent must be after this vesting of estate It must not be obtained as a part of the same transaction which vests in him the estate Once the estate vests in him, the next heir is free to fulfil his promise or not to fulfil it The "yes" or "no" is the answer of a free man Law does not protect free men even from their indiscretions This attitude of law is seen in its treatment of mortgagors If the mortgagor, as a part of the transaction of mortgage, enters into any agreement imperilling his right of redemption law does not allow it, saying that it is a clog on the equity of redemption But the same mortgagor any time after the mortgage is complete, is allowed not only to bargain away his right but to sell it out and out At the time of the mortgage he is a necessitous man any time after it he is considered free He is therefore, not allowed to clog his equity of redemption as part of the transaction of mortgage Likewise the next heir should not be allowed to bargain away his rights as a part of the transaction of surrender but any time after it he may be so allowed, because then he is free to do or not to do as agreed

Whenever the next heir joins in the deed of transfer by the widow, the consent of the next heir is open to the objection that it is of a necessitous or reckless man So also of his consent before surrender His consent will be valid only when he first takes the surrender has an interval, however short, of freedom, and then retransfers it to the intended transferee The surrender and the transfer to and by the next heir respectively must be distinct transactions separated by some interval of time, so that the ultimate transfer may stand as valid veyed the whole estate as a gift to her daughter in March 1911, and the daughter on 11th December 1912, conveyed it back to the mother and Shah and Crump JJ. held that the widow got the absolute estate of the daughter, and they refused to consider the two transactions as part of the same transaction. Here was, indeed, a fair interval of freedom for the daughter to consider her position and her free choice was open to no objection. This freedom is the crucial test and it should be insisted upon.

When the next heir is a female who, under the Bombay law, acquires an absolute estate, the surrender to her and the subsequent transfer by her is open to no objection. But if the female next heir does not under law acquire full ownership, the surrender to her will give her only a life estate and the transfer by her will be only of the life estate. In order to reach a next heir, who can become full owner there will have to be a series of surrenders and transfers until they reach a transfer by that full owner.

When looked at from this point of view, the question of representation by immediate reversioners of remote actual reversioners in such cases will not arise at all.

Now remains the last question as to how far the consent of the next heir is evidence of justifying cause for the alienation by the widow. It is said that the consent is presumptive evidence of necessity for the alienation if it is for valuable consideration but that it is not so when the alienation is without consideration such as by gift. Batten and Hallifax A. J. C. in Mt. Kushibai v. Mania Khan [1923] Nagpur 265 All India Reporter, said: "The argument rests mainly on the assertion that legal necessity for a gift is impossible. But justifying cause for such a gift even of the whole estate, is however quite conceivable and can be proved by evidence just as such cause for a transfer for consideration whether of the kind that is called legal necessity or some other kind, can be proved and the consent of the people interested in quarrelling with an alienation would be equally strong proof of its being justifiable whether it was a gift, or a sale or a mortgage. In the case of Rangasami Gounden (I. L. R. 42 Mad. 523 P. C.), it was held under what their Lordships called the second head of the subject the consent of the next reversioner must be looked on, in their Lordships own words in the earlier case of Bijoy Gopal Mukerji v. Girindra Nath Mukerji (I. L. R. 41 Cal. 793 P. C.) as affording presumptive evidence that the alienation was 'under circumstances which rendered it lawful' and valid without any specification of these circumstances. The consent of reversioners who would not be more than life owners if they ever did inherit could not be treated in the same way as presumptive evidence of an unspecified cause which would justify and validate an alienation beyond their own lives. But it is presumptive evidence of circumstances not requiring to be specified which would render it lawful and valid during their lives and there is no reason why it should not be treated as evidence for what it may be worth of specific causes justifying an alienation which created an absolute title."

This is very instructive. The consent of persons interested in quarrelling with the alienation by the widow can always be looked upon as presumptive evidence of justifying circumstances for the said alienations. But care should be taken that this consent is considered only as a piece of evidence and nothing more. It only shifts the burden of proof. The consent should not be construed as an estoppel which is altogether a different matter. So far as it is evidence it is legitimate, so far as it is used to shut out contrary evidence it is [illegible]. As a piece of evidence it is always a valuable piece.

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before GREAVES AND GRAHAM, JJ. CIVIL RULE NO. 330 OF 1924. BHAGABAN CHANDRA ROY CHOWDHURY, Petitioner v. AMIN ALI and others, Opposite Party. The 27th June 1924.

Civil Procedure Code, sec. 115—High Court's power of interference in revision.

A decree was passed by the Additional District Judge of Noakhali upon a compromise petition filed by some of the Defendants in an original suit which was transferred to the said Court from the file of the Subordinate Judge where the suit was originally instituted. There was a variance between the judgment of the Additional District Judge and the decree as drawn up, inasmuch as the Opposite Parties who were no parties to the compromise were made liable for costs and mesne profits though the judgment did not provide for such order. The Opposite Parties filed an application for amendment of the decree to the District Judge as at the date of the application there was no Additional District Judge of Noakhali. The District Judge held upon that application that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the application, and the application should be made to the Subordinate Judge who upon a fresh application presented to him amended the decree. The rule was granted on the ground that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to amend the decree passed by the Additional District Judge :

Held—Upon review of the several sections of the Bengal Civil Courts Act, XII of 1887, that though there may be a technical defect in the lower Court's order, the High Court should not interfere in revision where substantial justice has been done.

Judicial interference with Legislative proceedings.

It is with a sense of relief that we are able to record this week that the proceedings in the High Court of Calcutta for restraining the President of Bengal Council from bringing the Government motion for the grant of Rs. 1,71,000 for the salary of ministers and to declare that the inclusion of the motion in the agenda paper of the Council was illegal and ultra vires, have come to a termination; but we regret very much that the Secretary of State and the Government of India should have thought it necessary to amend the rules regarding the presentation of supplementary estimates to the Legislative Assembly and the local Legislatures in India. Although Mr. Justice Ghose issued a temporary injunction on the President of the Bengal Council in the suit of Mr. Kumar Sankar Roy Chaudhuri and another he had refused an application by Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta for a mandamus for imposing a like restriction on the President. We have not been able to reconcile the almost contradictory findings in the two judgments over what seemed to us to be almost identical issues. We are sure that the Appellate Court would have experienced similar difficulty and would have surely come to the conclusion that the learned Judge's interpretation of the law in Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta's application was the correct view to take. This is all the more so, because, the learned Judge gave his reasons for his judicial findings in Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta's case, whereas his findings to the contrary in the suit of Mr. Kumar Sankar Roy Chaudhuri are unsupported by any reasoning and are mostly in the nature of obiter dicta.

We do not at present wish to deal with the judgments in any detail but we may say that we are in general agreement with the law as interpreted by the learned Judge in Mr. Sen Gupta's application and we shall give our reasons below which may not be quite identical with those given by the learned Judge. The reasons which we would advance would apply equally in support of the order of refusal of mandamus as also against the grant of injunction. According to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council the same principle applies to an injunction in a suit if the injunction is of the nature of a writ of mandamus or a writ of prohibition. See 12 C. W. N. 525 at pp. 531. We have said before in these columns that the Courts in India and the United States have been known to declare Acts and measures passed by the Legislature as ultra vires. But we have not yet come across any instance of the Court in any country interfering with the proceedings of the Legislature. The British Parliament is a sovereign body and the Courts have no jurisdiction to interfere with its proceedings. But the Indian Legislatures are statutory bodies and it may be said that the High Courts in India have jurisdiction to interfere when proceedings are held in contravention of the statutory provisions which include the rules framed under statutory authority. Let us now see whether the Government motion put down in the agenda paper for the meeting of the Bengal Legislative Council proposed to have been held on the 7th of July last contravened any of these provisions or rules. R. 21 of the Bengal Legislative Council says "(1) A list of business for the day shall be prepared by the Secretary (of the Bengal Council) and shall be circulated to all members. (2) No business not included in the list of business for the day shall be transacted at any meeting without the leave of the President." It is clear from this rule that it is competent for the Secretary to include any item of business in the agenda paper. He can do so without the leave of the President; it is only in respect of business not so entered that leave of the President has got to be asked.

Under r. 15 all questions of admissibility of a motion is left with the President. If an item of business has been improperly inserted in the agenda paper the proper procedure is for a member of the Council to rise on a point of order and object to it at the meeting of the Council at which it is brought forward. R. 15, cl. (2) says: "Any member may at any time submit a point of order for the decision of the President, but in doing so shall confine himself to stating the point." R. 15, cl. (1) says: "The President shall decide all points of order which may arise, and his decision shall be final." The word "final" here must be taken to exclude the jurisdiction of even the highest Court of Justice, for if this were not so every member of the Council would be at liberty to apply to the Court for upsetting the ruling of the President and it would be impossible for him to regulate the proceedings of the Council. It is for these reasons that the President of a Legislature is invested with the supreme authority with regard to questions of order that may be raised in the Council.

It must not be supposed however that if a Bill, motion or resolution is improperly admitted by the President, the Council is without remedy. They may reject it by the majority of vote. Assume that instead of doing so the Council passes it. It is then and then only that the Court can go into the question and decide upon its validity upon a properly constituted suit and may also issue a mandamus or injunction for preventing any injury or violation of any rights in the perpetration of any illegality [illegible] under. The learned Judge in Mr. J. M. Sen Gupta's case correctly states the law that [illegible] mandamus [illegible] we presume an injunction also may only be granted in the absence of any other [illegible] remedy. We have shown above that if the motion for ministers' [illegible] was improperly included in the agenda paper for the meeting [illegible] of July last, two other specific legal remedies were open to the member of the Legislative Council, viz. (1) to object to it on a point of order under r. 15, (2) to reject the motion by a vote of the majority. It follows therefore that before resorting to both of these specific legal remedies no one could come before the Court for the exercise of those extraordinary remedies and no Court ought to entertain any application or suit or grant any mandamus or injunction.

In dealing with Mr. Sen Gupta's application the learned Judge held relying on Mr. Justice Chaudhuri's judgment in In re Rasul (I. L. R. 44 Cal. 548) that the applicant could not claim this extraordinary relief unless he could show that some personal right of his was about to be irreparably injured and not for any infringement of any right in rem which he shared in common with other people. Mr. Justice Ghose asks in his judgment "has the applicant here shown that his property or franchise or personal right would be injured?" And answers that "the applicant pays Government revenue ... but he pays it along with thousands of other people ... this by itself cannot constitute such injury to applicant's property as the proviso contemplates." With regard to the plaintiff's "franchise" the learned Judge finds that the right to vote in Council does not come within that category. Further that even if it did His Lordship could not see how Mr. Cotton's putting the item of business objected to before the Council would result in any interference with the applicant's right to vote in any way he liked.

With regard to the threatened injury to applicant's personal rights His Lordship concluded in the following terms:

[illegible] of the [illegible] will be any injury to the applicant's personal right. What is the personal right? He says [illegible] that the business of the [illegible] Council [illegible] conducted in accordance with the provisions of [illegible]. The right the applicant enjoys [illegible] 139 members of the Legislative Council the [illegible] of the Council [illegible] that the applicant [illegible] satisfaction [illegible] without [illegible] of the [illegible] In re P [illegible] I. L. R. 44 Cal. 548 [illegible] that the [illegible] injury threatened to the present applicant [illegible] applicant asks for a direction on Mr. Cotton to disallow [illegible] from the agenda item No. 6 or to take it from the [illegible] the Council. Suppose Mr. Cotton is not so [illegible]. What follows? How would the applicant [illegible] except that it would hurt the applicant's notions of what is right or illegal under the Rules and Standing Orders, except that it will offend against his views that the motion ought to [illegible] others, I cannot see what injury will be caused to the applicant's property, franchise and personal right within the meaning of the section

The conclusion therefore I come to on an examination of the applicant's contention under the head proviso (a) is that the applicant has failed to satisfy the requirements of the Statute

We fail to follow on what ground, His Lordship arrived at the contrary conclusion upon the identical questions in Mr Kumar Sankar Roy Chaudhuri's case when according to the Privy Council decision in 12 C. W. N. 825 already cited the same principle should govern injunction in the nature of a writ of mandamus or a writ of prohibition. Since His Lordship did not give any reasons for his findings to the contrary or distinguish the Privy Council ruling we would accept his interpretation of the law in Mr Sen Gupta's as correct.

Restoration of rejected grants and supplementary demands.

We agree with the learned Judge that the Rules and Standing Orders framed under the Government of India Act for the regulation of business of the Indian or Provincial Legislature have been framed generally in accordance with the Parliamentary procedure and we should follow with scrupulousness the English Parliamentary practice. One of such rules is r. 39 of the Bengal Council which says "a motion must not raise a question substantially identical with one on which the Council has given a decision in the same session." It is a matter of common knowledge that a Demand for grant in the Legislative Assembly or the Bengal Council is brought in by a Government member (Crown) by way of motion or resolution which is either ... modified or rejected by the Council. The above rule only says that when a motion has been disposed of during any session it is not permissible to bring in another motion which is substantially the same during the same session. Applying this rule to the demand for grant of salary for three ministers and their peons and travelling charges etc. put down at Rs. ... under the head 22A in the Budget estimate for 1924-25 it was rejected by the Council on the 24th of March 1924 and if the Government had brought in the same motion in another but substantially the same form during the same session they could not do so under r. 39. But we are not sure that if Government had altered the demand as they did in item No 6 in the list of business for 7th July since the demand was for Rs 1,70,000 for salary and establishment of two ministers only, and brought it before the Council during the same session, it would have been barred under r. 39. Of course the members could have objected to it, but it might have been argued on the Government side consistently with Parliamentary practice, that it was a different motion as it was for two ministers only and for a much smaller grant. We would not anticipate what would have been the ruling of the President with regard to such a question if it at all arose but regarding it purely from a constitutional point of view and quite apart from the question whether the ministers should have resigned or should have been dismissed on the previous adverse vote we are of opinion that there was no legal bar to the Government bringing in such a demand for grant in the subsequent session. In support of our view we may refer to Chap. XI of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice where at the outset he sets out the Parliamentary Rule which is identical with r. 39 of the Bengal Council which bars repetition of the same motion in the same session. In the next paragraph (p. 267) he explains how a vote on a measure passed may be rescinded. Then he says that "the rescinding of a negative vote (or of a motion or measure rejected) is a proceeding of greater difficulty" and he goes on to say that "the only means by which a negative vote can be revoked is by proposing another question similar in general purport to that which has been rejected but with sufficient variance to constitute a new question ... the House can determine whether they ... substantially the same question or not." It ... that he says this with regard to ... of a motion rejected in the same session and ... cannot be regarded as a bar ... it forward during any subsequent session. It is also to be observed that ... motion is brought in the same session ... to but with sufficient variation ... it is to the House to do ... whether it is substantially the same question ... words the Chairman ... out of order or ruling ... the House can ... it or reject it. ... it follows that even assuming that the High Courts in India ... jurisdiction to interfere in such matters, ... reasons already given ... such matters till the President has ... his ruling and the Council has exercised ... of vote which are the obvious statutory remedies. The Legislature would also be abrogating its functions and surrendering its claim to autonomy, by prematurely resorting to a Court of law without exercising their own legitimate right.

We have already said that there is a bar to the same motion being repeated in an identical form during the same session but we are unable to find any authority for maintaining that it may not be brought forward for restoration or revision during the following session. At page 118 Erskine May says that supplementary grants and revised and additional estimates are presented in Parliament every session. Of course it is open to any member to object to or to oppose it whether a rejected grant is brought back in a substantially identical form or in a different form and for a different amount. But there is no absolute bar to its being brought forward. With regard to this, reference may be made to Redlich's Procedure of the House of Commons, Vol III, p. 36; Todd's Parliamentary Practice, Vol I, pp. 190-191. We need not go abroad but may cite an instance of quite recent occurrence from the proceedings of the Bengal Legislative Council itself and it may be within the recollection of our readers that when a demand for grant for the paper-book department of the High Court was rejected by the Council during the Budget discussion in March 1922 it was brought forward for restoration on the 11th of July 1922 by Sir Abdur Rahim. Babu Rishindra Nath Sarkar took objection at the very outset that it could not be brought in as a supplementary demand. Babu Surendra Nath Ray, the Deputy President, then presiding, ruled that the motion was in order. It is interesting to note that the present minister, the Hon'ble Mr. Fazlul Haq, opposed the motion and so did the ex-minister Babu Surendra Nath Mallik, but the question was debated upon and eventually the rejected grant was restored by a majority of votes in the Council (see Proceedings of Bengal Council, 11th July 1922, pp. 170 to 181). We may mention also in this connection that in March 1922, the Legislative Assembly reduced demand for grants to the extent of 95 lacs 72 thousand and amongst them customs establishment was curtailed by over 4 lacs. In September 1922 a supplementary demand was made, among other things, to restore this grant. The then Finance Member, Sir Malcolm Hailey, explained that he had more than carried out the wishes of the Assembly for retrenchment for which the Assembly had made a total cut of 95 lakhs and 72 thousand; he had "been able to effect retrenchments to the extent of one crore and ten lacs." He had done this by effecting economy in other directions but he asked the members to restore the cut made in the customs establishment, as reduction of customs establishment would result in a reduced realization of the customs revenue. Objection was taken to the restoration but eventually it was waived in view of the circumstances explained. Instances of the restoration of rejected grants by Parliament have also been referred to. We shall now conclude by reproducing r. 225 of the House of Commons which is identical with r. 94 of the Bengal Council. We take this Rule from the Manual of Procedure of the House of Commons published by His Majesty's Stationary Office, 1919. R. 225 is in the following terms:—

> 225. An estimate must be presented for a supplementary or additional grant when—
>
> (1) the amount named in the ordinary estimates for a particular service is found to be insufficient for the purposes of the current year; or
> (2) a need arises during the current year for expenditure upon some new service not contemplated in the ordinary estimates for that year.

We are sorry that owing to the ill-advised and hasty legal proceedings, the Government has thought it fit to amend this Parliamentary Rule so far as the Indian and Provincial Legislatures are concerned. It is to be seen whether the effect of it will not be retrograde.

NOTES

Mr. Justice Page and the Calcutta Bar.

It is with a sense of pain that we publish from the reports in the public press an account of a very regrettable incident that took place in the Court of Mr. Justice Page, on the Original Side of the High Court, of Calcutta, on Wednesday the 23rd of July last. The report will speak for itself. As regards the facts we need only say that the account of the incident that we have received from the members of the Bar, who were present in Court, agrees substantially with the accounts published in the newspaper press, amongst which also there is no material discrepancy. We must say that this is the first time that we have heard of a Judge of the Calcutta High Court asking a Counsel to leave the Court. We have heard of an occasional breeze in Court between the Bench and Bar but these things are not taken seriously by either party. But the incident we refer to was of a more serious character.

A Judge may refuse to hear Counsel if he is irrelevant or repeats his argument. He may ask him to resume his seat but to do so in the style of a schoolmaster is hardly consistent with the dignity of the Court and respectful to the profession. We doubt also whether Counsel can be ordered out of Court except for persistence in boisterous conduct. During our experience extending over nearly thirty years, we have never known a Judge of the High Court asking any Counsel to leave the Court. The unfortunate part of it is that there is no legal remedy against any such insult offered to a member of the Bar. The learned Judge said that he might have taken proceedings for contempt. We wish he had. That would have been certainly more dignified and appropriate on the part of the learned Judge and fair to the Counsel also. If the Judge had done that, the proceedings would have been, in due course, brought before the Bench of the Hon'ble the Chief Justice by way of appeal. We are sure in that case the aggrieved Counsel would have got justice and his honour would have been vindicated.

We are informed that a representation was proposed to be presented by the members of the Bar to His Lordship the Chief Justice, but that it was not actually presented as His Lordship said that he could not take any judicial notice of it in open Court. The Chief Justice and his brother Judges have a disciplinary jurisdiction over the members of the legal profession but they have none over any offending member of the Bench. His Lordship the Chief Justice might, as one gentleman to another, have spoken to his colleague and asked him to make up and restore the cordial relationship that has always existed between the Bench and the Bar in the Calcutta High Court. But if Mr. Justice Page had disregarded such advice, nothing more could be done. We wish that the learned Judge would only emulate the example of judicial dignity and courtesy for which His Lordship the Chief Justice is noted and is held in high regard by all.

We must congratulate the Advocate-General on having espoused the cause of the Bar. For, any gratuitous insult offered to any individual member of the Bar is an insult not merely to him personally but to the whole Bar. We are sorry that Mr. Justice Page so far forgot himself that he hardly treated the Advocate-General with the courtesy that is due to the leader of the Bar. He forgot that it was the duty of the Advocate-General to bring the grievances of the Bar before the Bench and curtly told him that he would not be dictated to by anybody. The learned Judge also forgot that when a Judge gets into temper, refuses arbitrarily to hear Counsel and is unable to maintain judicial equanimity on the Bench, he acts contrary to the trust and responsibility that have been entrusted to him by His Majesty the King-Emperor.

It is a pity that His Lordship acted in the manner he did and did not draw up contempt proceedings against the aggrieved Counsel. The Bar and Bench may with profit refer in this connection to In re Pollard, L. R. 2 P. C. A. (1867-69), pp. 106-121, which was a case of contempt proceedings against a barrister in the Supreme Court of Hongkong the facts of which are somewhat similar to what transpired in Mr. Justice Page's Court. In this case the proceedings were quashed by the Privy Council, and in the later case of MacLeod, [L. R. A. C. (1899), pp. 549-562: s. c. 3 C. W. N. cccxlvi] the Judicial Committee awarded costs against the Judge for improperly proceeding in contempt against a barrister.

We said recently in connection with the questionable conduct of Mr. Justice McCardie in England that the Judges in India seldom perpetrate such indiscretions. We regret therefore all the more that we have to notice a case of indiscretion so soon after. But we must not forget that Mr. Justice Page is quite new to his office and is a new-comer to this country and that he has yet to adapt himself to the traditions of courtesy and good behaviour that have come down to the cultured classes in India from time immemorial. We dare say a little longer experience of his surroundings will sober him down and will enable him to adapt himself to his environment.

Autocracy in the garb of liberty.

Mr. Whiteley, the Speaker of the House of Commons, who cannot make any speeches or express any political opinion in the House but has only to regulate the business and decide points of order, had occasion to make a speech on the Celebration Day of the Magna Charta at Runnymede. Freed from the bondage of office he spoke like a free man and gave expression to his views with regard to the marked tendency of modern political movements. We know how some people in the name of popular liberty and freedom often resort to the worst form of autocracy and despotism. In no country public and personal liberty and individual freedom of action are held more sacred than in Britain Still Mr. Whiteley sounded a note of warning to those who were proud of their political liberty and regarded the Magna Charta as the corner-stone of their constitution. He said: "Our heritage is not unchallenged. In these days it is not from a monarch that our challenge comes. We have learnt to love a monarch who understands and values our constitutional system. It is from a very different quarter that we hear questionings of our hard-won prize of consultative Government. Dictatorship, with queer names, triumvirates with unlimited power but much limited responsibilities—these are offered as substitutes for our liberty. Charles I is not dead, but he does not live in Windsor. More likely you will find him in Kensington or Kennington. He is just the same and still dislikes hearing any voice but his own. He goes to public meetings to prevent free speech, and he would suppress all organs of opinion other than his own. Even on the green benches of House of Commons now and then in a new Parliament I thought I saw his ghost, ready of speech but impatient of hearing."

If we turn to Russia or to Italy or look for the evil spirit of Charles I elsewhere, we would find autocrats masquerading in the garb of advocates of popular rights, both far and near. Public freedom is merely a pretext with them for gaining power and once they get it, they take to crushing public liberty and individual freedom quite ruthlessly. So the note of warning of the Speaker of the Mother of Parliaments has not been sounded a day too soon.

Bench and Bar, Calcutta High Court.

A MEMBER OF THE BAR ORDERED OUT OF COURT BY MR JUSTICE PAGE.

An unusual occurrence took place in the High Court, Calcutta, on Wednesday the 23rd of July last, Mr. S C Bose, a member of the Calcutta Bar, being ordered out of Court by Mr. Justice Page The incident arose in course of a reference to the suit, Sashimukhi Debi v. Keshablal Mukherji, and was followed by a protest by the Advocate-General, Mr. S. R. Das, on behalf of the Bar.

The case in question was mentioned early in the afternoon before Mr. Justice Page for certain directions regarding the terms of the judgment and the order which His Lordship had passed in the morning.

Mr. H. D. Bose (with Mr S K. Chuckerbutty) appeared for the Plaintiffs, and stated that though his Lordship had made it clear in the morning that the said order was not by consent of the parties, this did not appear in the Court minutes. In the minutes it appeared that the order was by consent of the parties.

His Lordship: I made no order. I made that clear. I expressed my opinion on the question of maintenance.

Mr S C. Bose, who appeared for the Defendant, submitted that the words "by consent of the parties" should be deleted from the minutes.

His Lordship: It was at the suggestion of the parties and that will appear.

Mr. S. C. Bose said that it was no doubt at the suggestion of the Plaintiffs, but not at the suggestion of the Defendant.

His Lordship: It was at the suggestion of the parties. You made your suggestions on behalf of your clients.

COURT JURISDICTION.

Mr S. C. Bose: I made my suggestions at the direction of the Court, but your Lordship will remember and my learned friends will remember that I stated clearly that the suggestions which I was making regarding the question of maintenance were without prejudice to my contentions as to the jurisdiction of the Court

His Lordship: Has the Court no jurisdiction to make suggestions?

Mr. S. C. Bose: I submit not in a case where the Court has no jurisdiction in respect of that matter

His Lordship: Then you had better learn it.

Mr. S. C. Bose: I have learnt it in this case. But I submit if the words "suggestions of the parties" are to appear in the judgment or order, it ought also to appear that I made the suggestion without prejudice to my contentions regarding the question of jurisdiction

His Lordship: I have made my order Sit down, Sir. Resume your seat

Mr. S C Bose: I must protest against your Lordship addressing me in that manner

His Lordship: Sit down Are you going to obey the order of the Court?

Mr. S C. Bose thereupon resumed his seat but after a few minutes got up again and said: "I sat down in obedience to the order of the Court but I rise again and I ask your leave to make my submissions."

His Lordship: Sit down, sit down.

Mr. S. C. Bose resumed his seat.

His Lordship: Leave the Court at once. Leave the Court.

Mr. S. C. Bose got up and said: "I leave the Court but I do so under protest"

Mr. Bose then walked out

ADVOCATE-GENERAL'S PROTEST.

By four o'clock the members of the Bar as well as other branches of the profession assembled in the Court room of Mr. Justice Page.

When his Lordship Mr. Justice Page was about to rise at 4-30 p.m., the Advocate-General addressing his Lordship said:

My Lord, before your Lordship rises I have a very unpleasant matter to mention before you.

Mr. Justice Page: I am very glad to see you Mr. Advocate-General.

The Advocate-General: Thank my Lord. As the head of the Bar it has been represented to me that your Lordship asked--directed- a member of the Bar to go out of the Court and I am here to protest against that remark. But I submit very respectfully to your Lordship that a member of the Bar and your Lordship is a member of the Bar yourself—is entitled to courtesy from the Bench And I am here to tell your Lordship as your Lordship is a member of the Bar yourself, you must realise how difficult it is for the members of the Bar to appear before your Lordship and assist you if they cannot count upon the courtesy which your Lordship has up to now always extended to the members of the Bar

Mr Justice Page: I regret very much now that you have come and have elected to speak. You are untutored in this matter. You know me well enough as you have been good enough to say, you know, that I have always shown respect to the Bar and I shall always continue to do so; but it is for the Judge to decide as to whether proceedings before him are conducted according to the rules of the Court, and in this instance, I regret to say, for the first time since I have sat in this place, that a member of the Bar has flagrantly refused to obey the order which I made For that there is no excuse. It is for the Court alone to decide as to whether respect and courtesy is extended to it. And when a member of the profession, which you and I hold so dear, in the heat of the moment, or in the exuberance of spirit, travels beyond the attitude of respect which he is bound to tender to the Court, then one expects a member of the Bar to tender his apology to me the Court, the representative of His Majesty the King Emperor who sits in this place, for the disrespect which he has shown, and the Court will invariably extend to him every opportunity to express his regret and will be most lenient towards any action which is taken. But for a member of the Bar to refuse to obey—or rather not to obey the order of the Court is a gross contempt of Court, far more gross in this case because he stands there as one of those whose sole interest should be the administration of justice. I yield to nobody in my determination to uphold all the traditions and privileges of the Bar (you know that well), but there is a paramount duty which I owe to this Court and to the King-Emperor whom I represent that nobody, however great or however small, shall dare to show disrespect with impunity to persons holding the great office which has been entrusted to me by the King-Emperor I think and I hope that on a little reflection the member of the Bar who has permitted himself, no doubt in the heat of the moment, to adopt the attitude that is inconsistent with that which it is incumbent upon him to adopt towards this Court that he will do what is right in the matter and come to express his regret, and he will receive from me every consideration But I must protest against anybody dictating to me as to what my duty is in this respect.

The Advocate General: I have not the slightest desire to dictate to your Lordship what your duty is That is not my duty. But I submit to your Lordship very respectfully, while expressing regret that any member of the Bar should have shown discourtesy to the Court—I do submit with respect that if he has been guilty of contempt of Court there is a procedure open to your Lordship to take, and that it does not follow because a member of the Bar has lost his sense so far as to be guilty of contempt of Court that you should direct him to go out of Court in the same way as your Lordship would do to your servant

Mr Justice Page I think on reflection, it is my last observation and then I rise, you will see that I am extremely moderate in taking the course I did rather than applying much more rigid requirements of law which is open to me under the circumstances

His Lordship then left the Court

MENTION OF THE MATTER BEFORE THE HON'BLE CHIEF JUSTICE BY THE ADVOCATE GENERAL

Wednesday's incident between Mr Justice Page and Mr S C Bose, was mentioned on Thursday afternoon before the Chief Justice by the Advocate General

The Chief Justice I have read the copy of the petition which you desire to present, Mr Advocate-General It is quite impossible for me to allow this to be presented or discussed in open Court If you, as the leader of the Bar, desire to make a representation to me on any matter connected with the administration of the Court, it should be done in the usual way and it will receive my consideration

CIVIL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before GREAVES AND GRAHAM, JJ. CIVIL REVISION NO. 498 OF 1924. MAHARAJ KUMAR MAHIMA NIRANJAN CHAKRAVARTY, Plaintiff, Petitioner v. MAHA BISHNU CHONGDAR, Defendant, Opposite Party The 18th June 1924.

Service on Defendant, failure of, through want of identifier—Suit, if may be dismissed.

The facts of the case were that the Plaintiff brought a suit for rent in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Suri against the Defendant. The suit was instituted on 12th February 1924. The order of the Court on that date was that process-fee should be filed within a week and the case be fixed for hearing on 20th March 1924. The process-fee was duly paid and notices were issued to the Defendant. The identifier who was sent by the Plaintiff to identify the Defendant fell ill and could not on that account identify the Defendant. The notices were returned unserved on the ground that there was no identifier present. On 20th March the Plaintiff made an application for fresh service on the Defendant and deposited the process-fees The learned Subordinate Judge, however, made an order calling upon the Plaintiff to show cause by 24th March why his suit should not be dismissed on the ground that he failed to supply an identifier. The Plaintiff filed an affidavit setting forth the reasons as to why the identifier was not present and prayed for fresh service of notice The learned Subordinate Judge on 24th March dismissed the Plaintiff's suit on that date on the ground that the Plaintiff failed to supply an identifier at the time of the service of notice

On these facts, the Plaintiff obtained the aforesaid Rule in the High Court and the said Rule came up for final hearing before Greaves and Graham, JJ., on 18th June 1924.

Babu Sitaram Banerji for the Petitioner submitted that the learned Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to dismiss the Plaintiff's suit The Judge apparently purported to act either under Or. 9, r 5 or r. 6 of the Code of Civil Procedure In either case the Court had no jurisdiction to dismiss the Plaintiff's suit. The only course open to him was to order fresh service. The Subordinate Judge's order was most arbitrary and could not be supported by any provision of law.

The order of the Court was to the effect "We make the Rule absolute and direct that fresh processes shall issue."

NOTES

Mr. Justice Greaves' appointment as Vice Chancellor of the Calcutta University.

We welcome the appointment of Mr. Justice Greaves as the Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University. Sir Lewis Greaves has been noted for his courtesy and devotion to duty not only on the High Court Bench but in connection with many extra-judicial public functions. He has always taken a keen interest in sports and many other public functions and bodies which have for their object social, physical, intellectual or moral well-being of the community. Amongst his extra-judicial duties his services and report in connection with the Committee of Enquiry appointed in Bengal for the separation of Executive and Judicial Functions, met with much public appreciation. He has for many years now been a member of the Senate of the Calcutta University, of its Law Faculty as also of the governing body of the University Law College. Besides his past connection with the University and his long experience in the discharge of presidential duties of many public bodies make his selection as the Vice-Chancellor of the Calcutta University a very appropriate one. We have every confidence that he will be able to put back the administrative and the financial position of the University which has of late got somewhat out of gear, on a sound business-like basis.

Confused Condition of Records of Indian Appeals before the Privy Council.

We publish below a circular letter recently issued by the Registrar of the Privy Council drawing the attention of the profession to their Lordships' observation regarding the confused condition of the records of some Indian Appeal.

The Registrar of the Privy Council with reference to his circular letter of October 1922 as to the re-arrangement of records desires to call the attention of practitioners to the following observations recently made by their Lordships in giving judgment dismissing an Indian Appeal.

Their Lordships feel bound to draw attention to the state of the record. In the teeth of directions issued from the office no trouble whatsoever had been taken with the arrangement of the record and it came before their Lordships in a disgraceful state of confusion. Had the Appellants been successful their Lordships would not have hesitated to disallow in toto the solicitors' fee for perusing the record.

The above observations were made by Lord Dunedin in giving judgment dismissing an Indian Appeal before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council on the 26th of June last.

Re-arrangement of Records of Indian Appeals before the Privy Council.

The Circular letter of October 1922 referred to above has also been forwarded to us for publication and is in the following terms:—

The Registrar of the Privy Council desires to call the attention of practitioners in Indian Appeals to the fact that the Indian Courts are now adopting the system of printing the exhibits either at the end of the record or in a separate volume, each exhibit being printed separately and paged at the foot of each page. The object of this system is to allow Counsel and Solicitors in London to prepare a proper record for the use of the Board by

(1) omitting unnecessary documents; and

(2) re-arranging the exhibits, if necessary, and the Registrar has to request Solicitors carefully to consider this matter when perusing the record.

The parties should omit any documents they agree are unnecessary, and mark in the index against the omitted documents the words "omitted by consent". Where one party objects to the retention of a document as unnecessary and the other party insists on its being included, the record should contain a note as provided by r. 18 of the Judicial Committee Rules, 1908, with a view to the subsequent adjustment of the costs.

The exhibits should be arranged as far as suitable in chronological order, mixing Plaintiff's and Defendant's documents together when necessary. Each document should show its exhibit mark and whether it is a Plaintiff's or Defendant's document (unless this is clear from the exhibit mark) and in all cases documents relating to the same matter, such as,

(a) a series of correspondence, or

(b) proceedings in a suit other than the one under appeal, should be kept together. It will be seen that the order in the record of the exhibits will probably be different from the order in the index (which should be in the order of the exhibit mark), and when the part containing the exhibits has been settled, it must be re-paged at the top of each page and the new page numbers substituted for the old page numbers in the index.

When no alteration is made in the arrangement of the exhibits, the pages in the record numbered at the foot of the page must be numbered again at the top of the page

October, 1922.

LONDON NOTES.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

July 17th. The Canadian List has almost entirely monopolised the attention of the Privy Council during this term, but a warning note from the Registrar proclaimed the hearing of Indian appeals on Friday last, the 11th instant.

VISCOUNT CAVE presided over a Board consisting of LORD CARSON, SIR JOHN EDGE and MR. JUSTICE DUFF.

The first appeal to be heard was from Madras, Sri Ambalavana D. P. Sannadhi Avergal v Lakshmana Pillai. In this appeal there were allegations of mismanagement against the trustee of a charitable endowment. The Indian Courts having found the charges proved, dismissed the trustee, and the High Court formulated a scheme for the management of the trust thereby ousting the prerogative of the Adhinam to nominate new trustees.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C. and Mr. B. Dubé for the Appellant contended that the Adhinam should not have been deprived of their right of nomination and also that the decree of dismissal did not operate as against the trustee who was at present administering the trust, the trustee against whom the decree was made having died.

Messrs. DeGruyther, K. C. and Parikh for the Respondents.

The appeal was dismissed.

Mr. B. Dubé appeared "ex parte" in an appeal from Lahore—Sat Narain v. Behari Lal—from a Full Bench decision of the High Court reported in I. L. R. 3 Lah. 329. The question for decision arose in a pre-emption suit. A Hindu father became insolvent and the Full Bench held that under the Mitakshara the son's as well as the father's interest vested in the Official Assignee. Judgment was reserved.

PEON'S REPORTS IF SHOULD BE EVIDENCE BY THEMSELVES.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

A letter has appeared in Part 32, Vol. XXVIII, of the Calcutta Weekly Notes over the signature of Babu Mahananda Choudhury, Pleader, Habiganj (Sylhet), regarding the admissibility of peon's reports, etc., in evidence without formal proof. I whole-heartedly endorse the suggestion made by that learned gentleman. Peon's reports, etc. should as a rule be made admissible in evidence without formal proof of those documents, as that would save a good deal of time in the disposal of Miscellaneous (Judicial) cases, especially those coming under Or. 21, r. 90 of the Civil Procedure Code. As is well known, quite a lot of processes have got to be proved in cases under Or. 21, r. 90, and it would be a great relief to all concerned if the reports and affidavits submitted by the peons could be made provable either by producing the original documents or by producing certified copies of them. Peons are absolutely formal witnesses for the party by whom they are called. The other party also gain very little by cross-examining them, as they invariably answer "I have no independent recollection." In this state of things, presence of the serving peons at the trial for the purpose of proving their reports, etc., is absolutely unnecessary and should be dispensed with. Sec 74 of the Indian Evidence Act appears to cover such reports, etc., and if it is so, they can very well be proved by producing merely certified copies of them, much to the convenience of the litigants concerned. As regards peons' reports regarding delivery of possession there is also authority for holding that they are public documents copies whereof are admissible in evidence without proof. (Satnarain Dubé v. Narain Bargah, 13 A. L. J. 935 : s. c. 30 I. C. 830; Mahammad Nasir v. Ram Karan Singh, 25 I. C. 529).

I would now request that you will be pleased to publish the above in your much esteemed journal.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your most obedient Servant,
ROMESH CHANDRA BHATTACHARYYA,
Pleader, Judge's Court, Mymensingh.

To

THE EDITOR, "CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES."

SIR,

Referring to your Editorial Note in Part 33 of 28 C. W. N. on the letter of Mr. Mahananda Choudhury which appeared in the previous issue regarding the above subject, may I take the liberty of pointing out the following :—

(1) I regret to find that neither your nor your correspondent's attention was drawn to the decision of the Madras High Court in the case of Abdul v. Ayyar, reported in 35 Mad. 670 (1911) in which exactly the same point arose Sundara Ayyar, J., observed in that case "in my opinion, the returns are admissible under sec. 35 of the Evidence Act as evidence of the facts reported by the process-servers."

(2) The Madras decision referred to above goes against your view that "the content of the peon's report would not be relevant under sec. 35 of the (Evidence) Act, even if it was declared to be a public document."

(3) That decision shews that the peon is a "public servant" and his report or return is an "entry in any public record" made by him "in the discharge of his official duty" under sec. 35, and is a "public document" within the meaning of sec. 74 (i), (iii) of the same Act.

(4) Whether you agree with the view taken by Sundara Ayyar, J., or not is a different matter.

Yours faithfully,
RADHAROMON MUKERJEE,
Vakil.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before SUHRAWARDY AND DUVAL, JJ. M. A. No. 77 OF 1923. CHANDRA KUMAR DE, Decree-holder, Appellant v. KUSUM KUMARI ROY, Judgment-debtor, Respondent. The 2nd July 1924.

Commissioner's fee, order allowing, execution of—Objection by party—Appeal—C. P. C., secs. 36, 47.

The Appellant was appointed as pleader Commissioner who was by the order of the Subordinate Judge declared entitled to Rs 643-13-6 pies from the Plaintiff as his remuneration for his work in a partition suit dismissed for default. He applied for execution of the order for costs but his application was disallowed on the objection of the Plaintiff, judgment-debtor. He preferred an appeal to this Court. It was contended by the Respondent, (1) that no appeal lay (2) that the order is not a decree and there is no provision for the execution of the said order. In support of his contention he cited 10 C. W. N. 231

Held—That under sec. 36, C. P. C., the order had the effect of a decree and sec. 47 applied to the case and hence an appeal lay. It was further held that the decision in 10 C. W. N. 231 was passed when the old C. P. C. was in force and there was then no corresponding section similar to sec. 36 of the new Code.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION Before SUHRAWARDY AND CHAKRAVARTI JJ S A No 866 of 1922 KARTICK CHANDRA DAS and others Defendants, Appellants v JITENDRA NATH ROY Plaintiff Respondent The 17th June 1924

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) sec 105 Decree for enhancement of rent in sec 105 proceeding against tenants one of whom was dead before institution of the proceeding if a nullity—Rent suit for enhanced rent as determined in sec 105 proceeding only against tenants who were parties to that proceeding if maintainable Landlord if entitled to a money decree

The facts of the case material to this report are as follows —

Plaintiff applied under sec 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act against the Appellants and one Kali Charan Das for settlement of fair and equitable rent claiming also enhanced rent for rise of prices of staple foodcrops. The application was contested Plaintiff obtained a decree for enhanced rent in the said proceeding Plaintiff now instituted the present rent suit for 1325 to 1326 B S against all the said Defendants at the enhanced rate as determined in the aforesaid sec 105 proceeding The Munsif of Khulna who tried the present suit found as a fact that the said tenant Kali Charan Das one of the Defendants in this suit and who was one of the Defendants in the sec 105 proceeding died before the institution of that proceeding Plaintiff brought the present suit against him as a living person but substituted his widow Defendant No 11 as his heir later on Subsequently Plaintiff got her name expunged from the record during the trial of the suit and wanted decree against the remaining Defendants The Munsif held that the Plaintiff was entitled to get a decree for his claim for a money decree against the other Defendants, as the arrears did not accrue due in Kali Charan's life-time The Munsif awarded a money decree for the Plaintiff's claim On appeal by the Defendants, the Additional Subordinate Judge of Khulna affirmed the decision of the Munsif and relied on the cases in 36 I C 243 and 23 C W N 27 (notes) He held that evidently the contesting Defendants practically opposed the sec 105 application on behalf of all the co-sharers and did not then bring to the notice of the Court the fact as to Kali Charan's death The Additional Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal Against this decision the Defendants preferred this second appeal

Their Lordships affirmed the decision of the Courts below and dismissed the appeal

The following portion of their judgment will be found material

The tenants have appealed on the ground that Kali Charan Das having died previous to the institution of the suit under sec 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act the decree obtained by the Plaintiff for enhancement of rent was inoperative and ineffectual and that the present suit at the enhanced rate was not maintainable The objection is that the decree in the suit under sec 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act having been obtained against a dead person or against some of the tenants must be treated as a nullity We are unable to give effect to this contention The Appellants were aware at the time of the suit under sec 105 that Kali Charan was dead No objection was taken on that ground The suit was contested on several grounds In the present suit it does not lie in the mouth of the Appellants to say that the decree is inoperative when they contested the suit on all grounds available but failed The only person who could say that it was not binding on her is the heir of Kali Charan and the suit, it appears has been dismissed against his widow

Babu Shib Chandra Palit and Dr Jadu Nath Kanjilal for the Appellants

Rai Surendra Chandra Sen Bahadur and Babu Hemendra Chandra Sen for the Respondent

High Court Rules and Admission of Advocates.

The High Court of Calcutta has anticipated legislative interference by drawing up rules under sec. 10 of the Letters Patent by giving effect to the main recommendations of the Bar Committee. The rules have been circulated among the various branches of the profession to elicit their opinions and suggestions and, after the same have been considered, will be sent up to the Government for sanction. We have no desire to revive an old controversy by discussing the rules on their merits. But we hope they will be worked by those whom they are intended to benefit in the spirit in which they have been made. It cannot be gainsaid that the rules as they now stand will hit the Bar, particularly its junior members. To alleviate their difficulties, they should be allowed to act if they choose to do so. In framing the rules the Judges do not appear to have borne in mind the recommendations of the Bar Committee to this effect.

R. 5 provides that any person who has passed the B. A. or B. Sc. Examination of the University of Calcutta, Dacca, Allahabad, Patna, the Punjab or Bombay or the B. A. Examination of the University of Madras may be admitted as an Advocate on production of a certificate that he has passed in certain branches of law. The list of subjects specified in the rule is quite a long one and a graduate who passes them may be taken to have acquired a good mastery of law. He will have, besides, before admission to read for a period of twelve months in an Advocate's chambers. The provisions contained in this rule we believe constitute a move in the right direction. In course of time the University of Calcutta will not have to provide instruction for those who intend to join the legal profession, and will be in a position exclusively to devote its resources to the study of the higher arts and sciences.

R. 3 provides: From and after the date on which these rules come into force Advocates will take precedence on the Original Side and in the Court for hearing of appeals from the Original Side according to the dates on which they were called to the Bar or were admitted originally as Vakils or Attorneys of the Court. The rule admits of two interpretations in the case of Advocates who were originally Vakils or Attorneys and have been subsequently called to the Bar. Do they take precedence according to the date on which they were admitted originally as Vakils or Attorneys, or according to the date on which they were called to the Bar? The ambiguity should be removed before the rules are sent up for sanction.

American Lawyers' visit to England.

The visit of nearly 1200 American and 250 Canadian lawyers to England as guests of the lawyers of England is regarded as a historic event and is believed to have the effect of strengthening the bond of brotherhood between the English-speaking people in the world. The English Law Journal on behalf of the Bench and Bar in England, in according welcome to their brethren across the "pond," says: America the half-brother of the world! The Law Times notices this unique event in more sober terms and says.—

Next week will be a memorable one in the history of the Profession. Nearly twelve hundred members of the American Bar Association will be here as the guests of the lawyers of England and about two hundred and fifty of the Canadian Bar Association will assist in their entertainment. This great gathering of lawyers speaking a common tongue should prove of the highest value, both from a professional point of view and otherwise. It is all to the good that the lawyers of the United States of America, of the Dominion of Canada, and of this country should meet in social intercourse and exchange ideas. A legal conference in its strict sense was an impossibility but an assembly of those who practice the law even for the period of one short week, should do much to encourage cordial relations between the nations. In all countries it has been the fashion to decry the lawyer but it is to the lawyer that the layman turns when advice and assistance are sought and both directly and indirectly the lawyer wields enormous power in moulding public opinion. It is for these reasons that the coming meeting may truly be described as a great event.

NEW EDITION OF SHASTRI GOLAP CHANDRA SARKAR'S HINDU LAW

To

THE EDITOR, CALCUTTA WEEKLY NOTES.

SIR,

I have read the comment which appeared in your Journal 28 C. W. N. clxiii in which you have pointed out my omission to notice certain changes alleged to have been made in the Hindu law by recent statutes in the 5th edition of the Hindu law by Babu Golap Chandra Sarkar Shastri edited by me. I beg to add that Mr. Sheshagiri Ayer's Bill regarding exclusion from inheritance by reason of certain disabilities under Hindu law (Hindu Inheritance Removal of Disabilities Act 19) has not yet been passed into law. I am informed by the Secretary to the Legislative Assembly that the Bill referred to above has only been passed by the Assembly and is still pending before the Council of State.

I thank you for your valuable suggestion but I do not think any useful purpose will be served by issuing supplementary slips noting a proposed change in the law. The other Bill which has subsequently been passed into law has already been referred to in the book.

I hope you will kindly publish this letter in the next issue of your esteemed Journal so that there may not be any misapprehension about any change having been effected in the Hindu law of inheritance which has not been noticed in the book.

Yours truly,
RISHINDRA NATH SARKAR

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before GREAVES AND PANTON, JJ. Cr. Rev. No. 990 of 1923. RAGHUBAR DAYAL, Petitioner v. NALINAKHYA BHATTACHARYA, Opposite Party. The 4th March 1924.

Stay of criminal proceedings pending the disposal of civil suit between the parties, propriety of.

The above Rule was obtained by the complainant in a criminal proceeding against an order of the Second Presidency Magistrate directing the criminal case to be filed until the disposal of a civil suit instituted by the accused. The complainant's story was that he was induced to part with two sums of money to the accused on false and fraudulent representations. The complaint was instituted early in July 1923 shortly after the receipt of a letter from the attorney of the accused asking for their partnership accounts. The accused urged that the matter raised by the complainant in his complaint would be in effect decided in the partnership suit, which the accused had instituted.

Held: We do not think that is so. The partnership accounts no doubt, if the suit is proceeded with, will be directed to be gone into and no doubt when the matter comes before the officer taking the partnership accounts, the complainant will allege the payment of the two sums alleged in the criminal proceedings and the accused will give his version of what happened with regard to these two sums. But I am certain of one thing, that the question of fraudulent representations raised by the complainant in his complaint will never be decided or gone into in the partnership proceedings and it seems to me that having regard to the time that has already elapsed since the institution of the suit and having regard to the manner in which the matter is proceeding several years will elapse before the partnership matter and the taking of accounts are finally disposed of. Under the circumstances it seems to us that in effect the order of the learned Magistrate is to bring the criminal proceedings to an end and thinking as we do that in effect what is raised by the complaint of the complainant will not be decided in the civil suit, although the liability for the payment of the two sums will be decided, we think that the order of Second Magistrate is wrong and he should not have filed the complaint as he has done."

Babus Narendra Kumar Basu and Probodh Chandra Chatterjee for the Petitioner.

Mr. Bagram and Babu Pannalal Chatterjee for the Opposite Party.

CRIMINAL REVISIONAL JURISDICTION. Before C. C. GHOSE AND CUMING, JJ. Cr. Rev. No. 361 of 1923. BHAGWAN DAS SAHA, Petitioner, v. SRILAL KHEJRIWALA, Opposite Party. The 22nd May 1923.

Stay of criminal proceedings pending disposal of civil suit, how far justifiable—Quashing of criminal proceedings, grounds of.

A complaint was lodged by the Opposite Party Srilal in the Police Court, Calcutta, charging Bhagwan Das Saha, Petitioner, with embezzlement of certain moneys realised by him from a certain constituent of the Opposite Party and not credited in the books of the Opposite Party. Two civil suits were then pending in the Original Side of the High Court between the parties, one of them being instituted by the Opposite Party for judgment for a sum of Rs. 6,000 said to have been paid by the Petitioner to one Madan Lal but which the latter denied having received, and the other suit being instituted by the Petitioner alleging that he was a partner of the Opposite Party and was entitled to a certain share in the profit of the business carried on by the Opposite Party. The Petitioner got the present Rule on the Opposite Party to show cause why the proceedings in the criminal case instituted by the Opposite Party should not be stayed pending the disposal of the aforesaid two suits.

Held: That on the facts there are no grounds for quashing the proceedings and so far as the question of the stay of the criminal proceedings pending the disposal of the civil suit instituted by the Opposite Party is concerned, no sufficient grounds exist for the stay of the criminal proceedings pending the disposal of that suit. The matters involved in the suit are entirely different from the matters which form the subject matters of the criminal proceedings. No sufficient grounds exist for the stay of the criminal proceedings pending the disposal of the second civil suit either. The issues involved in the second civil suit are not the same as the issues involved in the case in the Criminal Court. In the circumstances, the order made by the learned Magistrate should not be disturbed and the criminal proceedings should not be stayed.

Babus Manmatha Nath Mukerji and Panna Lal Chatterjee for the Petitioner.

Babus Dasarathi Sanyal and Probodh Chandra Chatterjee for the Opposite Party.

CIVIL APPELLATE JURISDICTION. Before SUHRAWARDY AND DUVAL, JJ. S. A. No. 911 of 1922. CHANDRA MOHAN GOPE, Defendant No. 2, Appellant, v. GANJAR ALI and others, Plaintiff and other Defendants, Respondents. The 11th July 1924.

Benami—Onus—Presumption—Abatement of suit on the death of a Defendant.

The appeal arose out of a suit for declaration of title and recovery of possession. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 filed a joint written statement stating inter alia that Defendant No. 3 purchased plots Nos. 2 and 3 and Defendant No. 2 purchased plots Nos. 1 and 5 from Defendant No. 1. The Munsif dismissed the suit holding that the Plaintiff had no title. The Plaintiff appealed and during the pendency of the appeal before the Subordinate Judge Defendant Respondent No. 3 died and the appeal was ordered to abate so far as Defendant No. 3 was concerned. At the time of the hearing of the appeal before the lower Appellate Court the Defendants urged that the appeal should abate in its entirety. But the Subordinate Judge held that as Defendant No. 3 was the wife of Defendant No. 2, it should be held that she is the benamdar for Defendant No. 2. The Subordinate Judge found title in favour of the Plaintiff and decreed the whole suit. Thereupon Defendant No. 2 appealed to the High Court.

Held: Onus of proving benami was on the Plaintiff. As the question of benami did not arise in the Court of first instance and no evidence was gone into, the case should go back for determination of that point. No presumption arises because the parties were husband and wife. The suit should not fail in its entirety as Defendants No. 3 and 2 were purchasers of different plots.

Babu Jatindra Nath Sanyal for the Appellant.

Babu Rupendra Kumar Mitter for the Respondents.

Appeal allowed in part. Case remanded so far as plots Nos. 2 and 3 are concerned.

THE LEGAL REVOLUTION IN THE IRISH FREE STATE.

(BY A MEMBER OF THE IRISH BAR.)

'All lawful authority comes from God to the people,' says the preamble to the Irish Constitution, and so reiterated the Chief Justice of the Free State (Mr. Hugh Kennedy) at the opening of the new Courts in Dublin a few days ago. Although it is more than eighteen months since the Irish Free State was instituted, the Courts of the defunct British régime had continued to exercise their old jurisdiction pending the changes contemplated by the Free State Executive under Art. 61 of the Constitution. But now National Courts have been established, new judges have been appointed, and many important alterations have been made in the Law and in its administration —in fact, a veritable revolution has been accomplished in the legal system of the country.

The Keynote of the new movement in Ireland is republicanism—not, perhaps, as a genuine political belief, for the majority are loyal to the Free State and the Empire, but as an outward expression of distaste for the monarchist principles of England and the Law in Ireland has decided to take the lead in interpreting the popular ideal. There was no majesty and not much dignity about the procession of judges in Dublin Castle, where the Free State Courts have been established, except for the bodyguard of hundreds of soldiers and stalwart Metropolitan policemen, for the Irish judges have discarded their robes as relics of English influence, and now appear on the Bench and even in State processions in morning coat or lounge suit according to individual fancy.

It is difficult to understand the popular dislike in Ireland of the name of English Law, and the satisfaction with which the Free State Attorney-General, in his first official speech, claimed that 'the opening of these Courts constitutes a culminating factor in the inauguration of a new order in Ireland,' and the Chief Justice described the ceremony as 'a precious moment—the moment when the silence of the Gael in Courts of Law is broken.' For, in point of fact, the Irish Courts have for many generations been presided over exclusively by Irishmen, and the Law administered therein has been adapted to the peculiar needs of the country, while the people, being a litigious race, have thronged the Courts and fought their cases with vigour, so that 'the silence of the Gael in Courts of Law' has never been remarked on before.

But the present judges derive their authority entirely from God and the people, and they have lost no time consolidating their position by deleting the King's name from all legal proceedings. For example, a prisoner in the Free State is now to be prosecuted, in the name of the Attorney-General, before a judge who has declared no allegiance to His Majesty, for an offence against 'the peace and dignity of the Irish Free State.'

In the matter of language, too, there must be an appeal to the popular imagination. Art. 4 of the Constitution enacts that 'the national language of the Irish Free State is the Irish language, but the English language shall be equally recognised as an official language,' and consequently all statutes of the Irish Parliament are printed in Irish, although the judges themselves cannot read them, and Writs of Summons may be and are now printed entirely in Irish, leaving the unfortunate Defendant, if he is not an Irish scholar, in utter ignorance of the cause of action against him.

But this democratic influence in the Law is not all sham nor mere political propaganda. A real effort has been made to cope with two great evils from the litigant's point of view, legal Delay and Expense. By enlarging the County Court jurisdiction sixfold, from 50*l.* to 300*l.*, the Irish Government hopes to bring the Law to the poor man's door, and to save him the costly adventure of bringing up his witnesses and solicitor for a High Court action in Dublin, and by making the assent of nine jurymen out of twelve sufficient to secure a verdict in civil cases it hopes to eliminate the delay and trouble caused by re-trials of the same action many times over before a verdict is obtained. These are only two of the many changes effected by what is known as the Courts of Justice Act, the whole principle of which is decentralisation of the law. It is likely to reduce the prestige in which Irish judges and Irish law have hitherto been held, and to lower the social and intellectual position of the Irish Bar; but if the result is to bring the law in closer touch with the people, to make it more popular and more accessible to them without impairing its efficiency, the legal revolution in Ireland may serve as a model to reformers in other countries who would like to see their own legal systems keeping pace with the times.—The Law Journal.

NOTES.

Visit of American lawyers to England.

The visit of the members of the American Bar Association as guests of the legal profession and the Judges of England is an event of unprecedented character in the history of the legal profession in any country. The party of American lawyers numbering 2,100 of whom 1,350 were men and the remaining ladies and the Canadians numbering 210 lawyers and fifty lady companions, arrived by two steamships in England on the 19th of July last. On nearing the English coast the Americans, though republicans, sent a wireless message of greetings to their Majesties the King and Queen to which their Majesties sent a graceful reply. Their visit was then celebrated by a round of festivities of which the notable ones were the Bar Dinner in the Four Inns of Court and by the solicitors in the Law Society's Hall, the Corporation banquet in the historic Guildhall of the City, the Royal reception at the Buckingham Palace, the Lord Chancellor's reception at the Palace of Westminster. There were, besides many other social functions. The day after their arrival that is on Sunday the 20th July last many of the American guests attended the morning service in the Westminster Abbey where special accomodation was provided for them and a larger congregation attended service [illegible] the much more capacious St. Paul's Cathedral.

But the most impressive ceremony of all was the reception given to the American lawyers and Judges on Monday the 21st July last by the Judges of England and the members of the English and the Canadian legal profession (who also joined their English brethren) as hosts in the historic Westminster Hall. The hosts and guests numbered quite three thousand and filled the Hall to its utmost capacity, right up to the broad steps leading to the Parliament House, from which in the olden days justice was dispensed. The Lord Chancellor, the Judges of England and the members of the English Bar were attired in their distinctive and imposing robes but the American lawyers, who had discarded such robes, were in plain clothes. The Attorney-General (Sir Patrick Hastings, K.C.) representing the Bar, the President of the Law Society, Mr. Dibdin, (representing the solicitors) Sir James Aikins, K.C., LL.D. (President of the Canadian Bar Association and Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba) representing the Canadian Bar, and the Lord Chancellor of England (Viscount Haldane) representing the Judges, delivered welcome addresses to their distinguished guests.

The Hon'ble Mr. Charles F. Hughes, Secretary of State and President of the American Bar Association, in replying gave a very eloquent and instructive address. We cannot do justice to his speech within the limited space at our command and can but refer to some of its salient features to give our readers an idea of its quality and character.

"We have no political ends to serve," said he, "no differences to compose, no policies to advance except the highest of all—the policy of understanding and good will." He then referred to America as an object lesson to the world where in spite of diversity a spirit of unity for the common weal of all had grown up and he appealed to the world at large for a better understanding and reasonableness without which justice is unattainable. He said, "We come in the spirit of fraternity which has triumphed over the diversities of the forty-eight commonwealths in our Union, because it is in truth the spirit of the larger fellowship represented here to-day in which differences of particular interest and environment cannot avail to obscure the community of tradition of those who have been trained according to the standards and the methods of the Common Law. We come even with a larger aim than the enjoyment of fraternal association in order that by these agreeable interchanges and a more intimate knowledge of each other we may promote a clearer appreciation of our privileges and responsibility as ministers of justice in a world which needs justice and the reasonableness which makes justice possible."

The following passage makes his meaning clearer. We in common with him regard the rule of law as the greatest security that citizens can have. King's justice and King's laws in England under enlightened public opinion of a liberty loving people became the common law or the people's law and all people became equal before the eyes of the law. A strange reaction is observable in countries which were subject to autocratic rule. They are still being ruled and oppressed by autocrats in the name of democracy or even socialism. The people there are not free men like those who are under the rule of law but are mere slaves of the State. There is little to choose between democratic autocracy and the bureaucracy and to our mind the best form of Government is the one where the rule of law is supreme. In this view we commend the following observations of Mr. Secretary Hughes:

It may be, as has been pointed out by your distinguished historians of English law, that it was possible for men to worship the words of Magna Charta because it was possible to misunderstand it, but they are careful to observe that analysis does not destroy our reverence for it as a sacred text. For it means that no one is or shall be above the law. As they put it "The law of the great man has become the law for all men, because the law of the King's Court has become the common law." The spirit of the common law is opposed to those insidious encroachments upon liberty which take the form of an uncontrolled administrative authority—the modern guise of an ancient tyranny, not the more welcome to intelligent free men because it may bear the label of democracy. It is doubtless impossible to cope with the evils incident to the complexities of our modern life and to check the multiform assaults of organised cupidity by the means which were adapted to the simpler practices of an earlier day, but we have an instinctive feeling that there is no panacea for modern ills of bureaucracy. There is still the need to recognise the ancient right and it is the most precious right of democracy, the right to be governed by law and not by officials, the right to reasonable, definite and proclaimed standards, which the citizen can invoke against both malevolence and caprice. We of the common law respect the authority of the legal order. We respect those who, in station high or humble, execute the law, because it is our law. We esteem them only as they esteem and keep within the law.

The following homage is paid to the system of jury trial which is such an important feature of English Common Law as an institution which has not only served to protect the liberty of the subject more than any other charter of liberty but also on account of its educative value on the people. Mr. Hughes said:—

With the common law we took its distinctive feature of trial by jury, at once a bulwark of freedom and an effective method of applying to infinitely varied states of fact within ordinary experience the common sense of the community. But in obtaining the practical advantages of this method we have found what is especially for us a most important by-product, the advantage of which in the maintenance of free institutions is rarely mentioned. I refer to its advantage as a means of instruction. Throughout our land, in the more than 3000 counties in our States, our citizens are constantly sitting in grand juries and petty juries in criminal cases and as trial jurors in civil cases, so that the qualified portion which is very large of our population is constantly passing in rotation through our courts, receiving directions, obtaining schooling in our laws and acting as responsible critics and valuers of assertion, testimony, and argument, a priceless discipline in democracy.

The importance of the judicial authority over the legislature is thus explained and justified by the distinguished speaker: It must be remembered that where there are local legislatures it may not be out of place to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to interpret the constitution in case of conflict between the local and federal legislature and between the latter and the written constitution.

The relation of the State and Federal power which gives the national authority we need for national concerns, without interfering with the desirable autonomy of the State in purely local concerns, could not be maintained except by the judicial power authoritatively expounding the Constitution. Otherwise Federal power would be at the mercy of State Legislatures, or State Legislative power would be subject to the control of the Federal Congress. In either case the legislative will would still be the supreme law despite constitutional restrictions, and instead of a systematic development of constitutional law we should have the fluctuations of a control dictated by political expediency. It was realised at the beginning that the courts of justice were organised with peculiar advantages to exempt them from the baleful influence of faction. We have given, as was well said by Mr Evarts, a new exaltation to the power of the Judiciary. We have lifted up the principle of the common law, we have exalted it to the point that judicial reason, and in the forum of forensic discussion, shall be the final arbiter of the rights of the people against their Congress, against the magistrates, and between the States and the nation that all shall obey. This delicate and difficult duty has been well discharged, and, notwithstanding repeated efforts to undermine this jurisdiction, the Supreme Court of the United States is the final authority in the interpretation of the Constitution. It retains its hold upon the confidence of the people. I believe that the attacks upon it once more renewed will fail.

The members of the American Bar presented to the members of the English Bar a statue of Blackstone, which was placed at the central hall of the Royal Court of Justice and unveiled by the Hon George W Wickersham, one of the leading members of the American Bar. What America owes to Blackstone may be gathered from his eloquent and interesting speech. The Americans got in fact their ideas of free citizenship from the classical exposition of the English Common Law by this Tory English Judge. It may not be commonly known, as Lord Haldane said that the commentaries had their origin in a series of lectures delivered by this eminent Judge at Oxford and it was from that time that the teaching of law was introduced into that University. Blackstone though a Tory was a great champion of the freedom and liberty of an Englishman. But true to the insular traditions of a conservative Englishman he would deny the Colonies which were in those days merely dependencies of England the privileges of an Englishman. The following extract from the speech of Mr Wickersham at the unveiling of Blackstone's statue will show how much America was indebted to him.

When Sir William Blackstone delivered his lectures on English law, people in America were thinking much of the rights of Englishmen. There was but little agreement as to what those rights were, and when, in 1765, there appeared the first volume of the Commentaries on the laws of England, followed within the next four years by three additional volumes, they were greedily sought by the colonists, who read there for the first time in logical form a statement of the inalienable rights of man and of their birth. They read in Blackstone a formulation of those rights which were inherent in free born Englishmen. It is true the commentator denied us the possession of any of those inherent rights of Englishmen which he ascribed to the dwellers in England. The colonists accepted Blackstone's definition of the rights but they rejected his classification which would put them beyond the pale of rights of American colonists, as historically inaccurate and obviously unsound.

Soon after the publication of the first edition of Blackstone in England, a cheaper edition of it was published in America and even the common people purchased and studied it and it is no wonder that they have been able to found a system of Government which is today the admiration of the world. The following will give an idea of the class of people in America who purchased Blackstone and read it with avidity in their desire to acquire the rights of a free born Englishman and which resulted in the Declaration of American Independence.

Nor was the list confined to lawyers. It included military men, tavern keepers, cabinet makers, farmers, merchants and people of every station. It is a tribute to the understanding of the men of that day to look at the list of those who subscribed to that first edition and to realise how wide an audience was waiting for its formal pronouncements of the rights of Englishmen as prepared by a great Tory judge and was ready for the acceptance of a great democratic people. The Declaration of Independence has largely been ascribed to the influence that the Commentaries of Blackstone exerted on the minds of the framers of the Constitution. In that great document was a statement of the rights and liberties which the colonists of America claimed as their own. We find these principles in clear and distinct language embedded in that Constitution.

THE HIGH COURT AND THE PROVINCIAL LEGISLATURE

A SUIT FOR INJUNCTION.

Two questions of grave constitutional importance arose in the appeal of [illegible] v. Kumar Sankar Ray Chaudhuri which unfortunately could not be decided. But as they are of public importance it might be of interest to the public to know what these questions were and the law bearing on these questions.

In the last sessions of the Legislative Council the annual estimates of expenditure and revenue of the Province for the whole of the financial year 1924-25 was on the 18th March placed before the Council and, in accordance with sec 72D of the Government of India Act, proposals of the Local Government for the appropriation of provincial revenues for the year were made in the form of demands for grants.

One of these demands for grants was "that a sum of Rs. 96,80,000 be granted for expenditure under the Head 22--General Administration." The estimates presented showed that this Head 22 was made up of several sub heads, one of which was 22E -Ministers, Rs 2,20,000. This sum of Rs. 2,20,000 included the estimated pay of 3 Ministers as also certain other expenses connected with the Ministers.

On the 24th March, this item under 22E-- Ministers --was refused by the Council, thereby refusing to grant the estimated expenditure for the salaries not only of the two Ministers who had already been appointed, but also of the third Minister whose office was then vacant.

The Council was subsequently prorogued and later on the members were summoned to a new Session to be held on the 7th July.

On the 30th June, an agenda of business proposed to be brought forward at the new Session was issued to the members of the Council by the Secretary of the Council and one of the items in this agenda was item No. 6, which ran as follows:—

"Supplementary Demands for grants.

"22—General Administration (transferred)

"The Hon'ble Mr. Donald to move that a sum of Rs. 1,71,000 be granted for expenditure under the Head 22- General Administration (transferred) on account of the salaries of Ministers".

Thereupon, Mr J. M. Sen Gupta, a Member of the Legislative Council, applied to Mr. Justice Ghose under sec 45 of the Specific Relief Act for a rule on the President of the Council to show cause why he should not decide on the admissibility of the motion being item No. 6 in the said agenda and disallow the same and or forbear putting the same at the Session of the Legislative Council to commence on the 7th July. This application was, after argument, dismissed by Mr. Justice Ghose.

Thereupon a suit was instituted by Mr. Kumar Sankar Roy Chowdhury and Mr. Kiran Sankar Roy Chowdhury on behalf of themselves and all other persons residing within the Presidency of Bengal and paying revenue and or taxes allocated under the Government of India Act to the Government of Bengal as sources of provincial revenue" This was what is known as a representative suit, and was instituted against Mr Cotton, the President of the Council and the two Ministers and prayed, amongst other things,

(a) for a declaration that Mr Donald's motion, set out above, was incompetent and illegal and ultra vires and (b) for an injunction restraining the President from putting the motion before the Council.

The Plaintiffs applied to Mr Justice Ghose for an injunction restraining the President from putting the motion before the Council and the appeal by Mr. Cotton was from Mr Justice Ghose's order issuing the injunction as prayed

Two very important questions arose for decision in this appeal.

(1) Does a suit of this nature lie and if so, has the High Court jurisdiction to interfere with the proceedings of the Legislative Council in the manner prayed for?

(2) Is the motion to which objection was taken incompetent, illegal and ultra vires?

It is obvious that if the first is decided in the affirmative it seriously affects the independence of the President and no Legislative Assembly can carry on its business under such circumstances, while if the second is also answered in the affirmative, the Legislative Council would have been, but for the new Rule just passed, without one of the most valued rights of all Legislative bodies, that of reconsidering its own decision after due deliberation. As Mr. Asquith, then Prime Minister, said on a famous occasion during the discussion of the Government of Ireland Bill in 1912: "To say that this House is not able, if it is so minded, to rescind a resolution which upon reconsideration it thinks ought not to have been passed is to deny to the House the first quality of a really deliberative Assembly." If once a mistake was committed however serious that mistake might have been, the Council would have been powerless to remedy it until the next annual budget when it might have been too late That the joint Parliamentary Committee who framed the Legislative Council Rules thought that ample power was contained in Rules for the Council to reconsider its decision is clear from para. 11 of their Report which runs as follows:

"In cases where the Council alter the provision for a transferred subject, the Committee consider that the Governor would be justified, if so advised by his Ministers, in re-submitting the provision to the Council for a review of their former decision; but they do not apprehend that any statutory prescription to that effect is required."

We propose to discuss the questions which arise under these different headings. -

(1) Are the Plaintiffs entitled to maintain this suit?

(2) Is the jurisdiction of the High Court to issue the injunction barred either expressly or by implication?

(3) Is the motion to which objection has been taken incompetent, illegal and ultra vires?

The authorities to which we shall presently refer show that in order to be able to maintain a suit of this nature, they must show (1) that there is some specific legal right of their own, different and apart from their rights as members of the public, which is threatened with injury and (2) that there is imminent danger of that right being infringed.

Or. 39, r. 2, of the Civil Procedure Code provides for application for a temporary injuction to restrain a Defendant "from committing the breach of contract or injury complained of, or any breach of contract or injury of a like kind arising out of the same contract or relating to the same property or right." It is clear that the injury sought to be avoided must be injury to some property or legal right. That right must be th

Plaintiff's for obviously no one can restrain a person from committing injury to the property or right of another person

Sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act which deals with writs of mandamus and writs of prohibition, provides that an application for an order requiring any specific act to be done or forborne, must be an application by some person whose property, franchise or personal right would be injured by the forbearing or doing of that specific act. In the case of Bank of Bombay v. Suleman Somji reported in 12 C. W. N. p. 825, the Privy Council held that the principles which govern the issue of a writ of mandamus, i.e., an injunction under sec. 45 of the Specific Relief Act, apply to injunctions which require specific acts to be done or forborne and laid down three propositions:—

(1) applicant must show clearly that he has the specific legal right to enforce which he asks for the interference of the Court.

(2) that he has claimed to exercise that right and none other and that his claim has been refused

(3) that he has a special interest in the matter complained of, an interest other than and different from that of others of the body to which he belongs and that he had a definite right or object of his own to serve or aid

The first two propositions are embodied in sec. 46 of the Specific Relief Act, which provides that "every application must be founded on an affidavit of the person injured, stating his right in the matter in question, his demand of justice and the denial thereof" and the third proposition really follows from the first two.

It is clear, therefore, that the right which, the Plaintiffs allege, is threatened with injury must be some right peculiar to themselves, that is peculiar to those who pay Government Revenue or taxes and not a right which is shared by, say, every member of the public whether he pays Government Revenue or not.

Let us now examine what is the right which the Plaintiffs say is threatened with injury. After stating that they pay Government Revenue and taxes, in paras 10 and 11 of the plaint they say that the conduct of the President in declining to disallow the said motion has seriously injured the rights of the Plaintiffs and that they will suffer irreparable loss and damage if the motion is put before the Legislative Council. In para. 12 of the plaint they merely repeat that their rights have been infringed and then they go on to say that if the Defendants, that is, Mr. Cotton and the two Ministers, are not restrained by an injunction, the Ministers will receive monies which they are not legally entitled to and monies available for legitimate purposes will be diverted for making improper payments.

It is clear, therefore, that the right which they allege will be injured, if the President and the Ministers are not restrained, is a right to see that public money is not diverted for improper payments.

In paras. 4 and 5 of their petition they suggest that they also have right to see that the law and procedure with regard to the right of the members to vote is not set at naught or in other words, the right to see that the provisions of the Statute and Rules made thereunder are strictly complied with.

Mr. Justice Ghose has held that inasmuch as the Plaintiffs contributed to the Provincial Revenue they have a right (1) to see that improper payments are not made out of Revenue and (2) that there is no infraction of the Rules and Orders regarding the provisions as to voting of supplies. It is, however, curious to note that the same learned Judge in dealing with this latter right of the Plaintiffs says, "The right to vote supplies is perhaps the greatest privilege accorded to a Legislative body and any infraction of the Rules and Regulations guarding the provisions as to the voting of supplies is an injury which the Plaintiffs in a representative suit are entitled to be protected from," but when dealing with the same right as asserted by Mr. Sen Gupta, who also pays Government Revenue, he made the following observations: "It seems to me clear, therefore, that there is no injury threatened to the present applicant. The application seeks for a direction on Mr. Cotton to disallow or delete from the agenda item No 6 or to forbear from putting the same before the Council. Suppose Mr. Cotton is not so directed. What follows? How would the applicant be hurt? Except that it will hurt the applicant's notions of what is legal or illegal under the Rules and Standing Orders, except that it will offend against his view that the motion in question is ultra vires I cannot see what injury will be caused to the applicant's property, franchise and personal right within the meaning of the section."
